I know that some people affect to magnify the debts of France, but they are hardly worth speaking of in comparison of ours. I don't believe that they exceeded, at the utmost, fifteen millions sterling, when the Regent Duke of Orleans took the method of the Mississippi to cancel and annihilate them. The wants of Louis the Fourteenth had been great, but his credit was as small. What can the present King have contracted since, to be compared to the debt of Great Britain? Where is the credit? Does any one believe the Dutch concerns of that kind to be equal in France to what they are in England, or has France itself supplied the rest? However, I will only observe more that the French debt consists, in great measure, of arrears of pensions, places, posts, and other grants which the same hand withholds as conferred; but that our debt was all received in millions sterling.

As to what has been said, that great men moving in a publick sphere are above the rules of right and wrong, he must be unworthy to hold the helm of any Government, who is so ignorant of the facts and incidents before his time, or so blind to those about him, as not to observe and perceive that good and virtuous actions, I mean such as are really so, without the false colours of flattery and obsequiousness, produce in general and national matters their proper and correspondent effects. We have not indeed before our eyes, in that case, the formalities of a trial and a sentence, the Judge in his robes, or the apparatus of an execution; but due consequences do, from the original and universal law given to the world, follow a good or evil conduct in public concerns, with much more certainty, justice, and impartiality, than they do by the means of municipal laws in private. But I desire to explain, that it is not the piety of a bigot on his knees, or the prayers even of a devout Prince, which will stay or turn the course and order of the world. Had that been the case, our Henry the Sixth would not have fallen in a prison by the hand of an assassin; nor Charles the First have suffered on a scaffold by the axe of the executioner; nor James the Second have led the latter part of his life in banishment. These were all both uncommonly devout and unfortunate Princes. I don't at present enter into the consideration of what reward personal piety will meet with in another place; but it is the publick good - a love and regard for that, and attention to it - a constant resolution never to take directly or indirectly, by the means either of force or of corruption, the property of the subject at will and at pleasure, but to employ only for the welfare and happiness of the people, the powers and the prerogatives entrusted by them for that purpose, which are the true trial and touchstone of the conduct of Princes and Ministers as such. These naturally produce affection, loyalty, fidelity, attachment, and support. But should any man or number of men be regardless of the good or condition of others, trample on their rights, lay unjust hands on their properties, treat them rather like the beasts of the fields than as their fellows and equals, should they support themselves herein with the sword and a superiority of power, the great Author of mankind and of their welfare and happiness, has so linked and chained together causes and effects, that these things will certainly turn to the detriment and disadvantage of them and theirs who do them; sometimes by a silent and hardly observable course of things, and sometimes with long delay and at a great distance, but sometimes likewise at the moment and upon the occasion, with direct and immediate resistance and a common confusion, wherein the authors of the mischief are themselves involved, and wherein they often fall a prey and a sacrifice. The ways of Providence and the course of futurity are unsearchable; but were any man to presume to divine, how justice and injustice, and the general morality of the universe may possibly in the present ease operate, it would perhaps be, that right will strongly unite, cement, and combine, by a mutual association and assistance, those acting under its banners, while wrong will, on the contrary, confound and weaken with disunion, dissension, and disturbances among themselves, that people by whom it shall unhappily have been adopted. These are on each side the natural, and, as it were, the necessary consequences of their own choice. But there appear at the same time, some untoward and threatening signs, that the hand of Heaven will, on the occasion, be heavy and severe, when we to the party which shall abide it.

If any thing can, in this case, enhance the importance of the great stake, which we are about to venture, it must be a comparison of the very little profit that we are going to contend for. The Americans are willing and consenting to give us all they have, provided that we will accept it with our right hand; but we are obstinate to risk every thing, both of theirs and of our own, rather than not to take it with our left. Our whole object is on this occasion no more than the difference between those two propositions. Our Americans have now no gold or silver; it comes all to the mother country; it would equally do so did they receive as much again; they keep none for their own currency; they use themselves paper for that, and send us all the other. One would be amazed to think what men or Administrations can desire. Cannot we be contented with all, and do we insist on having more than all?

But it will be said we want to tax them. I ask why? It must be answered, because we are bent upon getting their money. I repeat again, we have it already. But says a ways-and-means man, we must have it in the shape of Taxes; no other will serve our purpose. I reply once more, that we have it really in that shape; for cannot we and don't we tax it when it comes hither, and is not that the same thing? Are there not Taxes enough to take it as soon as it gets to Britain, or why don't you ask for more if there are not? Who say you nay here? I will be bold to say that there is at this time raised on Great Britain nothing less than ten millions sterling a year, besides the collection; that is the least; it may with the latter be fairly taken at eleven. Our specie has never been used to be reckoned at above twenty millions. It is said that about three millions and a quarter of guineas have, at the time of the writing this, been on occasion of the light gold, brought into the Bank. Let our currency be calculated on that ground, and we shall, according to any just reasoning thereon, appear to raise within the year, by Taxes, including the collection, a sum at least equal to half of the whole specie and current coin of the Kingdom; a prodigious proportion, and perhaps incredible, were we not to examine into particulars.

Should it be said that a circulating guinea cannot but pay twenty different taxes in a year, some might possibly be at first sight surprised at it. But how far short will that, on a more minute examination, be found of the truth? Let us consider only the course of a shilling for a very short time. A chairman pays out of it for his pot of porter. How many taxes does that include; the new and old taxes on beer and malt, and the tax on hops? They are more than I have time to reckon. His wife sends next morning to the shop for her tea and sugar. How many more are there? I will leave them to be counted by those better acquainted with the book of rates than I am. But here are a considerable number gone through out of one single shilling, by the time that a porter has got his beer over night, and his wife her breakfast the next morning. There remains, then, a third part of the money to run the gauntlet again in the service of the man at dinner-time; However, they do not perhaps amount quite to twenty; but so is likewise the time a good deal short of a year, and the money much less than a guinea. But this is not taking the matter in the strongest light. There is a chain and union of taxes, which operate insensibly and almost beyond imagination. Go into a shoemaker's shop; buy a pair of shoes there. How many taxes does any one in effect pay then? The journeyman shoemaker must put into his day's labour, and consequently there must be laid upon the shoes made by him all the taxes which he and his family pay in the mean time for his salt, for his soap, for his coals, for his candles, for the linen, and for the very shoes worn by him, his wife, and his children, and for very many other things. These are all just so much money out of his pocket, and he must be repaid them by his daily labour, which is his only means; he cannot otherwise live; there would be no shoes, and men must go without them. But it is not the immediate taxes of the shoemaker Only which go upon his manufacture, but those likewise of his tradesmen. The price of his clothes is enhanced by the taxes which the tailor and the weaver paid while they were making and weaving them; however, not by theirs only, but by those likewise of the persons working for them in their turn, and so on. These must all be put on the shoes; insomuch, that the whole fully pursued and observed, makes a series and combination fit to put Newton or Demoivre at a stand. A poor guinea or shilling cannot, in England, put its head, if I may so express myself, out of any man's pocket, but that an army of these catchpoles are ready to seize upon it wherever it stirs. The matter being then viewed in these lights, it seems no longer strange if we raise a revenue equal to the half of our currency, or more. Increase that currency, and you increase in all appearance your revenue nearly in that proportion. This is a prodigious operation, and surely sufficient to satisfy any Administration whatsoever. Let us therefore content ourselves with getting hither the American money. That is our business. We know what to do with it here. This is the very land of taxes. It is now coming as fast as it can. Don't let us move Heaven and Earth only to disturb it in its passage. Let us have the least patience and fall to work upon it at home. We are certain that it will be here and that it will then be taxed, and as it were, taxed upon taxed. The rest is, with all submission to my superiours, no better at the bottom than a childish fancy and impatience, and owing only to the want of a full reflection and consideration on the subject.

I have yet something to add on this head; which is, that were the Irish and the Americans both of them unanimously to cry out to us to spare their lives and to take all they have; to beg of us to send them such another army of Tax-gatherers as our own, and with them a copy of our code of Revenue Laws, I will be bold to say, that it would nevertheless be in us the worst policy in the world, and totally contrary to our own interest to take them at their words, and to do in the least degree any such thing. We see the Thames flowing constantly into the Ocean, and yet always fall. It need not be said that the rain and the dew are the causes of this, which first fall and fertilize the Earth, and then replenish that noble River. Were those two stopped or dried up, it would not be long before we should pass over dry-shod at London Bridge; were they so only in part, the stream would then likewise lower in proportion.

What our whole debt to foreigners amounts to, no one may probably know with exactness; but the more it has been inquired into, the higher it has always appeared. However, the interest of it is a current which runs perpetually into the Continent. We do not, indeed, see it with our eyes, as we do the Thames; otherwise, we love money so much better than we do water, that we might perhaps be less indifferent about it than we are. It passes imperceptibly, but nevertheless surely and without ceasing. What are then the causes which supply it? I answer, those two great sources, of Ireland and America. These first water and fructify with their most benignant current the whole Island of Great Britain, and then finish their course in the discharge of our debt abroad. Their way is no more visible than that of the interest itself of our debt, but it is alike certain and constant. Stop or dry up these, and you will as surely stop or dry up the funds of our debts, as withholding the rain or the dew of Heaven would lessen and lower the stream of the River Thames. Taxes will do this; they are the bane of Commerce and of Agriculture; they affect the Merchant, the Manufacturer, the Planter, the Farmer, and the Labourer. Our America is not of an age to support their operation. The things from above keep their course in spite of man, for his benefit and advantage. It is God's very great mercy that the dew and the rain do not depend on Administrations; they would otherwise have undoubtedly been taxed and dried long ago. But it is not so with what is of our own fabrick or production. We have a great power over riches and treasure. Governments can effectually cut off the wells and the springs of these. We have only to look abroad in the world to be abundantly convinced of that truth. The example of Great Britain will not prove the contrary. It was when and while we were not taxed as we now are, that we prospered, grew great and rich. Those times gave us strength to bear for a while the burthen since imposed upon us. It is from the Revolution that our prodigious taxes have begun; they were laid by degrees, and so must their effects be perceived. They don't operate like a storm or a whirlwind. Let us give them a fair and full trial before we declare that we are not undone by them. It will then be time enough to make ourselves a model for others. I ask, whether it is got our own actual difficulties brought on by these very taxes, which do now at this instant urge us upon our Colonies, and which are the cause of all the present contest and disorder. It is one of the first principles in Commerce not to burthen the means and materials of Manufactures. It would be nipping the fruit in the bud. The same reasoning holds here. Let us keep our hands from these two great causes and sources of our treasure and wealth; they have hitherto wonderfully supplied and supported us; they may continue so to do, if we will suffer them.

But it may be said that we have at home great and profitable Manufactures, and our Woollen one in particular, whereby we stand less in need of distant assistance. That is very true; but so is it likewise, that we have on the Continent very many expenses and demands for money, besides the interest of our debt. We shall be very fortunate if we can, with the means of all our richest resources, make at the year's end an even account.

But it may be asked, what are we then to do. We are pressed with our domestick burthens and encumbrances.

These put us first on the measure of Stamps in America, wherein we did not succeed. These induced us afterwards to make demands on the India Company, wherein we had rather better fortune. It is these which have again brought us back to our attack on America. How are we either to stand under them, or to march forward? Is it safe to rest as we are? What course are we to take if it is not? This is perhaps as serious a proposition as one Englishman can put to another. No man laments more than the writer of these sheets, that nearly twelve years of peace are now elapsed, without any thing being done, or establishment made, which may enable us to maintain another war, or perhaps even in peace, support long the present very heavy pressure under which we labour. We have in that time paid off eight millions. We borrowed, during the late war, twelve millions in a year; so that our discharge is in between eleven and twelve years of peace, equal to a debt of eight months of a war. We shall, at that rate, in about seventeen years of the first, if it should continue so long, flee ourselves from the encumbrance of one year of the latter. Whereas, should the whole time be taken from the Revolution to the present, we have had as much of the one as of the other, except the difference of about ten years in the whole. Should, therefore, any one at the helm of Government, plume himself on this, what would he do but testify how very far short his own views and conceptions are of the real necessities and exigencies of the state? We are in the mean time daily liable to be again engaged in war. We have now had an uncommon interval of rest from it. It was but a very few years ago, that we were on the brink of a rupture with Spain, which would undoubtedly have been attended by one with France. How can any Minister sleep in peace who has on his hands the care of a Kingdom and the welfare of many millions of people, while publick affairs are in a condition so very unprepared for an event which may at any moment happen, and which may, in our present situation, bring with it consequences of an importance hardly to be conceived? Surely they think on these things, whose duty most demands it of them. It is impossible that such concerns of ours can be left only to chance and hazard; or, as it were, to the fortuitous concourse of atoms. One would think there could hardly be a man in Britain, Minister, or any other, not perpetually employed at the plough, but who must daily revolve in his mind the present circumstances of his country, our burthens, our debts, and our expenses, and at the same time cast in his own breast, what must be the best means of our supporting ourselves under them, whether in war or in peace. There is an issue which some men have in view, and which I will not express; we may, however, be assured, that they do but very superficially consider the matter, who imagine that this will, in our case, take place without the utter ruin and confusion of every thing. All is, notwithstanding, as yet tranquillity and sunshine with us. We possess a great and fine country; we have most noble and beneficial Dependencies; we have a Fleet; we have an Army; we have several hundred thousands, and perhaps near a million of Men capable of bearing arms in their own defence; we have a Revenue with a surplus above the interest of our debts and expenses. Surely there is yet an opportunity to find some plan; to settle some establishment, whereon things may rest safely and securely, and the publick and all reasonable persons be satisfied that they do so. There is, however, no time to be lost. It may be too late to prepare, as it were, in the day of battle, and at the moment when our difficulties press strongly upon us. But this is of itself a very wide field, and one of the greatest of considerations, nor is it my immediate subject. But the measures now carrying on will not effect it or any thing towards it. No surrounding dangers or difficulties are a good reason for running down a precipice; our fate can but lead us thither at last. However, no other end can happen to us from the way which we are now in, if we persevere and proceed in it.

This seems to be a sufficient answer to the point before us. However, I will not totally turn my back on this question, without frankly and freely proposing, what I trust will at least be more for our purpose, than that which we are now pursuing; what may be carried into execution, which the other cannot; what would increase our Revenue, which the other will not. I mean to do almost directly the contrary of what we are about; that is, to give a greater liberty and latitude of trade both to Ireland and to America, including our West India Islands. That is my proposition. We are the seat and centre of Government; this is our strength; this is our advantage; this is what we are to preserve. While we retain this, all the money, riches, and treasure, of the more distant and dependent parts of our Empire cannot fail to flow in upon us. We have nothing to do with little jealousies about this trade or that manufacture; it is the proper business of the rich to spend their money, and of the poor to earn it; the state may well, without meddling in it, leave them to settle the means of that matter with one another. The end of all trades, and of all manufactures, must rest with us, while we continue the seat of Dominion. It is the necessary consequence of giving the tone and the law. Ambition, pleasure, fashion, business, curiosity, education, trade, and commerce, posts and places, possessed abroad by Englishmen, and numberless other causes, will contribute to and effect it. The Island of Jamaica, and our other Islands in the West Indies, what money, and commodities equivalent to money, have they not sent to England, could the whole be added together? Jamaica in particular, draws by its situation, Gold and Silver from the Spanish Main, that great modern Ophir, much more abundant in those metals than ever was the ancient. It is here almost impossible not to observe, that the same Statesmen forbid and stopped also this commerce, who contrived and passed the Stamp Act. I will not dwell on this circumstance. However, it is very remarkable; I shall therefore proceed to take notice, that had these Islands and Islanders acquired ten times as much as they did, it would undoubtedly have run the same road as the rest. The climate would have driven the possessors from thence, while the seat of Empire would have invited them hither. Do not we see the very Proprietaries of our Northern Colonies living in England as private gentlemen; and have not we sometimes known them voting in minorities of our Lower House of Legislature, while they might have been almost as Princes and Kings in their own Governments? Were it in the next month to rain over the different parts of Ireland a million of money, how long does any one imagine it would be, before at least nine hundred thousand Pounds of it would find its way into England? Have we lately wanted very sufficient proofs, that there remains no abundance of cash in that Kingdom? I will not repeat what has been said of North America; but they have, by their Paper Money, invented the very contrivance of the world for sending to us every ounce of their Gold and Silver, did we but know when to be content. Look at the City of London; they neither plant, nor do they sow, nor do they reap; yet Solomon, or his Jerusalem, were not in all their glory, rich and great like that capital of our Dominions. But by what means does this happen? The money of our whole Empire is remitted thither, as the blood runs to the heart. Our great body politic is preserved and nourished by the dispersion and circulation of it again from thence. This is the constant and never-failing course of things. But the case is much more strong, if we take Great Britain itself, whereof London is only a part. That would retain a considerable share of what it receives, did not the interest of our debt carry it out as fast as it comes in. This is the issue and the drain, which prevents us from perceiving ourselves more enriched and replenished from the vast quantity of treasure perpetually arriving to us from many parts. This may be the reason why we are less sensible, less attentive, and perhaps sometimes less grateful on the occasion. But that is all our own fault, our own doing. We have none to thank for it but ourselves. We ought not on that account to esteem these supplies the less; for had we not them, it would be much worse with us. Nothing could follow but our last decease and dissolution as a state. These must and will take place, whenever the others shall stop. However, these things don't require much reasoning. We have the world before us for an example. Such are everywhere the effects between the centre and other parts of a Government, although perhaps in no case more so than in that of Great Britain, on account of certain circumstances and causes attending that Empire, which are particularly suited to produce them. This is our point, if we are but sensible, of our true interest; let us but preserve this our great and sacred prerogative, and the other benefits and advantages will of course follow; the rest of these things will perform themselves, even while we are asleep.

I shall use no words to prove that this arrangement will bring a greater influx of treasure to those to whose liberty of trade it shall extend. The person the most prejudiced, or the most short-sighted in the case, will not dispute that with me. I will venture to presume on that point. This will therefore attach to us our Dependencies, at the same time that it enriches us ourselves. It will strengthen and fasten the bond and union between us. It will confirm our superiority, while it increases the fruits of it. It will bring us more spoils and profits than conquest, although it will operate by love and affection. It will require neither Fleets or Armies to enforce it; we need fear no revolts, no defections or confederacies on the account of it. How happy would it be, if all the circumstances of the other plan would in the same manner answer, and play into the hands of each other. When will men be contented to do to others no more mischief than what will turn to their own benefit? States and Ministers will have advanced no mean way in policy, as well as in morality, when they shall once have learned to confine all their evil towards others within that circle. It is the very perverseness of folly, to suppose that men can serve themselves only by oppressing others. But here, on the contrary, the hand of nature itself works with us. Freedom of trade is our foundation; no wonder then that so many blessings coincide together. There is open before us a rich and wide field; we have only to enter and to reap the harvest, which is ripe and plentiful. This proposal rests therefore on three points, to wit: that it will bring a greater influx of treasure into our outward Dominions; that this must enrich the centre of Empire; which cannot therefore likewise but increase its Revenue. These are short propositions, and no way perplexed. Let them be well examined. All falls to the ground which has been said on the subject, if any one of them be false or mistaken; but should they, on the contrary, be all of them most evident, most certain and indisputable, let any man, and the greatest in trust, the most consider, how he can answer to Ireland, to the Colonies, to his country at home, to his King himself, in the concern of his Revenue and his Exchequer, the refusing his attention and assistance to a measure so very practicable, and at the same time so universally beneficial and salutary.

This is the more, and much more necessary, on account of the present condition of Ireland. The late inquiry concerning their Linen Manufacture, the publick history of their emigrations, and the state of their credit at the beginning of their present session of Parliament, have made that sufficiently known. I shall not pretend to describe it. England has, perhaps, from that Island, reaped more real benefit, than Spain ever did from Mexico or Peru. Spain gains indeed from those possessions, great riches of Silver and Gold; but she has dearly purchased them, at the price of her inhabitants, and people at home. Whereas, Ireland affords us in many ways a very advantageous assistance and support of men, while we receive from her at the same time, a constant, most rich influx and supply of money. We now so depend on these things, and can so ill do without them, and are by these means so united with our sister Island, that should she on any account unhappily sink, she cannot but like a mill-stone fastened about our necks, carry us down along with her. Should her condition grow worse, who knows but it may turn to rage and despair, and either have an effect on her Legislature, or that the majority thereof may be hardly able to manage and govern their own state. I am unwilling to point out such possibilities; but it will not be long health and wealth in England, should any irretrievable mischief happen in Ireland. A moderate remedy might however now be timely, for what may in futurity be beyond redress. A greater liberty and latitude of trade is the proper assistance in the case. It is what Ireland itself wishes and desires. It will at the same time be of more benefit to us than to them. France is beating us out of the trades of Turkey, of Spain, and even of Portugal. Let loose the Irish, and they will do as much for them, and likewise for some others. It is Great Britain which withholds the hand of Ireland, and not the nature of things that confines it. Let us but consent, and they will soon stretch out their right hand into many a market in the world, where it now never appears; and having done so, they will immediately deliver to us with their left, the money gained there, as surely as that we are born Englishmen. I don't point out particulars; lights will not be wanting in that respect, whenever there shall be an inclination to demand them. I don't, moreover, mean to signify that any opening of the commerce of Ireland and America, recommended within the compass of these sheets, will of itself be adequate to all the demands of our present situation. That will, in all appearance, require a new and universal arrangement of our Taxes and Commerce, wherein Great Britain herself must bear a most material part. No man can say, that all the money in Europe is equal to our National Debt, nor can therefore any provision be sufficient, but what may produce effects answerable to such a very great necessity. Some plan seems to be demanded, which may bring into Great Britain a good part of all the Gold and Silver now current in the world. Nothing less will perhaps do our business. The practicability of this cannot but appear a doubtful problem. Were all States whatsoever formed on a constitution the most advantageous for commerce, whereof each is capable, it is evident that they would then share among them those two precious metals in so near a proportion, that no one could therein have over the rest any very great superiority. But this is exceedingly wide of the case. No one state is so constituted; but on the contrary, almost all Governments whatever are framed, and act on principles directly opposite thereto. This gives a very great opportunity for an extreme difference and disproportion in that respect. It is perhaps on the availing ourselves thereof, that depends the future welfare of our country, and the safety, the stability, and the very subsistence of our state. The Dutch are a small people, or at least have but a very confined territory, and that defended with difficulty from the Sea. They have nevertheless done a great deal in the way which we are speaking of. They are certainly therein at the head of all mankind. However, it is evident, and might easily be pointed out, that they are yet far short of perfection. There is good room for others to go beyond, and especially for a state which has such advantages as Great Britain. However, what degree of advantage the nature of things will admit of on this head, or how to attain thereto, are not questions of this present instant. I have said thus much, led to it by my subject, together with the interest of the publick therein, and the necessity which I am persuaded that my country is at this time under, of finding and carrying into execution some such great, general, and salutary measure. Happy will be the hand that shall in the first place, prevent the ruin whereon we are now running. We must begin there. That is the object directly before us. Let us next enlarge the trade of Ireland and America. This will do a great deal. It may likewise lead us towards a more universal plan, with which it cannot at the same time but coincide. It will withal be well, that this double benefit of these two parts of our country went hand in hand together. The present state of Ireland makes it absolutely and immediately necessary for the one, and the interest of Great Britain requires it for both.

I don't enter into particulars concerning the stopping up the Port of Boston, or the new laws given to Massachusetts Bay. However, I must observe, that the alteration of their Charter, and of their Civil Government, is not temporary, like the other provisions, but perpetual. The breaking of Charters is making the worst war upon mankind. It involves the innocent, and those yet unborn. Every thing depends with men on their constitution of Government. Such a measure is therefore wantonly laying waste the Territories of the Earth, and I speak it with reverence; but it is even forbidding Providence itself to make mankind happy thereon, unless he shall, for the undoing the works of unreasonable and ill-judging men, perform immediate miracles, and suspend or counteract his own laws of nature, which is surely not to be supposed or expected. As for those who refuse or impede law and justice for blood, let them be well aware that they don't thereby bring it on their own heads, or warrant private men to be themselves their own avengers. However, the whole will no doubt be received in America as a declaration of war, and depend upon the same issue. It must be by force and conquest, if they submit. It is probably not a month, or a year, that will finally determine this affair. The flame may break out immediately, or the fire may smother until some fatal opportunity of our being engaged in a foreign war, or some other such occasion. The authors of these measures no doubt expect that the removal of the Custom House, and the suspension of the trade of Boston, will bring these people on their knees, and force them to submit to the rest of our measures. It is evident that this is their idea. They might have been well informed and instructed, and ought to have been so, before they proceeded so far. They may nevertheless find themselves much mistaken in the event, however forward they are to hazard on their opinion the welfare and prosperity of their country. It seems that some men cannot, even at the distance of America, bear a Constitution in any degree democratical. But they ought to know the history of the world better, than to be ignorant of the strength and the force of such a form of Government, and how strenuously and almost wonderfully people living under one, have sometimes exerted themselves in defence of their rights and liberties, and how fatally it has ended with many a man, and many a state, who have entered into quarrels, wars, and contests with them.

Some say, that all the contradiction and opposition of America originates from home, and that it is only the faction of England which catches there. Nothing perhaps to, stifles a greater ignorance of the true state of that country, than such a notion. What is all the spirit of patriotism or of liberty now left in England, more than the last snuff of an expiring lamp? It is not longer than four and thirty years ago, that it was otherwise with us. But who can say, whether the same flame, the same sacred flame, may not at this time burn brightly and strongly in America, which once showed forth such wonders in Greece and in Rome, and from whose ashes it still enlightens a great part of mankind - mean all who are not sunk in ignorance Or barbarity? They have certainly there excellent and free forms of Government, and which partake perhaps in some degree, of the principles whereon were framed the ancient ones of those eminent Cities. They are themselves, as yet, a new and uncorrupted people. They carried with them formerly, the spirit of liberty from England, at the time that it was in its greatest purity and perfection there, nor has it since degenerated by the climate. Whoever shall judge of their temper by ours at home, and proceed accordingly, will perhaps in the end be scorched by that flame, which he may find to burn too powerfully for him, and of the nature and of the proper means for extinguishing of which, he was totally ignorant.

I have now considered the rectitude, the practicability, and the profit to be expected from our present measures, and have gone so far as to offer another measure instead. I hope that I have proved my propositions to a great degree of clearness and certainty. I don't know what to do more on this subject, unless I should propose something which might convince and satisfy, without the trouble of reason and argument. This seems difficult. However, I will not despair. My cause is a good and a strong one; that will help me; and I beg to be permitted to try my hand in the case. I will recommend, and so far as becomes me, desire and request, that every one, when he considers of this subject, and especially before he uses any hard words, or passes any harsh laws, will place himself in America; will imagine himself born, bred, resident, and having all his concerns and fortune there. - I don't mean in the light of a Governour, or of one who seeks to recommend and to advance himself here at the expense of his countrymen in that part of the world, but as one who has no other views or interest, except in the common good of his Colony or Continent. Let then any such man candidly and fairly ask himself, in his own breast, what he should in that situation, think of being taxed at Westminster, and let no one on this occasion throw a stone, whose heart does not plainly and roundly answer him with its assent. I may make too free with Ministers of State; but I would particularly press this on those, whose desires, passions, and inclinations, are followed by effects, and who hold perhaps at this moment in their hands the fate of Great Britain, and of North America. This, I say, is an argument without a syllogism; but which, if properly brought home, and enforced by every man upon himself, may perhaps penetrate, move, and soften, more than all the reasoning and earnestness which I have hitherto used.

I would willingly try this experiment of transposition upon a late transaction, wherein some people's opinions seem to be affected by locality. Certain letters (see Letters of Governour Hutchinson, &c.) have been published of an American Governour and Lieutenant-Governour, and a third person, together with remarks, and the speech of a learned and ingenious gentleman. These are offered as an appeal to the publick against the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. They cannot, therefore, but be themselves likewise the objects of a publick consideration. I have, by the touchstone of locality, a mind to examine and question some of this learned gentleman's reasoning. It is now but between eighty and ninety years since we of this country banished our King. On what ground did we do it? It will be answered, that we did not like his actions; for that they tended to deprive us of our best rights and properties. That we did it as Englishmen, on the Constitution of England. Who was the common judge between us and him? There was no such common judge. We judged for ourselves. He was our King, our Magistrate, our Trustee. When we found him to fail in the essential points of these offices, we took another. This was our right, as Englishmen; but we set aside one of his daughters from her turn in the succession, and appointed instead, a person who had no title by birth. The King's horse threw him, and the Lady succeeded. But that was chance. It might in a course of nature, very well have happened, that she had never been Queen. What had she done? She had taken a remarkable part in the Revolution, and was totally unexceptionable. But there were in one scale the welfare and happiness of many millions of people, and in the other the advancement of only one Lady, although a deserving one. There was therefore no equality; the latter could not but kick the beam. I answer, that I subscribe to all this with my hand and my heart. But it is only one side of the medal. Let us turn the reverse. An American Governour is not so big as a King; he don't wear a Crown, nor bear a Sceptre, nor sit on a Throne, nor is worshipped on the knee, nor has a Navy, nor an Army, nor makes Bishops, nor Judges, nor is his Civil List perhaps above a thousand Pounds a year. He seems to be much more responsible, and more removable, than a King. Suppose then, that one of our Colonies should take the strongest exceptions to their Governour, and desire to change him; would they in that case be permitted to judge for themselves? No. Why not? Because they are Americans. Who are to judge for them? We. Why so? Because we are Englishmen. But would their application be to us a sufficient cause for a removal? Perhaps not; but on the contrary, a reason to continue him at present, and to promote and advance him afterwards. That has been the case before, and may probably be so again. But why is the measure which we mete to them, so different from that which we measure to ourselves? That has been already answered. Because we are Englishmen, and they are Americans. This must be owned to be perfectly just and satisfactory, and the Americans are the most unreasonable men in the world, if they don't see it exactly in the same light.

But suppose that the representative body of the Province should make the complaint? The answer would then be, that there was no accuser, or if any one chose to speak Latin, no delator. Suppose that they complain of falsehood and treachery towards the Province? That would be no charge, no crimen. Suppose that they gave in evidence the party's own letters? That would complete the thing; for there would then be no evidence, no testis. Nil horum. But will this hold water? Admirably, with respect to America, and in Latin.

It is strongly disputed, whether these American letters are of a publick or a private nature. This may not in itself be a very important point. However, let us endeavour to settle it, since it lies in our way. Whatever concerns and affects the interests, the welfare and happiness of a whole people is, and must be, of a publick nature, whether papers, letters, or any other thing whatsoever. Good and evil are not matters of law or of logick. They are the most, if not the only essential circumstances of the world. They are what every thing else refers to, They stamp an eternal mark and difference on all things, which even imagination cannot cancel or erase. The enjoyment of the one, and the avoiding of the other, is the very end of our being, and likewise of all the beings which do, or which even can be supposed to exist, and which have a sense and perception of them. Whatever therefore relates to the general good and evil of a people, is of a publick nature. It is that circumstance which makes it so. The terms are as good as synonymous. Whatever concerns, on the contrary, only this or that individual, is of a private nature; it is confined to his or their happiness or welfare, to his or their good and evil. There is again the true and unerring criterion. These things seem clear to the greatest degree of intuitive certainty. It is strange to be forced to reason about them. However, we are told otherwise. If some compliments happen in a letter to be made to an old lady, it changes the essence of every thing; she contracts and confines the whole matter, and all becomes of a private nature; although the chief subject of that very letter should be to advise and point out the means of altering the Charter, and of new-modelling the Constitution of a Colony, and that there should be recommended therein the finding some way, according to its own language, "to take off the original incendiaries," lest they should "continue to instil their poison into the minds of the people;" but the mention of the old lady makes it all private. (See Mr. Wedderburn's Speech, page 94, and Letter of Mr. A. Oliver, February 13, 1769.) But suppose that these letters were really meant and intended to produce publick effects; what will that do? Nothing at all. If the person had not at that moment a place, to whom they were written, it signifies nothing; although he might have had a post before, and might look for one again, and although he might have communicated these letters to others for the very purpose of affecting the publick. All this will be of no importance, if the person did not happen to have a place at the time. Would not one be tempted to think, that as some endeavour to leave no property in America, others have a mind to banish all human reason out of American affairs?

But let us take this matter in another light: Suppose a Prince to have been the subject of these letters instead of a People, and his conduct and character to have therein been so freely treated and censured instead of theirs, and the divesting him of his power and dignity so plainly mentioned and recommended, instead of the depriving them of their rights and privileges, and the taking him off proposed instead of the taking off some of them, what would have been the consequence? High Treason. But might not these have been private letters of friendship, and the receiver have secreted and concealed them? There is no such thing as private letters in the case. No civilities sent to the fairest lady in the land can make them so. The person receiving must, at his own peril, carry them to a Secretary of State, or to a Justice of the Peace, or to some other Magistrate; we don't otherwise want a word for him, which is misprision of treason. But who would take notice of such a thing? Let Mr. Attorney or Mr. Solicitor answer that. But on what ground is all this? Because the Prince is supposed to be the publick person, and to represent the whole people, and that what relates to him may affect them. But there are bad Princes; and writing against them is sometimes writing in support and in the interests of the publick and of the people; no such plea or proposition is ever suffered; it would, on the contrary, be an additional crime even to make or to offer it. But does any one by representing a body, acquire more prerogatives than belong to that body itself; or are the publick more affected through a third person than immediately in themselves? Yes, just so. Say a word against a Prince, and beware of informations, indictments, fines, prisons, scaffolds, and gibbets. These are the strongest arguments in the world, and I never knew any man to get the better in disputing with them. But abuse a people from morning till night, and every one knows that the rule and the law is, let them mend their manners, if it is true; let them despise it, and leave it to fall on the author if it is false; I am at the feet of Gamaliel, and desire only to learn. I shall not contradict the doctrine concerning a Prince, and I subscribe heartily to that about a People. Should these Commonwealths of America ever become as strong and independent as they are now weak and dependent, and should they in their greatness and glory remember a word of the humblest and the meanest, but not of the least sincere or the least disinterested of their friends and advocates, it will be never to employ force and power against reason and argument; to leave those instruments to Cabinets, and to such as may want them, but to believe Truth to be ever the real interest of the people and the publick, and that no other incense or sacrifice should ever be offered at the altars of that Goddess, but the pure oblation of a freedom of thinking, speaking, and writing. But here it cannot well fail to be observed, that should these people, whose distresses are now pleaded, ever come to be masters both of themselves and of others, and to be glutted with power and riches, that they will certainly run the race of the rest of mankind, and learn in their turn tyranny and injustice, as their betters and their predecessors have done before them, I answer, no man perhaps believes this more than myself; however, that is not now the case. They are at present the injured and the oppressed party, and have, as such, a claim to the wishes or to the assistance of every generous and unprejudiced person. But whenever the other supposition shall obtain, it is to be hoped that neither may there, in that day, be wanting some honest man among them who will endeavour to make them blush at such a conduct, if he shall not be able to dissuade and divert them from it. However, I would willingly in my turn now ask, whether this last observation is also local and confined to America, or whether it extends itself likewise to the meridian of Great Britain?

It is not reason and argument, it is this locality, which operates on the present occasion. It is this only that makes many men easy and indifferent in the case about right and wrong, justice and injustice. Were my countrymen now in England dipped once in the River Delaware, I dare say that it would make an almost miraculous change in their opinions. If some, who might be named, were transposed into Assemblymen, they would perhaps be as ready to repeal certain late laws as ever they were to pass them. However I will not go back again to topicks which seem sufficient to awaken the most lethargick Englishman out of his soundest sleep, but I desire to put a case relating to this locality itself, and its power and effects, when it is to be hoped that we shall not find in the mirror any similitude or representation of ourselves.

At the beginning of the last century, there lived a gentleman of the name of Fawkes. He hired a house and some cellars and other apartments in Westminster. We will suppose that he had a lease of them. A lease is for the time as good as a purchase. It might not indeed be stamped; but stamps were not then in fashion, it was good without. He bought some Gunpowder; it is to be believed that he paid honestly for it. He could perhaps have produced for it a receipt; he placed it in the cellars or other apartment hired by him. He had, indeed, a mind to amuse himself with blowing up the Legislature of England, no doubt with the good intention of introducing a better. However, he and his trains were discovered, and the Nation not relishing his projects, he met with another reward than he desired. But suppose that he and Garnet, and the rest of their associates, instead of falling into the hands of an English Jury, had been tried at Rome before the Consistory Court, or any other Court there, they would no doubt have found an advocate; that is no other than the duty of the profession. I won't take upon me to say whether he would, in this case, have flourished about private property, trespass, or forcible entry; but whatever turn the Italian Counsel had thought proper to give the cause of his clients, has any one seriously the least doubt but that they would have been cleared and acquitted, and probably by the Court of Rome itself in good time, preferred and promoted. So much can a difference of climate do. But Fawkes and Garnet and their friends were fools, Jesuits as some of them were. They did not understand their trade. They might have been told better ways of blowing up Legislatures than with Gunpowder; that don't make a quarter of the crack and combustion, but which are ten times more effectual.

But our Colonies might be well enough, were it not for Doctor Franklin, who has, with a brand lighted from the clouds, set fire to all America. No Governments care ever to acknowledge the people to be fairly against them: for whatever may be the case with the opinions of the multitude in abstruse and refined matters, which but little concern them, nor do they much trouble themselves about; yet the end, and therefore the touchstone and trial of all Government being their welfare and happiness, there is not common modesty in affecting to despise and refuse their sense concerning their own good and evil, their own feelings, benefits, or sufferings. It is in these things that the voice of the people is said to approach that of their Maker. The sycophants of Ministers endeavour, therefore, to throw on the artifice and influence of individuals all discontent or dissatisfaction of the publick. Mr. Wilkes moves England, and Doctor Franklin America; as if we had here no feeling but through the first, and they had there neither eyes or ears, but by the latter. It were happy for mankind, if Administrations procured their own votes and majorities with as much fairness as the voice of the people is commonly obtained. I wonder whether we should then have ever heard of any Government in Europe indebted in the sum of a hundred and forty millions sterling, or be at this moment under the alarm of a parent state attacking its own Colonies, or of a great Empire setting at work its Fleets and Armies only to throw the parts of itself into mischief and confusion. It is idle and childish to be crying out against this or that private person. The truth is, that whenever Governments heap up combustibles, there will always be found a hand to put the match to them, or these would heat and take fire of themselves if there were not.

But it seems that Doctor Franklin recommended to his constituents for the rule of their conduct, to refrain from all force and violence, but to preserve and keep alive in the mean time their claims by votes and resolves. - (Wedderburn's Speech, page 110 and 111.) I have nothing to do with the defence of any individual. However, what more prudent or honest advice could, on the occasion, have been conceived or offered? Is the hour very far off when every man in Britain, and among the rest the Minister himself, and perhaps even his royal and illustrious Master, may most earnestly wish, that the same spirit of peace had inspired, the same caution and consideration guided the publick councils here at home on the subject, as appear to have dictated this advice attributed to Doctor Franklin, for the direction of our countrymen beyond the Atlantic. This may, I say, indeed happen soon, but with this most wide and infinite difference, that the time may then be too late; that the circumstances of things can no more be recalled, but that the lot of our good or our evil, of our peace or our confusion, and possibly even of our existence or our dissolution, as a state, shall before have fatally and irrecoverably been cast.

However, is not Mr. W's philippick against the Doctor a capital performance? I am sure that I have not the least inclination to depreciate the ingenuity of that learned gentleman, whose argument I have been making so free with. But the being charmed with spruce expressions or a smartness of invective, where the subject makes against the privileges or the liberties of a people, what is it better than if a parcel of prisoners or of galley-slaves were so abject as to take a pleasure in the noise and the rattling, or as it were, in the musick of their own chains?

I am drawing towards an end of my career. However, I will first say something to the Americans themselves. I observe them to charge sometimes on the British subjects in general, the measures with which they are aggrieved. Herein they do us wrong. I may venture to affirm, that there would not be hurt the hair of the head of an American, were it to be voted by all our country. Every one must remember the universal satisfaction produced by the repeal of the Stamp Act, and it would no doubt be the same again were the present measures discharged and remitted. But it often happens, that Representatives and their constituents are, in the most essential and the most important points, directly and diametrically opposite to one another. I don't pretend to account for this. It is a fatality, or perhaps it is a new kind of representation. But the Americans should consider, that two different parts of a country may be oppressed by one and the same hand. Administrations have been squandering and running us in debt at home, until our whole substance is wasted and consumed. It may now be coming to their turn; but procul a Jove, procul a fulmine. Great Britain is first brought to its extremity. Let any of our Dependencies compare their burthens with ours, and then complain of the Nation if they shall find that ours are the lighter. I don't mean to make a merit of this; but let them suppose the same strong hand to be upon us both, when they shall have been convinced how little we are in this respect to be envied.

I am unwilling to take my leave, without saying likewise one word to my countrymen of England. It is not only riches and power, men and money, which the centre of Government receives from the detached parts of its Dominions, but likewise credit and honour in the world. The Scotch and the Irish are as good men as any in Europe. This is well known wherever they seek service and establishments, and the which they are left to do in more parts than is for the benefit of Great Britain. Our countrymen of America have not yet so figured in our quarter of the globe; but it is hardly a compliment to place them clearly at the head of their own, the offspring of all other people there included. If there are any spoiled children of our national family, it must be the English themselves, unless that riches and luxury mend the manners of men. But, nevertheless, being so the seat of Empire, and all commands issuing from our capital, and our name being forward, the actions, the merits, the figure, the reputation, and the glory of all our countrymen, whatsoever and where-soever, do exceedingly redound to us and to the honour of England and of Englishmen. There is another circumstance which none of us can observe but with pleasure: I mean that we seem to be as individuals, on as fair terms with the other parts of our Nation as they with one another; that the name of Englishman is as acceptable, and will go with them as far as that of any other of the appellations into which we are separated. Whether this is our desert, or a consequence of the same cause, I won't say; however it is what cannot but afford us satisfaction. In return for these things, they desire no more than a just sense and acknowledgment of them. Whether we do make this return; whether these circumstances have always the weight with us which they merit, Englishmen will best determine, by examining into their own breasts. But this we may be assured of, that the good will, affection, and attachment of our countrymen, spread throughout our common Empire, will be our firmest strength and security, if it shall be our lot to continue in our present splendour and prosperity; as likewise that the same cannot but be our best support and assistance, wherewith to weather the storms of fate and fortune, if Heaven shall, on the contrary, have any reverse or times of difficulty and distress in store for us.

I have now finished, unless it may be a few words with respect to the Author himself. He hopes, that should in the warmth of writing, any inadvertencies or inaccuracies have escaped him, that they will be readily overlooked; he is persuaded that there are none such as affect his argument. He has wrote with freedom, but he trusts without offence. He has no personal views whatsoever in anything that he has advanced or offered; he has no interest in any distant part of the British Dominions, neither in Scotland, Ireland, or America; he has neither trade or traffick with them, nor a foot of land in any of them. His concerns, his property, his family, his friendships, his affections, every thing most dear to him, centre in South-Britain. He has no intercourse or connection with any man that either is, or that ever was, or who, to the best of his knowledge, desires to be a Minister. He is totally indifferent who shall be at the head of our affairs, any otherwise than as the publick may be concerned in it. He would not, perhaps, in his humble situation, accept of any place or post, high or low, which the King has to confer, great and powerful as he is. He wishes only that these sheets may be read, as they are written, with the purest and the most disinterested intentions for the good, the greatness, and the stability of the whole British Empire; for the union, harmony, and preservation of all its parts, and for the particular interest, safety, peace, prosperity, and happiness of England.

April, 1774.

APPENDIX.*

The foregoing sheets were first published in April, and we are now in the next November. Time and events have, in the short intervening space of seven months, but too plainly and too strongly confirmed the opinions respecting our American measures and their consequences, which were then presumed by the Author to be laid before the publick; it is in the preceding pages explained; that the plan proposed and confided in by the Administration on that occasion appeared to be, that the removal of the Custom House, and the suspension of the commerce of Boston, would soon bring on their knees, and subject to our commands, the inhabitants of that Town and of its Colony; who were by that means to become, besides their own obedience, an example likewise, and a terrour to the rest of their brethren on that Continent; but the policy and the probability of this fine spun scheme are there doubted of, questioned, and discussed. It is represented that the harsh and violent measures then carrying on would, in America, be received no otherwise than as a declaration of war, and depend upon the same issue; that it could only be by force and by conquest if they were submitted to; that we must expect to have to do with an union of that Continent; that it would among them be made a common cause not to be taxed by us, and that they would certainly join, combine, and associate together for their general and mutual assistance and defence. Is there any occasion to say whether or no these things have proved true?

We were at the same time warned, that if it was intended to use force and violence, the decision might not be so very soon or so very sure; that these being a truly free people, and their Governments democratical, they would be able to arm every man in their country; that necessity would, besides their Committees of Correspondence then subsisting, teach them other means of meting and of acting together; that they would probably have at their head some of the wisest and of the ablest men of their country; that the influence of our Governours and of our other Civil Officers would shrink to nothing, nor our own authority probably extend further than where it was enforced by our own Troops; that our very Soldiery would desire and endeavour to leave us and to go over to the Americans. Has one word of all this fiden to the ground, or is there almost a single sentence of it which is not now become a matter of fact?

It was further set forth, that no immediate impression upon the Town of Boston, or possession taken of it by a Fleet or an Army, would carry the command of all that Continent, or force them to submit to measures so universally against their bent and inclinations; but that, on the contrary, the most strenuous and most vigorous exertions were from that whole people to be expected in support of their common liberties and properties. May I call on our Ministers, and demand whether they are not themselves sensible by this time of all these things?

I will pass by other particulars of the same sort, that I may not tire my reader with the repetition of them; however, I hope that the presumption will be pardoned, should it be asked, Whether there is any one event as yet come on in the order of time, and the course of things, which has contradicted or happened otherwise than what was before pointed out? This gives a great prejudice and suspicion with respect to the further train remaining yet to follow. However, there is behind and among the things in suspense one particular circumstance, of such a magnitude, that all these other incidents are in comparison of it but as the dust upon the balance. I mean, that should by these measures either the publick expenses increase, or income decrease, or both together, so that the National Revenue shall fail, and we be rendered unable to proceed in paying the whole interest of our debt, then will in all appearance be no longer delayed the day and the hour of our destruction; but that conjuncture prove the latest and the uttermost term of our peace, our prosperity, and our stability as a State and a Nation. This point is much pressed in the former sheets; however Heaven avert that fate should, in the due order of things, and at some perhaps not very distant moment of time, demonstrate it to be as well grounded as have already been found so many other cautions and warnings before given! But if we sow the seeds it may be depended on that the fruits will follow: causes and effects keep their course like day and night: events appear to be preparing and bringing on that period: men and things, counsels and actions, signs and appearances, seem to tend to that catastrophe. However, the writer presumes to offer once more to the publick the mite of his sentiments upon the state of our affairs in America, as it stands now altered since the date of the preceding pages, while we have yet allotted a time to do it; while there is room for reflection, and that any thing remains more for Britons than only to relate the story of their ruin.

* The addition of an Appendix of forty-five pages, calls upon us again to mention, with a just eulogium, this spirited and seasonable publication. The first edition was printed in April, this in November, 1774, in which short interval (as is now shown) the Author's opinions have been confirmed by events. The inhabitants of New-England have not been brought on their knees by the removal of the Custom House and spension of the commerce of Boston; these harsh and violent measures have been received in America as a declaration of war; we have now to do with an union of that Continent; and, in short, not one event has happened otherwise than was foreseen and predicted. - Gent. Mag.

This attack upon that Continent appeared to many people most unreasonable, and most unpromising from the very beginning; futurity has nevertheless before it a constant cloud and obscurity, which no human eye can perfectly penetrate: rashness and inconsiderateness do sometimes make this more of a pretence than the case will well warrant; but, however doubtful the matter might then be or not, time has now opened events, and fact and certainty have in many respects taken place on the subject. It is clear and sure, that the proposed plan and project have failed and miscarried. We sent out at first forces fit for our intended design. The common language used in commendation of the measure was, that a few Regiments and a few small Ships-of-War would do the business. But we are now calling and gathering together an Army from all quarters - from England, from Ireland, from several different parts of America, and even our newly conquered Province of Quebec is to be unguarded and unfurnished, that we may be enabled to carry on a war against our ancient Colonies and our own countrymen. We have, instead of commanding and of bringing to taxation and to subjection all America, by the means of the Town of Boston, lost the rest of that Continent and not gained the Town. We have with our own hands and by our own counsels, got things into such a state that our Colonies obey their Governours no further than they please, and that they are unanimously and publickly preparing to oppose measure to measure, or force to force, as they shall upon the event judge most necessary, while that bicoque of New England looks us in the face upon an equality, and holds up its head as highly as we do ourselves. Matters are ten times more embroiled than they were; wear ten times a worse and a more threatening aspect than they did seven months ago, and before that we entered on these measures; every step taken forwards in our present tract, seems only to lead us into further mischief and difficulties. Our Administration is in the mean time become the wonder and the contempt of all Europe. When we find, therefore, that we are going on in a road directly wrong, why don't we take a contrary course? This appears to be a most obvious step; there is no uncommon reach of reason or extraordinary depth of human wisdom demanded to make that conclusion. It is an old proverb, that wise men do often but fools never change their opinion. No one, little or great, need scruple to alter for the better his actions or his measures; it is surely his first praise and first prudence so to do; but what must be thought of those, whom facts and events themselves will not convince, or who, being convinced, are nevertheless determined to strive and to contend against the irresistible force of them? Our political pilots have a fair and a direct wind for the port to which the Commonwealth is bound? but they are obstinately bent to run counter to it; to buffet storms and tempests, to risk rocks and quicksands, and to endanger in the greatest degree the common adventure and fortunes of us all. We read a fabulous story of an ancient Roman, said to have leaped into a gulf to save Rome; but what will posterity believe, when they shall be told of the men of these times, who run headlong down a precipice for no apparent end but to carry along with them their country into the same ruin?

The original design and expectation were at least sufficiently plain and intelligible; but the Administration having been deceived in them, there is now no longer left the least appearance of prudence or of policy in our proceedings. It is become difficult to comprehend what the authors or the friends of these measures pursue even in their own breasts. Let any one within the bounds of probability or almost of possibility, Fancy in his mind events at pleasure, and let him reflect by what steps, what means, what chain of incidents and accidents, what train within the wit of man to trace, it can be expected that we shall, in this violent and military method of going on, come to a good and advantageous conclusion, and I believe that he will evidently find himself at a default on the subject. I am persuaded that our Rulers would themselves be put to it to lay down fairly and clearly their own plan, nor is any such commonly known and understood; the facts are publick; the other would no doubt not be difficult to find, if reason, appearances, and probability suggested or admitted of any such. The Chaplains of our Regiments are not to chop logick with the Americans, and to reason them into the being taxed at Westminster; that is not the intention, nor will hard words bring this about from whencesoever trumpeted. No, we will force them to it; be it so. Let us, without considering the chance of war or resistance, suppose Boston in ashes, no one stone of it standing on another, the inhabitants, men, women, and children, buried under its ruins, and all this havock and destruction the effect of our cannon, bombs, and mortars? This would no doubt be a noble event: Europe would stare, and it would exceedingly redound to the honour and the glory of the Government that should achieve it. However, let us come to the consequences; the mischief and the evil are easily found; rage and despair reigning every where; all our Colonies crying out for vengeance; America in arms, and in open and avowed revolt again Great Britain. These things need not to be pointed out. But how are butchery and massacre to conduct us to peace, to a settlement, to a restoration of union and of harmony, or to any desirable end whatsoever? All regard for the Americans being banished out of the question, either as brethren or as men, it can nevertheless not be pretended, that we ought likewise to lose sight of the true interest and the benefit of our more immediate country of Great Britain; nor are we surely to seek for any other views or motives of our publick councils on the occasion than those. God forbid that there should, instead, prevail passion, resentment, an impatience of opposition and of disappointment: a thirst for revenge and for the blood of the people of Boston and of New England. Heaven avert that there should directly or indirectly more nearly or more remotely be at this moment preparing or meditating any desperate stroke which may disjoin America and Great Britain, in a manner to be never united more! I will not deny but that the question respecting the plan of our conduct may with less difficulty be explained, if some such unfit principles and considerations are to be taken into the account.

But some one may say, What a strange tragedy and image have here been introduced? Who thinks of any such thing? We would not for the world be the aggressors; but if the people of Boston or of New-England shall begin first, and shall attack or unlawfully resist us, you know that the wrong will then be with them, and that all which we shall do will be nothing but self-defence and the execution of the law, nor do we wage war but with men. I answer, that this is too high, too home, and too serious a subject, on which for any one to refuse himself, or to be readily refused by others' freedom of speech. I presume that it is within the lawful liberty of an Englishman to demand in return, to what end are then intended a Military Governour, a Fleet, an Army, Artillery, Warlike Provision, and Ammunition and Supplies, and reinforcements of these things, together with Acts of Parliament, which it was known would not be obeyed? Are all these Red-Coats and Regiments mustered there only to assist the people of America in the clearing of their plantations, the reaping of their harvests, or the watching of their flocks and their herds? Should any one start at the idea of Boston being overthrown, what would he say were he in plain English told, that there is no appearance or probability of carrying into execution some certain measures, without cutting the throats of almost all our America, without dying its Forests, its Swamps, and its Savannahs, with the blood of those whose ancestors fled from their country, and went thither in hopes of finding refuge from the tyranny and the oppression of the governours of Great Britain? What does it matter who dies a victim the first or the last, and whether by the sword, the musket, and the bayonet, or by famine, distress, and misery, when a whole region shall be laid waste and depopulated? Is it difficult to pick a quarrel on any subject, or to drive a people into despair, and then to destroy them for being desperate, or are there wanting writers or speakers to defend any action or any measure? But will the glossing, the quibbling, the flattery of pensioners or of sycophants, heal the wounds, calm the minds, appease the passions, reconcile the affections, or blind and confound the understandings of an injured and exasperated Continent, consisting of many numerous and flourishing Provinces, and inhabited by a people possessed and inspired with a love of liberty, almost lost to the shame of the human species out of Europe, but most powerful and irresistible wherever it prevails, and is united with the means of defence? I don't mean to talk to Ministers and to Statesmen about right and wrong, humanity, compassion, and the cardinal virtues; but I repeat that there is, in these measures, full as little of the policy of Machiavel as of the morality of Grotius, or the religion of the Whole Duty of Man; not a whit more of the wisdom of the serpent, than of the innocence of the dove.

The sense of the Nation is in the meantime most strong against these transactions. People were not at the beginning so much moved; they appear not to have believed that any men at the head of a state would really be so wild and so headlong as to bring about in effect what now stares them most strongly and most fully in the face. It is well understood, that the all of the publick and of every private person is upon a desperate cast at stake against nothing; men raise their eyes and their hands with horror when they speak on the occasion; they sympathize in common with the Americans, and express plainly and roundly their own sentiments on their account. Such are, on the contrary, silent and reserved on the subject, who are used to direct their discourse by mean motives; the change or discharge of these measures would be a most sincere and universal satisfaction. Shall, then, a great Nation, with its eyes open and sensible of its situation and its danger, be drawn or driven upon its ruin by a few men among them, and those perhaps intrusted for its safety and its protection? Where is, in that case, the Constitution, or what is our pretended and our boasted representation? Is there nothing, nothing even to the utmost extremity of our destruction, but what corruption can compass and prostitution will perform? These proceedings are of that dangerous and destructive tendency, that whoever promotes or unites in them does, as a private man, light a brand to fire his own house, and to lay waste his own estate; but as one of the publick, he concurs with his own hand to thrust a dagger into the heart of his already wounded, helpless, and almost expiring country. It may be wondered how any such person can hold up his hands towards Heaven to pray for prosperity on him or his, which he does himself so directly counteract. Can, then, any Nation, famous for its freedom, want in such an extremity some proper remedy and resource against the rage, the madness, or the incapacity of an Administration?

I answer, that our ancestors were far from being so careless of those to come after them, as to have left us in concerns depending on our own domestick government, without means very sufficient for our safety and our welfare. The people of Great Britain have a lawful, constitutional, acknowledged, undisputed, undoubted power of application and petition. This is an inherent right of every County, every City, every Borough, every body of men in it, and which any one may be confident that no King, no Minister, and, let me add, no Parliament will resist or withstand, if the exertion of it shall be general, universal, and unanimous, such as shall evidently speak with the full and the clear Voice of the whole Nation; it may, in such a case, be depended upon for sufficient and effectual. Never did perhaps any period of our history more require such an exertion than the present moment. I will not repeat what has been said with respect to the stake, either of the publick or of private persons; but even the Minister must, in all appearance, be in his own breast pleased with it. It might afford him a fair opportunity, or almost force him to withdraw his foot out of difficulties, in which he cannot but by this time be sensible how rashly and inconsiderately he has involved both himself and his country. What unaccountable fatality is it which can prevent any one at the helm of a Nation from taking of his own accord so prudent and so salutary a step. But this matter mounts higher. The King is blessed with a fair and a large family, from whom even a private parent might promise himself the greatest comfort and felicity; but much more may his Majesty if they near him shall, by their fatal and unfortunate counsels, mingle no bitter in his cup. However, let all loyal subjects well reflect, and especially they first in favour, whether these measures are not of such a magnitude and a malignity, that they may either immediately or in their consequences throw the whole state into the last confusion - endanger our becoming a prey to foreign Powers - shake the throne itself, and disturb one day the peace and the happiness of our gracious Prince, even within his own palace and in the midst of his numerous royal progeny. To whomsoever we may therefore presume on this subject to offer up our humble petitions, we shall beseech those respectable persons to bless and to secure equally both the publick and themselves.

It seems the more necessary to use this last safe resource of the Constitution, as it is difficult to find any other help, that is left for us under Heaven. Our political parties and their leaders bear a suspicion of covering and concealing under pretences of the general good, designs of personal ambition and advancement. The people of England have had but too much experience in that respect. What division, what connection, what denomination of men among us have not in their turn spoiled and plundered this poor country? Our liberties and our properties were, before the Revolution, attacked under the pretence of prerogative, by a set of men who bore the name and who invented or advanced the doctrines of Tories; but the virtue of our ancestors saved us then. Through how long a series of successive Administrations has since that time this Nation been sold, bartered, and betrayed by a race of false, pretended, unworthy, and venal Whigs; whose endeavours towards our destruction have unfortunately been more successful than those of their predecessors? God forbid that we should now be ready to receive our fatal and our final stroke from the joint force of both these causes - from the accursed practice of corruption, united with the senseless principles of a boundless obedience of the people, and of an extravagant power of the Crown! These evils do not, perhaps, least prevail in the very places which ought most to be a sanctuary and a security against them. What is become of the ancient publick spirit of England when the first in rank and in fortune were ever the foremost to protect the rights of the whole? It is for the horror of our name and our Nation to be hoped that this noble passion of the human breast is retired, and is setting up its standard among our countrymen on the Continent, if it has totally fled from this once free and fortunate Island. It must grieve any one to ask, Whether there are none, even in the respected band of our professed Patriots, who had it once in their power to have utterly extinguished, but who left unhappily and purposely to lurk and to smother in their proceedings, and in their own Acts of Parliament, this very pretension, and, as it were, the same fire, which has since broken out so fiercely, and which threatens now to consume in one common flame both Britain and America? However, it is to be hoped that these persons will, from such violent and such evident mischiefs, be at length convinced, nor continue backward to concur and to contribute towards some sufficient measures for the lasting peace and relief of our country and our Colonies. But we are now upon the brink of the precipice; our situation admits no longer of our being led blindfold; it is too late for us to trust either to thorough-paced Ministers or to half-paced Patriots; the time requires this Nation to declare its own genuine sense, perhaps its last sense of its condition and its circumstances. How can we otherwise expect, in this case, the assistance of Providence itself, than in employing the powers which his goodness has, by the means of the Constitution and the provision of our ancestors, been pleased to lodge with us for that apparent purpose?

But it may be said, have not we a legal representative and is not that sufficient? I shall leave the matter of fact to answer with respect to the sufficiency; but I desire to say something in explanation of the point itself. I hope to be perfectly understood, that I don't at all mean to deny our having such a legal representative; but it is surely just and becoming for us to discourse on subjects of this consequence with one another like men. I presume that it is permitted for anyone to ask, whether there is not some distinction between a legal representative and a real one? All bodies of men speak and act by their majority. It is a handful of people in comparison of the whole Nation, which choose the major part of our House of Commons. I may, in saying this, express myself freely, but I offend no worthy or honest man: no such will ever take offence at a notorious truth, and none can well be more so than the fact which is now mentioned. How can, then, in the common use and sense of the English language, any body of men really represent any others than those by whom the greater part of them are named and appointed for that purpose? This may not interfere with a legal representation, nor do I declare myself any opinion about a real one. I am on the subject ready to receive with respect the dictates of my betters. It may perhaps be a mystery in politics, or something not at this moment comprehended by the writer. However, this legal, this real representative, or in what manner soever that honourable body is to be described, they do ever suffer their fellow-subjects to apply to them by petition through the hands of any one of their own Members. This circumstance is there necessary, but it seems to make no effectual difference. The right or practice itself has never been denied or disputed, nor therefore has it stood in need of the sanction of an Act of Parliament. The road is yet more direct to the Throne; the Subject presents of himself, and without intervention, his petition there. This right was at the Revolution confirmed in as fit terms as the truest friend of the freedom of his country could have found. There are therefore required no strings or belts to clear either of these ways; they remain ever plain and open, and lead immediately to those who can afford us effectual redress and assistance. Thus stands then this point: our Throne is hereditary --- our Peerage is hereditary; the major part of our House of Commons is appointed by an inconsiderable proportion of the Nation. Can then many words be wanted to recommend or to enforce the practice of petition by the people and the publick, or is the community to have no share in its own Constitution, in its Legislature, its Government, and the determination of its most important and most essential concerns?

However, as we have in our hands proper, prudent, and peaceable means of stopping or of diverting these measures, so let us on the other side consider whether we shall not, by a neglect of them, become partakers in the guilt of the wrongs do to the Americans, and of the ruin brought on ourselves and our posterity. All people are responsible for the publick conduct of those whom they appoint or consent to be over them; this is the law of men and of Nations, but it is likewise that of a higher power - it is the law of nature. I observe, with reverence, that Providence seems is to unite together the interests and concerns; the fate and fortunes of each State and of each Kingdom, and to demand at their hands an account of the actions of their respective Rulers, whether Princes, Ministers, or any other; ther prosperity and their adversity appear to be in a great degree dealt out to them according to that circumstance. It is strange on what ground some people found their presumption; for the publick does not only appoint government in its first original, but it is most evident that it does afterwards continue, at all times, to answer for the conduct and the measures of its Governours, both to God and to man. But with respect to our own case in the present instance, can there be in the affairs of humanity a fairer or a more equitable condition than for people to have in their own power the means of removing their danger and of securing their stability? However, it behoves us to remember on what terms we enjoy it. The Americans may one day require at our hands and retaliate upon us their own sufferings; and most certainly will do so, if we shall not exert to effect these means inherent in us, but that the things and the events already begun and in motion shall come to extremity. The story of the war carried on by the Dutch in support of their liberty against the Portuguese and the Spaniards will sufficiently teach us this, if we need to go beyond our own reason for such a piece of instruction. We have in ourselves, and placed in our hands the power on this occasion of insuring our own safety, and of restoring to our Colonies and our countrymen of America their rights, their peace, their properties, and their liberties a most noble and inestimable privilege, but in all appearance not entrusted to us without account.

It may, however, be asked, What way is then to be taken - what clue can be found that may lead us out of our present perplexity and difficulties? I answer, that it is much more easy to embroil a state, which is in peace and in tranquillity, than it is to reduce it again to the same desirable situation, when it shall once be so embroiled. However I will, in so important a matter, venture to hazard an opinion, although with some uncertainty of the future fact whereon it is grounded. There is said to be sitting at Philadelphia, a Congress of some of the most respectable persons of that Continent. It appears probable, that there may from them come in some shape or another propositions to the publick or to the Government. Should that be so, let not these be, out of an ill-judged pride or idea of superiority, despised and refused; but, on the contrary, adopted and made the ground and the foundation of a future settlement and establishment between us and America. I won't prevaricate or deny that I mean in some measure a new one; for of returning again exactly and precisely to the former and ancient one, there is not the least appearance of probability, although there shall in the way be nothing more than what is known to have already happened. They have once trusted to our experience and our prudence; however they have found these but a weak and a slender security. They will undoubtedly expect some stronger and better barrier - some line to be drawn, or some landmark to be fixed in futurity between us. I speak it with the utmost sincerity, that I verily believe them to understand the joint interests of Great Britain and of America better than we do, and that they will in the first instance propose nothing unfit or unbecoming with respect to this country; but should we neglect or reject proper terms when they are offered, we may perhaps afterwards not come readily to the same again. Our Charles the First granted ten times more at last than would have contented and have satisfied at first; but he ever suffered himself to be forced - that was his evil policy and evil fortune. None thanked him for what he did; he lost at length all, his head not excepted. Do not let our state or our Government imitate in their conduct that unfortunate Prince. There may directly be for a Kingdom no block or scaffold, but there are just and equal laws, and a severe and irresistible fatality attending upon the transgression of them. What is in the general course of an infinite universe perpetually proceeding in obedience to those laws the existence, the rise or the fall of a state, any more upon the comparison than that of a single person? These are not light and trifling matters which are now in operation - a midsummer night's dream, or the story of a day, with which we may divert ourselves at our will. It may be depended upon that it is forever, if these Provinces shall once be severed from us. The command and the government of great countries are not to be taken up again at pleasure, when they shall have fallen from the band that holds them, like the playthings of children.

But it may be observed to have been thrown out that France and Spain would interfere; whereas nothing of that kind has happened, nor are we disturbed by either of them. I answer that their Ministers of State must otherwise have been much as thoughtless and as inconsiderate as our own. It is fit that the fish should fasten on the hook, or be entangled in the net, beyond the power of getting free, before the hand appears which is to strike or to make a prey of it. He is surely but a poor politician who can be laid asleep by those two Cabinets, being more cunning than to stay, or to turn us in the beginning of a career, which must be so much to their satisfaction and their inclination. It is an old proverb, that any one should make a bridge of gold for his enemy, when he is flying from him. Is it to be doubted, but that these powers would willingly pave almost with any materials, and at any expense, a way for us by which to march and to attack our own Provinces - those Provinces which have so long been the support of ourselves and the envy of other Nations. It has been said that they have before now found the means of paving the way to their own peace with us; but Heaven forbid that they should ever find that of putting us at daggers-draw among ourselves - of engaging in a war with one another the mother country and our Colonies of North America.

Whenever that ill-star'd hour shall arrive, and by whose folly or artifice soever brought about, the arms of our rivals will hardly be wanted to lay the glory and the greatness of Britain in the dust. France and Spain laugh and sing in the mean time to see what we are doing and it may be depended upon that they know better than to meddle at this moment in our broils.

There is another point to which I would speak a word before I have done. Some sycophants and makers of mischief on the other side of the Atlantic seem to have had no small part in causing the present disturbances. Why should otherwise all these have rather arisen in Massachusetts Bay than in Connecticut or in Rhode-Island, except that we appoint the Governours in the former, and that the people themselves do so in the latter? The counsels of these men must, upon experience, have been found wrong and mistaken. They magnified the mighty power of Parliaments, and appear to have flattered some people here, as if their finger was irresistible. Had they pointed out events as they have really happened, it is impossible that we should have conducted ourselves as we have actually done. All this may clearly be accounted for, if we suppose one principle, which is, that they meant to advance themselves in Great Britain, however their endeavours might turn out either for us or for America. It would be a most strange thing should these same persons be still consulted, countenanced, and encouraged. We ought to be sensible how dearly we have already paid on that article. The writer does not know the face of one of them; I speak singly for the sake of the publick; but there can, in all appearance, no common good come to the two countries of Great Britain and North America, until that these fatal authors of our mutual evils shall be banished from all councils and confidence.

So much for my present object. I have on this occasion not entered into the difficulty, or rather the apparent impossibility of subduing, with a few thousands of Soldiers from England, a very great Continent, most strong in itself, and defended by some hundreds of thousands of its inhabitants naturally placed over the different parts, and commanding all the produce and the advantages of the country, and who are armed, trained, and ready to take the field in defence of what they believe to be their all; men of tried bravery, and that have, upon experience, performed many actions of remark; I have not insisted on the absolute certainty of their finding, in case of a direct rapture and revolt from Great Britain, foreign assistance; I have not mentioned our Ministers having wantonly, and, in all appearance, out of personal ambition, taken upon themselves the affairs of our East India Company, and having by that means subjected, on any contention with the native powers of those regions, the Nation to the danger of being one day found between the two fires of the West Indies and of the East, and perhaps, at the same time, a fire in Europe hotter than either of the others; I have not examined the burthen of our National Debt pressing, in the midst of these circumstances, most heavily upon us; I have not touched on very many other topics respecting our present ill-judged and ill-omened attempt; these were of a preceding subject. This matter has now been only taken up on the ground where it was left upon a former argument, and upon our measures and the change and the state of affairs in America since that time; here will I likewise leave it once more.

It is not owing to a want of information, to a want of understanding, to a want of a sense and a knowledge of the importance or the imprudence of our American measures, if some people of property, of capacity, of independence seem to sleep supinely while a rock is ready to fall and to crush their country. There is in publick concerns an abjectness which obtains and daily increases among us, and that in a rank of men where it ought least to prevail, and to whom others are entitled to look up in a time of danger or of difficulty. The rise and the beginning of this might readily be pointed out; it was not first of this reign; but these men may truly be told that there is no support for themselves but in the stability of all; that their private fortunes and possessions will, in the common destruction, most inevitably go to wreck and to ruin with the rest, the cloud from the Atlantic threatens them as well as the Merchant and the Manufacturer, the Farmer and the Labourer. But we seem not to remember that we are born Britons; that Governments are instituted for the good of the governed, and for that only; that we have, in our immediate, personal, and collective capacity, an inherent right to signify our sentiments of the national measures to those who contrive, govern, and direct them; that the concern therein of many is, upon the comparison, much as considerable one for one as their own, but that of all united and taken together almost as the ocean to a drop of water; that we are men, and not a flock of sheep forced to follow our fellow, because he happens to bear a bell about his neck. The writer has thrown out these things from a sincere and earnest desire of the general safety and welfare; he heartily hopes that the seed is sown in good ground, and that it will bear fruit for the benefit of the whole; but if, after all, the hand of fate is upon this Nation; if the period approaches in which we are doomed to perish; if there is at once an incurable madness in our councils, and a boundless obsequiousness in our proper guardians and protectors; if the Constitution is forgotten, and men of weight and of respect abandon their country, I must say that His will be done who governs both individuals and communities. I trust, nevertheless, that these words will not be so lost but that they shall at least preserve one private person from the charge and the consciousness of having scrupled to speak plainly his opinion and his expectation of the dangers and the evils impending over the publick.

November, 1774

P. S. During the printing of these sheets authentick accounts are come of Resolutions respecting a suspension of commerce between America and Great Britain, being entered into and recommended by the Congress held at Philadelphia. This is another material circumstance and considerations pointed out and pressed in the foregoing book. I mean now to make no reflections on the subject; time will tell, whether the consequences shall also be such, as are there supposed or conceived. There is another vote of the same meeting, which is both so very plain, and so very important, that I cannot omit to repeat it in its own words, which are, "That the Congress approve of the opposition by the inhabitants of the Massachusetts Bay to the execution of the late Acts of Parliament, and if the same should be attempted to be carried into execution by force, all America ought, in such a case, to support them in their opposition." This neither needs nor admits of any comment; but how amply does it fulfil what we were on that head forewarned. However let us at least not neglect the caution which it contains for the time to come. It is likewise almost impossible for an Englishman not to observe with the most sincere regret that the first proceedings of a new and an essential assembly among ourselves have been such as must by all men in our America be understood to approve and to maintain in the highest and the harshest of language the measures carrying on against them. It becomes the writer to receive with respect these Resolves of our Legislature; however, I shall, in regard thereto, desire once more every person; having for his country any concern, most seriously to consider whether humble, constitutional, general, and universal petitions are not our last and our only remaining, although, at the same time, our sure and our certain resource, if they shall duly and properly be employed and applied.

THE ADDRESS OF THE PEOPLE OF GREAT BRITAIN TO THE INHABITANTS OF AMERICA. *

FRIENDS AND COUNTRYMEN: We have seen the three Addresses of your Congress, the first of which is directed to us, the next to you, and the last to his Majesty; and we wish we could add that we had not seen their Address to the French Inhabitants of Quebec; because it flatters them, provided they adopt the projects of the Congress, with the protection of a religion which the Congress, in their Address to us, say is fraught with "Impiety, Bigotry, Persecution, Murder, and Rebellion:"and therefore complain of Parliament for protecting; and because it proposes a social compact with a people whose genius and Government, the Congress, in their Addresses to you and us, represent as incompatible with freedom. But the views intended to be compassed by the last of these Papers, we impute to those who framed it, and not to you. For to men generous and open as you are; the integrity of whose intentions we believe corresponds to our own, we will not permit ourselves to impute insidious views or insidious arts. We give you a generous credit, because we expect it from you.

In our turn we address you, not as foes; not as communities which would league yourselves with Frenchmen against us; not as individuals who would conceal the hatred which you have, or stab under pretence of the love which you have not; but as our friends and our countrymen. God forbid these endearing appellations should ever be exchanged for those of Enemy and Traitor; for the flame of liberty which burns in our breasts, we revere in yours. Your services in the late wars, with the oblivion of which you reproach us, we remember well. Your industry, your virtue, and your piety, we honour; because we believe that those who stand in awe of the estimation of their own minds, and fear their God, will seldom go far in a wrong path.

We wish we could forget, as easily as we forgive, the two modes by which your Congress proposes to disappoint the wishes of Britain for the good of America; the one threatens War; the other a Suspension of Trade. We mean not to insult you; we wish not to offend you; we know threats would be thrown out in vain to you; they exasperate instead of intimidating the free. But we owe to you: to ourselves, to our holy religion, and to that system of glory and liberty involved in the united power of the British Empire, and to be dissolved alone by the dissolution of its parts, and which we wish to last till time shall be no more, to give you our thoughts upon those two modes of opposition, with freedom and with truth. So may Heaven deal kindly with us and our posterity in the hour of need, as we mean kindness and not unkindness to you and your posterity, in what we are now to say to you on these heads.

We speak first of the first of them, to wit: the project of a warlike opposition on your part against us; because we will not conceal from you it is the most alarming to us, because it ought to be so to you, and yet is not. No people situated as you are, can hope for success in war, unless they are possessed of four things before they engage in it: fortified Towns to secure the persons of their people, and intercept the incursions and advance of their enemies; a disciplined Army to defend their lands; a Navy to protect their Seas and Rivers; and not only a great annual Revenue, but the capacity of funding it, so as by borrowing, present capitals on the credit of future interests, to throw the abilities of several years into one. And this last article is, perhaps, in modern times, of more importance than all the others put together; because, in modern times, the success of war depends more on the longest purse than on the longest sword. Now, you have not a single walled Town, nor a single disciplined Regiment, nor a single Ship-of War, nor a single Fund on which moneyed men would lend you a month's expense of an armament; and your annual Revenue is so small as hardly to deserve the name of one. You are Englishmen. We appeal to that good sense which distinguishes Englishmen. Lay causes and effects, circumstances and their consequences together. Can you hope for success in such a war?

Success do we say! Your destruction is inevitable. No country and people were ever so peculiarly ill-situated and circumstanced for a war with us, as you are at this instant. You are to encounter, after the very career of victory, that dreadful period which, inflaming military men with the remembrance of late glories, and confidence of future success, raises the victors above themselves; a veteran Army lately come from carrying conquest wherever it carried colours, and a veteran Navy lately come from sweeping the Seas of all enemies in all quarters of the globe; and to measure your trifling revenue; not more than seventy-five thousand Pounds a year, against that of a Nation which has a sinking fund of between two and three millions a year, and which, in the last war, was able to expend seventeen millions in one year. Your Towns are built all to the edge of deep water, so as to be within reach not only of cannon-shot, but even of pistol-shot. Your country-houses and estates lie generally on the banks of deep Rivers. The most valuable part of your fortunes in the Southern Provinces, is composed of slaves, ready to rebel against their masters, or run away from them on the appearance of an enemy. Your Coasts, by the large inlets of Bays and Rivers, are easily commanded.

To give only one example. Two twenty-gun Ships stationed at the Capes of Virginia, where the Sea is not more than two or three leagues over, and another in Albemarle Sound, with two or three armed Sloops to attend them, could lock up altogether the very best part of North Carolina, and the whole of two of your noblest Provinces, Virginia and Maryland, that is, a Coast of six-hundred miles in extent. A war with Britain must expose you to calamities from which even demons would turn their eyes. The most singular spectacle to be found in all the records of history, might, in the space of one little summer, or half a summer, be exhibited in America. For in that short space of time, in a country above two thousand miles lit extent, enriched with the beauties of art and of nature, and inhabited by a virtuous, polished, and free people, every Town, without the exception of one, might be reduced to ashes by our Ships-of-War; all your country-houses and estates ravaged, not by the slow advances of Armies, but by the rapid courses of the barges of those Ships; or those Towns and estates, if not destroyed, laid at least under the most grievous Contributions. Your slaves lost, or become your masters; yourselves fled for protection from them to the woods, or to hide you from your own shame; your trade annihilated; and your vessels and seamen captive in the Ports of that enemy whose rage you had provoked; your demagogues, now so bold when there is no danger, would then be the first to fly from its approach; for the valiant are modest, but the restless and noisy are always timid; your spirit alone would be left to you; that spirit which, judging of you by ourselves, we know we cannot conquer but by friendship.

Do you trust to foreign aids in such a conflict? We doubt not you would get them. Your and our felicity is the envy of all Nations. Slaves always hate the free. Many Nations will rejoice to disturb that felicity. Sad aids! where every victory of your allies would remind you over whom it was gained, and remove still further and further from your eyes, that sweet equality, that high station of English liberty which you and we alone, of all human kind, once possessed. Will these auxiliaries conquer for you and not for themselves? Will the inquisition of Spain make a Protestant cause independent? Will the despotism of France establish a new Empire of liberty, after having been stopped in her career to universal monarchy by an old one? Your posterity will bless the memory of those ancestors who fled from native tyrants, but curse the memory of those who subjected them to foreign ones.

In the prospect of such a struggle, do you feel nothing for our distress? in being obliged to punish those whom we pity, to crush that spirit, in which, amidst all its errors, we recognise our own, and to counteract the ways of Providence, in rearing future Empires of freemen in future ages, pleasing to itself. Unhappy we! Ungenerous you! You abuse that tenderness which you know we cannot throw off for you. We dwell on the repetition of the sentiment, that we feel for you as nurseries of freemen, in which God and Nature are interested, and for which to God and Nature we are responsible. We will not attempt to harden ourselves against a remorse, which we know would follow our successes against you. You need not, till a cruel extremity comes upon us, fear the sword of your parent country uplifted against you. Perhaps, even then, it would drop from our hands bedewed with our tears, not with your blood. The mean amongst you know this our weakness, and insult it; but from the generous we will expect a more generous return.

* A Pamphlet having lately made its appearance in this country, entitled "The Address of the People of Great Britain to the Inhabitants of America," it may not be amiss to inform the Publick that this Pamphlet was wrote by Sir John Dalrymple, at the express request of Lord North; by the same Sir John Dalrymple, who, at the request of the best of Princes, some time ago wrote and published his Memoirs of Great Britain and Ireland, calculated almost solely to extirpate the very idea of patriotism, by endeavouring to condemn to infamy the memory of the two most celebrated patriots mentioned in British history, the illustrious and celebrated RUSSELL and SIDNEY.

Several letters now in this Colony, some from Sir John himself, prove and acknowledge him the author of the Pamphlet. - Va. Gazette. 1

With respect to the commercial project of opposition, which consists in the resolution not to Export or Import, proposed by your Congress, and perhaps, though not yet spoke out by the Members of it, in resolutions not to pay the millions due by America to the British Merchants, which would be the consequence of the other, if the other could take effect; you may think that by these means you may force the Mercantile interest to desert the cause of their country; strip us of our Trade and Manufactures; reduce our West India Islands to misery, from the want of provisions, and of a market for the produce of their estates; and, by the stoppage of the usual publick taxes, to pay the interest of the publick debts, bring a publick bankruptcy upon Britain.

Be not deceived in the first of these prospects. Amidst the disgrace of civil dissension, preserve still national honour, otherwise vengeance, private as well as publick, will overtake you. The Merchant whom you defraud of one part of his fortune, will not complain of being obliged to lay out another part to recover it; and too surely in the end you will repay his losses with usury. Instead of making him desert the cause of his country, the violation of faith will only attach him the more firmly to it. Rest not your opinions on the frivolousness of publick petitions or addresses, presented by bodies of Merchants. Richard Cromwell was pressed in sixteen hundred addresses, to take that Government upon him, which a few months afterwards his addressers took from him. Innumerable addresses were presented to James the Second, in favour of that dispensing power, which the men who presented them soon after converted into a reason for dethroning him. If you wish to knoe the sentiments of one of those Mercantile Petitioners, go to his counting-house or dining table: he will tell you he signed a Petition for you, because his neighbour did it, or to hurt a Minister, or to appear of importance in his business, or to keep rioters in America from plundering his effects, or to prevent other people from becoming more popular in business there than himself. But ask him if he is sincere, he will laugh at your credulity, and he will have reason; for do you think he is to prefer you to himself, or bear favour to those who would turn the streams of trade from his door, and disperse them among all neighbouring Nations?

But your deception will be still more fatal in the second of the prospects, which the Resolutions proposed by your Congress may open to you, namely, the downfall of the Trade and Manufactures of England. There are two essential differences between your situation and ours in the quarrel of children, which your Congress would, draw both of us into. The first essential difference is, that you have no market, or hardly any market, for your commodities, except Britain or her Dominions; but the world is our market. Whilst our Merchants have large stocks and larger credit, our people much industry and more ingenuity, and while mankind have wants, natural or artificial, to be supplied, our Merchants will not want commissions, our Ships cargoes, or our Manufacturers employment. The channels of trade will be changed, but they will not be dried up. The other essential difference is, that every stoppage of your trade will be a loss to you; but in many articles, and these the most material, the loss will fall not upon us but upon others. For example, if you salt not your usual quantity of fish and other provisions, because you will not send them to our West Indies, or to England, you will not, indeed, have occasion for the quantity of Salt which has been usually imported into America; but the loss will fall on other countries; for we send you no Salt. If your Southern Provinces will not take Osnaburghs from Britain, for the clothing of their slaves, nine-tenths of the loss will fall not on us, but on Germany; for we are accustomed to send you only a trifling quantity of our own making. We repeat it again, we wish not to offend, we mean not to threaten; but since we have mentioned these two articles, we must let you know, that an Act of Parliament, which should prohibit the importation of them, and of one other article, to wit, Molasses, into America, would desolate your Provinces without the aid of Armies or Navies. If you receive no Osnaburghs, the most valuable part of the stock on your estates in the Southern Provinces, your slaves, must waste away by diseases. If you receive no Salt, the most valuable part of your wealth in the Northern and even in some of your Southern Provinces, your herds and fish, will be of little more use than to cover your dunghills. Your poor would suffer from the want of salt provisions, on which they chiefly live; and we doubt, accustomed to the use of Salt as Europeans are, whether rather rich or poor could live without Salt, more than without water. If you receive not Molasses, the circulation of the greatest branch of your internal commerce and manufactures must stop, from the North to the South, and from the South to the North; and yet, the loss of the Molasses trade to you, would be no loss to our West India Islands, because it is well known to yourselves, that nine-tenths of the Molasses which you consume, are

When the effect of the powers which we have to become your executioners, would be so fatal unto you, do you imagine that we can believe that you will execute yourselves? Communities as well as individuals, have, indeed, sometimes their periods of frenzy. During such periods you may, by the stoppage of trade, do much mischief to us, and we to you. But the mischief which you can do to us is finite, that which we can do to you is infinite.

The third consequence of the Resolutions proposed by your Congress, namely, the miseries to be inflicted by means of them upon our West India Islands, would recoil with double force upon yourselves. Your Congress have got you enemies enough do not strive to multiply them. You depend more on those Islands than they do upon you. Without them you would be without even a market for the most lucrative part of the produce of your estates, your provisions and lumber. Men do not break glass windows with guineas. The vast balance on your trade to those Islands, shows what you would suffer in the loss of it.

If you hope, upon the breach of trade with us and our Dominions, to get Salt, Osnaburghs, and Molasses, from other countries, or their Plantations; your hopes will be in vain. Do you think that our Planters or we would sit quietly down and see the system of the Navigation laws violated, to injure them and defraud us? We have hitherto connived at the pilfering smuggling of thieves, but we should then chastise the smuggling of robbers like the other actions of robbers. We have had indulgencies for you in the hours of friendship; do you think we should continue them in those of defiance?

If the last and greatest of all the four calamities which your Congress foresees in imagination, namely, a national bankruptcy, should fall upon us, where would be your gain? Have you or your relations no fortunes in our funds to suffer by their ruin. If our revenues and credit should fall to the ground, who would defend you, as we did in the former wars against France and Spain? Who defend you against the deluges, perhaps, of more Northern Nations, who might pour ripen the distant Provinces of England, when she was unable to defend, them, as their ancestors did upon those of Imperial Rome? The languishing Provinces of Rome looked up in vain for help to a languishing head; that head could give them none; for, weakened by the disobedience and disaffection of the Provinces, she stood in need of protection for herself.

Instead then of listening to projects of war, or of suspension of commerce, assert your own reason in your own cause, and trust it not to the passions of others. We do not wonder, that with the vast Atlantic Ocean between you and us, to prevent a mutual communication of sentiments, mutual misapprehensions of the sentiments of each other should have arisen. When great interests are at stake, and those who are engaged in them are free, and therefore high-minded, jealousies, points of pride, misunderstandings, are inevitable for a time. But when each party is in the right in some things, and neither in the wrong in all, these, and the effects of them, last only for a time; the cloud passes away, and the sun shines forth again.

Let us examine the subjects of difference between us.

You complain of us, because, in a declaratory Statute, parliament asserted a right to bind you by its regulations in all cases whatever; and we complain of you, because you assert that Parliament has no right to bind you in any case whatever. But it was you who first set up the last of these pretensions, and you forced Parliament, in order to provide against encroachments, until limits were constitutionally settled, to meet it with the first. But claims so widely worded, are words, and no more. In the votes of your Assemblies, and the declaratory words of our Statute, they stand only as records that there have been unhappy differences between England and her Colonies: for surely you mean not by your assertion, to preclude Parliament from the power of disabling you to ruin England, nor we in ours to give it a power of ruining America. There was a time when our ancestors seemed to differ as much about the terms resistance and non-resistance, relatively to the rights of the subject, as their posterity do now upon the terms supremacy and independence, relatively to the rights of Great Britain and America. Yet they in reality could only differ about the degree of provocation which justified resistance, and we in reality can only differ about the extent to which the exercise of the claims of the two countries may be carried. The Revolution, with the explanations it led to, discovered to them that they agreed upon the degree of the one; and the present emergency, with the explanations to which it should lead, may perhaps discover to us that we agree upon the other.

If, indeed, under the objection to the supremacy of Britain, you mean to deny to the executive part of our Constitution to the King, the power of appointing those Officers of Revenue, Law, and Government, whom he has been accustomed to appoint, of putting a negative upon the Bills of your Assemblies, of sending forces for the protection of his subjects and Dominions, with the other usual powers of the Crown; if you mean to deny to the judicial part of our Constitution, the right of a Supreme Court of Judicature in England, to receive appeals from your Courts of Justice; if you mean to deny to the legislative part of our Constitution, to the Parliament, the power to regulate your commerce for the mutual benefit of both countries, we shall indeed stake the fate of the British Empire on the contest; not for our own interests alone, but for yours, and those of human kind; for if you are permitted to throw off these badges of supremacy, as madmen may call them, you are that instant independent States, you will form yourselves into independent Principalities, Republicks, and we fear Anarchies. A new political system will arise, not in Europe alone, but in the world.. Foreign Nations will intrigue in your Assemblies; you will engage in wars with them, with us, and with your sister Provinces. This is not all. In Governments formed suddenly, and which, therefore, must be imperfect, you will fall into dissension among yourselves, so that all the miseries of foreign, of civil, and of domestick war, will be accumulated on your heads. We wish that your Congress, which is so learned in the principles of the great Montesquieu, were equally learned in the condition of the Greek States, during the Peloponnesian war, a condition exactly similar, to what yours would be, as described by the great Thucydides. The individuals of it would there learn, that those demagogues, who, from restlessness of temper, or ambition of making themselves conspicuous above others, plunged their countries into disorders and calamities, were often the first to fall by the hands of their countrymen.

But if you mean, under the objection to the supremacy of Great Britain, to deny her the exercise of the power or imposing taxes upon you, without the consent of your Assemblies, the exemption you contend for deserves a very different attention. If you claim it as a matter of right, derived from authority, we must refuse you; because no Charter, except one of one Province, gives it to you, and long practice and many Statutes have taken it from you; and because the position, that there can be no taxation where there is no representation, is a jingle of words, in which, in point of reasoning, the conclusion does not follow from the premises, and which is disproved in point of fact, by many instances of men who have been taxed, though not represented in this Kingdom. If you assert it under the claim of equitable consideration, we must also refuse you; because you are bound to support that state which protects you; because other Nations extend their Revenues as they extend their Dominions; because the taxes imposed upon you were to have been applied within your own Provinces, and for your own safeties, and not for ours; and because your abilities even to share our burthens are unquestionable, seeing that when eight millions of us pay ten millions of taxes, which amounts to twenty-five Shillings on each person, three millions of you pay only seventy-five thousand Pounds, or six Pence on each person; and this in a country where a labouring-man gets three times the wages that he does in England, and yet may live on half the expense. When you tell us you are unable to pay taxes, pardon us for once in this address, if we tell you that we do not believe you. But if you appeal to the rights of human nature, and the great interests of society, we bow to those your sacred protectors. We can find no line between the use and abuse of taxing you without the consent of your own Assemblies. We revere the Prince on the Throne, and know our liberties to be safe in his hands; but we cannot be certain of a succession of royal virtue in all ages to come; and we can anticipate occasions when a Prince may, even by means of Parliament, venture to do things which he would not have ventured upon by himself; as Tiberius by his Senates did what Nero dared not to do by his Guards. In such a case, though Charters, practice, Statutes, and even equitable consideration, warrant us to retain the exercise of the power of taxation over you, we desire to throw it from us, as unworthy of you to be subject to, and of us to possess. We will not degrade you, because in your exaltation our own is involved; we desire only to be secured that you will yourselves make provision for your own safety and defence. If this has not been done sooner, the fault was your own. You connected your claim of not being taxed with so many other claims, that it became impossible for us to make the concession which we wished, from the danger of its being made a precedent for extorting other concessions, to which we could not yield without doing a mischief even to those who claimed them.

It has been the fortune; perhaps the peculiar one of Britain, that from apparent mischiefs, real good has arisen; and convulsions, terrifying at first, have only paved the way for preventing their return. From the late differences, it is the fault of us both if we do not derive future agreement. That agreement is best to be insured by some great act of state, which, on the principles of mutual dependence, shall form a system of common interest and happiness, and remove, as far as human wisdom can look forward, the probability of future differences. Whether your Assemblies shall, in a constitutional way, make the first advance to Parliament to effectuate that measure, or Parliament shall make the first advance to you, by sending a Parliamentary Commission to America, immaterial; the first honour will belong to the party which shall first scorn punctilio in so noble a cause.

When the other subjects of dispute, unconnected with that of taxation, come to be canvassed by those who shall be authorized to give and receive suggestions for removing them, they will find, perhaps with surprise, of how little consequence the disputed points are, and how easy to be adjusted. Of these there seem to be chiefly three. The first of them arises from the restraints laid by the regulations of Parliament upon your trade and manufacture for the advantage of ours. But are we not laid under similar restraints in these respects, for the advantage of yours? For you we submit to monopolies; for you lay restraints on our trade; for you we are taxed; and for you impose similar hardships upon other parts of our Dominions. We shall only select a few instances out of many. The landed man is prohibited from raising Tobacco at home, and the Merchant disabled to import it with advantage from abroad, in order to give a monopoly of the commodity to you, and at their expense; for the one could raise, and the other import Tobacco, at a much cheaper price than they get it from you. We give vast bounties on the importation of your Flax, Hemp, Timber, and Naval Stores, to the detriment of those who raise them at home, to whom we give none. Our Merchants are restrained by prohibitions, or duties equivalent to prohibitions, from importing Rice, Indigo, and many other articles of the produce of your estates, in order to give you a monopoly of those articles, although they could bring them much cheaper from other Nations.

We give a bounty upon the importation of Indigo, and continue it upon exportation, by which accumulated favour, we first give you a premium to import, and then enable you, by the advantage of a double market, to raise the price upon us afterwards. Our West India Islands were restrained from taking Provisions or Timber from other countries, in order to secure a monopoly of those articles to you; at their expense, who complained not of restraints which they shared with their mother country for your good. Our own Merchants are subject to duties on the importation of foreign commodities; but it is you who draw them back; so that they pay a tax, and you receive a premium in this exchange of commodities. If we lately imposed a trifling tax upon you, to be spent among yourselves, we have taxed ourselves to an hundred times the value of it to pay bounties to you. These bounties hurt our Revenue not only in the loss of the money paid out, but by stopping the importation from other Nations of the articles for which they are granted, and consequently, the taxes which would have been paid on those articles. In some instances, we hurt both our Revenue and our Trade to serve you. Thus, in the present reign, the duties were taken off American Whale-Fins, by which those duties were lost to Government, and the interest of the British Whale Fishing sacrificed to that of America. Nay, it is notorious that Mr Grenville intended to have taken the bounties off the British Whale Fishing altogether, in order to secure the superiority of the Whale Fishing to you, although the British Whale Fishery produces three hundred thousand Pounds a year, and maintains three thousand Seamen, and a great number of Shipwrights and other artificers. The only thing that stopped the project, was the disorders which arose in America; for these led men naturally to reflect how imprudent it would be, to confer favours which were repaid with ingratitude, or perhaps looked upon as indignities. But we yield to those monopolies, restraints, taxes, and preferences, because we know they are necessary to fasten the vast chain of commerce which is thrown across the Atlantic between America and England. Those restraints are not peculiar to you in dealing with us, nor to us in dealing with you. We impose them on ourselves in dealing with ourselves: for example, the whole landed interest, and that of every inhabitant who wears a suit of clothes, is sacrificed to the mercantile and manufacturing interests, in the regulations of Parliament concerning Wool; for the landlord cannot export the Wool of his Sheep, nor the inhabitant import the Woollen Cloths of other countries, though the one could sell his Wool to foreigners much dearer than to those who have thus got a monopoly of it, and the other buy Cloth much cheaper from them than from his countrymen. In some of those regulations which affect ourselves only, Parliament sometimes commits mistakes; but they are remedied as soon as felt and pointed out. Perhaps in some of those regulations which affect you relatively to us, or us relatively to you, mistakes in commercial principles have also been committed; in some instances, you are restrained too much, and in others too little; but in the great act of state which we allude to, these mistakes can by commercial principles be corrected. For it is your and our solid security, that your Assemblies and our Parliaments cannot injure those whom they represent, without hurting themselves; nor injure you without hurting us; nor us without hurting you. It will not be difficult for Merchants on both sides to suggest favours which we ought not to refuse to you, and limitations which you ought not to refuse to us. And we pray for some great and liberal commercial arrangement, which may remain a monument to future ages that though there was once, there was but once, the appearance of a quarrel between Great Britain and her Colonies.

The next ground of your complaints, in point of consequence, is that the King and Parliament interfere in other objects of your internal legislation, new-model your Assemblies, and alter your Charters.

Here, again, it will be your own fault if, in adjusting the terms of the act of state, we have mentioned order shall not arise out of disorder, and a great judicial and legislative arrangement accompany a commercial one. In Virginia the Justices of the Peace and your Governour and Council are your only Judges. The former sit only once a month; from them there lies an appeal to the Governour and Council, formed into a Court of Judicature, which sits only in April and October, and only twenty days at each time. and which it is not unknown to us, is at this day in arrears above six years in its law business. It is no affront to either of these bodies of men to say that, however upright or able they may be, they can know little of law. In the infant state of your society this administration of justice was, perhaps, the best; but it is not applicable to a state of society in which the modifications of the actions of mankind, and consequently of rights and delinquencies founded on these, are infinite in extent. This important state of law has given room not only to the present disorder in Virginia, but for their appearing greater than they are; for the Justices dare not officiate at all, even though they were willing; and the mob are turned the governours instead of the governed. It has been so in every country since this world began, in which dignity, independence, power, and even splendour has not been thrown around the seats of justice, to strike with awe the imaginations of the meanest, and with the necessity of obedience even the highest. A similar imperfection in the state of law and police pervades, we are afraid, in many of your other Provinces. In few of them are your Judges for life, or supported by appointments which can give even rank to their officers; the inevitable consequences of which cannot fail to be that they must be the slaves either of those who appoint them, or of the mob, instead of the masters of both. These are the very rocks on which the Grecian Republicks were shipwrecked; for the spirits of freemen are high, and therefore mutinous, and are to be kept from disorder only by the laws. But where the administration of these is weak, there is no security for the property, person, or honour of any one. In lamenting this defect in the condition of your society, we plead the cause of human nature, not our own. You of inferior orders need the protection of independent and powerful Courts of Justice, to defend you against the high, and you of superior stations need it to defend you against the low: Both of you know how far it is safe and honourable to depend upon juriconsults of the tar and feather order. You have tried the experiment and smarted by it. You will be told we mean to enslave you by law. We scorn to answer the insinuation. It is our pride as Britons to be slaves to the law, but free in every thing else. If you suspect us, appoint your own Judges, pay them your own salaries, or share the appointment and payment with the Crown. To us these points are immaterial, but let your Judges be for life, with incomes suited to their stations; and in their independence your own will be secured.

On this head it is your interest more than ours to correct all errors in the constitution of your General Assemblies and of your Charters. Most of your Constitutions were formed by accident, not by fore-thought; some of your Charters hardly deserve the name. If we are in the wrong in thinking so, let them stand as they are; but if we are in the right, correct them like men. Common sense will show you, without our doing it, that they should be modelled by the roles of common sense. The best of Princes will contribute his part, and Parliament theirs, to comply with your desires for every alteration which can lead to justice, order, and your own interest; and we, the people of England; will applaud them when they do.

When you shall thus have obtained a regular administration of Law, Police, and Government amongst you, we shall not be afraid of your holding your estates and trade, and we the debts due to us out of both, by the uncertain tenure of chance, or of democratical anarchy, which is worse than chance; and we shall have little occasion to interfere in your Internal, Judicial, or Legislative arrangements. The great rule, which you do not dispute, that your laws are not to be incompatible with the law of England, and that the Crown has, or ought to have, a negative upon the Bills of your Assemblies, in the same way that it has upon the Bills of our Lords and Commons, will secure us sufficiently against innovations.

The only remaining general subject of contest, so far as we can see, is the power of the Crown to send Troops amongst you without consent of your Assemblies. Perhaps even this delicate point might be adjusted: for you have as much an interest to be defended, as we have to defend you. On your part it might be yielded, that a certain number of British Forces should be supported in America without consent of the Assemblies; and on ours, that no more should be sent except in times of war or actual rebellion.

If these great Commercial, Judicial, Legislative, and Military arrangements were agreed upon, we might leave the provision for them to yourselves; or at least be contented with a standing Revenue, to be now ascertained, between your Assemblies and Parliament. For though we give up the disgraceful and odious privilege of taxing you, you cannot be ignorant that you must establish Revenues, as all other countries do to support your establishments.

The deluded amongst you think that we assume airs of superiority over you, even where they are needless. Far from it: every honour of this country is open to you. We should even be happy to see you ask the establishment of a nobility, and of ranks among yourselves, that your spirits might not only be inflamed by the love of liberty, but exalted by the love of family. The whole history of mankind presents not a state of society, notwithstanding all the imperfections it is charged with, so fraught with liberty, safety, wealth, and honour, as that of England is. Approach to it - fly not from it. All human kind envy it.

Reject not you what others pray for from Heaven.

With such sentiments of kindness in our breasts towards you, and we hope in yours towards us, we cannot, in the reign of the most virtuous of Princes hear, without the deepest concern, a charge made in the Addresses of your Congress, that a system has been formed and pursued in the reign of that Prince, to enslave you by means of Parliament; and wish it had not been added, as a previous step to enslave us.

To vindicate the proceedings of Parliament where they ought not to be blamed, and to point out where perhaps they may without difficulty be amended, is the best way to expose the fallacy of that charge, and at the same time to show you how easy it is to remove such remaining subjects of difference between us, as have not yet been taken notice of in this Address.

It is a cruel mistake for you, ninety-nine of an hundred of whom must be unacquainted with the history of laws, to be made believe that there were no Statutes before the reign of his present Majesty, which imposed taxes on any part of the American Dominions. Those who tell you there were none; know full well there were many. Your ancestors complained of some of them, as all men do of all taxes, but they never disputed the power of Parliament to impose them. *

The last war was begun for the sake of English America. It was terminated by a security gained for it at the peace, which imagination itself could not have hoped for. England was loaded with an immense publick debt, contracted in this great American cause. By the peace a new system was created in America, and an Empire set in motion, which it was obvious could not be supported without a regular Revenue. At this period, Mr. Grenville became the Minister of England, not so much perhaps from the choice of Government, as from the force of opposition, which obliged another Minister to give way to him. Mr. Grenville's life of labour had been spent in attention to the finances of the British Empire; those finances which, next to the enjoyment of liberty, do above all other things give the superiority to Britain above all other Nations. At such a period, had such a Minister proposed to make America liable for that part of the publick debt of England which had been contracted in defending her, it would be ungenerous to his memory, to impute his doing so to a design of enslaving America, in order to enslave his own country; - that country, the care of whose rights employed even his latest hours. But he carried not his views so far as to subject America to a share of the burden even of that debt, and much less of the other debts of England. He only prevailed upon Parliament, in the fourth year of the King, to impose taxes upon sundry foreign commodities imported into America, the produce of which taxes was to be spent in the Colonies, and confined to the service of the Colonies; and these taxes were external ones, that is to say, Port Duties, which every one might avoid by not importing the Goods on which they were laid, or not buying them when imported. No American complained of this at the time as an imposition of slavery. You paid the taxes as your ancestors had done other necessary ones. If, in imposing these taxes, he erred in opinion concerning a matter of right, you erred against it too; for you call it not in question. If error was venial in you, why was it criminal in him? It is hard that you should now convert into a scheme to enslave you, what you then deemed consistent with your freedom.

* 25 Cha. II. cap. 7. 7 & 8 W. & M. cap. 22. 9 Ann. cap. 10. 1 Geo. I. cap. 12. 6 Geo. II. cap. 13, and others.

In the succeeding year the same Minister, on the same principles of giving security to a new and growing Empire, the machine of which could not even stand, and much less move without Revenues to support it, prevailed upon Parliament to pass the Stamp Act. The produce of the Duties was by the Act to be spent in the Colonies, and applied solely to their service.

America clamoured against this last Act. These clamours originated among the Lawyers there, whom the tax chiefly affected, and they were taken up in England by the opposers of the Minister; - two classes of men, the first of whom, by their profession, have always the abilities, and the other in the pursuit of their ambition, the interest to disseminate clamour. But in these clamours, extensive as they afterward became, though flowing from nature, and kept up by art, no American made an objection to the right of England to impose external Duties upon America. You called for the repeal of the Stamp Act, which imposed internal Duties; but you did not ask the repeal of the Port Duties which had the year before been laid upon you.

Lord Rockingham's Administration, which rose on the ruin of Mr. Grenville's, repealed the Stamp Act, but did not repeal the Act which had imposed the Port Duties. We do not pry with a jaundiced eye into the motives of that Administration for the first of those measures; we impute them to the best motives, because we believe that there are in a party, of which his Lordship is the leader, men of Spanish honour and Roman virtue; although we must tell you, that you deceive yourselves grossly when you look up to persons as the only asserters of American liberty who took off only one of what you call your chains, but left the other fast on your necks. But if you incline to pay compliments to an Administration which we do not complain of, it is rather unfair in you to refuse them to that Prince by whose nod alone they were permitted to do anything. If there has been a system in the present reign to enslave you, the repeal even of one of those two Statutes affords an instance that it was not very systematically pursued.

Soon after this repeal Lord Rockingham's Administration got an Act of Parliament passed, which declared the supremacy of Parliament over America, in all cases whatsoever. You cannot convert this Statute into a link of the chain which you think is intended to enthrall you, when you reflect that it was forged by those whom your Congress and yourselves look upon as the great asserters of your liberty.

As you had not hitherto claimed a right of exemption from the power of Parliament to impose external taxes upon you, Ministers could not think of rights which yourselves had never dreamed of. In the Ministry which succeeded to that of Lord Rockingham, an Act of Parliament was passed, in the seventh year of the King, which laid Port Duties in America upon some other objects of commerce than those which were contained in Mr. Grenville's first Act of the fourth of the King. This Act was so little a link in the chain of system against you, that all those who were then the King's Ministers have since denied in full Parliament all concern in the fabric of it; and they are entitled to credit, because they are now engaged in different parties, and each would lay the blame on his neighbour if he could with any truth. It was at the time notorious to all, that the project of the Act was the work of a single person, Mr. Townshend, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, in matters of trade and finance, is well known to have consulted more with Merchants and Financiers than with Ministers, because he thought every man knew his own business best; and in whose great talents Parliament put too implicit a confidence in passing the Act.

America again clamoured, and then for the first time objected to the power of external taxation in Parliament. But she went further, and started many new pretensions which we wish not to repeat, and among others the extravagant doctrines that she, was not bound by the Navigation Laws, and that she was even independent of Parliament altogether. These clamours were well founded in part; for all the taxes in the Statute, except that upon Tea, had been laid upon British manufactures, which consequently had already paid many taxes in Britain, so that the Statute loaded, you both with your tax and ours. Administration and Parliament, therefore, listened with sense and justice to your complaints, and redressed them by repealing those parts of the Act which had imposed that double tax. But it was improper, in point of common prudence, to repeal that part of, it which imposed a trifling tax upon Tea; because, by asking that repeal, at the very time when you were not asking the repeal of the many Port Duties imposed by Mr. Grenville's first Act of the fourth of the King, you shewed that you insisted on this trifle as a matter of mere pride, as a mark of your exaltation and of our humiliation, which it was impossible for England to submit to, while the great questions of independence and supremacy were yet unadjusted, however compatible they might seem, when with temper and reason they should come to be discussed. If Mr. Townshend's Act was a link in the system of this reign to enslave you, the repeal of it affords another instance that it was not very systematically pursued.

Your Congress complains of a Statute, which, during the Duke of Grafton's Administration, suspended the Assembly of New-York, as a continuation of the system of tyranny. We will appeal to your candour against their want of it. Parliament had passed a Statute which made necessary regulations for the Quarters and Provisions of the King's Soldiers in America; regulations to which we, who are as fond of liberty as you are, pay obedience in Britain, because we think that men who submit to lose part of their own freedom for a time, in order to insure it to their countrymen forever, are entitled to all the sensibility which we can show to them; but these regulations were entirely infringed by an Act of the Assembly of New-York. If that Assembly took upon itself to repeal one Act of Parliament, they might have repealed many others; and the subject who obeyed the Legislature of the one country, must have been a Rebel in the eyes of the other. These consequences led directly, unavoidably, and rapidly to a civil war between the inhabitants of New-York and the people of England. There was no way to stop the course of such an Assembly, but to suspend its movements altogether, until it should agree to remedy the mischiefs it had done. The effect answered the design. The Assembly recovered the good humour of Englishmen to Englishmen, and the people their Assembly. Can a law which conferred the common rights of humanity upon the companions of your hazards and glories, who conquered with you and for you, be called a violation of the rights of human nature against you? Can another, which prevented a civil war, be reproached with want of mercy?

When men's minds are irritated, every thing is the source of discontent. Many of the traders in America had long complained of the distance of the London Custom House, which, upon disputes with Revenue Officers, made applications for redress expensive and tedious. Smuggling had gone beyond all bounds in America, from the want of a Board of Customs. To keep a strict eye over the conduct of their Officers. A Board of Customs was, upon these accounts, by Act of Parliament, settled at Boston, in the seventh year of the King. But that establishment, which the fair trader had long desired, and the smuggler alone had reason to dread, has been converted, in the representations of your Congress, into a badge of your slavery. As long as we did not establish a Board of Customs in America, we were blamed for neglecting you. When we send it, we are charged with insulting you. If Boards of Revenue be badges of slavery, no Nation that has wealth is free. Should we recall the present Board of Customs, your posterity might tell our posterity that a Board of Customs over the trade of America, at three thousand miles distance from her, was one of the most ignominious badges of her slavery. It is certainly for the interest of the supremacy of England to place the residence of all the controlling powers in England, in order to keep her Colonies, even by the forms of office, in remembrance of their dependence; and it is not difficult in the Royal Governments, to lodge in the Governour of every Province, with a few of his Council, all the powers of a Board of Customs over the frauds of trade, and all its terrors over the frauds of Officers. And therefore pardon us if we suspect, should any great commercial arrangement ever be the subject of amicable discussion between you and us, that the inspection of the trade of America committed to a Custom House residing in England, is one of the last favours which the fair trader in America would apply for.

But in describing the powers of this Board of Customs, your Congress ought not to have said in their Addresses, to their Sovereign, and you: that "the Commissioners of it" are empowered to break open and enter houses, without "the authority of any Civil Magistrate, founded on legal information." We are certain that the Board of Customs in America has no such power by law. We cannot think that their superiors here would direct them to assume it against law. We do not believe they exercise it; but if we are mistaken, point out the offenders. The vengeance of an injured publick will overtake them. But, till you point out these, lay not the offence obliquely upon others who you know must be guiltless.

Your Congress complains of the Statutes passed during former Administrations of the present reign, to regulate the Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Courts of America, which, they say, extend the jurisdiction of those Courts beyond their ancient limits; deprive you of a Trial by Jury; authorize the Judge's certificate to indemnify the prosecutor in revenue questions from damages; require oppressive security from the claimant of a seizure before he shall be allowed to defend his property, and provide salaries and fees for the Judges from the effects to be condemned by themselves.

This bundle is large, and must be separated. If these be intolerable hardships, your ancestors shared in some, and we share in more of them, without complaining.

Before the date of those Statutes, each, or almost each Province had its own Admiralty Court; but these had so little dignity, and from their local connections were so much liable to be swayed either by the Officer or the smuggler, that they were the continual subject of complaint to both. The Americans complained, too, of the circumstance that the salaries of the Judges of those Courts arose from the fines and forfeitures imposed by themselves. Lastly, they complained that a Court of Appeal in England was too distant from America. To relieve their complaints, four great Vice-Admiralty Courts were, in consequence of the Statutes in question, erected in different stations in America; Judges were appointed to them of known abilities and character, Large salaries were settled upon the Judges, to make them independent. These salaries were paid not from the fines and forfeitures, but in the common way; and to save the trouble and expense of appealing to England, a power of receiving appeals was lodged in these Courts. Those are the offences which, in the institution of the new Courts, have been committed. Your Congress complains, then, of the favours granted to the entreaties of their own countrymen. If you think that these Courts are too distant from each other, they can, by the erection of more, be caused to approach. The impropriety in the original Provincial Admiralty Courts, of the Judges receiving their salaries from the fines, can be removed.

With regard again to the mode of Trial without a Jury in those Courts, in Revenue questions, it has subsisted in America since the Statute in the twenty-second and twenty-third of Charles the Second, which established it. Your ancestors submitted to it, because they favoured the fair trader, and did not desire to see an opening given for the trial of a smuggling cargo, by a Jury of smugglers. With all the strength of this mode of trial, Government has found it weak to support the fair trader by the punishment of the illicit one; and we cannot consent to have it abolished, till we see another equally efficient substituted in its room. Permit us to remind you, that the far greatest part of Revenue questions in this country, that is, most of the Excise ones, are not tried by Jury at all. Permit us also to remind you, that in Ireland, offences against the Revenue of Customs, are tried by the summary Excise laws, and not by Jury; and so sensible are the Irish of the necessity of doing so, that Parliamentary oppositions, violent as they are in that country, never complain of it. They know and acknowledge, that as long as Custom House causes were tried by Juries, the illicit trader was continually acquitted, to the ruin of the fair one. When you wish for impartial justice, we wish for no more; and, therefore, if you desire the trial by Jury in Revenue questions, you must take along with it a Court of Exchequer, in which that Jury is to act, and by which to be controlled, as we do in England.

When you complain of the latitude given in the Admiralty Courts, to try in one place a seizure made in another, you complain of the laws of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in all of which, a seizure made in one country can be tried in another, and brought from the extremity of the Kingdom, to be tried in the capital. When the Judge in America gives a certificate of the probable cause of seizure, to protect the prosecutor from damages, he does no more than the Judge in England is, by many Acts of Parliament, entitled to do. When the claimant of a seizure is obliged, in America, to find security before he prosecutes his claim, he does no more than the claimant in England, by Act of Parliament, is obliged to do. It is unfair to impute the last of these regulations to the present reign; for it took place by Act of Parliament in a former reign, to wit: in that of King George the First. When your Congress attempts to inflame you by the enumeration of such particulars, they ought to have told you that the freest people upon earth submit to them, because they find them all too little to encourage those who trade fairly, at the expense of those who do not.

Perhaps, with a greater semblance of justice, but not with the solidity of it, your Congress complains of the Resolutions of the two Houses of Parliament, which, about six years ago, gave force to the old laws of Henry the Eighth, by declaring that Treasons and misprisions of Treason, committed in America, might be tried in England. In these Resolutions there was surely no novelty or stretch in law to reach you. The Scotch rebels were tried for their Treasons, not in the Kingdom in which their crime was committed; the Sussex smugglers were tried for their treasons, not in the county in which their crime was committed; the murderers of Mr. Park, Governour of the Leeward Islands, in the beginning of this century, were tried for their treason, not in the quarter of the globe in which the crime was committed, for he was murdered in the West Indies, and they were tried in London, and tried too under the authority of that very Act of Henry the Eighth, which your Congress would make you believe had now, for the first time, been revived to oppress you. A similar rule of law is universal among all modern Nations which have Colonies, and was so among all ancient ones. It is founded on the great interests of society, which make it necessary, that in crimes which affect the existence of the state, the arm of the state should be felt to the very extremity of her Dominions. It is founded even upon a tenderness to the criminal and to Juries; for death inflicted by his friends is the more painful to him; and the necessity upon friends to inflict it, if they break not their oath, is the more humiliating to them. Had the Duke of Monmouth's adherents been brought to their trials in London, even before Jeffery's, the effects of them would neither have been so unpopular nor so bloody, as when they were permitted to rage in Counties obnoxious, subdued, and where every Jurymen thought he threw guilt off himself, by laying it on his neighbour. The rule of law declared by the Houses, is universal through every other part of the British Dominions in Europe, Asia, and Africa. Where is the Statute, the Charter, the Act of Assembly, or the practice, which exempted America from it? If none such is to be found, Why is England accused of making a stretch when she made none? She declared the validity of her old laws; it would be well for her sons that modern whimsies were not listened to in their place.

A Court of Commission and Inquiry, in Rhode-Island, was the consequence of those Resolutions. This Court wanted not objects. There are among you who know that you escaped its justice by its mercy, while you complain of its violence. Government often throws a veil over secrets which the indiscretion of individuals would uncover. It holds proofs in its hands, but publishes them not. King William was surrounded all his life-time, in Holland and in England, with treasons which he knew of. He contented himself with disappointing them, but scarcely ever shed blood. We ask you two questions: Have no violences against Government been seen in America since the institution of that Commission? Has any man been imprisoned, fined, or executed, in consequence of a Commission, which, in the hands of some of your former Princes, would have caused all America to tremble? That Court was the creature of policy and mercy; it was sent to deter men from the commission of crimes, by the fear of punishment, but not to punish. It was only a Court of Inquiry, not of Trial, and the violences which were its objects, because imputable to passion and mistakes in opinion, have since been forgiven.

Yet, even these Resolutions of the Houses of Parliament, on the most important of all subjects, however supported by the authority of other Nations, and apparently necessary in our own, may be also the subject of fortunate regulation between us. If you will bring with you the same willingness to punish rebellion justly, which we shall bring with us not to punish the mere picture of it unjustly, we cannot well differ. Afraid of treason laws as we are, in a Nation which admits, in some extreme cases, of the lawfulness of resistance, you know us little, if you think that we will forge chains for you, which may be transferred from you to ourselves.

There remains yet one other Statute of former Administrations, to be mentioned. Several of your Assemblies had passed Acts and Votes making the paper currency of the Province a legal tender in payment of debt, although that currency was, in many places, not one-fifth in value of the money which the creditor had advanced; and these Votes and Acts were procured by the influence of those who had an interest to gain by a fraud which equally cheated the American inhabitants and the British Merchant. Parliament, with English honesty and English honour, passed an Act, which, by declaring such tenders of payment to be void in law, removed disgrace from the transactions of your private business. Was this an infringement of American Liberty? It has been called so. Let God and your own consciences determine between us if it was.

While your minds were not yet recovered from the false alarms which had been spread on account of those Statutes and Resolutions, the bankruptcy of the East India Company happened, an event which gave room for the Minister who succeeded to those we have mentioned, in the mutual connection of interests, on which the prosperity of the British Empire hangs, to relieve the distresses of that Company, and at the same time to make compensation to you for all the wrongs you imagined you had suffered; and this by an act of indulgence to both. He embraced the occasion, and succeeded in persuading Parliament to give a drawback of the greatest part of the British Duties upon Teas which should be imported into America. The East Indies and America, (as a Member of the House of Commons, who is no enemy to America, once eloquently expressed himself,) are the two wings on which the Eagle of British Commerce soars to the skies. By this indulgence a great market was opened for the Company's Teas, with which the Company was at that time overstocked; a power was given to the fair trader of America, to beat the French, Dutch, and Danish smuggler out of the field; and the inhabitant of America was furnished with Teas from England, at a cheaper rate than they were furnished to ourselves, because we paid a tax, but he drew it back. We believe there were few persons in England who did not believe at the time that the expedient was a wise, and would be a fortunate one.

How that favour has been received; what passed when these Teas were imported to Boston, we wish we could not remember. Holland and Switzerland, as well as France and Spain, would have called it rebellion; but we only called it tumult and insurrection. But to prevent these from swelling into rebellion, provisionary laws were required; and these your Congress has converted likewise into imaginary links of an imaginary chain to enslave you. Let us see with what justice.

We begin with the Regulations which affected the Town of Boston.

One sure mark of Tyranny is to drive the subjects to despair, that, under the pretence of punishing the effects of that despair, she may get the power of stripping them forever of the power of resistance. Did Parliament act in this manner to the people of Boston? What were the great punishments inflicted, by the atrocity of which the people of that Town were to be driven to draw down greater upon themselves? Two. The Custom House was removed. The trade of the Town was suspended. Was a Custom House in safety in a place where the Commissioners had been obliged to take refuge in the King's Ships? Was the trade of England safe in a place where the property of one of her greatest companies was destroyed in the face of day? Tyranny is also to be known by the duration of the marks of her violence. For how many ages was the punishment inflicted on Boston to last? Until those who had committed the outrage should have the honour and honesty to repair it; that is to say, not for an hour, if the people of Boston had reflected that true pride consists in making reparation for injuries, not in committing and persisting in them. That is surely an easy punishment from which the criminal may escape by only doing his duty. Parliament left an open door for reconciliation. If the people of Boston would not enter, who has been in the fault?

The next provisionary Statute complained of, is that which enabled those who should be engaged in the suppression of tumults in Massachusetts Bay, to claim a trial in England, if they were questioned for having done their duty. Those who kill in England after the Mob Act is read, are entitled to an acquittal. But all that the Statute in question did, was to entitle those who were equally entitled to protection, to a trial in their own country. This was a law not of policy, but necessity; for was it proper that those who asserted the authority of the laws in America, should be tried by the very persons who denied the validity of those laws, and the authority of the Magistrates who supported them? Was it just to expose the lives and honours of men to the mercy of Juries who declared that they looked upon them as enemies? The law which knocks at every man's breast, without his going to a law-book to look for it, cries aloud: "Let not the accused party suffer by him who has an interest or a passion to condemn him." This law is called, in inflammatory language, an amnesty for the murderers of America. Yet, it reached only a limited district, in which there were insurrections, and was to last only for a necessary and limited time. Was the American prosecutor afraid that the offender might escape, from the want of evidence against him, at three thousand miles distance? The Statute relieved him of his fears; for it provided that the witnesses whom he called should attend to prove his charge. Did the witness complain of the hardship of his attendance, even in aid of the most sublime of truman virtues - justice? The Statute provided that his charges should be borne at the publick expense. In every provision of the Act, the timorous hand of freedom is to be seen, which trembles even in saving a community, lest it should injure an individual.

But our Ministers know that true wisdom lies not in obstinacy; they pretend not to infallibility; if they do, they will be no favourites of ours; and it is in your own power to prevent their asking from Parliament the continuance of a Statute which was so necessary, but with all so unpopular. By a great judicial and legislative arrangement, let a regular administration of Law, Police, and Government, be established among you, worthy of yourselves, and this subject of contest will die of itself; for we shall expect the same justice in your Courts, which you well know you are sure of in ours. We told you we would give you a generous credit, because we expected to receive it from you in return; as a proof of our doing so, we are conscious of no fears that you would abuse our confidence, although in cases of tumults, we should, instead of bringing the prisoners to England, leave the trial to Committees of your own Assemblies, in which we believe, and believe firmly, that sentiments of honour would prevail over those of party in ingenuous minds. If it did not, we should not complain of acquittals, even though founded in prejudice, and the power of the Crown to pardon, would save those whom the injustice of party had condemned.

The next of the late Statutes complained of, is that which altered the Charter of Massachusetts Bay, so far as to give the nomination of the Council to the King, instead of leaving it with the House of Representatives. The great assertor of our liberties, King William, even without Act of Parliament, or legal process, resumed the Governments of Pennsylvania and Maryland into his own hands, because those who possessed them had broke the conditions on which they were granted, by violating the laws, though not in so great a degree as the people of Massachusetts Bay have done. George the First, in the same situation, did the same thing with regard to the Government of South Carolina.^{*} Queen Anne, without Act of Parliament or legal process, took the command of the Connecticut and Rhode-Island Militias from the Governours of those Provinces, in whom their Charters had placed it, and gave the command of the one to the Governour of New-York, and of the other to the Governour of Massachusetts Bay; because it was deemed dangerous and impolitic to commit the power of the sword to the same hand which held that of Government in a Province. The Statute you complain of did not revoke the Charter of Massachusetts Bay; it only brought its Constitution to resemble that of England more nearly than it did. The most perfect idea of Government that ever was framed, is that of a King, a House of Lords, or Great Council, which owes its honours to the King, and a House of Representatives, who owe their honours to the people. But in the Constitution of Massachusetts Bay, there were only two orders, to wit: that of Governour, and of the House of Representatives; seeing the intermediate order, to wit, the Council, was chosen by the House of Representatives, and was therefore no more than one of its Committees: with this advantage on the part of the House of Representatives against the Executive power, that that Committee had all the weight and powers which should have appertained to the intermediate order. The disordered state of the Province called aloud for a Constitution, which in this country is the great security of order. But this approach to the perfection of liberty, your Congress calls slavery. The alteration was indeed not temporary, but perpetual; because it was obvious, that without some such alteration, a perpetuity of tranquillity could not be insured. If you think that the office of Counsellor should be for life, instead of depending upon the pleasure of the Crown, perhaps we agree with you; had you hereditary ranks, we could not differ at all. Instead of pulling down, raise up. Suggest what you want, to make your various Constitutions perfect. Your wishes will not be refused you, if they are what they should be. The dispute about the alteration of the Constitution of one Colony, would be buried in oblivion, if at your own desire, and with your own consent, all bad things were taken from all of them, and all good things put into them.

The last provisionary law of the same Minister, which you complain of, is that which provides for the quartering of the Troops. This law, not of policy, but necessity, and without which, the Troops would be no better in times of disorder and danger than statues, was to last only a few months, that is, while disorder and danger called for it. The Romans, who of all Nations watched the most to preserve the liberties of the low, and the dignities of the great, gave up often, by choosing a Dictator in times of danger, all the honours of both for a while, that they might enjoy them forever. Their Senates, which were rather Assemblies of Gods than of men, went further: for in times of civil commotion, they gave powers even to their Consuls, ne quid detrimenti respublica capiat. Mark these great strokes of great policy, and then ask your own minds, whether a permission to English Troops, acting in the cause of their country, to sleep under cover, instead of the open air, be a violation of American Liberty?

^{*} The evidence of these resumptions is soon to be published.

We wish we had no occasion to mention your complaints of the Statute which adjusted the limits and the Government of the Province of Quebec. It affected not your boundaries; for it contains a clause that it shall not affect the boundary of any other Colony. It gave the enjoyment of French laws to Frenchmen, who declared that they could not live without them. It gave toleration, that fairest flower of cultivated humanity, (as a Member of the House of Commons well expressed it,) to English subjects. It injured nobody. And we hope it pleased our God, though it pleased not your Congress. We marvel much, how that Congress has omitted to send one address to the inhabitants of Bengal, to rise in rebellion against us, because we have not conferred upon them all the honours of English liberty, which they are not asking; and another to their fellow-subjects in England, to reproach them for permitting the Gentoo religion to exist in that part of their Dominions.

We wish also, for the sake of private honour, which your Congress ought not to have lost sight of, even in the cause of the publick, that they had not deceived you, by converting a Statute passed in the time of the present Administration, for the security of your and our bulwarks, his Majesty's Ships and Dock-Yards, into a battery erected and levelled against American liberties. A short time before this Statute was passed, a great national calamity by a fire, which was suspected to be wilful, at Portsmouth, called for a new law, with new penalties, to prevent such disasters for the future. Capital punishment was inflicted by the Statute in question, upon those who should wilfully set on fire the King's Ships or Dock-Yards. Nobody was thinking of America at the time. England, or rather Portsmouth, and the other Naval Arsenal, engaged alone the attention of the publick. But the Statute in common form and common policy, was made to extend over all the Dominions of Britain; and the crime, like all other great crimes, was made punishable in Britain, although not committed within it. We ask you, if you can in your consciences believe, that this Statute was a contrivance framed on purpose to oppress you? And if you cannot, we ask you, what you must think of those men who would make you believe that it was?

From this review of the proceedings of Parliament relative to America, since the fourth of the King down to this day, we submit to the candour of American breasts, whether your Congress were in the right, in common charity, to convey an idea from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the mouth of the Mississippi, that there had been a system formed and pursued in the present reign, to rob all America of all her liberties. Our own defence from so foul an aspersion, we have not mingled in reviewing these proceedings, with the interests of this or that party, of this or that Minister; interests, with all the little politicks and little posts depending on them, which we hold mighty cheap in comparison of our own great interests in the question that subsists between you and us, and not as they fancy, triflers as they are, between them and each other. We wish your Congress had observed the same conduct, and not disgraced, with the stale party strokes of this country, the great interests of their own. They would not in that case, have paid compliments to a Minister, who once said in full Parliament, that he would not permit even the hob-nail of a horse's shoe to be made in America, at the expense of another Minister, who never had it in his power to do you either good or evil, except by a peace, which might have raised America to the skies, had not too many of her own sons pulled her down again.

Perhaps your Congress may think it wise to mingle the interests of America with those of party in this country, from a notion that you will be made sharers in the rewards of party victories, to which you contributed. But they are mistaken. Those who raise the whirlwind may not direct the storm. There are only three ways in this country by which any party can obtain that power at which every party aims; the favour of the Crown, the favour of Parliament, or the favour of the People. Do you think those men have a claim to the favour of the Crown, who, in the disputes between you and us, have endeavoured to pay compliments to the King's personal power at the expense of his authority, and to mark his reign with the loss of Dominions, which with so much glory he extended?

Can they expect the esteem and confidence of Parliament, who have called in question its rights, denied its powers over its own Provinces, and who assert that a House of Representatives in America, in concurrence with the King, can do what the Houses of Lords and Commons, in concurrence with him, cannot do? Can they hope to please the People of England, who are pursuing measures which may lead to a civil war between England and her Colonies?

But even in their victory, where would be your gain? Whoever trusts to the gratitude of party, trusts to a support which, like a reed, has failed under all who ever rested upon it. Many of those who now make use of you as a weapon of party, to force themselves into power, would, as soon as they were in it, let you fall to the ground. We have a right to warn you of these things, because we have seen oppositions in this reign animate one part of the United Kingdoms against another; the people of England, the ancient supporters of Parliament, against Parliament; and the City of London, the ancient supporters of the House of Commons, against the House of Commons. It is your own fault, if, with such examples before your eyes, you permit America to be tilted against England, to gratify the ambition, or even the virtue, of any set of men upon earth. In the successes which you wish for, others will gain; but it is you who will be the losers: for the whole history of English party shows, that the men who trampled most on the Crown in the service of the people, trampled most on the people when in the service of the Crown; it being natural for them, in present obsequiousness, to hope for the oblivion of past provocations, and to go further than their neighbours in one way, because they had gone too far in the other. We need not call the example of Lord Strafford to your remembrance. There are men now living, who raised themselves to power by inveighing against Continental connections, and then half ruined their country to support them. Trust not then to the slender and broken reed of party; trust to your country; that country which has too often been deceived, but never deceives. Instead of being the tools of particular members of party, show them that they have been no more than your tools. Take the good which they have helped to procure for you, but avoid the mischiefs into which they would bring you.

While this Address was printing, an event has happened which may convince you who are your real friends or foes in this country. A fortnight ago, the Houses of Lords and Commons, in Addresses to the Throne, expressed their sentiments of the rebellious state of too many of your Provinces, but with all their wishes, to receive advances on your part to pacification, whenever they should be made in a constitutional manner. Those who call themselves your friends in Parliament, opposed even the last part of the Address, because they said it was deluding you with the idea of an accommodation which was not intended to be granted. But in order to carry that part of the Address into execution, and to convert the words of it into the measures which had been the objects of those words, a Resolution was within these few days proposed in the House of Commons, and adopted, which should express the intention of the House to levy no past, and impose no future Duties, as long as you should yourselves contribute to the expense to be incurred for your own publick service. By this Resolution, the danger so long dreaded by you, that Taxes in America would be converted into a Revenue for Britain, is removed. The Resolution, indeed, reserves a power in Parliament of imposing duties for the regulation of trade; a power which is absolutely necessary to be exerted for the interests of trade itself; but then, to prevent the abuse of this power, the produce of these duties is to go, not to the account of Great Britain, but to the exoneration of the provision made by the Colony for its own service. It is in your own power to make the security of America complete in all its parts; for if you desire that the quota to be furnished by you, for your service, shall not be arbitrary, but rise and fall with the quantum of the Land Tax, or of some of the great known taxes of England taken in cumulo; we do not think that your desire in that respect would be refused; and then it would be impossible for us to tax you without taxing ourselves at the same time, and in the same proportion. We will give praise where praise is due. The Minister who proposed this Resolution, could not fail to see two dangers to himself in the measure. The first was, to differ from such friends as might think that higher measures ought to be pursued; and the next was, to be exposed to the charge of having varied his measures; a charge to which every man who accommodates his conduct to circumstances, instead of pretending to infallibility, must be exposed to, yet still an humiliating one, even to the best man, adopting even the best measure. But in the cause of his country, he regarded nothing but his country. Some part of the line of accommodation proposed in the Resolution, was first traced by yourselves, and often repeated. It had been adopted, and often pressed for by those who call themselves your friends in Parliament. The Minister who moved for it had, therefore, reason to hope that when he met them on their own ground, and granted their own desires, they would, in your and their country's cause, have forgot their animosity to him, and all those little objects of party, the pursuit of which is falsely called ambition. Did they, upon this occasion, meet that Minister half way in the generous struggle who should do you most good, or avert from you most evil? No! They threw behind them all your interests. They attended to those of their own party alone, which they think are more concerned in defeating a Minister than saving a Nation. They refused for you that favour which yourselves had solicited, opposed that measure which themselves had adopted, and did what they could to perpetuate dissensions in which themselves might be gainers. They were so blinded by the habit of opposition, and the triumph of spying even imaginary inconsistency in the Minister whom they opposed, that they did not perceive how miserably they must sink in your esteem for sacrificing your advantages to their own weaknesses. Are these your friends? Were those your enemies? If the contrast between the conduct of the one and of the other does not open your eyes, you must be blind as moles, or with your own wills shut them against the sun.

But there are men among yourselves against whom you ought to be equally on your guard. It is hard that the charge dour intending to enslave you, should come oftenest from the mouths of those lawyers who in your Southern Provinces at least, have long made you slaves to themselves. There is scarce one of us acquainted with an American, who has not been told by him, that there is no region on earth, in which the people are so much oppressed by the extortions of Lawyers, as in many parts of America; a circumstance as unfortunate for us as for you, in the present disputes, because we are to expect, that men who gain by uncertainty and disorder, will forever oppose every attempt to a regular administration of Law, Police, and Government, which must diminish their own importance; and it is not to be hoped that they should spare either the mother country or her Colonies as communities, who never shewed mercy to the individuals of either.

Having shown you in this Address, that the projects of your Congress for war, or suspension of trade, would recoil on yourselves; that all the subjects of difference between you and us are easily reconcileable; that his Majesty's reign has been falsely accused of a system to enslave you; and that many of your pretended friends may prove your worst enemies; we pray that you may trust to your own reason on the topics of this Address; and if you do, we shall hope, before a very few months run round, to hear that peace is restored to your minds, and order to your Provinces.

TAXATION NO TYRANNY.

*An Answer to the Resolutions and Address of the AMERICAN Congress.

In all the parts of human knowledge, whether terminating in science merely speculative, or operating upon life, private or civil, are admitted some fundamental principles, or common axioms, which being generally received, are little doubted, and being little doubted, have been rarely proved.

Of these gratuitous and acknowledged truths, it is often the fate to become less evident by endeavours to explain them, however necessary such endeavours may be made by the misapprehensions of absurdity, or the sophistries of interest. It is difficult to prove the principles of science, because notions cannot always be found more intelligible than those which are questioned. It is difficult to prove the principles of practice, because they have, for the most part, not been discovered by investigation, but obtruded by experience; and the demonstrator will find, after an operose deduction, that he has been trying to make that seen which can be only felt.

* Common-fame attributes the merit of this performance to the celebrated Doctor Johnson, and every page of it confirms the truth of the report. That gentleman has been charged in his former political productions, with writing by compulsion; in this it is plain he has witten from the heart. - Gent. Mag.

Of this kind is the position, that the supreme power of every community has the right of requiring from all its subjects, such contributions as are necessary to the publick safety or publick prosperity, which was considered by all mankind as comprising the primary and essential condition of all political society, till it became disputed by those zealots of anarchy, who have denied to the Parliament of Britain, the right of taxing the American Colonies.

In favour of this exemption of the Americans from the authority of their lawful Sovereign, and the dominion of their mother country, very loud clamours have been raised, and many wild assertions advanced, which, by such as borrow their opinions from the reigning fashion, have been admitted as arguments; and what is strange, though their tendency is to lessen English honour and English power, have been heard by Englishmen with a wish to find them true. Passion has, in its first violence, controlled interest, as the eddy for a while runs against the stream.

To be prejudiced, is always to be weak; yet, there are prejudices so near to laudable, that they have been often praised, and are always pardoned. To love their country, has been considered as virtue in men, whose love could not be otherwise than blind, because their preference was made without a comparison; but it has never been my fortune to find, either in ancient or modern writers, any honourable mention of those who have, with equal blindness, hated their country.

These anti-patriotick prejudices are the abortions of folly, impregnated by faction, which, being produced against the standing order of nature, have not strength sufficient for long life. They are born only to scream and perish, and leave those to contempt or detestation whose kindness was employed to nurse them into mischief.

To perplex the opinion of the publick, many artifices have been used, which, as usually happens when falsehood is to be maintained by fraud, lose their force by counteracting one another.

The Nation is sometimes to be mollified by a tender tale of men who fled from tyranny to rocks and deserts, and is persuaded to lose all claims of justice, and all sense of dignity, in compassion for a harmless people, who, having worked hard for bread in a wild country, and obtained, by the slow progression of manual industry, the accommodations of life, are now invaded by unprecedented oppression, and plundered of their properties by the harpies of taxation.

We are told how their industry is obstructed by unnatural restraints, and their trade confined by rigorous prohibitions; how they are forbidden to enjoy the products of their own soil, to manufacture the materials which nature spreads before them, or to carry their own goods to the nearest market; and surely the generosity of English virtue will never heap new weight upon those that are already overladen; will never delight in that dominion which cannot be exercised but by cruelty and outrage.

But while we are melting in silent sorrow, and in the transports of delicious pity, dropping both the sword and balance from our hands, another friend of the Americans thinks it better to awaken another passion, and tries to alarm our interest, or excite our veneration, by accounts of their greatness and their opulence, of the fertility of their land, and the splendour of their Towns. We then begin to consider the question with more evenness of mind, are ready to conclude that those restrictions are not very oppressive which have been found consistent with this speedy growth of prosperity, and begin to think it reasonable, that they who thus flourish under the protection of our Government, should contribute something towards its expense.

But we are then told that the Americans, however wealthy, cannot be taxed; that they are the descendants of men who left all for liberty, and that they have con-Stantly preserved the principles and stubbornness of their progenitors; that they are too obstinate for persuasion, and too powerful for constraint; that they will laugh at argument, and defeat violence; that the Continent of North America contains three millions, not of men merely, but of Whigs; of Whigs fierce for liberty, and disdainful of dominion; that they multiply with the fecundity of their own rattle-snakes, so that every quarter of a century doubles their numbers.

Men accustomed to think themselves masters, do not love to be threatened. This talk is, I hope, commonly thrown away, or raises passions different from those which it intended to excite. Instead of terrifying the English hearer to tame acquiescence, it disposes him to hasten the experiment of bending obstinacy before it is become yet more obdurate, and convinces him that it is necessary to attack a Nation thus prolific, while we may yet hope to prevail. When he is told through what extent of territory we must travel to subdue them, he recollects how far, a few years ago, we travelled in their defence. When it is urged that they will shoot up like the hydra, he naturally considers how the hydra was destroyed.

Notifying dejects a trader like the interruption of his profits. A commercial people, however magnanimous, shrinks at the thought of declining traffick and an unfavourable balance. The effect of this terror has been tried. We have been stunned with the importance of our American Commerce, and heard of Merchants with ware-houses that are never to be emptied, and of Manufacturers starving for want of work.

That our Commerce with America is profitable, however less than ostentatious or deceitful estimates have made it, and that it is our interest to preserve it, has never been denied; but surely it will most effectually be preserved, by being kept always in our own power. Concessions may promote it for a moment, but superiority only can ensure its continuance. There will always be a part, and always a very large part, of every community that have no care but for themselves, and whose care for themselves reaches little farther than impatience of immediate pain, and eagerness for the nearest good. The blind are said to feel with peculiar nicety. They who look but little into futurity, have, perhaps, the quickest sensation of the present. A Merchant's desire is not of glory, but of gain; not of public wealth, but of private emolument; he is, therefore, rarely to be consulted about war and peace, or any designs of wide extent and distant consequence.

Yet this, like other general characters, will sometimes fail. The traders of Birmingham have rescued themselves from all imputation of narrow selfishness, by a manly recommendation to Parliament, of the rights and dignity of their native country.

To these men I do not intend to ascribe an absurd and enthusiastick contempt of interest, but to give them the rational and just praise of distinguishing real from seeming good; of being able to see through the cloud of interposing difficulties, to the lasting and solid happiness of victory and settlement.

Lest all these topicks of persuasion should fail, the great actor of patriotism has tried another, in which terror and pity are happily combined, not without a proper superaddition of that admiration which later ages have brought into the drama. The heroes of Boston, he tells us, if the Stamp Aet had not been repealed, would have left their Town, their Port, and their Trade; have resigned the splendour of opulence, and quitted the delights of neighbourhood, to disperse themselves over the country, where they would till the ground, and fish in the rivers, and range the mountains, and be free.

These surely are brave words. If the mere sound of freedom can operate thus powerfully, let no man hereafter doubt the story of the Pied Piper. The removal of the people of Boston into the country, seems even to the Congress not only difficult in its execution, but important in its consequences. The difficulty of execution is best known to the Bostonians themselves; the consequence, alas! will only be, that they will leave good houses to wiser men.

Yet, before they quit the comforts of a warm home, for the sounding something which they think better, he cannot be thought their enemy who advises them to consider well whether they shall find it. By turning fishermen or hunters, woodmen or shepherds, they may become wild; but it is not so easy to conceive them free; for who can be more a slave than he that is driven by force from the comforts of life; is compelled to leave his house to a casual comer, and whatever he does, or wherever he wanders, finds every moment some new testimony of his own subjection? If the choice of evil is freedom, the felon in the galleys has his option of labour or of stripes. The Bostonian may quit his house to starve in the fields; his dog may refuse to set, and smart under the lash, and they may then congratulate each other upon the smiles of liberty, "profuse with bliss, and pregnant with delight."

To treat such designs as serious, would be to think too contemptuously of Bostonian understandings. The artifice, indeed, is not new; the blusterer who threatened in vain to destroy his opponent, has sometimes obtained his end, by making it believed that he would hang himself.

But terrors and pity are not the only means by which the taxation of the Americans is opposed. There are those who profess to use them only as auxiliaries to reason and justice, who tell us that to tax the Colonies is usurpation and oppression, an invasion of natural and legal rights, and a violation of those principles which support the Constitution of English Government.

This question is of great importance. That the Americans are able to bear taxation, is indubitable; that their refusal may be overruled, is highly probable; but power is no sufficient evidence of truth. Let us examine our own claim, and the objections of the recusants, with caution proportioned to the event of the decision, which must convict one part of robbery, or the other of rebellion.

A tax is a payment exacted by authority from part of the community for the benefit of the whole. From whom, and in what proportion, such payment shall be required, and to what uses it shall be applied, those only are to judge to whom Government is intrusted. In the British Dominion taxes are apportioned, levied, and appropriated by the states assembled in Parliament.

Of every Empire, all the subordinate communities are liable to taxation, because they all share the benefits of Government, and therefore ought all to furnish their proportion of the expense.

This the Americans have never openly denied. That it is their duty to pay the cost of their own safety, they seem to admit; nor do they refuse their contribution to the exigencies, whatever they may be, of the British Empire; but they make this participation of the publick burden a duty of very uncertain extent and imperfect obligation - a duty, temporary, occasional, and elective, of which they reserve to themselves the right of settling the degree, the time, and the duration of judging when it may be required and when it has been performed.

They allow to the supreme power nothing more than the liberty of notifying to them its demands or its necessities. Of this notification, they profess to think for themselves, how far it shall influence their counsels, and of the necessities alleged, how far they shall endeavour to relieve them. They assume the exclusive power of settling not only the mode but the quantity of this payment. They are ready to co-operate with all the other Dominions of the King; but they will co-operate by no means which they do not like, and at no greater charge than they are willing to bear.

This claim, wild as it may seem - this claim, which supposes dominion without authority, and subjects without subordination, has found among the libertines of policy many clamorous and hardy vindicators. The laws of nature, the rights of humanity, the faith of Charters, the danger of liberty, the encroachments of usurpation, have been thundered in our ears, sometimes by interested faction, and sometimes by honest stupidity.

It is said by Fontenelle, that if twenty philosophers shall resolutely deny that the presence of the sun makes the day, he will not despair but whole Nations may adopt the opinion. So many political dogmatists have denied to the mother country the power of taxing the Colonies, and have enforced their denial with so much violence of outcry, that their sect is already very numerous, and the publick voice suspends its decision.

In moral and political questions, the contest between interest and justice has been often tedious and often fierce, but perhaps it never happened before, that justice found much opposition with interest on her side.

For the satisfaction of this inquiry, it is necessary to consider how a Colony is constituted; what are the terms of migration as dictated by nature or settled by compact; and what social or political rights the man loses or acquires that leaves his country to establish himself in a distant Plantation.

Of two modes of migration the history of mankind informs us, and so far as I can yet discover, of two only:

In countries where life was yet unadjusted, and policy unformed, it sometimes happened that by the dissensions of heads of families; by the ambition of daring adventurers; by some accidental pressure of distress; or by the mere discontent of idleness, one part of the community broke off from the rest, and numbers, greater or smaller, forsook their habitations; put themselves under the command of some favourite of fortune, and with or without the consent of their countrymen or governors, went out to see what better regions they could occupy, and in what place, by conquest or by treaty, they could gain a habitation.

Sons of enterprise like these, who committed to their own swords their hopes and their lives, when they left their country, became another Nation, with designs, and prospects, and interests of their own. They looked back no more to their former home; they expected no help from those whom they had left behind; if they conquered, they conquered for themselves; if they were destroyed, they were not by any other power either lamented or revenged.

Of this kind seem to have been all the migrations of the Old World, whether historical or fabulous, and of this kind were the eruptions of those Nations which, from the North, invaded the Roman Empire, and filled Europe with new Sovereignities.

But when, by the gradual admission of wiser laws and gentler manners, society became more compacted and better regulated, it was found that the power of every people consisted in union, produced by one common interest, and operating in joint efforts and consistent councils.

From this time independence perceptibly wasted away. No part of the Nation was permitted to act for itself. All now had the same enemies and the same friends; the Government protected individuals, and individuals were required to refer their designs to the prosperity of the Government.

By this principle it is that states are formed and consolidated. Every man is taught to consider his own happiness as combined with the publick prosperity, and to think himself great and powerful in proportion to the greatness and power of his Governors.

Had the Western Continent been discovered between the fourth and tenth century, when all the Northern World was in motion, and had navigation been at that time sufficiently advanced to make so long a passage easily practicable, there is little reason for doubting but the intumescence of Nations would have found its vent, like all other expansive violence, where there was least resistance; and that Huns and Vandals, instead of fighting their way to the South of Europe, would have gone by thousands and by myriads under their several chiefs, to take possession of regions smiling with pleasure and waving with fertility, from which the naked inhabitants were unable to repel them.

Every expedition would, in those days of laxity, have produced a distinct and independent state. The Scandinavian heroes might have divided the country among them, and have spread the feudal subdivision of regality from Hudson's Bay to the Pacific Ocean.

But Columbus came five or six hundred years too late for the candidates of sovereignty. When he formed his project of discovery, the fluctuations of Military turbulence had subsided, and Europe began to regain a settled form, by established Government and regular subordination. No man could any longer erect himself into a chieftain, and lead out his fellow-subjects by his own authority to plunder or to war. He that committed any act of hostility by Land or Sea, without the commission of some acknowledged Sovereign, was considered by all mankind as a robber or a pirate, names which were now of little credit, and of which therefore no man was ambitious.

Columbus, in a remoter time, would have found his way to some discontented Lord, or some younger brother of a petty Sovereign, who would have taken fire at his proposal, and have quickly kindled with equal heat a troop of followers; they would have built Ships or have seized them, and have wandered with him at all adventures as far as they could keep hope in their company. But the age being now past of vagrant excursion and fortuitous hostility, he was under the necessity of travelling from Court to Court, scorned and repulsed as a wild projector, an idle promiser of Kingdoms in the clouds: nor has any part of the world yet had reason to rejoice that he had found at last reception and employment.

In the same year, in a year hitherto disastrous to mankind, by the Portuguese was discovered the passage of the Indies; and by the Spaniards the coast of America. The Nations of Europe were fired with boundless expectation, and the discoverers, pursuing their enterprise, made conquests in both hemispheres of wide extent. But the adventurers were contented with phmder; though they took Gold and Silver to themselves, they seized Islands and Kingdoms in the name of their Sovereigns. When a new region was gained, a Governour was appointed by that Power which had given the commission to the conqueror; nor have I met with any European but Stukeley, of London, that formed a design of exalting himself in the newly found countries to independent dominion.

To secure a conquest, it was always necessary to plant a Colony; and Territories thus occupied and settled, were rightly considered as mere extensions or processes of Empire; as ramifications through which the circulation of one publick interest communicated with the original source of dominion, and which were kept flourishing and spreading by the radical vigour of the mother country.

The Colonies of England differ no otherwise from those of other Nations than as the English Constitution differs from theirs. All Government is ultimately and essentially absolute, but subordinate societies may have more immunities, or individuals greater liberty, as the operations of Government are differently conducted. An Englishman, in the common course of life and action, feels no restraint. An English Colony has very liberal powers of regulating its own manners and adjusting its own affairs; but an English individual may, by the supreme authority, be deprived of liberty, and a Colony divested of its powers, for reasons of which that authority is the only judge.

In sovereignty there are no gradations. There may be limited Royalty; there may be limited Consulship; but there can be no limited Government. There must, in every society, be some power or other from which there is no appeal; which admits no restrictions; which pervades the whole mass of the community; regulates and adjusts all subordination; enacts laws or repeals them; erects or annuls judicatures; extends or contracts privileges; exempt itself from question or control; and bounded only by physical necessity.

By this power, wherever it subsists, all legislation and jurisdiction is animated and maintained. From this all legal rights are emanations; which, whether equitably or not, may be legally recalled. It is not infallible, for it may do wrong; but it is irresistible, for it can be resisted only by rebellion - by an act which makes it questionable what shall be thenceforward the supreme power.

An English Colony is a number of persons to whom the King grants a Charter, permitting them to settle in some distant country, and enabling them to constitute a Corporation, enjoying such powers as the Charter grants, to be administered in such forms as the Charter prescribes. As a Corporation, they make laws for themselves; but as a Corporation subsisting by a grant from higher authority, to the control of that authority they continue subject.

As men are placed at a greater distance from the Supreme Council of the Kingdom, they must be intrusted with ampler liberty of regulating their conduct by their own wisdom. As they are more secluded from easy recourse to national judicature, they must be more extensively commissioned to pass judgment on each other.

For this reason, our more important and opulent Colonies see the appearance and feel the effect of a regular Legislature, which, in some places, has acted so long with unquestioned authority, that it has been forgotten whence that authority was originally derived.

To their Charters the Colonies owe, like other Corporations, their political existence. The solemnities of legislation, the administration of justice, the security of property, are all bestowed upon them by the Royal Grant. Without their Charter, there would be no power among them by which any law could be made or duties enjoined; any debt recovered, or criminal punished.

A Charter is a grant of certain powers or privileges given to a part of the community for the advantage of the whole, and is therefore liable by its nature to change or to revocation. Every act of Government aims at publick good. A Charter, which experience has shown to be detrimental to the Nation, is to be repealed, because general prosperity must always be preferred to particular interest. If a Charter be used to evil purposes it is forfeited, as the weapon is taken away which is injuriously employed.

The Charter, therefore, by which Provincial Governments are constituted, may be always legally, and where it is either inconvenient in its nature, or misapplied in its use, may be equitably repealed, and by such repeal the whole fabrick of subordination is immediately destroyed; the Constitution sunk at once into a chaos; the society is dissolved into a tumult of individuals, without authority to command, or obligation to obey; without any punishment of wrongs, but by personal resentment; or any protection of right, but by the hand of the possessor.

A Colony is to the mother country as a member to the body, deriving its action and its strength from the general principle of vitality, receiving from the body and communicating to it all the benefits and evils of health and disease, liable in dangerous maladies to sharp applications, of which the body, however, must partake the pain, and exposed, if incurably tainted, to amputation, by which the body likewise will be mutilated.

The mother country always considers the Colonies thus connected, as parts of itself; the prosperity or unhappiness of either, is the prosperity or unhappiness of both, not, perhaps, of both in the same degree, thr the body may subsist, though less commodiously, without a limb, but the limb must perish, if it be parted from the body.

Our Colonies, therefore, however distant, have been hitherto treated as constituent parts of the British Empire. The inhabitants incorporated by English Charters, are entitled to all the rights of Englishmen. They are governed by English laws, entitled to English dignities, regulated by English counsels, and protected by English arms; and it seems to follow by consequence not easily avoided, that they are subject to English Government, and chargeable by English taxation.

To him that considers the nature, the original, the progress, and the Constitution of the Colonies, who remembers that the first discoverers had commissions from the Crown; that the first settlers owe to a Charter their civil forms and regular magistracy, and that all personal immunities and personal securities, by which the condition of the subject has been from time to time improved, have been extended to the Colonists, it will not be doubted but the Parliament of England has a right to bind them by Statutes, and to bind them in all cases whatsoever, and has therefore a legal and constitutional power of laying upon them any tax or impost, whether external or internal, upon the product of land, or the manufactures of industry, in the exigencies of war, or in the time of profound peace, for the defence of America, for the purpose of raising a Revenue, or for any other end beneficial to the Empire.

There are some, and those not inconsiderable for number, nor contemptible for knowledge, who except the power of taxation from the general dominion of Parliament, and hold that whatever degrees of obedience may be exacted, or whatever authority may be exercised in other acts of Government, there is still reverence to be paid to money, and that legislation passes its limits when it violates the purse.

Of this exception, which by a head not fully impregnated with politicks, is not easily comprehended, it is alleged as an unanswerable reason, that the Colonies send no Representatives to the House of Commons.

It is, say the American advocates; the natural distinction of a freeman, and the legal privilege of an Englishman, that he is able to call his possessions his own; that he can sit secure in the enjoyment of inheritance or acquisition; that his house is fortified by the law, and that nothing can be taken from him but by his own consent. This consent is given for every man by his Representative in Parliament. The Americans, unrepresented, cannot consent to English taxations as a Corporation, and they will not consent as individuals.

Of this argument, it has been observed by more than one, that its force extends equally to all other laws; that a freeman is not to be exposed to punishment, or be called to any onerous service, but by his own consent. The Congress has extracted a position from the fanciful Montesquieu, that in a free state every man being a free agent, ought to be concerned in his own government. Whatever is true of taxation, is true of every other law, that he who is bound by it without his consent, is not free, for he is not concerned in his own government.

He that denies the English Parliament the right of taxation, denies it likewise the right of making any other laws, civil or criminal, yet this power over the Colonies was never yet disputed by themselves. They have always admitted Statutes for the punishment of offences, and for the redress or prevention of inconveniences; and the reception of any law draws after it by a chain which cannot be broken, the unwelcome necessity of submitting to taxation.

That a free man is governed by himself, or by laws to which he has consented, is a position of mighty sound; but every man that utters it, with whatever confidence, and every man that hears it, with whatever acquiescence, if consent be supposed to imply the power of refusal, feels it to be false. We virtually and implicitly allow the institutions of any Government of which we enjoy the benefit and solicit the protection. In wide extended Dominions, though power has been diffused with the most even hand, yet a very small part of the people are either primarily or secondarily consulted in legislation. The business of the publick must be done by delegation. The choice of Delegates is made by a select number; and those who are not electors stand idle and helpless spectators of the commonweal, wholly unconcerned with the government of themselves.

Of electors the hap is but little better. They are often far from unanimity in their choice, and where the numbers approach to equality, almost half must be governed not only without, but against their choice.

How any man can have consented to institutions established in distant ages, it will be difficult to explain. In the most favourite residence of liberty, the consent of individuals is merely passive, a tacit admission in every community of the terms which that community grants and requires. As all are born the subjects of some state or other, we may be said to have been all born consenting to some system of Government. Other consent than this, the condition of civil life does not allow. It is the unmeaning clamour of the pedants of policy - the delirious dream of Republican fanaticism.

But hear, ye sons and daughters of Liberty, the sounds which the winds are wafting from the Western Continent. The Americans are telling one another what, if we may judge from their noisy triumph, they have but lately discovered, and what yet is a very important truth: that they are entitled to Life, Liberty, and Property, and that they have never ceded to any sovereign power whatever a right to dispose of either without their consent.

While this Resolution stands alone, the Americans are free from singularity of opinion; their wit has not yet betrayed them to heresy. While they speak as the naked sons of nature, they claim but what is claimed by other men, and have withheld nothing but what all withhold. They are here upon firm ground, behind intrenchments which never can be forced.

Humanity is very uniform. The Americans have this resemblance to Europeans, that they do not always know when they are well. They soon quit the fortress that could neither have been mined by sophistry, nor battered by declamation. Their next Resolution declares that their ancestors who first settled the Colonies, were, at the time of their emigration from the mother country, entitled to all the rights, liberties, and immunities of free and natural born subjects within the Realm of ENGLAND.

This likewise is true; but when this is granted, their boast of original rights is at an end; they are no longer in a state of nature. These Lords of themselves; these Kings of Me; these Demigods of Independence sink down to Colonists, governed by a Charter. If their ancestors were subjects, they acknowledged a Sovereign; if they had a right to English privileges, they were accountable to English laws, and what must grieve the lover of liberty to discover, had ceded to the King and Parliament, whether the right or not, at least the power of disposing, without their consent, of their Lives, Liberties, and Properties. It therefore is required of them to prove that the Parliament ever ceded to them a dispensation from that obedience which they owe as natural born subjects, or any degree of independence or immunity not enjoyed by other Englishmen.

They say that by such emigration, they by no means forfeited, surrendered, or lost any of those rights, but that they were, and their descendants now are, entitled to the exercise and enjoyment of all such of them as their local and other circumstances enable them to exercise and enjoy.

That they who form a settlement by a lawful Charter, having committed no crime, forfeit no privileges, will be readily confessed; but what they do not forfeit by any judicial sentence, they may lose by natural effects. As man can be but in one place at once, he cannot have the advantages of multiplied residence. He that will enjoy the brightness of sunshine, must quit the coolness of the shade. He who goes voluntarily to America, cannot complain of losing what he leaves in Europe. He, perhaps, had a right to vote for a Knight or Burgess; by crossing the Atlantic he has not nullified his right; for he has made its exertion no longer possible. By his own choice he has left a country where he had a vote and little property, for another where he has great property but no vote. But as this preference was deliberate and unconstrained, he is still concerned in the government of himself; he has reduced himself from a voter to one of the innumerable multitude that have no vote. He has truly ceded his right, but he is still governed by his own consent; because he has consented to throw his atom of interest into the general mass of the community. Of the consequences of his own act, he has no cause to complain; he has chosen, or intended to choose, the greater good; he is represented as himself desired, in the general representation.

But the privileges of an American scorn the limits of place; they are part of himself, and cannot be lost by departure from his country; they float in the air, or glide under the Ocean;

Doris amara suam non intermisceat undam.

A Planter, wherever he settles, is not only a freeman, but a Legislator, ubi imperator, ibi Roma. As the English Colonists are not represented in the British Parliament, they are entitled to a free and exclusive power of legislation in their several Legislatures, in all cases of taxation and internal polity, subject only to the negative of the Sovereign, in such manner as has been heretofore used and accustomed. We cheerfully consent to the operation of such Acts of the British Parliament as are bona fide restrained to the regulation of our external commerce, excluding every idea of taxation, internal or external, for raising a Revenue on the subjects of America without their consent.

Their reason for this claim is, that the foundation of English liberty, and of all Governments, is a right in the people to participate in their Legislative Council.

They inherit, they say, from thier ancestors, the right which their ancestors possessed, of enjoying all the privileges of Englishmen. That they inherit the right of their ancestors, is allowed; but they can inherit no more. Their ancestors left a country where the Representatives of the people were elected by men particularly qualified, and where those who wanted qualifications, or who did not use them, were bound by the decisions of men whom they had not deputed.

The Colonists are the descendants of men who either had no votes in elections, or who voluntarily resigned them for something, in their opinion, of more estimation; they have, therefore, exactly what their ancestors left them, not a vote in making laws, or in constituting Legislatures, but the happiness of being protected by law, and the duty of obeying it.

What their ancestors did not carry with them, neither they nor their descendants have since acquired. They have not, by abandoning their part in one Legislature, obtained the power of constituting another, exclusive and independent, any more than the multitudes who are now debarred from voting, have a right to erect a separate Parliament for themselves.

Men are wrong for want of sense, but they are wrong by halves for want of spirit. Since the Americans have discovered that they can make a Parliament, whence comes it that they do not think themselves equally empowered to make a King? If they are subjects whose Government is constituted by a Charter, they can form no body of independent Legislature. If their rights are inherent and underrived, they may, by their own suffrages, encircle with a diadem the brows of Mr. Cushing.

It is farther declared by the Congress of Philadelphia, that his Majesty's Colonies are entitled to all the privileges and immunities granted and confirmed to them by Royal Charters, or secured to them by their several codes of Provincial laws.

The first clause of this Resolution is easily understood, and will be readily admitted. To all the privileges which a Charter can convey, they are by a Royal Charter evidently entitled. The second clause is of greater difficulty; for how can a Provincial law secure privileges or immunities to a Province? Provincial laws may grant to certain individuals of the Province the enjoyment of gainful, or an immunity from onerous offices; they may operate upon the people to whom they relate; but no Province can confer Provincial privileges on itself. They may have a right to all which the King has given them; but it is a conceit of the other hemisphere, that men have a right to all which they have given to themselves.

A Corporation is considered in law as an individual, and can no more extend its own immunities, than a man can, by his own choice, assume dignities or titles.

The Legislature of a Colony, let not the comparison be too much disdained, is only the vestry of a larger Parish, which may lay a cess on the inhabitants, and enforce the payment; but can extend no influence beyond its own District, must modify its particular regulations by the general law, and whatever may be its internal expenses, is still liable to taxes laid by superiour authority.

The Charters given to different Provinces are different, and no general right can be extracted from them. The Charter of Pennsylvania, where this Congress of anarchy has been impudently held, contains a clause admitting, in express terms, taxation by the Parliament. If, in the other Charters, no such reserve is made, it must have been omitted as not necessary, because it is implied in the nature of subordinate Government. They who are subject to laws, are liable to taxes. If any such immunity had been granted, it is still revocable by the Legislature, and ought to be revoked, as contrary to the publick good, which is in every Charter ultimately intended.

Suppose it true that any such exemption is contained in the Charter of Maryland, it can be pleaded only by the Marylanders. It is of no use for any other Province, and with regard even to them, must have been considered as one of the grants in which the King has been deceived, and annulled as mischievous to the publick, by sacrificing to one little settlement the general interest of the Empire, as infringing the system of dominion, and violating the compact of Government. But Doctor Tucker has shown that even this Charter promises no exemption from Parliamentary taxes.

In the controversy agitated about the beginning of this century, whether the English laws could bind Ireland, Davenant, who defended against Molyneux the claims of England, considered it as necessary to prove nothing more than that the present Irish might be deemed a Colony.

The necessary connection of Representatives with taxes, seems to have sunk deep into many of those minds that admit sounds without their meaning.

Our Nation is represented in Parliament by an assembly as numerous as can well consist with order and despatch, chosen by persons so differently qualified in different places, that the mode of choice seems to be, for the most part, formed by chance, and settled by custom. Of individuals, far the greater part have no vote, and of the voters, few have any personal knowledge of him to whom they entrust their liberty and fortune.

Yet, this representation has the whole effect expected or desired; that of spreading so wide the care of general interest, and the participation of publick counsels, that the interest or corruption of particular men can seldom operate with much injury to the publick.

For this reason, many populous and opulent Towns, neither enjoy nor desire particular Representatives; they are included in the general scheme of publick administration, and cannot suffer but with the rest of the Empire.

It is urged that the Americans have not the same security, and that a British legislator may wanton with their property; yet, if it be true, that their wealth is our wealth, and that their ruin will be our ruin, the Parliament has the same interest in attending to them, as to any other part of the Nation. The reason why we place any confidence in our Representatives is, that they must share in the good or evil which their counsels shall produce. Their share is indeed commonly consequential and remote; but it is not often possible that any immediate advantage can be extended to such numbers as may prevail against it. We are therefore as secure against intentional deprivations of Government as human wisdom can make us, and upon this security the Americans may venture to repose.

It is said by the Old Member who has written an appeal against the tax, that the produce of American labour is spent in British manufactures, the balance of trade is greatly against them; whatever you take directly in taxes, is in effect taken from your own commerce. If the Minister seizes the money with which the American should pay his debts and come to market, the Merchant cannot expect him as a customer, nor can the debts already contracted be paid. Suppose we obtain from America a million, instead of one hundred thousand Pounds; it would be supplying one personal exigence by the future ruin of our commerce.

All this is true; but the Old Member seems not to perceive, that if his brethren of the Legislature know this as well as himself, the Americans are in no danger of oppression, since by men commonly provident, they must be so taxed, as that we may not lose one way what we gain another.

The same Old Member has discovered, that the Judges formerly thought it illegal to tax Ireland, and declares that no cases can be more alike than those of Ireland and America; yet the Judges whom he quotes have mentioned a difference. Ireland, they say, hath a Parliament of its own. When any Colony has an independent Parliament, acknowledged by the Parliament of Britain, the cases will differ less. Yet by the sixth George the First, chapter fifth, the Acts of the British Parliament bind Ireland.

It is urged that when Wales, Durham, and Chester, were divested of their particular privileges or ancient Government, and reduced to the state of English Counties, they had Representatives assigned them.

To those from whom something had been taken, something in return might properly be given. To the Americans, their Charters are left as they were, except that of which their sedition has deprived them. If they were to be represented in Parliament, something would be granted, though nothing is withdrawn.

The inhabitants of Chester, Durham, and Wales, were invited to exchange their peculiar institutions for the power of voting, which they wanted before. The Americans have voluntarily resigned the power of voting to live in distant and separate Governments, and what they have voluntarily quitted they have no right to claim.

It must always be remembered that they are represented by the same virtual representation as the greater part of Englishmen, and that if, by change of place, they have less share in the Legislature than is proportioned to their opulence, they, by their removal, gained that opulence, and had originally, and have now their choice of a vote at home, or riches at a distance.

We are told, what appears to the Old Member and to others a position that must drive us into inextricable absurdity, that we have either no right, or the sole right of taxing the Colonies. The meaning is, that if we can tax them they cannot tax themselves; and that if they can tax themselves, we cannot tax them. We answer with very little hesitation, that for the general use of the Empire, we have the sole right of taxing them. If they have contributed anything in their own Assemblies, what they contributed was not paid, but given; it was not a tax or tribute, but a present; yet they have the natural and legal power of levying money on themselves for Provincial purposes; of providing for their own expense, at their own discretion. Let not this be thought new or strange; it is the state of every Parish in the Kingdom.

The friends of the Americans are of different opinions. Some think that being unrepresented they ought to tax themselves, and others, that they ought to have Representatives in the British Parliament.

If they are to tax themselves what power is to remain in the Supreme Legislature? That they must settle their own mode of levying their money, is supposed. May the British Parliament tell them how much they shall contribute? If the sum may be prescribed, they will return few thanks for the power of raising it; if they are at liberty to grant or to deny, they are no longer subjects.

If they are to be represented, what number of these Western orators are to be admitted? This, I suppose, the Parliament must settle; yet, if men have a natural and unalienable right to be represented, who shall determine the number of their Delegates? Let us, however, suppose them to send twenty-three, half as many as the Kingdom of Scotland, what will this representation avail them? To pay taxes will be still a grievance. The love of money will not be lessened, nor the power of getting it increased.

Whither will this necessity of representation drive us? Is every petty settlement to be out of the reach of Government, till it has sent a Senator to Parliament; or may two or a greater number be forced to unite in a single deputation? What at last is the difference between him that is taxed by compulsion without representation, and him that is represented by compulsion in order to be taxed?

For many reigns the House of Commons was in a state of fluctuation; new Burgesses were added from time to time, without any reason now to be discovered; but the number has been fixed for more than a century and a half, and the King's power of increasing it has been questioned. It will hardly be thought fit to new-model the Constitution in favour of the Planters, who, as they grow rich, may buy estates in England, and without any innovation effectually represent their native Colonies.

The friends of the Americans, indeed, ask for them what they do not ask for themselves. This inestimable right of representation, they have never solicited. They mean not to exchange solid money for such airy honour. They say, and say willingly, that they cannot conveniently be represented, because their inference is, that they cannot be taxed. They are too remote to share the general government, and therefore claim the privilege of governing themselves.

Of the principles contained in the Resolutions of the Congress, however wild, indefinite, and obscure, such has been the influence upon American understanding, that from New England to South Carolina there is formed a general combination of all the Provinces against their mother country. the madness of independence has spread from Colony to Colony, till order is lost and Government despised, and all is filled with misrule, uproar, violence, and confusion. To be quiet is disaffection; to be loyal is treason.

The Congress of Philadelphia, an assembly convened by its own authority, has promulgated a Declaration, in compliance with which the communication between Britain and the greatest part of North America is now suspended. They ceased to admit the importation of English Goods, in December, 1774, and determined to permit the exportation of their own no longer than to November, 1775.

This might seem enough; but they have done more. They have declared that they shall treat all as enemies who do not concur with them in disaffection and perverseness, and that they will trade with none that shall trade with Britain.

They threaten to stigmatize in their Gazette those who shall consume the products or merchandise of their mother country, and are now searching suspected houses for prohibited goods.

These hostile declarations they profess themselves ready to maintain by force. They have armed the Militia of their Provinces, and seized the publick stores of Ammunition. They are therefore no longer subject, since they refuse the laws of their Sovereign, and in defence of that refusal, are making open preparations for war.

Being now, in their own opinion, free States, they are not only raising Armies, but forming alliances, not only hastening to rebel themselves, but seducing their neighbours to rebellion. They have published an Address to the inhabitants of Quebec, in which discontent and resistance are openly incited; and with very respectful mention of the sagacity of Frenchmen, invite them to send Deputies to the Congress of Philadelphia, - to that seat of virtue and veracity, whence the people of England are told, that to establish Popery, a religion fraught with sanguinary and impious tenets, even in Quebec, a country of which the inhabitants are Papists, is so contrary to the Constitution, that it cannot be lawfully done by the Legislature itself, where it is made one of the articles of their Association to deprive the conquered French of their religious establishment; and whence the French of Quebec are, at the same time, flattered into sedition, by professions of expecting from the liberality of sentiment distinguishing their Nation, that difference of religion will not prejudice them against a hearty amity, because the transcendant nature of freedom elevates all who unite in the cause above such low-minded infirmities.

Quebec, however, is at a great distance. They have aimed a stroke from which they may hope for greater and more speedy mischief. They have tried to infect the people of England with the contagion of disloyalty. Their credit is happily not such as gives them influence proportionate to their malice. When they talk of their pretended immunities, guarantied by the plighted faith of Government, and the most solemn compacts with English Sovereigns, we think ourselves at liberty to inquire when the faith was plighted and the compact made; and when we can only find that King James and King Charles the First promised the settlers in Massachusetts Bay, now famous by the appellation of Bostonians, exemption from taxes for seven years, we infer with Mr. Mauduit, that by this solemn compact, they were, after the expiration of the stipulated term, liable to taxation.

When they apply to our compassion, by telling us that they are to be carried from their own country to be tried for certain offences, we are not so ready to pity them, as to advise them not to offend. While they are innocent they are safe.

When they tell of laws made expressly for their punishment, we answer, that tumults and sedition were always punishable, and that the new law prescribes only the mode of execution.

When it is said that the whole Town of Boston is distressed for a misdemeanor of a few, we wonder at their shamelessness; for we know that the Town of Boston, and all the associated Provinces, are now in rebellion to defend or justify the criminals.

If frauds in the imposts of Boston are tried by commission, without a Jury, they are tried here in the same mode; and why should the Bostonians expect from us more tenderness for them than for ourselves?

If they are condemned unheard, it is because there is no need of a trial. The crime is manifest and notorious. All trial is the investigation of something doubtful. An Italian philosopher observes, that no man desires to hear what he has already seen.

If their Assemblies have been suddenly dissolved, what was the reason? Their deliberations were indecent, and their intentions seditious. The power of dissolution is granted and reserved for such times of turbulence. Their best friends have been lately soliciting the King to dissolve his Parliament, to do what they so loudly complain of suffering.

That the same vengeance involves the innocent and guilty, is an evil to be lamented, but human caution cannot prevent it, nor human power always redress it. To bring misery on those who have not deserved it, is part of the aggregated guilt of rebellion.

That Governours have been sometimes given them only that a great man might get ease from importunity, and that they have had Judges not always of the deepest learning or the purest integrity, we have no great reason to doubt, because such misfortunes happen to ourselves. Whoever is governed, will sometimes be governed ill, even when he is most concerned in his own government.

That improper Officers or Magistrates are sent, is the crime or folly of those that sent them. When incapacity is discovered, it ought to be removed; if corruption is detected, it ought to be punished. No Government could subsist for a day if single errors could justify defection.

One of their complaints is not such as can claim much commiseration from the softest bosom. They tell us that we have changed our conduct, and that a tax is now laid by Parliament on those which were never taxed by Parliament before. To this we think it may be easily answered, that the longer they have been spared the better they can pay.

It is certainly not much their interest to represent innovation as criminal or invidious; for they have introduced into the history of mankind a new mode of disaffection, and have given, I believe, the first example of a proscription published by a Colony against the mother country.

To what is urged of new powers granted to the Courts of Admiralty, or the extension of authority conferred on the Judges, it may be answered in a few words, that they have themselves made such regulations necessary; that they are established for the prevention of greater evils. At the same time, it must be observed, that these powers have not been extended since the rebellion in America.

One mode of persuasion their ingenuity has suggested, which it may perhaps be less easy to resist. That we may not look with indifference on the American contest, or imagine that the struggle is for a claim, which, however decided, is of small importance and remote consequence, the Philadelphian Congress has taken care to inform us, that they are resisting the demands of Parliament, as well for our sakes as their own.

Their keenness of perspicacity has enabled them to pursue consequences to a great distance; to see through clouds impervious to the dimness of European sight, and to find, I know not how, that when they are taxed, we shall be enslaved.

That slavery is a miserable state, we have been often told, and doubtless many a Briton will tremble to find it so near as in America; but how it will be brought hither, the Congress must inform us. The question might distress a common understanding; but the Statesmen of the other hemisphere can easily resolve it. Our Ministers, they say, are our enemies; and if they should carry the point of taxation, may with the same Army enslave us. It may be said we will not pay them; but remember, say the Western sages, the taxes from America, and we may add the men, and particularly the Roman Catholics of this vast Continent, will then be in the power of your enemies. Nor have you any reason to expect, that offer making slaves of us, many of us will refuse to assist in reducing you to the same abject state.

These are dreadful menaces; but suspecting that they have not much the sound of probability, the Confess proceeds: "Do not treat this as chimerical. Know that in less than half a century the quit-rent reserved to the Crown from the numberless grants of this vast Continent, will pour large streams of wealth into the royal coffers. If to this be added the power of taxing America at pleasure, the Crown will possess more treasure than may be necessary to purchase the remains of liberty in your Island."

All this is very dreadful; but amidst the terror that shakes my frame I cannot forbear to wish that some sluice were opened for these streams of treasure. I should gladly see America return half of what England has expended in her defence; and of the stream that will flow so largely in less than half a century, I hope a small rill, at least, may be found to quench the thirst of the present generation, which seems to think itself in more danger of wanting money than of losing liberty.

It is difficult to judge with what intention such airy bursts of malevolence are vented: if such writers hope to deceive, let us rather repel them with scorn, than refute them by disputation.

In this last terrific paragraph are two positions that, if our fears do not overpower our reflection, may enable us to support life a little longer. We are told by these croakers of calamity, not only that our present Ministers design to enslave us, but that the same malignity of purpose is to descend through all their successors, and that the wealth to be poured into England by the pactolus of America will, whenever it comes, be employed to purchase the remains of liberty.

Of those who now conduct the national affairs, we may, without much arrogance, presume to know more than themselves, and of those who shall succeed them, whether Minister or King, not to know less.

The other position is that the Crown, if this laudable opposition should not be successful, will have the power of taxing America at pleasure. Surely they think rather too meanly of our apprehensions, when they suppose us not to know what they well know themselves, that they are taxed, like all other British subjects, by Parliament, and that the Crown has not, by the new imposts, whether right or wrong, obtained any additional power over their possessions.

It were a curious, but an idle speculation to inquire what effect these dictators of sedition expect from the dispersion of their letter among us. If they believe their own complaints of hardship, and really dread the danger which they describe, they will naturally hope to communicate their own perceptions to their fellow-subjects. But probably in America, as in other places, the chiefs are incendiaries that hope to rob in the tumults of a conflagration, and toss brands among the rabble, passively combustible. Those who wrote the Address, though they have shown no great extent or profundity of mind, are yet probably wiser than to believe it; but they have been taught by some master of mischief how to put in motion the engine of political electricity; to attract by the sounds of Liberty and Property, to repel by those of Popery and Slavery; and to give the great stroke by the name of Boston.

When Subordinate communities oppose the decrees of the General Legislature with defiance thus audacious, and malignity thus accrimonious, nothing remains but to conquer or to yield; to allow their claim of independence, or to reduce them, by force, to submission and allegiance.

It might be hoped that no Englishman could be found whom the menaces of our own Colonists, just rescued from the French, would not move to indignation like that of the Scythians, who, returning from war, found themselves excluded from their own houses by their slaves.

That corporations constituted by favour, and existing by sufferance, should dare to prohibit commerce with their native country, and threaten individuals by infamy, and societies with at least suspension of amity, for daring to be more obedient to Government than themselves, is a degree of insolence which not only deserves to be punished, but of which the punishment is loudly demanded by the order of life, and the peace of Nations.

Yet there have risen up, in the face of the publick, men who, by whatever corruptions or whatever infatuation, have undertaken to defend the Americans, endeavour to shelter them from resentment, and propose reconciliation without submission.

As political diseases are naturally contagious, let it be supposed for a moment that Cornwall, seized with the Philadelphian phrenzy, may resolve to separate itself from "the general system of the English Constitution, and judge of its own rights in its own Parliament. A Congress might then meet at Truro, and address the other Counties in a style not unlike the language of the American patriots.

"FRIENDS AND FELLOW-SUBJECTS: We, the Delegates of the several Towns and Parishes of Cornwall, assembled to deliberate on our own state and that of our constituents, having, after serious debate and calm consideration, settled the scheme of our future conduct, hold it necessary to declare, in this publick manner, the Resolutions which we think ourselves entitled to form by the immutable laws of nature, and the unalienable rights of reasonable beings, and into which we have been at last compelled by grievances and oppressions, long endured by us in patient silence, not because we did not feel, or could not remove them, but because we were unwilling to give disturbance to a settled Government, and hoped that others would in time find, like ourselves, their true interest and their original powers, and all co-operate to universal happiness.

"But, since having long indulged the pleasing expectation, we find general discontent, not likely to increase, or not likely to end in general defection, we resolve to erect alone the standard of Liberty.

"Know then, that you are no longer to consider Cornwall as an English County, visited by English Judges, receiving law from an English Parliament, or included in any general taxation of the Kingdom; but as a state distinct and independent, governed by its own institutions, administered by its own Magistrates, and exempt from any tax or tribute but such as we shall impose upon ourselves.

"We are the acknowledged descendants of the earliest inhabitants of Britain - of men who, before the time of history, took possession of the Island, desolate and waste, and therefore open to the first occupants. Of this descent, our language is a sufficient proof, which, not quite a century ago, was different from yours.

"Such are the Cornishmen, but who are you? Who but the unauthorized and lawless children of intruders, invaders, and oppressors? Who but the transmitters of wrong, the inheritors of robbery? In claiming independence we claim but little. We might require you to depart from a land which you possess by usurpation, and to restore all that you have taken from us.

"INDEPENDENCE is the gift of nature, bestowed impartially on all her sons. No man is born the master of another. Every Cornishman is a freeman, for we have never resigned the rights of humanity; and he only can be thought free who is not governed but by his own consent.

"You may urge that the present system of Government has descended through many ages, and that we have a larger part in the representation of the Kingdom than any other County.

"All this is true, but it is neither cogent nor persuasive. We look to the original of things. Our union with the English Counties was either compelled by force, or settled by compact.

"That which was made by violence, may by violence be broken. If we were treated as a conquered people our rights might be obscured, but could never be extinguished. The sword can give nothing but power, which a sharper sword can take away.

"If our union was by compact, whom could the compact bind but those that concurred in the stipulations? We gave our ancestors no commission to settle the terms of future existence. They might be cowards that were frightened, or blockheads that were cheated; but whatever they were they could contract only for themselves. What they could establish, we can annul.

"Against our present form of Government, it shall stand in the place of all argument, that we do not like it. While we are governed as we do not like, where is our liberty? We do not like taxes, we will therefore not be taxed; we do not like your laws, and will not obey them.

"The taxes laid by our Representatives are laid, you tell us, by our own consent; but we will no longer consent to be represented. Our number of Legislators was originally a burden imposed upon us by English tyranny, and ought then to have been refused; if it be now considered as a disproportionate advantage, there can be no reason for complaining that we resign it.

We shall therefore form a Senate of our own, under a President whom the King shall nominate, but whose authority we will limit, by adjusting his salary to his merit. We will not withhold a proper share of contribution to the necessary expense of lawful Government, but we will decide for ourselves what share is proper, what expense is necessary, and what Government is lawful.

"Till the authority of our counsel is acknowledged, and we are proclaimed independent and unaccountable, we will, after the tenth day of September, keep our tin in our own hands. You can be supplied from no other place, and must therefore comply at last, or be poisoned with the copper of your own kitchens.

If any Cornishman shall refuse his name to this just and laudable Association, he shall be tumbled from St. Michael's Mount, or buried alive in a Tin Mine; and if any emissary shall be found seducing Cornishmen to their former state, he shall be smeared with Tar and rolled in Feathers, and chased with dogs out of our Dominions."

["From the CORNISH Congress at TRURO."]

Of this Memorial, what could be said but that it was written in jest, or written by a madman? Yet I know not whether the warmest admirers of Pennsylvanian eloquence can find any argument in the Addresscs of the Congress, that is not with greater strength urged by the Cornishman.

The argument of the irregular troops of controversy, stripped of its colours, and turned out naked to the view, is no more than this: Liberty is the birthright of man, and where obedience is compelled, there is no liberty. The answer is equally simple: Government is necessary to man; and where obedience is not compelled, there is no Government.

If the subject refuses to obey, it is the duty of authority to use compulsion. Society cannot subsist but by some power; first of making laws, and then of enforcing them.

To one of the threats hissed out by the Congress, I have put nothing similar into the Cornish Proclamation; because it is too foolish for buffoonery, and too wild for madness. If we do not withhold our King and his Parliament from taxing them, they will cross the Atlantic and enslave us!

How they will come they have not told us; perhaps they will take wing and light upon our coasts. When the cranes thus begin to flutter, it is time for pygmies to keep their eyes about them. The great Orator observes, that they will be very fit, after they have been taxed, to impose chains upon us. If they are so fit as their friend describes them, and so willing as they describe themselves, let us increase our Army and double our Militia.

It has been of late a very general practice to talk of slavery among those who are setting at defiance every power that keeps the world in order. If the learned author of the "Reflections on Learning" has rightly observed, that no man ever could give law to language, it will be vain to prohibit the use of the word slavery; but I could wish it more discreetly uttered. It is driven at one time too hard into our ears by the loud hurricane of Pennsylvanian eloquence, and at another glides too cold into our hearts by the soft conveyance of a female patriot bewailing the miseries of her friends and fellow-citizens.

Such has been the progress of sedition, that those who a few years ago disputed only our right of laying taxes, now question the validity of every act of legislation. They consider themselves as emancipated from obedience, and as being no longer the subjects of the British Crown. They leave us no choice but of yielding or conquering, of resigning our Dominion, or maintaining it by force.

From force, many endeavours have been used, either to disuade or to deter us. Sometimes the merit of the Americans is exalted, and sometimes their sufferings are aggravated. We are told of their contributions to the last war - a war incited by their outcries, and continued for their protection - a war by which none but themselves were gainers. All that they can boast is, that they did something for themselves, and did not wholly stand inactive while the sons of Britain were fighting in their cause.

If we cannot admire, we are called to pity them; to pity those that show no regard to their mother country; have obeyed no laws which they could violate; have imparted no good which they could withhold; have entered into associations of fraud to rob their creditors, and into combinations to distress all who depended on their commerce. We are reproached with the cruelty of shutting one port, where every Port is shut against us. We are censured as tyrannical for hindering those from fishing who have condemned our Merchants to bankruptcy, and our Manufacturers to hunger.

Others persuade us to give them more liberty; to take off restraints, and relax authority; and tell us what happy consequences will arise from forbearance; how their affections will be conciliated, and into what diffusions of beneficence their gratitude will luxuriate. They will love their friends, they will reverence their protectors; they will throw themselves into our arms, and lay their property at our feet; they will buy from no other what we can sell them; they will sell to no other what we wish to buy.

That any obligations should overpower their attention to profit, we have known them long enough not to expect. It is not to be expected from a more liberal people. With what kindness they repay benefits they are now showing us, who, as soon as we have delivered them from France, are defying and proscribing us.

But if we will permit them to tax themselves, they will give us more than we require. If we proclaim them independent, they will, during pleasure, pay us a subsidy. The contest is not now for money, but for power. The question is not how much we shall collect, but by what authority the collection shall be made.

Those who find that the Americans cannot be shown in any form that may raise love or pity, dress them in habiliments of terror, and try to make us think them formidable. The Bostonians can call into the field ninety thousand men. While we conquer all before us, new enemies will rise up behind, and our work will be always to begin. If we take possession of the Towns, the Colonists will retire into the inland regions, and the gain of victory will be only empty houses and a wide extent of waste and desolation. If we subdue them for the present, they will universally revolt in the next war, and resign us without pity to subjection and destruction.

To all this it may be answered, that between losing America and resigning it, there is no great difference; that it is not very reasonable to jump into the sea because the ship is leaky. All those evils may befall us, but we need not hasten them.

The Dean of Gloucester has proposed, and seems to propose it seriously, that we should at once release our claims, declare them masters of themselves, and whistle them down the wind. His opinion is, that our gain from them will be the same, and our expense less. What they can have most cheaply from Britain they will still buy; what they can sell to us at the highest price they will still sell.

It is, however, a little hard, that having so lately fought and conquered for their safety, we should govern them no longer. By letting them loose before the war how many millions might have been saved. One ridiculous proposal is best answered by another: Let us restore to the French what we have taken from them. We shall see our Colonists at our feet when they have an enemy so near them. Let us give the Indians Arms, and teach them discipline, and encourage them now and then to plunder a plantation. Security and leisure are the parents of sedition.

While these different opinions are agitated, it seems to be determined by the Legislature that force shall be tried. Men of the pen have seldom any great skill in conquering Kingdoms, but they have strong inclination to give advice. I cannot forbear to wish that this commotion may end without bloodshed, and that the rebels may be subdued by terror rather than by violence; and therefore recommend such a force as may take away not only the power, but the hope of resistance, and by conquering without a battle, save many from the sword.

If their obstinacy continues without actual hostilities, it may perhaps be mollified by turning out the Soldiers to free-quarters, forbidding any personal cruelty or hurt. It has been proposed that the Slaves should be set free, an act which surely the lovers of liberty cannot but commend. If they are furnished with fire-arms for defence, and utensils for husbandry, and settled in some simple form of Government within the country they may be more grateful and honest than their masters.

Far be it from any Englishman to thirst for the blood of his fellow-subjects. Those who most deserve our resentment are unhappily at less distance. The Americans, when the Stamp Act was first proposed, undoubtedly disliked it, as every Nation dislikes an impost; but they had no thought of resisting it till they were encouraged and incited by European intelligence - from men whom they thought their friends, but who were friends only to themselves.

On the original contrivers of mischief let an insulted Nation pour out its vengeance. With whatever design they have inflamed this pernicious contest, they are themselves equally detestable. If they wish success to the Colonies, they are traitors to this country; if they wish their defeat, they are traitors at once to America and England. To them and them only must be imputed the interruption of commerce and the miseries of war; the sorrow of those that shall be ruined, and the blood of those that shall fall.

Since the Americans have made it necessary to subdue them, may they be subdued with the least injury possible to their persons and their possessions, When they are reduced to obedience, may that obedience be secured by stricter laws and stronger obligations.

Nothing can be more noxious to society than that erroneous clemency which, when a rebellion is suppressed, exacts no forfeiture and establishes no securities, but leaves the rebels in their former state. Who would not try the experiment which promises advantage without expense? If rebels once obtain a victory, their wishes are accomplished; if they are defeated, they suffer little, perhaps less than their conquerors; however often they play the game, the chance is always in their favour. In the meantime they are growing rich by victualing the Troops that we have sent against them, and perhaps gain more by the residence of the Army than they lose by the obstruction of their Port.

Their Charters being now, I suppose, legally forfeited, may be modelled as shall appear most commodious to the mother country. Thus, the privileges which are found by experience liable to misuse, will be taken away, and those who now bellow as Patriots, bluster as Soldiers, and domineer as Legislators, will sink into sober Merchants, and silent Planters, peaceably diligent, and securely rich.

But there is one writer, and perhaps many who do not write, to whom the contraction of these pernicious privileges appears very dangerous, and who startle at the thoughts of England free and America in chains. Children fly from their own shadow, and rhetoricians are frightened by their own voices. Chains is undoubtedly a dreadful word; but perhaps the masters of civil wisdom may discover some gradations between chains and anarchy. Chains need not be put upon those who will be restrained without them. This contest may end in the softer phrase of English superiority and American obedience.

We are told that the subjection of Americans may tend to the diminution of our own liberties; an event which none but very perspicacious politicians are able to foresee. If slavery be thus fatally contagious how is it that we hear the loudest yelps for liberty among the drivers of negroes?

But let us interrupt awhile this dream of conquest, settlement, and supremacy. Let us remember that being to contend, according to one Orator, with three millions of Whigs, and according to another, with ninety thousand Patriots of Massachusetts Bay, we may possibly be checked in our career of reduction. We may be reduced to peace upon equal terms, or driven from the Western Continent, and forbidden to violate a second time the happy borders of the land of liberty. The time is now perhaps at hand which Sir Thomas Brown predicted between jest and earnest,

When America shall no more send out her treasure,
But spend it at home in American pleasure.

If we are allowed, upon our defeat, to stipulate conditions, I hope the treaty of Boston will permit us to import into the confederated Cantons such products as they do not raise, and such manufactures as they do not make and cannot buy cheaper from other Nations, paying like others the appointed customs; that if any English Ship salutes a Fort with four guns, it shall be answered at least with two; and that if an Englishman be inclined to hold a Plantation he shall only take an oath of allegiance to the reigning powers, and be suffered, while he lives inoffensively, to retain his own opinion of English rights, unmolested in his conscience by an oath of abjuration.

AN ANSWER TO THE PAMPHLET, ENTITLED "TAXATION NO TYRANNY;" ADDRESSED TO THE AUTHOR AND TO PERSONS IN POWER. *

The importance of the subject, the crisis of time in which I write, and the notoriety of your style and character, make it unnecessary for me to use a preface.

The very title of your Pamphlet is delusion. No man has ever said that Taxation is, in itself, tyranny; nor will you say that it may not become so by abuse, or by want of authority in the imposers of it. Had your title said, "that the British Parliament is the proper and constitutional body for taxing the Colonies," you would not have misstated the question. But that would not have tended to ensnare an inattentive reader by a disingenuous and a false implication.

You set out with this position: "That the supreme power of every community has the right of requiring from all its subjects such contributions as are necessary to the publick safety or publick prosperity."

You pretend that this position is as old as Government, but it is evidently of modern structure. This appears from the word requiring. Your maxim is, not that the supreme power has the right of taxing, but of requiring contributions from all its subjects, and is evidently framed for the present dispute, and for the identical idea of requisition from the Colonies. Now this, whether right or wrong, is certainly not an old, nor even now an established idea on either side of the Atlantic.

Further, if by the supreme power having a right to require contributions, you mean that it has a right to tax, you express yourself inaccurately; and if, from that position, you conclude that the British Parliament has a right to tax America, you but just assume what you ought to prove. For the very point in debate is, whether the British Parliament, though it be the supreme power of the whole Empire as to many points, is so as to all, and particularly as to taxation. Now this being a question relating to the British Government, it is evident that it is not to be determined by a general maxim of Government in abstract. It must be decided by the fundamental principles of the British Constitution; by the established practice of it, and by the dictates of sound sense, of natural justice, and of publick convenience, applied to the ground of that Constitution.

By your general terms, the reader naturally supposes it only to be asserted that the Legislature of every community has the power you speak of. Now this, in abstract, sounds well. When we speak of the Legislature of a community, we suppose only one Legislature; and where there is but one, it must of necessity have the right you speak of; otherwise, no taxes at all could be raised in that community. But then the proof arises from this necessity, which makes it absurd that it should be otherwise. Where, therefore, there is not the same necessity, the same absurdity will not arise, nor the same proof, by consequence, follow. Now the present dispute is not with respect to this Island alone, which certainly has but one Legislature, but with respect to the British Empire at large, in which there are many Legislatures; or many Assemblies claiming to be so. Here is the fallacy of your position. From the state of the British Empire, composed of extensive and dispersed Dominions, and from the nature of its Government, a multiplicity of Legislatures, or of Assemblies claiming to be so, have arisen in one Empire. It is in some degree a new case in legislation, and must be governed therefore more by its own circumstances, and by the genius of our peculiar Constitution, than by abstract notions of Government at large. Every Colony, in fact, has two Legislatures, one interior and Provincial, viz: the Colony Assembly; the other exterior and imperial, viz: the British Parliament. It would have been utterly absurd, that a Provincial Legislature should ever have subsisted, if it were not practically or constitutionally necessary for certain matters. It would be equally absurd if the imperial Legislature were to interpose in such matters; for if it should, one of two things must follow; either that the imperial Legislature must, in such matters, yield to the Provincial Legislature wherever they differed; or that it must prevail over it in points, from its own practical or constitutional unfitness for which, the Provincial Legislature was formed; either of which would be perfectly absurd. Neither will the unity of the Empire be in danger from the Provincial Legislature being thus exclusive as to points. It is perfectly sufficient, if the British Legislature be supreme as to all those things which are essential to Great Britain's being substantially the head of the Empire; a line not very difficult to be drawn, if it were the present subject. Neither is there any absurdity in there being two Assemblies, each of them sufficient, or, if you will, supreme, as to objects perfectly distinct; for this plain reason, that the objects being perfectly distinct, they cannot clash. The Colonist, therefore, allowing that the supreme power or

* This Pamphlet is one of those masterly productions of the Press which seldom appear but on great occasions. It is wished that it may be universally read before the measures of Government are carried to the extreme.— Gent. Mag.

Legislature, where there is but one, must have the right you speak of, will say that with respect to him, there are two, and that the Provincial Legislature is the supreme power as to taxation for his Colony. And so the controversy, notwithstanding your position, will remain just where it began.

But not to have done with your maxim. It says that the supreme power has a right to require such contributions as are necessary to the publick safety and publick prosperity. If these words have any meaning but to deceive, they must mean that this right of the supreme power has limits, viz: that it is only a right to impose or require such contributions as are necessary to the safety and prosperity of the publick. Suppose the supreme power to exceed those limits. It then exceeds its right; it acts without authority, and in all just reasoning becomes as impotent as an unauthorized individual. As such it may be resisted, and as such resistance to it cannot be rebellion. In your fundamental position, therefore, you establish a limit to the supreme power, and by consequence a justification for resistance, if that limit is transgressed. And yet, in every other place you assert that Government is the sole judge; that if the people can withhold obedience in any case, they are no longer subjects; that they are rebels; that they must be compelled; that Government is necessary to man, and that where obedience is not compelled, Government is at an end. You say, in a word, that the supreme power has limits, and that it has not limits; that Government has a duty which it may transgress with impunity, and that the people have rights which they cannot maintain without the guilt of rebellion. And all these contradictions you build upon the sorry and verbal sophism that the Legislature of every country is the supreme power, and being supreme, cannot be controlled. But the truth is, that it is no more than the chief power in ordinary course, but with an eventual control. For in extreme cases there is a control in the hands of the whole people, with whom alone the supreme power unlimited of any community can reside, and with whom it always does reside, though in common course they delegate a portion of authority sufficient for legislation to others, but so as that they are not to subvert the Constitution under which they act, nor to convert Government to the misery and ruin of the people, for whose happiness and prosperity it was formed. This final right of the people is felt and exercised in the most arbitrary Governments, though it is not only not professed in those countries, but the doctrine of passive obedience maintained and perhaps generally believed. So strong is nature, and so weak is sophistry in extreme cases, however, that more Turkish Emperors have been slain by their subjects, than Kings in all the free Monarchies that have ever existed. But resistance in our Constitution is not a tacit reserve; it is an express doctrine of our Government in its best times. It is then absurd to say that the governing powers are unlimited here, for a right of resistance implies a limit. If there could be no transgression, there could be no right to resist, and a power that has no limits cannot transgress.

Having thus done nothing, you proceed to a premature triumph over the arguments and principles of your adversaries, through forty pages, when you come to this proposition, "that the Legislature of a Colony is only the vestry of a larger Parish." This you assert, but you do not condescend to prove or to apply it. Let us try for a moment whether there is the smallest analogy. The Legislatures of the Colonies, for so you call them, have Parish vestries under them in America, similar to ours, which bear the same relation to the Provincial Legislatures, which British vestries bear to the British Parliament. Now I do not find that our vestries have other vestries subordinate to them in like manner. Neither do I suppose that the Provincial Legislatures would have had such had they been considered as similar to British vestries. The Provincial Legislatures are convened and dissolved by the immediate act of the Crown, in the same manner as our Parliament. Are the meetings of vestries so summoned or so discharged? Writs issue in America from the Crown to the Sheriffs of the several Counties to have a new Representative elected for every General Assembly in each Province. Is this a ceremony belonging to vestries? Their session opens and closes like ours with a speech from the Throne upon the publick business, and there is the same intercourse between them and the Executive, as between the King and the British Parliament. Can this be said of vestries? They make laws of all kinds, civil and criminal, which Jurors, Sheriffs, the King's Judges, all Officers of Judicature, and the whole Province, are obliged to acknowledge as publick law; and these laws require and receive the royal assent in like manner with British Acts of Parliament? Does this belong to vestry regulations? They vote men and money for publick service and for military expeditions - witness the late war. Can this be alleged of vestries? Or would Mr. Grenville formerly, or the British Parliament at this day, think of sending to any British vestry, or tell them that if they would tax themselves for the publick service, Parliament would not tax them? I should be ashamed to dwell longer on such a dream.

Your next proposition is, that the Americans have no reason to complain, for that they are represented in the British Parliament. And how do you prove this? In fact, though not in words, the proof you offer is this; that there are many in Great Britain who, not being electors, are not represented; that none of the Americans are electors, and that notwithstanding they are represented. To soften this absurdity you borrow an idea which this controversy has created. It is, that there are two kinds of Representatives, one actual and the other virtual; that those who have votes are actually represented; and that those who have not votes are virtually represented; and therefore, as it must be made out that the Americans are represented in some manner or other, and as it is absurd to say that they are actually represented, it is thus deduced that they are represented virtually, and that they are very unreasonable if they are not perfectly content. But I desire that the law-book may be produced in which a virtual Representative is once mentioned as a character known to our law or Constitution. There is no such notice, I am bold to affirm, from the first Year Book down to the Commentary of Blackstone. If, therefore, this idea is allowed at all, it must be allowed, not as a maxim of British law, but of general reason. As such it will apply equally to all Governments as well as to that of Britain. Now if it be true that every man is virtually represented in the Legislature of his country, though he has no share in choosing it, then it is true that the Americans may be virtually represented in the British Parliament. But it is equally true that the same may be said of every Nation under the sun, with respect to its Legislature. The Grand Signior, for instance, has the Legislature of the Turkish Empire in his own person; he is the virtual Representative of his people therefore, and his subjects consequently have the blessing of representation equally with the Americans; and thus all the Governments of the world are happily brought to a level.

To comfort the Americans it is your constant practice to tell them that though they must have less freedom and constitutional privilege than their brethren at home, yet that the people of Great Britain have little of either. Thus you exaggerate the number of non-electors in Britain, and seem to impeach the Constitution, as having been negligent of the people. In this whole business I think you mistake the drift of the Constitution, as I shall endeavour to show. But first to touch it upon your own ground. Women and minors are a great majority of every people; yet in no Constitution have they ever been electors. So far the British Constitution has nothing particular to account for; and, as for the rest, let history answer. In our feudal origin the property of the state that fell to commoners was, for the most part, pretty equally divided into Military freeholds, to which every privilege was at that time annexed, and particularly that of constituting County Members. Moneyed property was little known or attended to at first. As it grew, however, Members for Cities, Towns, and Boroughs, were, from time to time added, that personal property might be represented in some measure, though not so accurately as freehold. The elective principle, therefore, was general and perfect as property originally stood. If the course of time has altered this state, so as that the constitutional principle has become narrow in its operation, what follows? That some change should be made, in order that the constitutional principle should be restored to its full operation: that is, that the Constitution should be revived at home, not destroyed on the other side of the Atlantic; whereas, your-argument is, that because it is bad here, it should be rendered worse there; and because its image is somewhat impaired in Great Britain, that there should not be a shadow of it left in America.

Again: You tell the Americans that they are no great losers by not having a vote for their British Representatives; for that those who have votes seldom know or have seen the person whom they choose. This is the fault of the individuals, however, and the faults of British individuals are scarcely to be punished in the persons of Americans by a deprivation of their privileges. Neither does this happen, except where the Constitution has deviated from its original, and when therefore it ought rather to be restored to its purity than its error propagated; I mean in the declining or decayed Boroughs. But if it is an absurd state of things that the Representative should not be known by his constituents, is it not absurd that America should be represented in Great Britain?

The principle of the Constitution in this point was so strong, that by the Common Law no man could be either an Elector or a Representative for any place, without residing on the spot; and upon the soundest reason, men, at that unrefined period, resided on their property. There was therefore not only more personal knowledge and intercourse, but a greater community of the most solid interests, and of property, above all, between men residing in the same County or Town, than between persons (though of the same Kingdom) who resided at a considerable distance from each other. Both representatives and electors were, like jurors, from the vicinage. This was the great and sound principle of our forefathers. They knew that Government was an art, practical, not theoretick. It was not an abstract subtlety that contented them, but a solid and binding principle of social connection. What that was precisely with respect to what is commonly called representation, may deserve perhaps to be a little explained.

Words that are long in common use acquire so many senses that they lose exactness. This, perhaps, is the case of the word representation. A Representative, however, we understand to be a Delegate; a person not self-authorized, but constituted by something else. I will call him Member, as less equivocal. Now what is it which constitutes the Member? I say the property of the County or Borough, not the persons; hence many persons in a County or Borough have not votes; which ought not to be, if the persons in the County or Borough were to constitute the Member. But it is the property of the County or Borough that is to do so; and, therefore, property, legally notified, never fails to have a vote - that is, to make an elector; for electors are the medium through which property is to operate. This will be still more illustrated hereafter. Freehold property constitutes County Representatives. Personal property constitutes all others. To explain this: personal property was considered by the old law as fugitive and unreal, compared with freehold property; and the quantum of it possessed by any man is difficult to ascertain. Hence the law has not fixed the quantum, nor does it require the same precise proof of its existence as it does in freehold, but has contented itself with selecting certain marks, and which are such presumptions of personal property to a degree in the possessor, that the law allows them for a proof of it. Thus, for instance, burgage tenure, birth, service, residence, paying certain rates, boiling a pot, &c.; all these prove or presume some degree of personal property, and of connection with the soil where they are found, and are admitted as proofs of it. This species of property, thus notified, constitutes Members for Boroughs, Towns, and Cities. Thus property is the universal constituent of the House of Commons. Honourary freemen, &c., I have not mentioned, being a modern device, unconnected with the Constitution.

To pursue this idea. In ancient time the Commons had not very large properties; the large properties were in the Barons, that is, in truth, the large properties made them Barons. A man became a Baron the moment he obtained a Barony. Barons were not created by the Crown at that time. It was an operation of property merely, not an act of the Executive. Thus property constituted the Baronage, and every man knows that the Baronage is only another name for the Peerage of England. A man who had a certain proportion of property of his own, was of course a Peer. A number of small properties, belonging to other men, combined and centred in one man, by virtue of election, made him a Commoner. One sat in right of his own property - the other sat in right of the property of others; but both sat equally by property. This accounts for some things that seem at first view irregular. For instance, the Barons, in old time, sitting by their property, taxed themselves; that is, taxed their own property. But now, sitting by the act of the Crown merely, without reference to property, the Commons, who continue to sit by property, have claimed the whole of taxation, and the Lords have ceded it to them. This shows to demonstration, that the body which is constituted by the property of any country, is the only body constitutionally qualified to tax that country; and, consequently, that the Provincial Legislatures are the only Assemblies constitutionally qualified to tax the Provinces, and not the British House of Commons, which American property has no share in constituting. This shews, that by the fundamentals of the British Government, property was the vital principle. It was that which constituted both Houses of Parliament, and for wise reasons: that the interest of the Members might as much as possible coincide with their duty; that the former might act as a centinel upon the latter, and that the rely thing which gave men a vote in the Legislature, should superintend and sway the exercise of that vote. And surely, in so ordaining, they shewed a more intimate knowledge of human nature, and more salutary views, than those men who now argue that Members will do their duty as well who have no such motives of interest to prompt them to it, whatever they may have to the contrary; and that that assembly is, in all points, even to taxation itself, the fittest Legislature for America, which has not an inch of American property in the whole structure and formation of it.

Having thus cleared to demonstration, I think, the fundamental principle of our Government as to this subject, let me advert a little to the practice of the Constitution, as it would have been on your principle, and as it actually has been.

Had the Norman conqueror returned to Normandy, and make that the seat of empire, the Norman states would have been the imperial Legislature. Would he have been entitled, I ask, to tax his English subjects in his states of Normandy? You will not affirm it. Yet might he not say, "My Norman states made laws for all my subjects, when I had no subjects beyond Normandy; and why may they not continue to do so still, though my condition is altered in that respect? My Norman law has made no distinction concerning my subjects beyond Sea, (for the Prince might forget that till he had subjects beyond Sea, no mention of them could be expected.) I am too moderate to make these subjects beyond sea dependent on myself; they shall be dependent on my Norman states; and there will be this comfort in it besides, that I can do what I please with my Norman states, whereas the popular assemblies beyond Sea might be less manageable." This speech, no doubt, would be highly relished; the Norman states would be flattered; a great majority would vote for the doctrine; the minority would be called an English faction and decried; and all would be harmony and satisfaction, in Normandy. But how would it have gone in England? I will answer this question for you: He must have conquered it again, and again, and again. If he were once worsted, he would have been undone, and every pause of bloodshed would have been a renewal of war.

England, however, as I hope it always will, continued to be the seat of empire to him and to his descendants. Did any of them attempt to tax their Dominions beyond Sea in the Legislature of England? Never. The Scotch have asserted that they conquered England; the English have asserted that they conquered Scotland. Did either Nation, though contiguous, ever think of taxing the other in its domestick Legislature? No such thing was ever thought of. Henry the Fifth conquered France. Did he or his son ever attempt to tax France in the English Parliament? Or, if they had resided in France, would the states of France have been the constitutional Legislature for taxing the English subject? You will not say it. Was Wales, though conquered and contiguous, ever taxed by the English Parliament till it sent Representatives thither?

Never. When the Crowns of England and Scotland were united in the person of James the First, who made England the seat of empire, did the Parliament of England ever think of taxing Scotland? Or, in Queen Anne's reign, when the Scotch were averse to a union, were they ever told that the English Parliament could do the business if they were refractory; for that Scotland was represented in the Parliament of England, though all the property on the other side of the Tweed did not constitute one vote towards constituting one member of that assembly? No man ever dreamed of such a thing. Did Henry the Second, or any of his successors, ever attempt to tax Ireland in the English Parliament, though conquered, and not very distant? No, you confess. But the Judges, you say, have mentioned a distinction to account for this exemption, viz: that Ireland had a Parliament of her own. But why was a Parliament given to her? Because no man thought at that time that the English Parliament was a constitutional or adequate Legislature in ordinary, for Dominions beyond Sea. Nor can I believe that the Judges grounded their decision merely on the trisyllable "Parliament;" or that they had any other idea than that Ireland, having a Legislature, by whatever name, competent to taxation, it was not fitting that she should be taxed by the English Parliament, in the constituting of which the property of Ireland had no share. Now this holds equally as to the Provincial Assemblies, and to the Legislatures or states of every Kingdom or Province which I have before mentioned; and therefore it is clear that this universal practice was founded on a universal principle, that the Parliament of England ought not to tax any part of the Dominion, the property of which had not its due share in constituting that assembly. But there is an instance more precisely in point, and that is, the practice of Parliament with respect to these very Colonies. From their origin till the commencement of this dispute, the Parliament of England never attempted to tax them. It is confessed to have been a new idea, and as such principally, it has been gloried in by Mr. Grenville and his friends. Will nothing convince men? I know, however, there are persons who will be ready to contradict this, and to mention that the Post Office is a tax. To this I answer, first, that it does not bear the letter and form peculiar to a Tax Law; and was not intended on the one side, nor received on the other as such, and therefore can be no precedent; at least, if it were intended so by you, the intention was masked. There was concealment in the transaction enough to destroy it in a court of equity; and if you set the example of litigiousness, and of little over-reachings to your Dependents, you will make them afraid of you in every part of your dealing, which will increase your difficulties without end, and will begin with universal contention, as it will terminate in universal chicanery. Next, I answer, that the Post office was an undertaking first carried on by individuals at their private hazard; since adopted by the state, which stands in the place only of those individuals as to the Dependencies; and that it is now as an establishment maintained at the sole expense of Great Britain. She therefore has a right to say to any man, that if he makes use of that convenience he shall pay for it. It is a matter of compact, not of legislation, either in letter or in spirit. The Americans can send their letters by other conveyances. They have done so; and if they generally do otherwise, it is because they prefer the publick vehicle to any other, not because they are confined to it; that is, they pay postage for the carriage of their letters as they would pay a stage-coach for the carriage of their persons. I deny, therefore, that there is a single instance in which the British Parliament has taxed the Colonies; and you cannot deny that the British Parliament has acknowledged that the Provincial Assemblies can tax the Provinces, and that, in fact, they have exercised that right in a manner the most meritorious towards this country. You cannot, therefore, contest their power of granting money, nor their inclination to grant reasonably; but you fear that they will not grant unreasonably. You want, therefore, to deprive them of a negative, and to extort what you please by threatening that you will tax them here, if they do not implicitly tax themselves in America. Not content with a reasonable resource in an application to their choice, you want to establish a boundless resource in their fears. Like our arbitrary Princes, you are straining the prerogative of this country, that under the terror of it, you may obtain what you do not choose from an unconstitutional pride, or what, from its unreasonableness, you are afraid to ask. Your apprehensions that the Colonies might, by Provincial grants, render the Crown independent, unless Parliament had a right to interpose, is only a pretence? Why have you ever let them make grants then? And is not your complaint that they have granted too little, not too much? But if that be your real fear, you can remedy it without a civil war. Pass an Act of Parliament declaring that it shall not be lawful for the Crown to give the royal assent to any Provincial grant without the approbation of Parliament. America will not refuse you a negative on her grants, but she will not relinquish a negative on your demands. I repeat, that the English Parliament has never taxed the Colonies; and if I could not, I should say, what all the world must acknowledge, that neither they, nor any body of people on earth, could defend their freedom for half a century, if a desultory and a questionable instance could overthrow it. It is not one problematical precedent that can be of any weight against a people. It must be by the general current of rational, unequivocal, and unoccasional practice that the Constitution of any country is to be tried.

And may not the Colonists well say that it would be wonderful indeed if our Parliament had been designed to be an universal Legislature to the ends of the earth, and as to all points? That our forefathers must have been not only wise men, which they were, but prophets, which they were not, if they could have foreseen our American acquisitions? And that no conclusion can be more certain than that our Parliament, in fact, was not originally intended to tax them, because when it was formed there was no such thing in being. May they not say that the only equity advanced in favour of the British claim, is, that the Americans are exactly in the same case with the non-electors of Britain? And may they not maintain that nothing can be more dissimilar? For that, first, the British non-electors has a strong influence upon the elector by habits of personal intercourse and connection; but that the American has none. Next, that the British non-electors may at any time acquire a vote by money or industry, but that the American never can. And lastly, that the British Representative cannot tax the non-electors of Britain without taxing his constituents equally and himself; whereas, every tax that he lays on America is, in the first instance, a gain and exoneration to his constituents and himself, in the same manner exactly in which it is a burden to America. May they not say, that men may be much more safely trusted in imposing taxes which they are to pay, than in imposing taxes which they are to receive? That the former is fairly a legislative act of taxation; but that the latter is an arbitrary imposition of tribute? May they not ask whether the people of Great Britain would think themselves as safe in being taxed by virtual Representatives in America, as in being taxed by their actual Representatives in Great Britain? And whether they would not esteem such levies to be a fine, rather than a tax; and an enactment, rather than an impost? May they not say, with some reason, that they wish you would know your own minds, and what would content you, and that you would decide for once, whether the possession of the Colonies, upon the old terms, would be an advantage to you, or not? For that if it would not, you are doubtless at liberty to relinquish it; and that if it would, you have no right to be paid for it. Have they not some reason to say that you are paid for it already, according to your original requisition? That the profits of their commerce, not taxes, were your object in colonizing; and that, possessing that, you have no right to a further payment by way of taxation? And that if they shall be able, and shall consent to contribute taxes also, that you should receive them rather as an overpayment, and as so much clear gain, than as a strict debt, or as a grounded demand? May they not say that it is rather hard that you should charge them with being a burden and a grievance to you if they choose your protection; and accuse them of being rebels if they are content to be without it? May they not observe, perhaps, that you call your connection with them by different names, according to the ends which you have to carry? That if you want taxes from them, you call it protection; and that if they want rights and immunities from you, that you call it mastery and dominion? So that they maybe beggared by taxes in return for being protected; and executed as rebels if they prefer independence? May they not say, when you complain of your taxes, that you could not pay those taxes if it were not for your commerce; and that a great and beneficial part of your commerce is your monopoly of American traffick? If therefore your monopoly of American traffick supplies a good part of those taxes, is it just to say that America does not contribute; or that she is not entitled to protection from any part of them? May she not also assert, that she is not the authoress of that debt with which you charge her? That the wars of King William and Queen Anne began it; that venal and unmanly counsels continued it; and that in the last war it was the Germanick and not the American Continent, from which it received its final accumulation. That all these measures were the product of English counsels, which were approved by the British Parliament, but over which the Colonies had no influence? That if the last war began about American boundaries, it was only because America is a British territory, and that it would equally have begun in whatever part of the Dominion the encroachment had been made? And if you will have America to be particularly concerned in the commencement of that war, may she not be hold to say that it was the conquests in America which your Colonists helped to make, and the cessions in America which they did not help to make, that accomplished the peace? Has she not reason to bid you look forward, and to tell you that, bending under that national debt, the Continent of Europe is not a scene on which you can act; and that it is by the American Continent only that the balance of Europe can be any longer in your hands? That by your great superiority of numbers there, you command both the Americas, command Spain and Portugal, influence France and other Powers of Europe, and that therefore instead of checking their increase by a jealous and hostile policy, you ought to encourage it by every just and generous institution; that instead of exasperating them by system, you should bind them to you by every demonstration of liberal attachment; and that you should leave them to conduct themselves to prosperity, without the alarming interposition of imperial authority, except where it is bona fide essential to preserve Great Britain at the head of an united Empire? And as taxing the Colonies in the British Parliament or making them tax themselves by compulsory requisition from hence, is inconsistent with all the rights of British property; and as it is evident, from your own past experience, that such a power is not necessary to the union of your Empire, but probably inconsistent with it; have they not reason to hope that you will renounce the idea with a manly decision, and not hold over their heads, in terrorum, a claim which even arbitrary countries do not exercise over their Colonies, the establishments of which are maintained at the expense of the parent state, without raising in them any conception that their Colonies are therefore useless, or that their Empire is in danger of being dissolved?

Surely no man can doubt but that system of Colony Government is best by which you will derive the greatest benefit from your Colonies, with the least disquietude and discomfort to them and to yourselves. You will not let them go at large into Manufactures or Commerce. What follows? That they never can be opulent states, and not being so, that they never can be productive of any considerable Revenue. Do not endeavour to unite incompatibilities. You have made your choice, and you have made a wise one. You have chosen the greater object in preference to the less. You have chosen copious returns of trade, rather than scanty resources of tribute. It would be absurd now to shake and to reverse your system, for the purpose of going back to what you were right in originally relinquishing; and right too not only because it is in itself of more value, but because you can get much in this way without disgusting your Colonists, whereas you could get but little in the other with their total alienation; and that for this plain reason, that men can better bear to be deprived, of many means of acquisition, than to lose all security in what they already possess. For men can be happy without wealth, but they cannot be happy with nothing. It was right also, because if your title to taxation was ever so clear, it is equally clear that you ought not to use it - witness the Stamp Act; a law particularly calculated to execute itself, digested by an acknowledged financier, and prepared for by him as a great experiment, with much circumspection, and through a long period of time; and yet, take the whole system, and you find a thousand errors in it, and inaptitudes to the place for which it was designed. What, then, would it be reasonable to expect from such a power in the hands of ordinary financiers, and in the common course of business, in which expedition and round numbers, as it were, are preferred to accuracy or justice? What but eternal blunders, eternal miscarriages, and eternal feuds? What would be the consequence? You would hazard all your American Commerce; and all your American Empire, for the shadow of Revenue. Without a large Army you could levy nothing. With a large Army the expense would overbalance the receipts. If that Army did not reside, all would be confusion the moment it departed; if it did reside, how could its ranks be kept full? Or how could it be prevented from becoming American? And if all these difficulties were removed, how could such a system be reconciled to the principle of your Empire, which is free and commercial, and, which cannot be either of these without being both? Rome, however, it may be said, governed her Provinces by Armies. Be it so. But her Empire was military, not commercial. War was to her, in some measure, what peace is to us. It fanned the principle of her Government. Armies too were to Rome what Navies are to Great Britain. Yet what was the consequence of this measure there? All manner of injustice and rapine spread through the Provinces, under the sanction of the Roman banner. Some of the Dependencies were ruined more quietly; others revolted. Larger Armies were called for. The ruin of some Provinces, and the mighty Armies sustained in others, exhausted the Empire. The distant Legions became tumultuary. One Province was employed against its neighbour. As one Army was quieted, another mutinied. The Empire was tossed from hand to hand, and the Roman Government, once so famous, became a theatre of military ravage; full of contending Emperours and conflicting Legions. The same tumults would close the scene with us, and the Empire would be dismembered by the very arms that were intended to unite it; for nothing that is unnatural can last. There would be this difference, however, that this measure might have seemed at first to be congenial, and even auxiliary to the principle of the Roman state; but in our Government it would be madness from the beginning. What follows? That if for ten thousand reasons you cannot govern by the sword, you have but one thing left, and that is to govern by justice; and if this proposition revolts you, it is clear that you are not in a temper to govern.

That this system will dismember the Empire, is one of those solemn absurdities which some men affect to believe, for the purpose of imposing upon others. Has your hitherto leaving them to tax, and in general to regulate themselves, overturned your Empire? No; it has made it. Has Ireland, having had a Parliament for every purpose of legislation for six hundred years, made her independent or undutiful? You acknowledge the contrary. Indeed, how is it possible anything of this sort should happen? The British Parliament declares who shall be King for the whole Empire; and without the assent of that King, no law can pass in any of the Dependencies. Will that King dare to give, or will his Ministers dare advise him to give the royal assent to any law that will dismember the Empire? Is it credible to suppose that he would forfeit the crown of the whole Empire, to gratify or to conspire with a part of it; which he must lose, together with that crown? It is nonsense to suppose it; No law, therefore, can pass in any Dependency, over which you have not a negative in effect, though not in form. Is this nothing? The power of peace and war, and the sword of the Empire, resides with Great Britain. Your friends and enemies are of course the friends and enemies of the whole Dominion. Is this nothing? You raise men for your Fleets and Armies throughout the whole. Is this nothing? The worst that can happen is that you may sometimes fail in getting money from them also. This too you will get in a reasonable degree, and with reasonable attention to them. Neither is all that they can ever contribute, over and above the maintenance of their local establishments, worth a civil war. For as to any significant remittances of Revenue from America to Great Britain, it is too absurd to talk about. Add to all I have said above, what is indeed Revenue, and infinitely more than Revenue: that Britain, as the head of a Naval and Commercial Empire, must be supreme in trade and commerce, naval and maritime regulation. Is this nothing? Or rather is it not every thing? Will you get nothing from your Colonies by such a system? I will be bold to say that you will get more than any Nation under the sun ever obtained from Colonies before. What follows from all this? That you are going at this very moment, at the expense of every species of injustice and cruelty, to contend with your countrymen for nothing, at the hazard of every thing. If this is common sense; go on with it.

You say it is strange that in this dispute Englishmen have become opponents to English honour and interest; that perhaps it never happened before that Justice found much opposition with interest on her side; and that the principles of the Congress, however wild, have united all the Provinces against the mother country, from New England to South Carolina. Are not these circumstances, I ask, much stronger presumptions against you, than in your behalf? For is it possible to conceive that a cause, in which no religious enthusiasm enters, which has nothing to appeal to but reason and justice, and against which the semblance of a national interest and honour is leagued, is it to be conceived that such a cause, if founded in fraud or falsehood, could have stood ten years agitation without detection? Or that if it were not built on the most solid truth, and upon the most commanding justice, that so many Provinces, with so many principles of discord to keep them asunder, would have united against a parent country so powerful, and to which the moment before they were so cordially united? And that such a combination in America should not produce union in Great Britain, even if before there had been nothing but enmity, instead of leaving this matter as it has done, to be the leading and almost the only subject of controversy amongst us? And what can be more honourable to the character of this great and just Nation, than that no sophism of perverted talents like yours; no pretexts even of national interest: or honour; nor all these, aided by the voice of Parliament itself, could warp the integrity of the publick mind, or blind it to those rights in their countrymen, which the people of this Kingdom, by such an unshaken adherence to them, have shewn they will not suffer to be torn from themselves.

You say that the Colonies of Britain differ from those of other Nations no otherwise than as the English Constitution differs from theirs. The American agrees with you, and says that is in freedom. But that not a modern device dressed up in deceitful words, but the solid freedom of the British Constitution, which cannot exist without a resident Legislature for domestick regulation in general, and for taxation particularly furnished with Members constituted by the property of that country which they are to tax. He who goes voluntarily to America, you say, cannot complain of losing what he leaves in Europe; for that as a man can be but in one place at once, he cannot have the advantage of multiplied residence. But first, our Colonists were not mere voluntary emigrants. They went by the invatation of the state. A futile claim to an uncultivated territory was all you had. That you would have lost if you had not sent them to keep possession of it. They went, therefore, in the service of their country, and a hard service too. A barren or over-wooded soil was what you gave them. You owe your title to that soil, at this moment, to their occupancy; they owe the fruits of it to their labour, and they pay the monopoly of its trade to your superiour and parental relation. Men who stand in this situation are not lightly to be construed out of their privileges. They allow, by this change of place, that they lose their vote for a Representative in Britain, and they claim in lieu of it though by no means an equivalent, a vote for a Representative in America. They say it is an inseparable quality of property by the British Government, to constitute the Members of the Legislature that are to tax that property; that as their property lies in America, it must constitute the Members that are to tax America; but that it has no share in constituting the British House of Commons, and that therefore they are not to be taxed by that assembly.

You say that the Americans do not wish to send Representatives to the British Parliament, and I believe it. They see the difficulty, or rather impossibility of executing such an idea, and how unfairly, if it were possible, it is likely to be executed. They conclude, therefore, that they must be represented and taxed in America. But you conclude the reverse, that they ought to be taxed in England, and say that there is little difference, if any, between a man's being taxed by compulsion without representation, and being represented by compulsion in order to be taxed. This seems, how consistently I know not, to state this as the alternative to which the America is reduced; and the American confesses that your doctrine at the best, does not mend that condition. For he says that if you force him to receive, at the point of the sword, a fiction of his being virtually represented here, that he will then be exactly in the state you describe, viz: that of being represented by compulsion, in order to be taxed. And he admits that violence in the first instance, by taking his money by force without any law, would be less an insult to his understanding, and perhaps a less dangerous, because a more alarming violation of his property.

And though every part of your publication breathes nothing but the spirit of tyranny, yet there is one passage so audacious that it deserves to be distinguished. In your 24th page you have these words: "An English individual may, by the supreme authority, be deprived of liberty, and a Colony divested of its powers, for reasons of which that authority is the sole judge." If one individual or one Colony can be thus deprived, so may all the Colonies together - so may every man in the community; for I defy any man to shew where any limitation exists, if any such power be admitted. By this doctrine, the Parliament, for reasons of which it is the sole judge, that, is, without assigning any reason at all, may make every man in the British Empire a slave in one day: that is to say, a body of men, taken from amongst ourselves, in number not above a thousand, collected in one spot of the Empire, under the most sacred trust for the service of the whole, are entitled to do that which no power on earth has a right to do, viz: to make slaves at one blow, and without saying, whereof, of fourteen millions of fellow subjects, and of their posterity, to latest time, and throughout every quarter of the world. Is such language to be endured? Or can he be a friend to human nature who uses it?

With equal humanity, in your 60th page, you say, "If the Bostonians are condemned unheard, it is because there is no need of a trial. All trial is the investigation of something doubtful." Your ideas of legislation we had before, and your judicial ideas are as intolerable. To say that a crime's being notorious, or asserted to be notorious, will justify condemnation unheard, is too insolent an imposition. Where is the Caligula who would not say that the guilt of the man, or of the Province that he wanted to destroy, was notorious. If the assertion of the tyrant will convert cruelty into justice, no tyrant will ever be cruel. But the law of England is so different from your sentiment, that it presumes every man in be innocent till his guilt is tried and established; that is, instead of condemning unheard, so long as any man is unheard, it acquits him.

Neither do you stop at barren tenets of tyranny, but endeavour to-propagate them into act, and to stamp their image upon the measures of Government. You call aloud to the Crown to new-model; that is, to innovate Charters. Yet what is your doctrine with respect to Charters? It is that, if these emigrants had gone without ceremony to seek their fortunes in any district which was unoccupied, or which by arms, address, or labour, they had acquired, they would have been independent states. But that, by accepting these Charters, the Colonists put themselves under the protection of the state, and by necessary implication under its jurisdiction and authority. Thus you I Congress that if it were not for these Charters, they might have been independent; and yet, in other places, you say that it is to these Charters they owe that they are freemen. At one time you state these Charters as an invaluable favour conferred upon them, and at another, as an inextricable chain by which they are bound. You state it as a compact, and justly with respect to the emigrants; for they gave up every thing here for what they obtained in America. What follows? That you cannot take that away from them without restoring, at least, what they gave up for it. Now what is that? All that they and their descendants might have acquired by remaining in Great Britain ever since, all which they have lost, and which is probably much more than they have gained. Now this I believe you would find it hard to calculate, and as hard perhaps to pay. To return. Who were the parties to this compact? the Colonists and the Crown, not the Parliament. Now, if in such a transaction the Parliament is not included, it is final against the Parliament. If, on the other hand, it is included, and that the Crown is to be considered as acting for the Parliament, I say that its act must be binding on both sides, or on neither; that is to say, that Parliament must be bound on one side, or the Colonist is not bound on the other; and this with good reason: first, because it is the nature of compact to be mutual or null; and next, because if the terms were disagreeable to Parliament, Parliament had an opportunity of immediately undeceiving the Colonists, and declaring their dissent, which, if they did not, they are bound. Now did they make any such declaration? Nothing like it. I say then that the faith of Legislature is as much pledged by this subsequent and implied assent as by an antecedent participation.

I have proved that taxation by an assembly, not constituted by the property which it taxes, is an idea repugnant to our Constitution. Such a power, therefore, to exist at all, must be reserved in the most express terms. Now it is confessed that taxation is reserved only in one Charter, that of Pennsylvania. By every other, therefore, it is excluded, I say, and that not only by constitutional inference, but by the co-operation of Parliament itself, in the assent which it has given to these Charters, as above explained. And to this natural construction of the Charters as they stand expressed, I add the contemporary and continual construction which they have received from the conduct of Parliament, which best knew its own intentions, and which did not tax them; insomuch that the non-user may be better argued to be a tacit renunciation of taxation as to Pennsylvania, where the power was reserved, than as leaving a doubt but that there is no such right where it was not reserved. And shall any man say that such rights, purchased originally by what was relinquished here - purchased since by labour and service in America, and ratified by time, the arbiter of Governments - shall any man say that such rights are to be blown away by the breath of the first idle disputant? Or that they are alterable or revocable every hour of the day, with this absurdity added to injustice, that they are alterable and revocable only on one side; that is to the injury of the Colonist for ever, and at no period of time to his benefit? And this without considering that by your own doctrine these Charters, instead of being annulled as the ground of their independence, ought to be held sacred and immutable as the source of your authority.

But not content with innovating Charters, you advise that the Americans universally should be subjugated by stricter laws and stronger obligations. You exhort that national vengeance may be poured on the contrivers of mischief, and that no mistakes of clemency should prevent abundant forfeitures. Lest this should not be sufficiently harsh and humiliating, you suggest that their slaves may be taken from them, though by your laws their property, and settled, with arms for their defence, in some simple, that is, arbitrary form of Government. Thus you would establish a Saturnalia of cruelty, and expose these devoted men to the brutality of their own slaves, inflamed and irritated to retaliate tradonary wrongs, and to wreak a barbarous vengeance on their degraded masters. Lest even the common Soldier should have too much tenderness for them, you are careful to represent them under every odious and disparaging image. You say that we ought to resent our situation as the Scythians did of old when they found themselves excluded by their own slaves. You slander the very bounties of nature in them; and, as far as you can, degrade them below the rank of humanity.

Is this the language of a sober inquirer? As a philosopher, as a moralist, as a man, you ought to have cried out to the contending Nations, "Infatuated as you are, whither do you rush? Though you may have some cause for difference with each other, you have much more still for concord." But you have scattered firebrands between them. You have endeavoured to ripen tumult to anarchy, and dissatisfaction to rebellion, and to transform punishment into waste and extirpation.

The turnout of your style, the insolence of your manners, your rawness in the great principles of the subject which you treat, and your universal inaccuracy or unfairness in arguing, are inferiour considerations and faults that may be forgiven. But let it be remembered, at all events, that with respect to this point, you Congress that if the Americans are right, it is robbery in us, not rebellion in them. Now I ask any man, whether on this state it is so clear that America is wrong, and that it is not robbery in us, as that we should lightly run the risk of becoming murderers also, and murderers of our fellow-subjects into the bargain? Every lover of truth and liberty, every honest and conscientious man will feel this question. The Soldier will feel it; the Sailor will feel it; the free Subject will feel it; the King and his Ministers will feel it.

PROCEEDINGS, PAPERS, AND DEBATES OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND HOUSE OF COMMONS, ON MEASURES RELATING TO THE AMERICAN COLONIES, DURING THE FIRST SESSION OF THE FOURTEENTH PARLIAMENT OF GREAT BRITAIN.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, November, 29, 1774.

This day the Parliament met at Westminster.*

His Majesty being seated on the Throne, adorned with his crown and regal ornaments, and attended by his Officers of State, (the Lords being in their robes,) commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to let the Commons know, "It is his Majesty's pleasure that they attend him immediately in this House."

* Whilst matters of this great magnitude were transacting in America, an unexampled supineness with regard to publick affairs, prevailed among the great body of the people at home. The English Nation, which used to see so tremblingly alive upon every contest that arose between the remotest Powers in Europe, and to interest itself so much in the issue as scarcely to be withheld from becoming a party wherever justice or friendship pointed out the way, by a strange reverse of temper, seemed, at this time, much more indifferent to matters in which were involved its own immediate and dearest interests. Even the great commercial and manufacturing bodies, who must be the first to feel, and the last to lament any sinister events in the Colonies, and who are generally remarkable for a quick foresight and provident sagacity in whatever regards their interest, seemed now to be sunk in the same carelessness and inattention with the rest of the people.

Who being come, the Lord Chancellor said:

"My Lords and Gentlemen:

"His Majesty has been pleased to command me to acquaint you that he will defer declaring the causes of calling this Parliament till there shall be a Speaker of the House of Commons; and therefore it is Majesty's pleasure that you, gentlemen of the House of Commons, do immediately repair to the place where the Commons usually sit, and there choose a fit person to be your

Several causes concurred to produce this apparentt indifference. The Colony contests were no longer new. From the year 1765 they had with but few, and those short intermissions, engaged the attention of Parliament. Most of the topics on the subject were exhausted, and the vehement passions which accompanied them had subsided. The Non-Importation Agreement (by divisions within the Colonies, which, if not caused, were much forwarded by the concessions with regard to several of the taxes laid in 1767) had broken up before it had produced any serious consequences. Most people, theretore, flattered themselves that as things had appeared so very frequently at the verge of a rupture, without actually arriving at it, that now, as formerly, some means would be found for accommodating this dispute. At worst, it was conceived that the Americans would themselves grow tired. And as an opinion was circulated with some industry and success, that a coun-

"Speaker; and that you present such person who shall be so chosen, to his Majesty here for his royal approbation to-morrow at two of the clock.

Then his Majesty was pleased to retire, and the Commons withdrew.

WEDNESDAY, November 30, 1774.

His Majesty being seated on the Throne, adorned with his crown and regal ornaments, and attended by his high Officers of State, (the Lords being in their robes,) commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to let the Commons know, "It is his Majesty's pleasure that they attend him immediately in this House."

Who being come

Sir Fletcher Norton said,

Most Gracious Sovereign:

Your Majesty's dutiful subjects, the Commons of this your Realm, in Parliament assembled, have, in pursuance of your Majesty's direction, and of their ancient right, elected one of their Members to be their Speaker for this Parliament; and their choice, sir, having once more fallen upon me for this high and important trust, they now present me to your Majesty for your judgment upon their election. Needless will it be in me, sir, to mention on this occasion, with regard to myself, what I fear cannot but be too well known to your Majesty; it therefore best becomes me, with silence and submission, to resign myself to your royal determination.

tenance of resolution, if persevered in for some time, would certainly put an end to the contest, which (it was said) had been nourished wholly by former concessions, people were in general inclined to leave the trial of the effects of perseverance and resolution, to a Ministry who valued themselves on those qualities. The Court had also with great tenaciousness adhered to this system for some years. It frequently got the better, not only of the regular opposition, but of parties in the Ministry itself, who were from time to time inclined to relax either from fear, weariness, or change of opinion. All these things had hitherto indisposed the body of the Nation from taking part in the sanguine manner they had hitherto done on other subjects, and formerly on this.

From these causes, Administration being totally disengaged at home, was at full leisure to prosecute the measures which it had designed against America, or to adopt such new ones as the opposition there rendered necessary towards carrying the new laws into execution. The times, indeed, were highly favourable to any purpose, which only required the concurrence of that Parliament and the acquiescence of the people.

Notwithstanding these favourable circumstances on the one side, and that general indifference which prevailed on the other, it was not totally forgotten by either, that the time for a general election was approaching, and that the Parliament had but one session more to complete its allotted term. In some few places, where the popular spirit ran high, tests were already proposed to be signed by their future candidates, previous to their receiving any assurance or promise of support from the electors. At a meeting of the freeholders of the County of Middlesex, a test was proposed to Mr. Wilkes and Serjeant Glyn, and by them signed, in which they engaged their utmost endeavours to promote Bills for shortening the duration of Parliaments; for the exclusion of Placemen and Pensioners from the House of Commons; for a more fair and equal representation of the people; for vindicating the injured rights of the freeholders of that County, and, through them, of all the electors in the Kingdom; for procuring a repeal of the four late American Acts, viz: that for the Province of Quebec, and the three which affected the Town of Boston, and the Province of Massachusetts Bay; besides binding themselves, so far as in them lay, to restore and defend that excellent form of government which had been modelled and established at the Revolution.

Tests, upon much the same principles, were proposed in London and some other places; and it is still the opinion of some of those who were sanguine in that mode of proceeding, that the apprehension of its becoming general, influenced the subsequent conduct of Administration to the dissolution of Parliament. This opinion, however, seems ill-founded. There was no reason then to expect, nor is there now to imagine, that the mode of subscribing to tests would have become general, or even extensive. The influence of Administration, in a great number of the Boroughs, and in many of the Counties, is at all times too well known to be called in question, and the principal and most celebrated leaders in Opposition, totally disclaimed all tests whatever, as unworthy of themselves, derogatory of their character as Senators, and restrictive of their rights as men.

Other more probable causes must be sought for the measure of dissolving the Parliament. The civil list was again become deeply in debt, and the distresses of the lower part of the household, from the withholding of their wages, were become so notorious, and so much spoken of, that it seemed disgraceful to the Nation, as well as grievous to the Sovereign. It was therefore thought, and probably rightly, that it was intended, in the ensuing session, not only to demand a large sum of money for the discharge of the standing debt, but also that a requisition would be made for such a considerable and certain yearly addition to the civil list revenues as would prevent all such mortifying applications for the future.

Though no doubt could be entertained of the good will and compliance of the then Parliament, it was, perhaps, not thought prudent to load them with so disagreeable a task at the eve of a general election. Recent experience had shewn that this was a subject which would excite much general discussion; and that however a majority might, for

Then the Lord Chancellor, receiving directions from his Majesty, said:

Sir Fletcher Norton,

You have appealed to the King's own experience and knowledge for the decision of the weighty affair now under his consideration, and it is from thence his Majesty has formed his judgment.

After having had such dear demonstration of your abilities, zeal, and application, in the service of himself and of your country, in the last Parliament, his Majesty commands me to let you know that he entirely approves the choice which his faithful Commons have made, and allows and confirms you to be their Speaker. After which,

Mr. Speaker said :

Since your Majesty has been pleased to confirm the choice your Commons have made of me to be their Speaker, it is my duty, sir, with all humility, to conform myself to their appointment and your royal approbation of it; begging your Majesty's favourable acceptance of my humblest acknowledgments for this fresh instance of your Majesty's grace towards myself, and that your Majesty would vouchsafe to pardon my failings and infirmities, at least not to impute them in any wise to your faithful Commons. And that your Commons in Parliament may be the better enabled to discharge their duty to your Majesty and their country, I do in their name, and on their behalf, by humble petition to your Majesty, lay claim to all their ancient rights and privileges; particularly that they, their servants and their zeal to the case of their Sovereign, overlook all the difficulties that could be raised within doors, such a settlement, attended with the payment of a great present balance, and loaded with an entailed irredeemable future encumbrance, would not at all be satisfactory without. People are apt to be out of humour at the parting with their money, and an application for future trust and favour, in such a temper, would seem at least ill-timed. On the other hand, such a measure would be nothing in the hands of a new Parliament, and would be worn out of memory, or become only an historical reference, at the time of their natural demise. The sinister events which have since taken place have, however, hitherto prevented the making of any requisition of this nature.

Another motive may, perhaps, be supposed for the measure of dissolution. That Parliament had already passed the most hostile laws against America; and as they could not with so good a grace rescind their own acts, the Minister was, in some degree, tied down to perseverance in the support of those measures on which they were founded; whereas, in a new House of Commons, he would be somewhat at large in choosing or altering his line of conduct, as circumstances varied, and they, if necessary, might throw all the odium of those laws upon their predecessors.

It may also be supposed that as the issue of the American measures became every day more precarious, it was thought a right measure to have the elections over before any unfortunate event could change the temper or irritate the minds of the people. If this should coincide with the time of a general election, there was no doubt but the opposition must carry every thing before it. This, in all likelihood, was the strongest and most prevalent motive to this resolution, though the others might have had their share. And it may be safely concluded that a saving to the friends of Government, by curtailing the time for contest and expense, particularly in the Counties, was not at all overlooked upon this occasion. Indeed, the Opposition complained that they did not receive fair play; that some places were lost by surprise; and, they said, that these in the secret had infinite advantages by setting out betimes for the scene of action, and taking the necessary measures to strengthen their interest, before even a suspicion of the design was formed on the other side.

However it was very unexpectedly, and much to the surprise of the Nation, in general, (as it had not been a measure much practised of late years, no similar instance having occurred since the year 1746, and even that being an unique in the long reign of George the Second;) a Proclamation was issued on the 30th of September, for the dissolution of the Parliament, and the calling of a new one, the writs for which were made returnable on the 29th day of the following November. Notwithstanding the surprise and shortness of the time, some of the elections were contested with extraordinary perseverance and ardour.

In London, the popular party carried every thing before them, and returned all the Members. Mr. Wilkes was again elected to represent the County of Middlesex, without a shadow of opposition from the Court and Lord Mayor of that City, for the ensuing year; and there was no doubt that the Court party, grown somewhat wiser by long and bitter experience, would no longer controvert his seat. The dispute, concerning that single seat had produced to them more troubles, vexation, and disgraces than the contest with the twelve united Colonies of America. It would have been an imprudence of the grossest kind to mix these disputes in the present crisis; and thus, after near fourteen years struggle, it was thought the best way to leave him master of the field.

It was said, by some of those who are curious in attending to such observations, that notwithstanding the surprise and the shortness of the time, a greater number of the old Members were thrown out than was common at general elections. However the fact might be, those who were the best acquainted with men and things, did not augur any change of system from this circumstance. The Court, notwithstanding all the ill success of all the measures from which the best success was so confidently expected, seemed firmly resolved to persevere in the same course. It is said that private advices from America encouraged them to set a light value on the publick appearances. - Ann. Regis.

estates, may be free from arrests and all other molestation. That they may enjoy freedom of speech in their debates, and have liberty of access to your royal person on all occasions; and that all their proceedings may receive from your Majesty the most favourable interpretation.

Which done,

The Lord Chancellor, by his Majesty's further command, said,

Mr. Speaker:

The King has the greatest confidence in the duty and affection of this House of Commons to his person and Government, and an high opinion of that wisdom, temper, and prudence, which they will use in all their proceedings; and his Majesty does most readily grant and allow to them all their privileges, in as full and ample a manner as they have at any time been granted or allowed by his Majesty, or any of his royal predecessors.

There is one suit, sir, which you have made on your own behalf. His Majesty has received the surest pledge that no person in your station ever stood less in need of it than yourself; but that you may want no support in sustaining the burden of that important trust which is reposed in you, his Majesty has directed me to assure you, that he will put the most favourable construction both on your words and actions.

Then his Majesty was pleased to speak as follows:

My Lords and Gentlemen:

It gives me much concern that I am obliged, at the opening of this Parliament, to inform you that a most daring spirit of resistance and disobedience to the law still unhappily prevails in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, and has in divers parts of it broke forth in fresh violences of a very criminal nature. These proceedings have been countenanced and encouraged in other of my Colonies, and unwarrantable attempts have been made to obstruct the Commerce of this Kingdom, by unlawful combinations. I have taken such measures, and given such orders as I judged most proper and effectual for carrying into execution the laws which were passed in the last session of the late Parliament, for the protection and security of the Commerce of my subjects, and for the restoring and preserving peace, order, and good Government in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay. And you may depend on my firm and steadfast resolution to withstand every attempt to weaken or impair the supreme authority of this Legislature over all the Dominions of my crown, the maintenance of which I consider as essential to the dignity, the safety, and the welfare of the British Empire, assuring myself that, while I act upon these principles, I shall never fail to receive your assistance and support.

I have the greatest satisfaction in being able to inform you that a treaty of peace is concluded between Russia and the Porte. By this happy event the troubles which have so long prevailed in one part of Europe, are composed, and the general tranquillity rendered complete. It shall be my constant aim and endeavour to prevent the breaking out of fresh disturbances, and I cannot but flatter myself I shall succeed, as I continue to receive the strongest assurances from other Powers of their being equally disposed to preserve the peace.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have ordered the proper Estimates for the service of the ensuing year to be laid before you; and I doubt not but that, in this House of Commons, I shall meet with the same affectionate confidence, and the same proofs of zeal and attachment to my person and Government, which I have always, during the course of my reign, received from my faithful Commons.

My Lords and Gentlemen:

Let me particularly recommend to you, at this time, to proceed with temper in your deliberations, and with unanimity in your resolutions. Let my people, in every part of my Dominions, be taught by your example to have a due reverence for the laws, and a just sense of the blessings of our excellent Constitution. They may be assured that, on my part, I have nothing so much at heart as the real prosperity and lasting happiness of all my subjects.

Then his Majesty was pleased to retire, and the Commons withdrew.

The Lord Chancellor reported his Majesty's Speech, And the same being read by the Clerk

The Earl of Hillsborough rose, and in a long and able speech, set forth the situation of the Colonies with the mother country, highly disapproving of the refractory spirit of the Americans, and hoping that, with temper and unanimity, such measures might be adopted as to bring about a reconciliation. His Lordship then moved, "That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty the thanks of this House for his most gracious Speech from the throne.

"To declare our abhorrence and detestation of the "daring spirit of resistance and disobedience to the laws, "which so strongly prevails in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, and of the unwarrantable attempts in that "and other Provinces of America to obstruct, by unlawful "combinations, the trade of this Kingdom.

"To return his Majesty our humble thanks for having "been pleased to communicate to us, that he has taken "such measures and given such orders as his Majesty hath "judged most proper and effectual for the protection and "security of the Commerce of his Majesty's subjects, and "for carrying into execution the laws which were passed "in the last session of the late Parliament, relative to the "Province of the Massachusetts Bay. To express our "entire satisfaction in his Majesty's firm and steadfast resolution to continue to support the supreme authority of "the Legislature over all the Dominions of his crown, and "to give his Majesty the strongest assurances that we will "cheerfully co-operate in all such measures as shall be "necessary to maintain the dignity, safety, and welfare of "the British Empire.

"That as this Nation cannot be unconcerned in the "common interest of Europe, we have the greatest satisfaction in being acquainted with the conclusion of the "peace between Russia and the Porte; that we confide "in his Majesty's endeavours to prevent, far as possible, "the breaking out of fresh disturbances; and from the assurances given to his Majesty by other Powers, we have "the pleasing expectation that nothing is likely to intervene that may interrupt the present happy tranquillity in "Europe.

"That it is no less our duty than our inclination to proceed with temper and unanimity in our deliberations and "resolutions, and to inculcate, by our example, a due reverence for the laws, and a just sense of the excellency "of our Constitution; and, impressed with the deepest "gratitude for the many blessings we have enjoyed during "the course of his Majesty's reign, to testify with unaffected "zeal at this conjuncture our inviolable fidelity to his Majesty, and our serious attention to the publick welfare."

The Earl of Buckinghamshire seconded the motion.

The Duke of Richmond spoke strongly against the measures, which he imagined were intended to be taken, and moved that an amendment be made to the said motion, by inserting, after the word "throne," at the end of the first paragraph, these words:

"And to desire his Majesty would be graciously pleased "to give direction for an early communication of the accounts which have been received concerning the state of "the Colonies, that we may not proceed to the consideration of this most critical and important matter, but upon "the fullest information; and when we are thus informed "we shall, without delay, apply ourselves with the most "earnest and serious zeal, to such measures as shall tend "to secure the honour of his Majesty's Crown, the true "dignity of the mother country, and the harmony and "happiness of all his Majesty's Dominions."

Lord Lyttelton replied to him. and, amongst other things, urged the necessity of asserting the sovereign right of Great Britain over the Colonies by the most speedy and resolute measures. His Lordship declared that it was no longer a question whether we should relinquish the right of taxation, but whether that commerce, which had carried us triumphantly through the last war, should be subject to the wise and necessary regulations prescribed by the Act of Navigation, and confirmed by many subsequent Acts of Parliament, or at once laid open at the will of the factious

Americans, who were now struggling for a free and unlimited trade, independent of their mother country, and for powers inconsistent with, and derogatory to the honour and dignity of the Imperial Crown of England; that if Government should now, in the least degree, recede, all would be over, and America, instead of being subject to Great Britain, would soon give laws to it.

Lord Shelburne spoke next, then Lord Talbot; after him,

Lord Camden expatiated largely on the inexpediency of coercive measures at this time. He said such measures might be very properly exercised in the infancy of Colonies, but that when they had acquired power by commerce, and strength by the increase of numbers, it was wholly impolitic, if not dangerous, to compel them to submit to laws which tended to lay the least burthen or restraint on that trade by which alone they existed.

Lord Dartmouth replied to Lord Camden, and his speech closed the debate; when the question was put,

"Whether these words shall be inserted in the said motion?"

It was resolved in the Negative. Contents, 13; Non-Contents, 63.*

Upon which, the following Protest was entered:

Dissentient;

Because we cannot agree to commit ourselves with the careless facility of a common address of compliment, in expressions which may lead to measures in the event fatal to the lives, properties, and liberties of a very great part of our fellow-subjects. We conceive that an Address upon such objects as are before us, and at such a time as this, must necessarily have a considerable influence upon our future proceedings, and must impress the publick with an idea of the general spirit of the measures which we mean to support. Whatever methods we shall think it advisable to pursue, either in support of the mere authority of Parliament, which seems to be the sole consideration with some, or for reconciling that authority with the peace and satisfaction of the whole Empire, which has ever been our constant and invariable object, it will certainly add to the weight and efficacy of our proceedings, if they appear the result of full information, mature deliberation, and temperate inquiry. No materials for such an inquiry have been laid before us; nor have any such been so much as promised in the Speech from the Throne, or even in any verbal assurance from Ministers. In this situation we are called upon to make an Address, arbitrarily imposing qualities and descriptions upon acts done in the Colonies, of the true nature and just extent of which we are as yet in a great measure unapprized; a procedure which appears to us by no means consonant to that purity which we ought ever to preserve in our judicial, and to that caution which ought to guide us in our deliberate capacity.

2. Because this Address does, in effect, imply an approbation of the system adopted with regard to the Colonies in the last Parliament. This unfortunate system, conceived with so little prudence, and pursued with so little temper, consistency, or foresight, we were in hopes would be at length abandoned, from an experience of the mischiefs which it has produced, in proportion to the time in which it was continued, and the diligence with which it has been pursued; a system which has created the utmost confusion in the Colonies, without any rational hope of advantage to the Revenue, and with certain detriment to the Commerce of the mother country. And it affords us a melancholy prospect of the disposition of Lords in the present Parliament, when we see the House, under the pressure of so severe and uniform an experience, again ready, without any inquiry, to countenance, if not to adopt, the spirit of the former fatal proceedings.

But whatever may be the mischievous designs, or the inconsiderate temerity, which leads others to this desperate course, we wish to be known as persons who have ever disapproved of measures so pernicious in their past effects, and their future tendency, and who are not in haste, without inquiry or information, to commit ourselves in desistations which may precipitate our country into all the calamities of a civil war.

RICHMOND,	PONSONBY,
WYCOMBE,	PORTLAND.
ROCKINGHAM,	TORRINGTON,
STAMFORD,	STANHOPE.
CAMDEN,

Then it was moved "To agree to the said motion for an Address as at first proposed;"

Which being objected to,

The question was put thereupon,

It was resolved in the Affirmative: Contents, 46; Non-Contents, 9.

Then the Lords following were appointed a Committee to prepare all Address, pursuant to the said motion, (videlicet:)

The Lord President; (Earl Gower.)

Lord of the Privy Seal; (Duke of Grafton.)

Dukes of Marlborough, Ancaster, Chandos, and Bridgewater;

The Lord Steward; (Earl Talbot.)

The Lord Chamberlain; (Earl of Hertford.)

Earls Suffolk, Denbigh, Peterborough, Winchelsea, Sandwich, Carlisle. Rochford, Jersey, Dartmouth, Abercorn, Marchmont, Bristol, Waldegrave, Bucks, Hardwicks, Northington, and Hillsborough;

Viscounts Say and Sele, Townshend, Weymouth, Bellingbroke, Falmouth, Wentworth, and Dudley and Ward;

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury;

Lord Bishops of London, Durham, Norwich, Landaff, Peterborough, Chester, St. David's, and Rochester; and Lords Le Despencer, Cathcart, Trover, Edgcombe, Bruce, Hyde, Mansfield, Lyttelton, and Sundridge.

Their Lordships, or any five of them, to meet immediately in the Prince's Lodgings, near the House of Peers, and to adjourn as they please.

The House was adjourned during pleasure, and the Committee withdrew to prepare the Address.

After some time the House was resumed; and the Earl of Hillsborough reported from the Committee an Address drawn up by them as follows, (videlicet:)

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lords spiritual and temporal, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to return your Majesty our humble thanks for your most gracious Speech from the throne.

We think it our indispensable duty to declare, on this occasion, our abhorrence and detestation of the daring spirit of resistance, and disobedience to the laws, which so strongly prevails in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, and of the unwarrantable attempts in that and other of your Majesty's Provinces in America, to obstruct by unlawful combinations the trade of this Kingdom.

We thankfully acknowledge, at the same time, the communication it has pleased your Majesty to make to us of your having taken such measures and given such orders as your Majesty judged the most proper and effectual for the protection and security of the commerce of your Majesty's subjects, and for the carrying into execution the laws which were passed in the last session of the late Parliament relative to the Province of the Massachusetts Bay; and in the utmost reliance on your Majesty's firm and steadfast resolution to continue to support the supreme authority of the Legislature over all the Dominions of your crown, your Majesty may be assured that we will cheerfully co-operate in all such measures as shall be necessary to maintain the dignity, the safety, and the welfare of the British Empire.

As this Nation cannot be unconcerned in the common interests of Europe, it is with the greatest satisfaction we are acquainted with the conclusion of the peace between Russia and the Porte. We have the fullest confidence in your Majesty's endeavours to prevent, as far as possible, the breaking out of fresh disturbances; and, from the assurances given to your Majesty by other Powers, we have the pleasing expectation that nothing is likely to happen that may interrupt the present happy tranquillity in Europe.

We beg leave humbly to assure your Majesty that it will be no less our duty than our inclination to proceed with temper and unanimity in our deliberations and resolutions,

* The Address from the Lords was not less warmly debated than that from the House of Commons. The debate was long and vehement, though the minority was but thirteen to sixty-three on the division. It was rendered more memorable by the circumstance of having produced a Protest, the first we remember to have heard of upon an Address, and that too very strong and pointed. - Ann. Regis.

and to inculcate, by our example, a due reverence for the laws, and a just sense of the excellency of our Constitution. Impressed with these sentiments, and with the deepest gratitude for the many blessings we have enjoyed during the course of your Majesty's reign, it will be our principal care to testify, with unaffected zeal at this conjuncture, our inviolable fidelity to your Majesty, and our serious attention to the publick welfare.

Which Address being read by the Clerk,

It was moved "To agree with the Committee in the said Address;"

Which being objected to,

The question was put thereupon;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by the whole House.

Ordered, That the Lords with the White Staves do wait on his Majesty, humbly to know what time his Majesty will please appoint to be attended therewith.

THURSDAY, December 1, 1774.

The Lord Chamberlain reported, that the Lords with White Staves had (according to order) waited on his Majesty humbly to know what time his Majesty would please to appoint to be attended with their Lordships' Address; and that his Majesty had appointed this day at three o'clock, at his Palace at St. James's.

TUESDAY, December 6, 1774.

The Lord Chancellor reported, that the House did, on Thursday last, present their Address to his Majesty, to which his Majesty was pleased to return the following most gracious Answer:

My Lords:

I thank you for your affectionate assurances of duty and loyalty.

The zeal you express for the support of the supreme authority of the Legislature, which I shall constantly maintain, is very agreeable to me; and your resolution to proceed with temper and unanimity in your deliberations, gives me greater satisfaction, as it corresponds with the hearty concern I shall ever have for the true interests of all my people.

Ordered, That the said Address, together with his Majesty's most gracious Answer thereto, be forthwith printed and published.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, November 29, 1774.

The King's most excellent Majesty having, by his Royal Proclamation, dated the thirtieth day of September last, dissolved the last Parliament, and by his Writ of Summons, issued under the great seal of Great Britain, bearing teste at Westminster, on Saturday, the first day of October, called a new Parliament, and appointed the same to meet and sit this day; the Right Honourable William Earl Talbot, Lord Steward of his Majesty's Household, came about ten of the clock into one of the rooms belonging to the Clerk of the House, where the oaths appointed to be taken by the Members returned to serve in Parliament are usually administered; and John Hatsell, Esquire, Clerk of the House of Commons, and Mr. Ley, Clerk Assistant, and the other Clerks, attending according to their duty; and the Honourable John Yorke, Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, having delivered to the said Mr. Hatsell a book containing a List of the names of such Members as had been returned to serve in this Parliament, the Lord Steward did himself, in person, administer the oaths appointed to several of the Members who appeared; and afterwards made a Commission or Deputation, under his hand and seal, empowering several of the Members who had before been sworn, to administer the said oaths to the rest of the Members returned, some of which Commissioners administered the same accordingly to such other Members as appeared; which being done, the Members repaired to their seats in the House of Commons.

After which, a Message was delivered by Sir Francis Molyneux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

Gentlemen:

The King commands this Honourable House to attend his Majesty immediately in the House of Peers.

Accordingly the House went up to attend his Majesty in the House of Peers, where the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by his Majesty's direction, said,

My Lords and Gentlemen:

His Majesty has been pleased to command me to acquaint you that he will defer declaring the cause of calling this Parliament, till there shall be a Speaker of the House of Commons; and therefore it is his Majesty's pleasure, that you, gentlemen of the House of Commons, do immediately repair to the place where the Commons usually sit, and there choose a fit person to be your Speaker; and that you present such person who shall be so chosen, to his Majesty here, for his royal approbation, to-morrow, at two of the clock.

And the House being returned, the Right Honourable Lord Guernsey, son and heir apparent of the Right Honourable the Earl of Anglesford, and one of the Burgesses for the Borough of Maidstone, in the County of Kent, addressing himself to the Clerk, (who, standing up, pointed to him, and then sat down.)

Lord Guernsey, then, in the usual form, after asserting the rights and privileges of the Commons of Great Britain, proceeded to expatiate largely on the tried integrity, abilities, and well known experience of Sir Fletcher Norton, their late Speaker, and concluded with moving, that he should once more be called to the Chair. His Lordship was seconded by Lord Robert Spencer, brother to the most noble George Duke of Marlborough, and one of the citizens for the City of Oxford, who was no less warm in his commendations; and the question being put, it was unanimously agreed to.

The House then calling Sir Fletcher Norton to the Chair, he stood up in his place, and delivered himself substantially, as follows:

The two noble Lords have been extremely partial to what they are pleased to term my talents and experience; though conscious of my inability to discharge so important and honourable a trust, upon any pretension but that of a strict obedience to the orders of this House; that, as the only merit I have hitherto had the least claim to, will, I trust, enable me to discharge myself to your satisfaction in future. I well know the extreme difficulty, and even impossibility, of filling the Chair, without such a disposition; and if that be sufficient, I hope to be honoured with a continuance of the same kind opinion and indulgence which I have before experienced.

The Speaker having finished, and the House then again unanimously calling Sir Fletcher Norton to the Chair, he was taken out of his place by the said Lord Guernsey and Lord Robert Spencer, and conducted to the Chair, where, before he sat down, he spoke to the following effect:

I cannot pretend to say whether the House may think as I do on the present occasion. I nevertheless look upon it as a part of my duty to acquaint them with my sentiments. If his Majesty should think proper to approve of me when I am presented, it will be a matter of course to pray for a confirmation of the ancient privileges of the Commons of Great Britain. Two of these privileges, it is well known, respecting the property and the servants of the Members of this House, having been taken away by a late Act of Parliament, to ask for them as usual, would be at least nugatory; to say they were given up, would, in my opinion, be equally improper. I would therefore, with the consent of the House, put the prayer in this general manner - such privileges, intinuties, &c., as were taken away or abridged by Act of Parliament.

In this the House acquiesced. The Clerk of the House then took the Mace, (which before lay under the table;) and laid it upon the table; and the Speaker took his seat.

Then the Right Honourable Sir John Shelley, Treasurer of his Majesty's Household, and one of the Burgesses for the Borough of New-Shoreham, in the County of Sussex, having congratulated Mr. Speaker elect, moved to adjourn till to-morrow, twelve of the clock.

And the House accordingly adjourned till tomorrow, twelve of the clock.

WEDNESDAY, November 30, 1774.

The House being met, and Mr. Speaker elect having taken the Chair;

A Message was brought from his Majesty, by Sir Francis Molyneux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

Mr. Speaker:

The King commands this Honourable House to attend his Majesty immediately in the House of Peers.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker elect, with the House, went up to attend his Majesty in the House of Peers, where Mr. Speaker elect was presented to his Majesty for his royal approbation; and Then the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, after receiving directions from his Majesty, signified his Majesty's approbation of Mr. Speaker elect.

The House being returned;

Mr. Speaker reported, that the House had been in the House of Peers, where his Majesty had been pleased to approve of the choice the House had made of him to be their Speaker; and that he had, in their name, and on their behalf, by humble petition to his Majesty, laid claim to all their ancient rights and privileges, particularly that their persons, their estates, and servants, might be free from arrests and all molestations; that they may enjoy liberty of speech in all their debates, may have access to his Majesty's royal person, whenever occasion shall require, and that all their proceedings may receive from his Majesty the most favourable construction; which, he said, his Majesty had confirmed to them in as full and ample manner as they have been heretofore granted or allowed by his Majesty, or any of his royal predecessors.

And then Mr. Speaker repeated his most respectful acknowledgments to the House for the honour they had done him.

Mr. Speaker then put the House in mind, that the first thing to be done was to take the oaths, and make and subscribe the Declaration, and to take and subscribe the oaths of Abjuration and Qualification, by law required.

And thereupon, Mr. Speaker first alone, standing upon the upper step of the chair, took the said first mentioned oaths, and made and subscribed the said oath of Abjuration; and also delivered in to the Clerk of the House an account of his qualification, and took and subscribed the oath of Qualification.

And after him, Several other Members took the said first mentioned oaths, and made and subscribed the said Declaration, and took and subscribed the oath of Abjuration; and such of the said Members as are by law required to deliver in to the Clerk of this House an account of their qualification, and to take and subscribe the oath of Qualification, delivered in such account, and took and subscribed the said oath accordingly.

And then the House adjourned till to-morrow morning, ten of the clock.

MONDAY, December 5, 1774.

The Speaker reported to the House, that when the House did attend his Majesty, upon Wednesday last, in the House of Peers, his Majesty was pleased to make a most gracious Speech from the throne to both Houses of Parliament; of which Mr. Speaker said he had, to prevent mistakes, obtained a copy; which he read to the House.-[See folio 1465.]

Lord Beauchamp, after animadverting on the spirit of the Colonies, their Resolves, their Meetings, and in particular their intended Non-Importation Agreement, moved,

"That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty the thanks of this House for his 'most gracious Speech from the throne.'

"To assure his Majesty, that we receive with the highest sense of his Majesty's goodness, the early information 'which he has been pleased to give us of the state of the P
the Massachusetts Bay

"That we feel the most sincere concern, that a spirit of 'disobedience and resistance to the law should still unhappily prevail in that Province, and that it has broke forth 'in fresh violences, of a most criminal nature; and that 'we cannot but lament that such proceedings should have 'been countenanced and encouraged in any other of his 'Majesty's Colonies, and that any of his subjects should "have been so far deluded and misled as to make rash and 'unwarrantable attempts to obstruct the commerce of his 'Majesty's Kingdoms, by unlawful combinations.

"To present our most dutiful thanks to his Majesty for 'having taken such measures as he judged most proper 'and effectual for carrying into execution the laws which 'were passed in the last session of the late Parliament for 'the protection and security of the commerce of his Majesty's subjects; and for restoring and preserving peace, 'order, and good government in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

"That, animated by his Majesty's gracious assurances, 'his faithful Commons will use every means in their power 'to assist his Majesty in maintaining, entire and inviolate, 'the supreme authority of this Legislature over all the dominions of his crown; being truly sensible that we should 'betray the trust reposed in us, and be wanting in every 'duty which we owe to his Majesty and to our fellow-subjects, if we fail to give our most zealous support to those 'great constitutional principles which govern his Majesty's 'conduct in this important business, and which are so essential to the dignity, safety, and welfare of the British Empire.

"That we learn, with great satisfaction, that a treaty 'of peace is concluded between Russia and the Porte, 'and that by this happy event the general tranquillity is 'rendered complete; and that we entertain a well-grounded hope that his Majesty's constant endeavours to prevent 'the breaking out of fresh disturbances will be attended 'with success, as his Majesty continues to receive the 'strongest assurances from other Powers of their being 'equally disposed to preserve the peace.

"To assure his Majesty that his faithful Commons will, 'with the utmost cheerfulness, grant to his Majesty every 'necessary supply; and that they consider themselves 'bound by gratitude, as well as duty, to give every proof 'of their most affectionate attachment to a Prince who, 'during the whole course of his reign, has made the happiness of his people the object of all his views, and the rule of all his actions."

Mr. Thomas De Gray, Junior, seconded the motion.

Lord John Cavendish, after condemning the conduct of Administration respecting the Colonists, moved the following amendment to the question, by inserting after the word "throne," at the end of the first paragraph, these words: "And to assure his Majesty that, animated with the warmest zeal for his service, and for the glory and prosperity 'of his reign, we shall enter into the consideration of the 'present situation of his Colonies in America with that 'care and attention which the delicacy and importance of 'the object require.

"And humbly to represent that our inviolable duty and 'respect to his Majesty, as well as our situation in an immediate delegated trust from his people, will not permit 'us to form any opinion upon a matter which may not 'only sensibly and deeply affect the landed and commercial interests of our constituents, but lead to consequences 'of a still more alarming nature, without the fullest and 'most satisfactory information; and to that end, most 'humbly to request that his Majesty would be graciously 'pleased to give orders that all the accounts received 'from America may be laid before this House with all 'convenient despatch.

"And that when, by such information, we shall be enabled to form a proper judgment, we will humbly offer 'our advice on this delicate situation of affairs, and endeavour to find the means effectually to support the honour 'of his Majesty's crown, and the true dignity of Parliament, which shall be best adapted to connect both with 'the permanent peace, concord, and prosperity of all his 'Majesty's Dominions."

The friends of the Address, as moved by Lord Beauchamp, argued that an Address was no more than a general compliment a measure of course at the beginning of every session; that particular measures were not now the objects of consideration; and that the judgment of the House upon the affairs of America would be taken on a future day.

The friends of the Administration argued that though no particular measures were at this instant under consideration, yet, the Address being drawn up in such very general terms, it implied, and even contained a general approbation of all the late measures taken with America; that this general judgment could not, nor ought not to be given without the fullest information; and that a delay in forming such judgment, while the most important concerns of England and America were dependent upon it, might be fatal.

Some gentlemen, who declared themselves not attached to either side, said they would vote for the Address as moved by Lord Beauchamp; not because they would be thought to approve of the late measures against America, on the contrary, they did not consider this vote as making any engagement to approve of any measures; for they should consider themselves, notwithstanding this vote, entirely at liberty upon all future questions; but they would vote for the Address, because an Address was become a business of course.

Lord North said this was not a proper time to enter upon any discussion of the affairs of America; that however necessary and agreeable a reconciliation with America might be, yet, as no terms had been offered by America, England would not submit first; and as matters, therefore, were in a state of suspense, he hoped the noble Lord would withdraw his motion. He made some apologies for the late Parliament, which passed the Acts against America, and called it a good Parliament.

Mr. F. Montagu, in general, disapproved of the Address, and seconded the motion for the amendment very strenuously.

Governour Johnstone thought America not tenable upon the terms and principles laid down in the proposed Address. He was very glad to hear some apology made for the late Parliament; for, in his opinion, no Parliament ever stood in greater need of an apology.

Mr. Charles Fox was very pointed in his observations on the manner the gallery was cleared. He said it was a mere Ministerial trick to stifle inquiry and shorten debate; for if the gallery had been open, Administration must have been obliged to break that silence and unconcern they now affected to hold. It was extremely unfair, he said, that persons should be shut out from being present at the discussion, of a question, in the event of which they were so highly interested; and concluded by a succession of very pointed and severe animadversions.

Mr. Hartley (a new Member) entered fully into the contents of the Speech and Address, and urged strongly the necessity of the proposed amendment.

Colonel Barré was very able on the same side. He said that America had offered terms. He read a passage in Mr. Dickinson's Pamphlet, entitled "A New Essay, &c.," which, in his opinion, contained a very sufficient ground to accept and to negotiate upon. He said the scheme of reducing the Colonies by force was wild, incoherent, and impracticable; and even though it were not, that a Dominion supported by force would answer no end whatever. He said a report prevailed that General Gage was shortly to be recalled, but that would signify nothing; for send whom he might, send a second, recall him, and send a third, it would all be to no effectual or substantial purpose.

Sir George Macartney answered the Colonel, and spoke with facility and precision. He was against the amendment, and in general for spirited measures.

Lord Carmarthen entered fully into the contents of the proposed amendment, and dwelt much on the spirit of sedition, turbulence, and rebellion, which had manifested itself from one end to the other of the American Continent.

Sir William Mayne declared himself unconnected with either side of the House. He said his mind was unbiased, and his conduct should be unfettered; that on the present occasion he was against the amendment, but reserved his opinion till the question, and the information necessary to discuss and determine on it, came properly before the House. He was heard with great attention and general approbation.

General Smith was of the same opinion, observing that the present was no proper time to take so great and important a question into consideration; and that his being now against the amendment would not hereafter preclude him from giving his thoughts freely when the matter came before the House in another form.

Mr. T. Townshend was for the amendment, and was very severe on the general conduct of Administration.

Mr. Edmund Burke compared the language now artfully held to the new Members, of the Address being only a compliment, to the insinuations of a designing lover, who, under the pretence of honourable addresses, first squeezes the hand of his mistress, then asks her to take a turn in the park, next into the country, and so on, step by step, till at length he dishonours her. In the last Parliament, he said, it was the Minister's language, that the late Acts would humble America; that by punishing Boston, all America would be struck with a panic: Boston would be abandoned; all would be afraid to give any relief to Boston, lest they should share the same fate. The very contrary is the case. The cause of Boston is become the cause of all America. Every part of America is united in support of Boston. By these acts of oppression, said he, you have made Boston the Lord Mayor of America. The present situation of America he compared to a funeral; trade and commerce were pall-bearers, the merchants and traders chief mourners, the West Indian and African merchants closed the procession, and the Army and Navy, at a distance, leaked on in gloomy silence at so melancholy a spectacle.

Mr. Van spoke strongly for the most firm and decisive measures.

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn spoke fully and ably, and endeavoured to answer every thing offered against the Address.

Then the question being put, that the words be inserted; The House divided, Yeas, 73. Noes, 264 *.

So it passed in the Negative.

Then the main question being put:

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty the thanks of this House for his most gracious Speech from the throne.

Ordered, That a Committee be appointed to draw up an Address to be presented to his Majesty, upon the said Resolution.

And a Committee was appointed of Lord Beauchamp, Lord North, Mr. De Gray, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Wombwell, Sir George Macartney, Marquis of Carmarthen, Sir Gilbert Elliot, Mr. Stanley, Sir William Mayne, Mr. Jenkinson, Sir Charles Whitworth, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Cooper, Colonel Murray, Mr. Smith, Mr. Rice, Mr. Drake, Junior, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Charles Townshend, Sir Philip Jennings Clarke, Mr. Rigby, Lord Stanley, or any five of them; and they are to withdraw immediately into the Speaker's Chamber.

Ordered, That his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament be referred to the said Committee.

TUESDAY, December 6, 1774.

The Lord Beauchamp reported, from the Committee appointed yesterday to draw up an Address to be presented to his Majesty, that the Committee had drawn up an Address accordingly, which they had directed him to report to the House; and he read the same in his place, and afterwards delivered it at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is as followeth, viz:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, return your Majesty our humble thanks for your most gracious Speech from the throne.

Permit us to assure your Majesty that we receive with the highest sense of your Majesty's goodness, the early information which you have been pleased to give us of the state of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

We feel the most sincere concern that a spirit of disobedience and resistance to the law should still unhappily prevail in that Province, and that it has broke forth in fresh violences of a most criminal nature; and we cannot but lament that such proceedings should have been countenanced and encouraged in any other of your Majesty's Colonies; and that any of your subjects should have been so far deluded and misled as to make rash and unwarrantable attempts to obstruct the commerce of your Majesty's Kingdoms by unlawful combinations.

* The great speakers in Opposition never distinguished themselves in a more striking manner than in this day's debate. The division showed that opposition had not gained any great accession of strength by the general election, and also that the temper of the House at present, with respect to America, was not essentially different from that of the late Parliament. The numbers in support of the Address, as it originally stood, were two hundred and sixty-four, and those who voted for the amendment amounted to seventy-three only. - Ann. Regis.

We beg leave to present our most dutiful thanks to your Majesty for having taken such measures as your Majesty judged most proper and effectual for carrying into execution the laws which were passed in the last session of the late Parliament, for the protection and security of the commerce of your Majesty's subjects, and for restoring and preserving peace, Order, and good government in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

Your faithful Commons, animated by your Majesty's gracious assurances, will use every means in their power to assist your Majesty in maintaining, entire and inviolate, the supreme authority of this Legislature over all the Dominions of your Crown; being truly sensible that we should betray the trust reposed in us, and be wanting in every duty which we owe to your Majesty, and to our fellow-subjects, if we failed to give our most zealous support to those great constitutional principles which govern your Majesty's conduct in this important business, and which are so essential to the dignity, safety, and welfare of the British Empire.

We learn, with great satisfaction, that a treaty of peace is concluded between Russia and the Porte; and that by this happy event the general tranquillity is rendered complete; and we entertain a well-grounded hope that your Majesty's constant endeavours to prevent the breaking out of fresh disturbances will be attended with success; as your Majesty continues to receive the strongest assurances from other Powers of their being equally disposed to preserve the peace.

We assure your Majesty that we will, with the utmost cheerfulness, grant to your Majesty every necessary supply; and that we consider ourselves bound by gratitude, as well as duty, to give every proof of our most affectionate attachment to a Prince who, during the whole course of his reign, has made the happiness of his people the object of all his views, and the rule of all his actions.

The said Address being read a second time,
Resolved, That this House doth agree with the Committee in the said Address to be presented to his Majesty.

Resolved, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by the whole House.

Ordered, That such Members of this House as are of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, do humbly know his Majesty's pleasure, when he will be attended by this House.

WEDNESDAY, December 7, 1774.

Mr. Treasurer of the Household reported to the House, that his Majesty having been waited upon, pursuant to the order of yesterday, humbly to know his Majesty's pleasure, when he would be pleased to be attended by this House, had been pleased to appoint to be attended this day, at half an hour after two of the clock, at his Palace of St. James.

THURSDAY, December 8, 1774.

Mr. Speaker reported to the House, that the House attended his Majesty yesterday, with their Address, to which his Majesty was pleased to give this most gracious answer:

GENTLEMEN: I return you my particular thanks for this very loyal and dutiful Address. I receive with the highest satisfaction and approbation, your assurances of assistance and support, in maintaining the supreme authority of the Legislature over all the Dominions of my Crown. It shall be my care to justify, by my conduct, the confidence you so affectionately express, and to show that I have no interests separate from my people.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, December 6, 1774.

Ordered, That his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, be taken into consideration to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, December 7, 1774.

The Order of the Day being read;

The House proceeded to take into consideration his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament.

And the same being again read by Mr. Speaker,

And a motion being made that a Supply be granted to his Majesty,

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of that motion.

WEDNESDAY, December 8, 1774.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the motion made yesterday, that a Supply be granted to his Majesty;

Ordered, That his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament be referred to the said Committee.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had come to a Resolution, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning

FRIDAY, December 9, 1774.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider of the motion made upon Wednesday last, that a Supply be granted to his Majesty; the Resolution which the Committee had directed him to report to the House, which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a Supply be granted to his Majesty.

The said Resolution being read a second time;

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That this House doth agree with the Committee in the said Resolution, that a Supply be granted to his Majesty.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the Supply granted to his Majesty.

MONDAY, December 12, 1774.

The Order of the Day being read,

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the Supply granted to his Majesty.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Buller moved that sixteen thousand men be employed for the Sea Service, for the year 1775, including four thousand two hundred and eighty-four Marines. He prefaced his motion with setting forth, that Admiral Harland was daily expected from the East Indies with three Sail of the Line, and by that means sixteen thousand would be sufficient, which was four thousand less than last year.

Mr. T. Townshend desired to know why twenty thousand were necessary last year, and sixteen thousand would do this; and what quantity were necessary to be sent to America, and what proportion left to guard us at home.

Mr. Buller attempted to solve these questions, but could not; he therefore read an extract of a letter from Admiral Amherst, Commander at Plymouth, informing, that they had several supernumerary Seamen, and that their guardships were full; that the number of Ships in America were three third-rates, one fourth-rate, six sixth-rates, seven Schooners, and two armed Vessels; the number of Seamen two thousand eight hundred and thirty-five.

Mr. Luttrell said he was much surprised to hear the honourable gentleman mention the state of our Seamen in such a manner; that, had he been apprized of the business coming on that day, he would have prepared himself to have answered him more fully; yet he was so much a judge of maritime affairs, as to know it was impossible that the Ships or Seamen the honourable gentleman had mentioned to be in America, could be there for some months; for Ships that went out at this season, were prevented by winds and weather, so that they were obliged to go to the West Indies, or put back, and could not arrive in America till the Spring; that he should be glad to be informed whether or not the Seamen sent in the Fleet to America were taken out of the guard-ships here, which consequently weakened our strength at home, and left us almost defenceless; and whether the Admiral's account of the full complement of men did not include those draughted off to other Ships, and sent to America, which might be set down as lent, but were absolutely lost, as a defence to this country, until they returned.

Colonel Barré said he had been informed, that unless Admiral Harland arrived in ten days, it would be impossible for him to arrive in less than four months, therefore, the number of Seamen expected from his coming home was very precarious, and not to be depended on.

Mr. Hartley desired to know the number of Ships that were on the American station before the present disturbance.

Mr. Buller answered, one fourth-rate, six sixth-rates, seven Schooners, two armed Vessels, and about one thousand nine hundred men.

Colonel Barré desired to know what force we had at home to defend us against any attack of an enemy.

Mr. Buller replied, five thousand nine hundred men in the guard-ships, and one thousand one hundred and sixty-eight men in the other Ships on the British and Irish coasts.

Mr. Luttrell said he was much afraid, as we would not take the Spaniards' words, that they would not take ours, but take advantage of our weakness, and repay themselves for the piracies we committed prior to the last war.

The Resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had come to several Resolutions, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

Sir Charles Whitworth also acquainted the House that he was directed by the Committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty.

TUESDAY, December 13, 1774.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider of the Supply granted to his Majesty, the Resolutions which the Committee had directed him to report to the House, which he read in his place; and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same were read, and are as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that sixteen thousand men be employed for the Sea service, for the year 1775, including four thousand two hundred and eighty-four Marines.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding four Pounds per man per month be allowed for maintaining the said sixteen thousand men for thirteen months, including Ordnance for Sea service.

The said Resolutions being severally read a second time, were, upon the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of Ways and Means for raising the Supply granted to his Majesty.

Lord John Cavendish begged leave to state to the House the conduct of Administration in one or two points, particularly respecting the Naval Establishment for the ensuing year. He observed that there was four thousand Seamen voted for the present year less than the preceding one, notwithstanding the Speech from the Throne announced the very critical and alarming situation of affairs in America. This was a conduct he could by no means reconcile; for taking the Speech to have been framed upon right information, as calling for measures of a spirited and decisive nature, what sort of correspondence there was between the contents of the Speech and the Naval Establishment, was more than he could possibly discover. But were he to declare his sentiments, he feared it would be found to be a mere Ministerial trick; a forming of estimates in the first instance, that were never intended to be adhered to, or rather designed as mere waste paper, and afterwards surprise and drive the House into grants of a very improper and burdensome nature. Such being his suspicions, he could not face his constituents without previously knowing what he must tell them, both in relation to further burdens, and what was involved in such an inquiry, if compulsive measures were really intended to be pursued towards the Americans; for to talk of enforcing the Acts upon a reduced establishment, either Naval or Military, was a sort of language fit to be held only to children.

Lord Beauchamp said, that the noble Lord had communicated to him that morning, his intentions of moving something on the subject-matter of the present conversation; that he had accordingly apprized the noble Lord who presided at the Treasury therewith; and that his Lordship had authorized him to acquaint the House, that he had no information whatever to lay before it; nor measures to propose respecting America. He was therefore of opinion, that as the noble Lord was indisposed and absent, it would be better, particularly as there was a very thin House, to suspend all further solicitude, till his Lordship should have an opportunity of fully explaining the motives of his conduct in person.

Mr. Cornwall endeavoured to apologise for the Minister's conduct. He insisted that the present was not a proper time to enter into any discussion relative to American affairs; that the Naval reduction, he presumed, was founded on good and substantial reasons, however the motives which gave birth to them might vary with the circumstances; and that, when the question concerning Great Britain and the Colonies came in a Parliamentary way before the House, every Member would then be fully at liberty to deliver his sentiments and maintain his opinions.

Mr. Burke answered, and was extremely severe on the conduct of Administration. Among a variety of other things, he compared the House of Commons to a dead senseless mass, which had neither sense, soul, or activity, but as it derived them from the Minister. If his Lordship chooses to tell them one day that America is in a state little short of actual rebellion, it is all very well; if in a few days after, he acquaints them, at second hand, that he had no information whatever to authorize such an assertion, who can doubt his candour and his veracity? Both assertions still remain uncontradicted, and all must be silence. A few days since it was indecent to call for papers, because they could be had; to look for them now would be improper, because they cannot be had. That however absurd it might seem, such a conduct was nevertheless founded on system; for if matters turned out well, the merit would be imputed to the Minister; whereas, if they should be attended with miscarriage or misfortune, it is no more than applying to Parliament, and every thing will be set to rights; that is, "we despise the Parliament, who are our "only proper and constitutional counsellors; but when we "have blundered and ruined our affairs, perhaps beyond a "possibility of redress, then we will come to Parliament" - to do what? To remedy what is incurable, and to recover what can never be regained! It is an old device, though methinks not a very wise one, to trust to the chapter of accidents. The book in which it is contained, has the beginning and the end torn out. This valuable chapter counsels you to trust to accidents, because accidents are sometimes productive of good fortune. He concluded his observations, with remarking that ignorance and folly are nearly allied; that to effect the latter we must be held in ignorance, and that by both, we would be the fitter to receive vigilance, activity, information, and knowledge, whenever, the Minister thought proper to communicate one or inspire the other.

Sir William Mayne condemned the very extraordinary conduct of those in power, in withholding from the House the necessary information, or at least the best they had; and, laying his hand on his breast, solemnly protested he would never have voted for the Address without the proposed amendment, had he imagined they meant to refuse the necessary explanations on which the Speech was supposed to be founded.

Mr. Hartley rising to speak was interrupted, and informed from the Chair, that as there was no question before the House to debate on, gentlemen could not be permitted to proceed in such a disorderly manner. However, being desired to proceed, he quoted several instances since the year 1765, both by petition and otherwise, wherein the Americans offered to contribute towards the publick support, by way of requisition. He therefore submitted it to the consideration of the House, whether it would not be proper to suspend the operation of the late Acts relative to Boston, pro tempore, in order to see if the Colonists still continued to be of the same way of thinking; and if they did, then to have requisitory letters under the great seal issued, and directed to the several Provinces, requiring them to contribute in certain proportions towards the publick expense.

Lord Beauchamp observed, that the present was no more than a desultory conversation; that he perceived the honourable gentleman mistook entirely the design of the late Acts, for they were not directed to the question of taxation; but were meant to apply as a particular punishment for certain outrages and acts of disobedience committed by the inhabitants of Boston alone.

Lord John Cavendish replied, that the present conversation, as originating with him, was not immediately connected with the propriety of the conduct of Great Britain or America, but was simply intended to prevent a deceit being put or practiced on the House, by framing ideal estimates, which were afterwards, at a very improper season, perhaps, meant to be increased.

Lord Beauchamp reminded the House how very irregular it was to continue to debate in this manner; and said, that as the Army estimates were to be taken into consideration on the 16th, when probably the House would be full, and the noble Lord who could give satisfaction in this business, would be present, begged that any further consideration of it might be deferred till that day.

Captain Luttrell replied, that this was a very uncommon way of satisfying the House; for, by this mode of reasoning, if the noble Lord should not or could not attend, they must submit, and go to the country without any information whatever.

Mr. Rose Fuller said, a motion ought to be made before the holidays, for a committee on the present state of America.

FRIDAY, December 16, 1774.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty,

The House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Lord Barrington moved, that a number of Land forces, including one thousand five hundred and twenty-two invalids, amounting to seventeen thousand five hundred and forty-seven effective men, commission and non-commission Officers included, be employed for the year 1775.

Mr. Rose Fuller desired to know in what manner the Troops serving in America were stationed; and what number were now on service at Boston, or were intended for it?

Lord Barrington answered, that the force now on duty there, consisted of seven battalions and five companies of Artillery; and he knew officially, there were three battalions more ordered to join those at Boston.

Mr. Fuller said, that he had no motion to make, but should be glad to know from the noble Lord at the head of the Treasury, if he had any information to lay before the House, or any measures to propose respecting America, because, if he had not, he thought it the duty of Parliament to interpose and call for papers, and proceed on such information, however defective, as well as they could. He added, that he looked upon the measures adopted by the last Parliament, impolitic and impracticable; and that they could never be prudently or effectually put in execution.

Lord North confessed the very great importance of the subject now mentioned. He said it would require the utmost diligence and attention, as a matter of the greatest magnitude ever debated within those walls. He could not, he said, entirely acquiesce in the condemnation of measures hastily, which had been taken up and adopted upon such weighty motives; that at the time, it was impossible to foretell precisely how they might answer; but the shortness of the time, and other circumstances considered, they ought to have a fair trial before they were reprobated; and that the wisdom and policy of them could be only finally known in the event. He concluded by assuring the House, that he had information to lay before it, shortly after the holidays; and that he would so far adopt his honourable friend's ideas behind him, (Mr. Fuller,) as to propose to appoint a Committee for taking the affairs of America into consideration.

Mr. T. Townshend declined entering into any consideration of the present state of America; but desired to know from the noble Lord, whether the present estimates were meant to be real ones, or whether intended to be told out to the House and the publick, as very moderate; while they were to be led, unawares, into a heavy expense, under the heads of an increased Navy debt, services incurred, and not provided for, and perhaps a vote of credit?

Lord North replied, the forces now demanded were sufficient, unless from the conduct of the other Colonies it should be judged necessary to extend the line with respect to them.

Governour Johnstone said, I think a true determination upon this question can only be made after knowing the plan which the gentlemen in Administration are resolved to pursue, with respect to American affairs. It is now clear, that the people of America, actuated with the same firm and resolute spirit, and tintured with the same enthusiasm which enabled our ancestors to withstand the unjust claims of the Crown, in the days of Charles the First, are determined to resist the high doctrines of Parliamentary supremacy, held forth by this country, which must, in its consequences, reduce their liberties to a level with the Colonies of France and Spain. If we are resolved to adhere to those incomprehensible tenets, echoed with so much applause in the last Parliament, and on the first day of the present sessions, nothing but the sword can now decide the contest. In that event, it is in vain to suppose that the peace establishment of the Army now proposed will be sufficient; for every wise man must foresee, that our rivals in Europe cannot be idle spectators in such a scene. Supposing then, a sufficient force is employed to subdue the Americans, this country must be left destitute of the necessary defence. No man is less desirous of augmenting a military establishment than myself. I foresee that the liberties of this country must, in the end, fall a sacrifice to that power which has annihilated the rights of mankind in other states. Between the danger from abroad, and the danger from those who are to defend us, according to the present establishments of Europe, the situation is very nice. For my own part, however wisely the military system is interwoven into our Constitution in time of peace, citizen and soldier happily intermixing with each other in equal privileges, yet upon an invasion, or a civil war, when men of high minds come to assemble in military camps, with the weapons in their hands, the contagion of power will soon spread; nevertheless, we must maintain (though with a watchful eye) a necessary force for defence, in case of invasion. I speak as a seaman, confident, that whenever France shall find an enterprising officer, capable of conducting such an attempt with skill and resolution, that the landing of an Army in this country is not to be prevented by all the Ships we can arm, while the elements continue so various, and the distance so short. There are several methods to accomplish this, which I shall not repeat here, from prudential motives; but I am so convinced of the truth of my assertion, that I consider it as the duty of every man in this country to be ready to dispute the fate of this Kingdom on a battle; and if we are left without a necessary strength to support wavering minds in such a conjuncture, while we are thinking of depriving our fellow-citizens of their just and legal rights in America, we may, as a proper punishment, lose our own. It is true, that, by the present vote, we do not preclude ourselves from an augmentation in the course of the session, in case the exigencies of the state shall require it, and so far I am willing to assent to the present motion; but, I beg gentlemen in Administration will, in the mean time, draw no merit from proposing so low an establishment, unless they intend to alter their measures, since it is undoubtedly inadequate to our situation; and I would likewise caution the landed interest, not to plume themselves on the escape they have made, since it is equally evident, a further taxation, if not included in the general vote of this year, must be demanded by extraordinaries, or a vote of credit, to meet them next session, under the multiplied expenses of that mode of raising money.

With regard to the Navy, I Congress it to be extremely hard, that the noble Lord should be attacked in the last session of Parliament for too great profusion, and blamed in this for the reduction that was then deemed necessary; but I am not one of those who are captivated with a simple proposition upon paper, when all the avenues of extravagance are kept open; while the situation of our affairs from the worst judged policy, necessarily leads us to open these sluices of expense. It is therefore in vain to hold out economical resolutions in our votes, when our conduct must produce a contrary effect. I hope, however, that the sentiments of gentlemen on the subject of American affairs begin to alter. I hope they will now see what men, uncorrupted by the luxurious vices of a great capital, are capable of suffering, in support of essential privileges; and that the flattering expectations of seeing America at our feet, are now vanished.

To those who conceive that men are to yield their rights from oppression and distress, I would recall to their memory the sufferings of the late Parliament of Paris. The haughty mind of a debauched Minister, and an imperious Chancellor, had induced the late King of France to violate all the ancient and established privileges of that august body, the only remaining cheek against the despotism of the Monarch; even men of wit and genius were found base enough to vilify the claims of the Parliament; for I am sorry to observe, that fortitude of mind does not always accompany excellent talents; and that many men possessing those rare gifts are too often induced to lend their ingenuity to the hand that pays them, in support of the doctrines of the day. Is it possible for any of the people of America to undergo greater distress than those worthy patriots in France have suffered? Deprived of their office and subsistence, banished from their friends, vilified by the Court, no prospect of a change; yet supported by principle and a good conscience, they have now seen their day of triumph, and felt the reward of virtue; securing to their country, by their perseverance, more essential rights than have been obtained by three civil wars. After such concessions from the King of France, shall the King of Great Britain be ashamed to yield to the just cries of two millions of his subjects?

I know all the arguments which are used to entangle weak men in support of the present arbitrary tenets. The subject, indeed, is complicated; and men are confounded more than convinced. It is said that legislation existing in the Parliament of Great Britain, taxation, which is a part of legislation, must necessarily be included. The various privileges which subsist in every free state, are hardly to be determined by any reasoning à priori. Such dilemmas occur on every subject. Can any position appear more ridiculous to those who maintain the doctrines of virtual representation, than, that a Borough should send two Members to Parliament, without house or inhabitant? And yet there are many who hear me, strenuous advocates against American Charters, that hold their seats in this House under such a curious representation. At the same time, I Congress the basis of the Constitution depends on preserving their privileges entire, since no man can say how far the reform would reach; and the whole art of Government consists in preserving to every one his established rights. The most certain science we know, is mathematics; yet, if I was to say to many men, that two lines might approach nearer and nearer to all eternity, and never could meet, they would think the assertion ridiculous and absurd. Nevertheless, there is nothing so certain as the truth of that theory. It is equally true, that legislation may exist without the power of taxation. The Kingdom of Ireland, within our own Dominions, is a proof of what these learned gentlemen assert to be so impossible. A worthy Member in my eye, (Mr. Rigby,) being pressed with this argument in the last session of Parliament, from the fairness of his mind, he avowed, as his opinion, "that we could tax Ireland." I remember there were some gentlemen in the gallery when this declaration was made, whom I immediately perceived, by the contortions in their countenance, to be Irish Members. Next day the worthy Member chose to make some apology to his friends. He said, no parallel could be drawn between Ireland and the Colonies, for Ireland had a paraphernalia; and this satisfied both the English and Irish Members. For my part, I do not see what difficulty can occur, in leaving the different Colonies on the same footing of raising money by requisition, as from the people of Ireland. If it is thought this manner of raising supplies might throw too much power into the hands of the Crown, that power might be limited, so as not to be exerted, except upon the address of both Houses of Parliament, such as has been lately adopted respecting the prerogative in regulating the coin. I am still hopeful, that the tense chord, on which our American creed has been said and sung, will be relaxed. I think I perceive the tone of the noble Lord is not so loud, or so lofty, as on some former debates on this subject. I hope it does not proceed from want of health, in which case, no man could feel more sorrow for his Lordship than myself; but, I hope it arises from a more serious and deep reflection on the subject, where his own good sense has had room to operate, free from those violent associates, who seem to have precipitated his Lordship into such harsh and cruel measures, contrary to his own natural good temper. Here then I shall conclude as I set out, hoping that generous, just, pacific measures, will be adopted; but still insisting, that no man can determine properly on the number of forces to be employed, until we know the measures that are to be pursued respecting America.

Mr. Fox said, it was proper to include Ireland in all debates upon American taxation, in order to ascertain the Parliamentary right of taxation over every part of the British Dominions.

Lord Clare jocularly complimented Mr. Rigby highly on the exceeding popularity, reverence, and esteem, that gentleman was held in by the whole Irish Nation; that there was no man in England or Ireland more loved or revered.

Mr. Rigby said, he acted in that country as Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, which, on many accounts, was rather an invidious and critical station; that the sentiments now alluded to, he maintained upon general principles; that his opinion was not singular, for he was supported in it by a Statute passed in the reign of George the First; that he begged to be understood, according to the obvious construction of that Statute; and that, according to that sense of it, he still continued to be of opinion, that the Legislature of Great Britain had a right to make laws to bind Ireland, and all the other members and dependencies of the British Empire.

Mr. Cruger, the new Member for Bristol, an American by birth, spoke next. I rise, sir, to say a few words on this important subject, with all the diffidence and awe which must strike the mind, on a first attempt to speak before so august an assembly. Had I remained silent on this occasion, I must have condemned myself for seeming to desert a cause which I think it my duty to espouse. I cannot but be heard with candour by Englishmen, when what I offer is dictated by a love to my country.

I am far from approving all the proceedings in America. Many of their measures have been a dishonour to their cause. Their rights might have been asserted without violence, and their claims stated with temper as well as firmness. But permit me to say, sir, that if they have erred, it may be considered as a failing of human nature. A people animated with a love of liberty, and alarmed with apprehensions of its being in danger, will unavoidably run into excesses; the history of mankind declares it in every page; and Britons ought to view, with an eye of tenderness, acts of imprudence, to which their fellow-subjects in America may have been hurried; not as has been unkindly said, by a rebellious spirit but by that generous spirit of freedom, which has often led their own ancestors into indiscretions.

Acts of severity are far from having a tendency to eradicate jealousies: on the contrary, they must produce new fears, and endanger that attachment and obedience which kindness and gentleness might have insured.

No country has been more happy in its Colonies than Great Britain. Connected by mutual interests (till the era of the fatal Stamp Act) they flourished in an intercourse of amity, protection, and obedience, supporting and supported by each other. Before that hated period, we meet with no instances of disobedience to your laws, no denial of the jurisdiction of Parliament, no marks of jealousy and discontent. They ever loved liberty; their zeal for it is coeval with their first emigration to America. They were persecuted for it in this country; they sought a sanctuary in the unexplored regions of that. They cleared their inhospitable wilds, cultivated their lands, and poured the wealth which they derived from agriculture and commerce into the bosom of the mother country.

You protected them in their infant state, and they returned it, by confining to you the benefits of their trade. You regulated their commerce for the advantage of this country, and they never discovered an opposition, either to the authority or the exercise of it. Are these evidences of a spirit of disaffection to Great Britain, or ingratitude for its protection? Are they not rather proofs, that if the same line of mild and lenient government had been pursued, the same cordiality and submission would have been continued.

Every American, who loves his country, must wish the prosperity of Great Britain, and that their union may ever subsist uninterrupted. If the parental trunk is injured, the branches must suffer with it. A subordination on the part of the Colonies is essential to this union. I acknowledge, sir, that there must exist a power somewhere to superintend and regulate the movements of the whole, for the attainment and preservation of our common happiness: this supreme power can be justly and adequately exercised only by the Legislature of Great Britain. In this doctrine the Colonies tacitly acquiesced, and were happy. England enjoyed by it all the advantages of an exclusive trade.

Why, then, strain this authority so much, as to render a submission to it impossible, without a surrender of those liberties which are most valuable in civil society, and were ever acknowledged the birthright of Englishmen? When Great Britain derives from her Colonies the most ample supplies of wealth by her commerce, is it not absurd to close up those channels, for the sake of a claim of imposing taxes, which (though a young Member) I will dare to say, never have, and probably never will, defray the expense of collecting them?

The expediency of coercive measures is much insisted on by some, who, I am sorry to say, seem to consider more the distress into which they will involve the Americans, than the benefits they can procure from such vindictive conduct to this country. Humanity, however, will prompt the generous mind to weep over severities, though they may be even necessary; and a prudent Statesman will reflect, that the Colonies cannot suffer without injury to Great Britain. They are your customers; they consume your manufactures by distressing them, if you do not drive them to foreign markets, you will most assuredly disable them from taking your commodities, and from making you returns for what they have taken.

Should coercive measures reduce them to an acknowledgment of the equity of Parliamentary taxation, what are the advantages which will result from it? Can it be thought that the Americans will be dragged into a conviction of this right? Will severities increase their affection, and make them more desirous of a connection with, and dependence on Great Britain. Is it not, on the contrary, reasonable to conclude, that the effect will be an increase of jealousy and discontent; that they will seek all occasions of evading laws imposed on them by violence; that they will be restless under the yoke, and think themselves happy under an opportunity of flying to the protection of any other power, from the subjection of a mother, whom they consider cruel and vindictive?

I would not be understood, sir, to deny the good intentions of Administration. The abilities of the Minister, it seems, are universally acknowledged; but I must add, humanum est errare. Though an American, I applaud his jealousy for the dignity of Parliament, and think the impolicy and inexpediency of the late measures may reasonably be imputed to the difficulty of the occasion, and the unsettled and undefined nature of the dependence of the Colonies on the mother country; and vice versa, candour must admit the same apology for the violences and mistakes of America.

But since these measures have been found, by sad experience, totally inadequate; since they have widened the breach, instead of closing it; diminished the obedience of the Colonies, instead of confirming it; increased the turbulence and opposition, instead of allaying them; it may be hoped, that a different plan of conduct may be pursued, and some firm and liberal constitution adopted by the wisdom of this House, which may secure the Colonists in their liberties, while it maintains the just supremacy of Parliament.

Sir William Mayne drew a melancholy picture of the sufferings of the Irish; said that all promises had been shamefully broken with them; that pensions to the amount of ten thousand Pounds per annum, had been lately granted on that miserable, ruined, and undone country; and that the Castle was an asylum to every needy, servile, cringing apostate, that would bow the knee, and barter every thing which should be dear to him, for emolument and Court favour.

Lord North took notice, that an honourable gentleman (Gouverneur Johnstone) had alluded to something he had said on a former occasion relative to Great Britain never receding or relaxing, till America was at her feet; his Lordship observed, that it was hardly fair to quote what a man had said seven years before, and what he had explained on the spot before he left the House; this explanation then, and now was, he said, that by being at the feet of Great Britain, he meant obedience to the mother country; such as, if they thought themselves aggrieved, to apply by petitions and dutiful remonstrances to the Parliament or the Throne. He said, he thought it the duty of every Member, as well in the House as out of it, to interpret what might fall in the heat of debate, or warm discussion, in the manner it was explained by the speaker; that if he had been thus candidly dealt with, the author of a late pamphlet, written in America, could never have asserted that he insisted that Britain should never recede till the laws and liberties of America were at her feet: for as he never meant one, so he never said the other. And he wished, that on the present occasion, he should be understood according to his present explanation, and no other.

Mr. Hartley was for making the Americans contribute to the general defence of the Empire, by way of a requisition, and read one or two passages in some American proceedings, to shew their willingness to comply with such a measure.

The Resolution was then agreed to.

SATURDAY, December 17, 1774.

Ordered, That Lord Barrington do make the Report from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty.

The Lord Barrington accordingly reported from the said Committee the Resolutions which the Committee had directed to be reported to the House; which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same were read, and are as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee that a number of Land forces, including one thousand five hundred and twenty-two invalids, amounting to seventeen thousand five hundred and forty-seven effective men, commissioned and non-commissioned Officers included, be employed for the year 1775.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding six hundred and twenty-seven thousand six hundred and eighty-nine Pounds, nineteen Shillings, and four Pence, be granted to his Majesty, for defraying the charge of seventeen thousand five hundred and forty-seven effective men, for Guards, Garrisons, and other his Majesty's Land forces, in Great Britain, Jersey, and Guernsey, for the year 1775.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding three hundred and eighty-six thousand one hundred and eighty-six Pounds, and ten Pence, and one-eighth part of a Penny, be granted to his Majesty for maintaining his Majesty's Forces and Garrisons in the Plantations and Africa, including those in Garrison at Minorca and Gibraltar, and for Provisions for the Forces in North America, Nova Scotia, New Foundland, Gibraltar, the Ceded Islands, and Africa, for the year 1775.

The said Resolutions being severally read a second time, were, upon the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

MONDAY, December 19, 1774.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider of further ways and means for raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, the Resolution which the Committee had directed him to report to the House; which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that towards raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, the sum of three Shillings in the Pound, and no more, be raised, within the space of one year, from the 25th day of March, 1775, upon lands, tenements, hereditaments, pensions, offices, and personal estates, in that part of Great Britain called England, Wales, and the Town of Berwick upon Tweed; and that a proportionate cess, according to the Ninth Article of the Treaty of Union, be laid upon that part of Great Britain called Scotland.

Lord North stated from a paper which he held in his hand, in detail, the amount of the grants and services. He said the former amounted hitherto but to £75,000, the duty on Malt; that the services to be incurred were Navy and Ordnance for sea service, £830,000; Guards, Garrisons, &c., £627,000; Military Establishment in America, West Indies, and Africa, £386,000; difference of pay between British and Irish Establishment, £2,800; Staff Officers, £11,000; Chelsea, £122,000; Ordnance for Land service, £228,000; services incurred and not provided for ditto, the present year, £32,000; in all amounting to, with the fractions, £2,244,000. He observed that the Land Tax continued at three Shillings, would produce £1,500,000; which, added to the Malt, would amount to no more than £2,250,000, making a surplus of £6,000. He acquainted the Committee further, that the Militia Money and the general deficiencies amounted last year to £580,000, and would for the present be at least £400,000. And that for these reasons he should move that the Land Tax for the ensuing year be three Shillings in the Pound; which was agreed to.

Mr. Hartley rose, and in a mild, sensible speech, enlarged upon the very extraordinary conduct of Administration concerning American affairs. He said the accounts from that country were truly alarming; that the Resolutions of the Continental Congress evidently proved that the people were determined not to submit to the late Acts passed in relation to America, nor to any other of a like complexion; that the Troops now stationed at Boston, and the inhabitants of that Town, had no means of procuring subsistence but by Sea, or from the country; that either method was now equally difficult, as the Harbour would be frozen up, and the land carriage, even if subsistence was to be had, rendered impracticable, as the country would be covered with snow; and that, under such circumstances, the situation of the Troops would be no less deplorable than that of the miserable inhabitants. He continued to say, that he was not well versed in sieges; but if he understood right, he took it that the Town of Boston was surrounded by General Gage with lines of circumvallation, and that such being the very critical state of things, respecting both the situation, the temper, and disposition of the military and the natives, he submitted it to the gentlemen on the other side how they could reconcile it to the duty they owed to the Nation in their publick, or to their constituents in their private capacity, to agree to a long adjournment, while things remained in so dangerous and alarming a state, without taking any one step to avert the numerous and fatal mischiefs which they portended. For his part, he affirmed solemnly, he would much rather sit on Christmas-day, and continue to do so, de die in diem, than go to the country in so critical a season, without at least agreeing to some measures, though they should extend no further than prevention.

Mr. Rose Fuller said, that we were too precipitate in our last measures, and that was the chief reason why they miscarried; that he foresaw at the time they would answer no end but to inflame, nor ever would, while they were continued to be directed to the same end; on which account he would be much better pleased that the affairs of America, the necessary information first had, were taken up on mature deliberation, and discussed with coolness, in order in the end to come to a wise, deliberate, and rational decision.

Mr. T. Townshend said, that whatever that decision might be, the conduct of Administration was, for the present, extremely reprehensible; for while we were informed from Administration that America was almost in a state of rebellion, the Land, the Malt, the Navy, and the Army, were voted with as much ease, and without a single syllable, as if that country was in a state of the most perfect tranquillity and obedience: for, concluded he, either the information we have had is false, which I can hardly suppose, or the estimates on the table are by no means proportioned to the objects which are recommended from the Throne: for instance, if the Army now in America be to be augmented, or the Ships stationed there reinforced, the three Shilling Land Tax now voted will certainly be insufficient; and the deficiencies must be made up without the knowledge of Parliament, by a vote of credit to defray expenses incurred in the support of measures with which at present it is evident we are totally unacquainted.

Mr. Rigby facetiously replied. Would the honourable gentleman have a War Establishment in time of peace? Would he have us embroe our hands in the blood of our countrymen on the other side of the water? I dare say no man in this House is ignorant of my sentiments, and yet I should shudder at the thought. The honourable gentleman complains that the Land, the Malt, &c., is voted without a syllable being said; pray whose fault is that? He would not have, I presume, the gentleman who presented the Navy estimates, rise and condemn them. He would not desire the noble Lord, I suppose, who laid the Army estimates before you, to tell the House that the number of Troops to be employed in America was insufficient, considering the state of that country; nor the noble Lord who proposed the tax of three Shillings in the Pound, to inform us in the same breath that it ought to be four. Who, then, is to blame? Those who are convinced that the estimates and grants are too low, and will not speak, or those who think them sufficient, and declare their opinions? For my part, I do not think myself capable of defending the gentleman now alluded to, nor have I, nor do I pretend to speak from any information of my own; but as the establishment is a Peace Establishment, as I always thought that the present is a very proper one, till I am informed that a War Establishment is become necessary; and as I voted for taking off the other Shilling, I shall give my vote that the Land Tax be three Shillings for the ensuing year. The other honourable gentleman says, the Port of Boston is frozen up at this season of the year. I have conversed with many on the subject, who have assured me of the contrary; whether it be or be not, I cannot see how our sitting here on Christmas-day, or the whole holidays, can be the means of relieving the Army or the inhabitants, or of preventing the mischiefs he seems so much to dread.

Mr. Edmund Burke. I should not have risen in this debate, if I had not heard the moderation of one gentleman, (Mr. Fuller,) and the precipitation of another, (Mr. Hartley,) stated as if militating against each other. Now, sir, I, who see matters in another light from the right honourable gentlemen on the floor, can easily perceive them to be exactly correspondent. The former, from his experience of what has been already done, is cautious and willing to avoid repeating our former blunders, or adopting others of a similar nature; but is for having matters coolly considered, fully investigated, and wisely and effectually determined; the latter, aiming at the same point, considering the circumstances in the most urgent and pressing light, is more eager to arrive at the completion of his wishes, not perhaps contemplating or foreseeing the obstructions that may retard him in his progress. The right honourable gentleman's confessed ignorance of what is proper to be done, or the measures his friends mean to adopt, I am extremely ready to believe; and have no reason to doubt but their present knowledge and foresight are nearly on a par. He certainly mistakes the matter, if he supposes that we on this side of the House wish for a War Establishment in time of peace. No, sir, what we object to is, that a speech which breathed nothing but war, and accompanied with the motives of such a declaration, should, without any cause whatever assigned, at once sink into a tranquil silence - a Peace Establishment formed on the lowest scale.

I am not now contending what the establishment ought to be, but I contend that the one already voted by no means corresponds with the intimations given to this House from authority. I know that a heavy Peace Establishment is ruinous and destructive to any country where it is kept up. I remember very well, too, that I, among others on these benches, have been long dinning this doctrine in the ears of the Minister. I remember, likewise, that for so doing, we were called factious and discontented; and I am now happy in the flattering idea that, factious and discontented as we are, we happened for once to be right: for the great man who conducts the publick affairs of this country, has given ample testimony to our wisdom, by adopting what he and his friends for three successive sessions charitably imputed to ignorance or disappointed ambition. Nor am I less happy in another instance of the same kind. The noble Lord below me on the floor (Lord Beauchamp,) being requested to learn from the Minister if he had any information to lay before us, or measures to propose, came posting to the House with the halcyon tidings, that all was peace and tranquillity, and that he had none. Here again the same factious spirit obtruded, and broke the calm enjoyments which might be derived from such a happy state of things; for some of us, who are never to be satisfied, relapsed into our former turbulence and discontent. What was the consequence? Why, it seems turbulence and discontent once more had reason on their side, and the Minister came forward and assured us himself that he had information to lay before the House and measures to propose.

I cannot sit down, sir, without first saying a word or two on the solicitude the honourable Member on my left hand (Mr. Hartley) has expressed for the situation of General Gage, and the Troops under his command. It is, I confess, most humiliating and mortifying; and it is difficult to say, whether those who have put them into it deserve most our compassion or our ridicule. It is, indeed, an absurdity without parallel - a warlike Parliament, and a patient forbearing General. I would not be understood to reflect on the gentleman, who I understand is a very worthy, intelligent, deserving man; no, sir, it is those who have sent him on such an errand that are to blame. The order of things is reversed in this new system. The rule of Government now is to determine hastily, violently, and without consideration, and to execute indecisively, or rather not execute at all. And have not the consequences exactly corresponded with such a mode of proceeding? They have been measures not practicable in themselves in any event, nor has one step been taken to put them into execution. The account we have is, that the General is besieging and besieged; that he had cannon sent to him, but they were stolen; that he himself has made reprisals of a similar nature on the enemy; and that his straw has been burnt, and his brick and mortar destroyed. It is painful to dwell on such monstrous absurd circumstances, which can be only a subject of ridicule, if it did not lead to consequences of a very serious and alarming nature. In fine, sir, your Army is turned out to be a mere army of observation, and is of no other use but as an asylum for Magistrates of your own creating.

Sir William Meredith rose, and after animadverting on the last speaker's being so eager to push things to extremities, which must end in a scene of bloodshed, imputed all the present troubles to the Declaratory Act asserting the supremacy of Great Britain, at the time of the repeal of the Stamp Act. He contended that the General had answered every purpose for which he was sent. The Troops, he said, were for the protection of the Magistrates, the protection of the property and trade of the Merchants, and the enforcing of the Acts, all which had been fully accomplished; for the persons of the Magistrates were safe, no injury had been done to any property since their arrival, and the Port was now blocked up.

Mr. Burke rose, and complimented Sir William on his great wisdom, and the sagacity of Administration, in discouraging of which, if they had applied to him, he could have long since informed them. He once more returned to the asylum for Magistrates. He said he had often heard of such places for thieves, rogues, and female orphans; but it was the first time he ever heard of an asylum for Magistrates. As to the protection of trade, in a place where all sort of trade or commerce was prohibited, the task was a glorious but not a difficult one. And as to the blocking up an Harbour, it might be very true, but to him this mode of blockade seemed rather novel. Such an expression, it is certain, said he, might come with great propriety from me; but I must I Congress I never heard such a bull in my own country. At the entrance of Dublin Harbour there as a north and south bull, but even there or elsewhere such a bull as this I never heard.

Mr. Cornwall rose with some warmth. He observed, that there was no question now before the Committee respecting America; that it was extremely irregular, improper, and unfair, to introduce a discourse of this kind, just at the eve of an adjournment, in such a disorderly, unparliamentary manner; that he suspected it was done on purpose to embarrass Administration, by conveying to the people, through the medium of the publick papers, that Administration were silent, and would not, or were not able to answer; that such conduct might be of a very bad tendency, considering the very various and contradictory opinions entertained at almost every side of the House; that pressing for an increased establishment, though it should be necessary, if complied with at this time, would be extremely imprudent, as it would spread an alarm among the Merchants on account of their property; because, from the instant such a measure was determined on, all remittances, or perhaps commercial intercourse might possibly cease, which, if it should happen, might be productive of the most dreadful effects. He concluded by asserting, that the measures now sported with would stand the test; and that, from any thing which had hitherto happened, there was not the most distant reason for condemning them.

The Resolution then being read a second time, was, upon the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House.*

WEDNESDAY, December 22, 1774.

The House adjourned till Thursday, three weeks, the 19th day of January next, (1775.)

* Notwithstanding the hostile tone of the Speech, and the great majority that supported the Addresses in both Houses, there appeared the most glaring irresolution on the side of Ministry with respect to American affairs. It seemed as if no plan had yet been formed, nor system adopted upon that subject. The Minister appeared less than usual in the House of Commons, and studiously avoided all explanation. Many imagined that he was thwarted and overruled by what in the cant phrase is called the Interior Cabinet, and did not approve of the violent measures that were there generated. It was even at this time supposed that he was feeling his own strength, and had some thoughts of making an effort to emancipate himself from those shackles which rendered him answerable for the acts of others, who were not themselves in any degree responsible.

Other causes might, perhaps with more probability, be assigned for this irresolution. The Minister might still have his doubts with respect to the temper of the new Parliament. The landed interest, which must first contribute to the support of coercive measures, was not yet prepared to look in the face the direct avowal of a war; and an increase of the land tax, where there was no incitement of national glory, and even the question of interest sufficiently doubtful, might meet with a general and fatal opposition. The whole weight of the mercantile interest, and of the great manufacturing body of the Nation was also to be apprehended.

However it was, whether it proceeded from irresolution, a want of system, or a difference of opinion in the Cabinet, there was a strange suspension of American business previous to the Christmas recess, and the Minister seemed evidently to shrink from all contest upon that subject. The national estimates were entirely formed upon a peace establishment. The land tax was continued at three Shillings in the Pound; no vote of credit was required; the Army remained upon its former footing, and a reduction of four thousand seamen took place, only sixteen thousand being demanded for the ensuing year. - Ann. Reg.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY, January 20, 1775.

The Earl of Dartmouth (by his Majesty's command laid before the House Papers relating to the Disturbances in North America, together with a list thereof; which was read by the Clerk as follows; (videlicet.)

- No. 1. Extract of a Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to the Honourable Governour Gage, dated Whitehall, 9th April, 1774, enclosing,
- No. 2. Copy of a Minute of the Treasury Board on the 31st March, 1774.
- No. 3. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 19th May, 1774, enclosing,
- No. 4. Extract from the Massachusetts Gazette of the 19th May, 1774.
- No. 5. Extract from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 31st May, 1774, enclosing,
- No. 6. List of the Counsellors, and copy of the Governour's Speech to both Houses.
- No. 7. Extract of a Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to the Honourable Governour Gage, dated Whitehall, 3d June, 1774.
- No. 8. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Salem, 26th June, 1774, enclosing,
- No. 9. Copy of the Address of the Council, and Governour Gage's Reasons for refusing it.
- No. 10. Copy of the Resolves of the House of Representatives, before they proceeded to business at Salem.
- No. 11. Copy of Address of the House of Representatives.
- No. 12. Copy of the Resolves of the House of Representatives, 17th June, 1774.
- No. 13. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Salem, 5th July, 1774; received 2d August, enclosing,
- No. 14. Copy of a Proclamation.
- No. 15. Copy of a Circular Letter, and of a paper called "A League and Covenant."
- No. 16. Copy of Proceedings at a Town Meeting at Boston, 27th June.
- No. 17. Copy of the Protest of several of the Inhabitants of the Town of Worcester against the proceedings of the Town Meeting on the 20th June.
- No. 18. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 20th July, 1774; received 7th September.
- No. 19. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Salem, 27th July, 1774; received 7th September, enclosing,
- No. 20. Copy of a Notification for a Town Meeting.
- No. 21. Copy of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Salem, 27th August, 1774; received 1st October, enclosing,
- No. 22. List of Counsellors.
- No. 23. Extract of a Letter from Hampshire County, of 10th August, 1774.
- No. 24. Copy of a Letter from the Boston Committee of Correspondence to the several Counties.
- No. 25. Copy of a Paper posted up at Salem.
- No. 26. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 2d September, 1774; received 1st October, enclosing,
- No. 27. Copy of Minute of Council held at Boston, 31st of August.
- No. 28. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston 3d September, 1774; received 1st October, enclosing,
- No. 29. Copy of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Oliver to Governour Gage, dated 2d September.
- No. 30. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, September 20, 1774; received 18th November, enclosing,
- No. 31. Copy of a Letter from the Judges of the Inferiour Court of the County of Hampshire.
- No. 32. Account of Proceedings against the Inferiour Court of Springfield, in the County of Hampshire.

- No. 33. Copy of Mr. Pains's account of the proceedings at Worcester.
- No. 34. Copy of a Letter to Josiah Edson, Esquire, and form of a Resignation as Counsellor therein enclosed.
- No. 35. Copy of Proceedings at the meeting of the Delegates of the County of Suffolk.
- No. 36. Copy of the Proceedings of the Committee of Correspondence in the County of Worcester.
- No. 37. Copy of the Proceedings of the Committee of Correspondence at Worcester, 9th August.
- No. 38. Reasons of the Grand and Petit Jurors for declining to serve; delivered into Court 30th August.
- No. 39. Copy of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, September 25, 1774; received November 18, enclosing,
- No. 40. Extract of a Letter from Major General Hal-dimand, dated 15th September.
- No. 41. Copy of a Paper posted up at New-York.
- No. 42. Copy of Messages to Governour Gage, and his Answer.
- No. 43. Copy of two Resolutions entered into by the Congress at Philadelphia.
- No. 44. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 3d October, 1774; received 18th December, enclosing,
- No. 45. Copy of a Proclamation issued by Governour Gage, and Resolves of a Committee for the County of Worcester.
- No. 46. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 17th October, 1774; received 23d December, enclosing,
- No. 47. Copy of Instructions given by the Committee of the County of Worcester to Mr. Timothy Bigelow, a Member chosen to represent them in the Great and General Court of the Province of Massachusetts Bay.
- No. 48. Copy of Instructions given by the Committee of the County of Worcester to Mr. Timothy Bigelow, a Member to represent them in the Provincial Congress at Concord.
- No. 49. Copy of an Address of the Committee of the County of Worcester, to Governour Gage.
- No. 50. Copy of a second Address of the Committee of the County of Worcester to Governour Gage.
- No. 51. Copy of Governour Gage's Answer to the Committee of the County of Worcester.
- No. 52. Proceedings of a Congress of Committees of the County of Hampshire, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and Resolves of the County of Bristol.
- No. 53. Resolves of a Provincial Congress at Concord, 14th October, 1774.
- No. 54. Copy of a Message from the Provincial Congress at Concord to Governour Gage.
- No. 55. Copy of Governour Gage's Answer thereto.
- No. 56. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 30th October, and 2d November, 1774; received 2d January, 1775, enclosing,
- No. 57. Copy of a Letter from the Honourable Pey-ton Randolph, Esquire, President of the Continental Congress, setting at Philadelphia, to the Honourable Governour Gage.
- No. 58. Copy of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Hon. Peyton Randolph, Esq.
- No. 59. Copy of a Message by a Committee from the Provincial Congress to the Hon. Governour Gage.
- No. 60. Proceedings of a Provincial Congress, held at Cambridge, on the 21st and 26th of October, 1774.
- No. 61. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, November 15th, 1774; received 3d January, 1775; enclosing,
- No. 62. Copy of a Proclamation issued by Governour Gage.
- No. 63. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 15th December, 1774; received 10th January, 1775, enclosing,

- No. 64. Proceedings of a Provincial Congress at Cambridge.
- No. 65. Copy of a Letter taken from the Boston Gazette.
- No. 66. Votes of the Assembly of Rhode-Island.
- No. 67. Copy of an Act passed by the Assembly of Rhode-Island.
- No. 68. Copy of a Note from Lord Viscount Lisburne to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 1st October, 1774; enclosing,
- No. 69. Copy of a Letter from Vice Admiral Graves to Mr. Stephens, dated Boston, 3d September, 1774.
- No. 70. Copy of a Letter from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 15th November, 1774, enclosing,
- No. 71. Extract of a Letter from Vice Admiral Graves to Mr. Stephens, dated Boston, 23d September, 1771.
- No. 72. Copy of a Letter from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 14th January, 1775, enclosing,
- No. 73. Extract of a Letter from Vice Admiral Graves to Mr. Stephens, dated Boston, 15th December, 1774.
- No. 74. Extract of a Letter from Captain Wallace to Vice Admiral Graves, dated Newport, Rhode-Island, 12th December, 1774.
- No. 75. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 8th June, 1774; received 2d August, enclosing,
- No. 76. Copy of a Letter from Mr. Samuel Adams, dated Boston, 12th May, 1774.
- No. 77. Copy of a Resolution and of a Vote of the House of Representatives of New-Hampshire, 28th May, 1774.
- No. 78. Copy of Governour Wentworth's Message to the Assembly of New-Hampshire, 8th June, 1774.
- No. 79. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 4th July, 1774; received 2d August, enclosing,
- No. 80. Copies of two Letters from Mr. Parry to Governour Wentworth, dated 29th June, 1774.
- No. 81. Copies of two Letters from Governour Wentworth to Captain Cochran, dated 29th June, 1774.
- No. 82. Copy of a Letter from Captain Cochran to Governour Wentworth, dated 30th June, 1774.
- No. 83. Copies of two Letters from Mr. Parker to Governour Wentworth, dated 30th June, 1774.
- No. 84. Copy of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 6th July, 1774; received 2d August, enclosing,
- No. 85. Copy of his Speech to the Committee of Correspondence.
- No. 86. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 13th July, 1774; received 7th September.
- No. 87. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 29th August, 1774; received 1st of October, enclosing,
- No. 88. Copy of Instructions for Colonel Folsom and Major Sullivan, appointed Delegates for the Province of New-Hampshire.
- No. 89. Copy of a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence in New-Hampshire; and form of a Non-Importation and Non-Consumption Agreement sent to the Towns in the Province.
- No. 90. Copy of a Vote of a Town Meeting at Portsmouth.
- No. 91. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 13th September, 1774; received 14th November, enclosing,
- No. 92. Copy of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to Captain Cochran, 18th July.
- No. 93. Copy of a Letter from Mr. Parry to Governour Wentworth, 8th September.
- No. 94. Extracts from the Proceedings of the Council of New-Hampshire, on the 9th and 12th of September.
- No. 95. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-Hampshire, 15th November, 1774; received 5th January, 1775.; enclosing,
- No. 96. Copy of Resolves of the Committee of the Towns of Portsmouth and Rochester.
- No. 97. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-Hampshire, 2d December, 1774; received 12th January, 1775, enclosing,
- No. 98. Advertisements from the Committee of the Towns of Portsmouth and Durham.
- No. 99. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 4th May, 1774; received 6th June, enclosing,
- No. 100. Extract from the New-York Gazetteer, of the 28th April, 1774.
- No. 101. Extract of a Letter from Major General Haldimand to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 15th May, 1774; received 11th June, enclosing,
- No. 102. Copy of a Paper handed about New-York.
- No. 103. Extract of a Letter from Major General Haldimand to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 1st June, 1774; received 4th July, 1774.
- No. 104. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 1st June, 1774; received 4th July, enclosing,
- No. 105. Copy of a Handbill.
- No. 106. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 6th July, 1774; received 17th August.
- No. 107. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 2d August, 1774; received 7th September.
- No. 108. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 7th September, 1774; received 11th October.
- No. 109. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 5th October, 1774; received 10th November.
- No. 110. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 2d November, 1774; received 13th December.
- No. 111. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 7th December, 1774; received 6th January, 1775.
- No. 112. Extract of a Letter from Governour Franklin to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Burlington, 31st May, 1774; received 4th July.
- No. 113. Extract of a Letter from Governour Franklin to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Burlington, 28th June, 1774; received 12th August, enclosing,
- No. 114. Copy of the Resolves of the Freeholders of the County of Essex, in New-Jersey, 11th June, 1774.
- No. 115. Copy of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 31st May, 1774; received 4th June.
- No. 116. Extract of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 5th July, 1774; received 12th August.
- No. 117. Extract of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 30th July, 1774; received 7th September, enclosing,
- No. 118. Extracts from the Proceedings of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania.
- No. 119. Extracts from the Pennsylvania Gazette, of the 27th July, 1774.
- No. 120. Extract of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 5th September, 1774; received 11th October.
- No. 121. Copy of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 3d October, 1774; received 10th November, enclosing,
- No. 122. Copies of three Resolutions of the Congress at Philadelphia; extracted from the Pennsylvania Gazette.
- No. 123. Copy of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 31st October, 1774; received 13th December.

No. 194. Extract of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 4th November, 1774; received 17th December.

No. 125. Copy of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 6th December, 1774; received 6th January, 1775.

No. 126. Copy of a Letter from the Earl of Dunmore to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Williamsburg, 29th May, 1774; received 4th July, enclosing,

No. 127. Copy of an Order of the House of Burgesses, on 24th May, 1774.

No. 128. Copy of an Association signed by eighty-nine Members of the House of Burgesses.

No. 129. Copy of a Letter from the Earl of Dunmore to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Williamsburg, 6th June, 1774; received 11th July, enclosing,

No. 130. Resolutions of the Inhabitants of the City of Annapolis, in the Province of Maryland, 25th May, 1774.

No. 131. Extract of a Letter from the Earl of Dunmore to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Frederick County, in Virginia, 14th August, 1774; received 8th October, enclosing,

No. 132. Copy of an Association resolved upon at a meeting of Delegates from the different Counties in Virginia.

No. 133. Copy of Instructions for the Deputies appointed to meet in General Congress on the part of the Colony of Virginia.

No. 134. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Charlestown, 31st July, 1774; received 16th September, enclosing,

No. 135. Extract of a Letter from the South Carolina Gazette, on 11th July, 1774.

No. 136. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Charlestown, 3d August, 1774; received 16th September, enclosing,

No. 137. Copy of Proceedings in the Commons House of Assembly of South Carolina, on 2d of August.

No. 138. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Charlestown, 23d November, 1774; received 16th January, 1775.

No. 139. Extract of a Letter from Sir James Wright, Baronet, to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Savannah, 25th July, 1774; received 16th of September.

No. 140. Extract of a Letter from Sir James Wright, Baronet, to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Savannah, 13th August, 1774; received 12th October.

No. 141. Extract of a Letter from Sir James Wright, Baronet, to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Savannah, 24th August, 1774; received 26th October, enclosing,

No. 142. Copy of a Handbill, dated 14th of July, 1774.

No. 143. Copy of a Proclamation issued by Sir James Wright, Baronet.

No. 144. Copy of a Handbill, dated 27th of July, 1774.

No. 145. Copy of Resolutions entered into at Savannah, 10th August, 1774.

No. 146. Extract of a Letter from Sir James Wright, Baronet, to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Savannah, 13th October, 1774; received 4th January, 1775, enclosing,

No. 147. Copies of Protests of the Inhabitants of several Districts in the Province of Georgia.

No. 148. Extracts from the Votes and Proceedings of the American Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia, 5th September, 1774.

No. 149. Petitions of sundry persons, on behalf of themselves and the inhabitants of several of his Majesty's Colonies in America; received 21st December, 1774.

Ordered, That the Said Papers do lie on the table.

The Earl of Chatham rose. My Lords: After more than six weeks possession of the Papers now before you, on a subject so momentous, at a time when the fate of this Nation hangs on every hour, the Ministry have at length condescended to submit to the consideration of the House, intelligence from America, with which your Lordships and the publick have been long and fully acquainted.

The measures of last year, my Lords, which have produced the present alarming state of America, were founded upon misrepresentation; they were violent, precipitate, and vindictive. The Nation was told that it was only a faction in Boston, which opposed all lawful Government; that an unwarrantable injury had been done to private property, for which the justice of Parliament was called upon to order reparation; that the least appearance of firmness would awe the Americans into submission, and upon only passing the Rubicon, we should be fine clade victor.

That the people might choose their Representatives under the impression of those misrepresentations, the Parliament was precipitately dissolved. Thus the Nation was to be rendered instrumental in executing the vengeance of Administration on that injured, unhappy, traduced people.

But now, my Lords, we find that instead of suppressing the opposition of the faction at Boston, these measures have spread it over the whole Continent. They have united that whole people, by the most indissoluble of all bands - intollerable wrongs. The just retribution is an indiscriminate, unmerciful proscription of the innocent with the guilty, unheard and untried. The bloodless victory is an impotent General, with his dishonoured Army, trusting solely to the pick-axe and the spade for security against the just indignation of an injured and insulted people.

My Lords, I am happy that a relaxation of my infirmities permits me to seize this earliest opportunity of offering my poor advice to save this unhappy country, at this moment tottering to its ruin. But as I have not the honour of access to his Majesty, I will endeavour to transmit to him, through the constitutional channel of this House, my ideas on American business, to rescue him from the misadvice of his present Ministers. I congratulate your Lordships that that business is at last entered upon, by the noble Lord's (Lord Dartmouth) laying the Papers before you; As I suppose your Lordships are too well apprized of their contents, I hope I am not premature in submitting to you my present motion, [reads the motion.] I wish, my Lords, not to lose a day in this urgent pressing crisis. An hour now lost in allaying the ferment in America, may produce years of calamity; but, for my own part, I will not desert for a moment the conduct of this weighty business from the first to the last, unless nailed to my bed by the extremity of sickness; I will give it unremitting attention; I will knock at the door of this sleeping or confounded Ministry, and will rouse them to a sense of their important danger.

When I state the importance of the Colonies to this country, and the magnitude of danger hanging over this country, from the present plan of misadministration practised against them, I desire not to be Understood to argue for a reciprocity of indulgence between England and America; I contend not for indulgence, but justice to America; and I shall ever contend that the Americans justly owe obedience to us, in a limited degree; they owe obedience to our Ordinances of Trade and Navigation; but "let the line be skilfully drawn between the objects of those Ordinances, and their private internal property. Let the sacredness of their property remain inviolate; let it be taxable only by their own consent, given in their Provincial Assemblies, else it will cease to be property. As to the metaphysical refinements attempting to show that the Americans are equally free from obedience to commercial restraints, as from taxation for Revenue, as being unrepresented here, I pronounce them futile, frivolous, and groundless. Property is, in its nature, single as an atom. It is indivisible, can belong to one only, and cannot be touched but by his own consent. The law that attempts to alter this disposal of it annihilates it

When I urge this measure of recalling the Troops from Boston, I urge it on this pressing principle--that it is necessarily preparatory to the restoration of your peace, and the establishment of your prosperity. It will then appear that you are disposed to treat amicably and equitably; and to consider, revise, and repeal, if it should be found necessary, as I affirm it will, those violent Acts and Declarations which have disseminated confusion throughout your Empire,

Resistance to your Acts was as necessary as it was just; and your vain declarations of the omnipotence of Parliament, and your imperious doctrines of the necessity of submission, will be found equally impotent to convince; or to enslave, your fellow-subjects in America, who feel that tyranny, whether ambitioned by an individual part of the Legislature, or by the bodies * who compose it, is equally intolerable to British subjects.

As to the means of enforcing this thralldom, they are found to be ridiculous and weak in practice, as they were unjust in principle. Indeed I cannot but feel, with the most anxious sensibility, for the situation of General Gage, and the Troops under his command, thinking him, as I do, a man of humanity and understanding, and entertaining, as I ever shall, the highest respect, the warmest love, for the British Troops. Their situation is truly unworthy - penned up - pining in inglorious inactivity. They are an army of impotence. You may call them an army of safety and of guard; but they are in truth an army of impotence and contempt; and to render the folly equal to the disgrace, they are an army of irritation and vexation.

But I find a report creeping abroad, that Ministers censure General Gage's inactivity. Let them censure him; it becomes them; it becomes their justice and their honour I do not mean to censure his inactivity; it is a prudent and necessary inaction But it is a miserable condition, where disgrace is prudence; and where it is necessary to be contemptible. This tameness, however disgraceful, cannot be censured; for the first drop of blood shed in a civil and unnatural war, would be immedicabile vulnus It would entail hatred and contention between the two people, from generation to generation. Wo be to him who sheds the first, the unexpiable drop of blood in an impious war, with a people contending in the great cause of public liberty. I will tell you plainly, my Lords, no son of mine, nor any one over whom I have influence, shall ever draw his sword upon his fellow-subjects.

I therefore urge and conjure your Lordships immediately to adopt this conciliating measure. I will pledge myself for its immediately producing conciliatory effects, from its being well-timed. But if you delay till your vain hope of triumphantly dictating the terms shall be accomplished, you delay forever. And even admitting that this hope, which in truth is desperate, should be accomplished, what will you gain by the imposition of your victorious amity? You will be untrusted and unthanked. Adopt then the grace, while you have the opportunity of reconciliation, or at least prepare the way; allay the ferment prevailing in America, by removing the obnoxious hostile cause - obnoxious and unserviceable; for their merit can be only inaction. "Non dimicare et vincere." Their victory can never be by exertions. Their force would be most disproportionately exerted against a brave, generous, and united people, with arms in their hands and courage in their hearts; three millions of people, the genuine descendants of a valiant and pious ancestry, driven to those deserts by the narrow maxims of a superstitious tyranny. And is the spirit of tyrannous persecution never to be appeased? Are the brave sons of those brave forefathers to inherit their sufferings, as they have inherited their virtues? Are they to sustain the inflictions of the most oppressive and unexampled severity, beyond the accounts of history or the description of poetry? "Rhadamanthus habet durissima regna, castigatque AUDITQUE." So says the wisest poet, and perhaps the wisest statesman and politician. But the Bostonians have been condemned UNHEARD. The indiscriminating hand of vengeance has lumped together innocent and guilty; with all the formalities of hostility, has blocked up the Town, and reduced to beggary and famine thirty thousand inhabitants.

But his Majesty is adwised that the union of America cannot last. Ministers have more eyes than I, and should have more ears; but from all the information I have been able to procure, I can pronounce it a union solid, permanent, and effectual. Ministers may satisfy themselves and delude the publick with the reports of what they call commercial bodies in America. They are not commercial.

They are your packers and factors; they live upon nothing,

* A favourite idea prevailed, and was often urged in argument by Administration, "that absolute passive obedience is due to Acts of the Legislature, which must not, in any case whatever, be questioned, "much less resisted by the people." Mr. Locke thought otherwise. But, in truth, it is a point rather of practical policy. If, however, the postulatam were admitted in speculation, the inference will not reach from Westminster to Boston. It never was proved that our Lords Spiritual and Temporal had privilege in America, and that our Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, were their Representatives.

for I call commission nothing; I mean the Ministerial AUTHORITY for their American intelligence - the runners of Government, who are paid for their intelligence. But these are not the men, nor this the influence to be considered in America, when we estimate the firmness of their union. Even to extend the question, and to take in the really mercantile circle, will be totally inadequate to the consideration. Trade, indeed, increases the wealth and glory of a country; but its real strength and stamina are to be looked for among the cultivators of the land. In their simplicity of life is found the simpleness of virtue - the integrity and courage of freedom. Those true genuine sons of the earth are invincible; and they surround and hem in the mercantile bodies, even if those bodies, which supposition I totally disclaim, could be supposed disaffected to the cause of liberty. Of this general spirit existing in the American Nation, (for so I wish to distinguish the real and genuine Americans from the pseudo traders I have described) - of this spirit of independence animating the Nation of America, I have the most authentic information. It is not new among them; it is and ever has been their established principle - their confirmed persuasion; it is their nature and their doctrine.

I remember some years ago when the repeal of the Stamp Act was in agitation, conversing in a friendly confidence with a person of undoubted respect and authenticity on this subject, and he assured me with a certainty which his judgment and opportunity gave him, that these were the prevalent and steady principles of America: that you might destroy their Towns, and cut them off from the superfluities, perhaps the conveniences of life, but that they were prepared to despise your power, and would not lament their loss, whilst they had - WHAT, my Lords? Their woods and their liberty. The name of my authority, if I am called upon, will authenticate the opinion irrefragably. *

If illegal violences have been, as it is said, committed in America. prepare the way, open a door of possibility for acknowledgment and satisfaction. But proceed not to such coercion, such proscription. Cease your indiscriminate inflictions; amerce not thirty thousand, oppress not three millions, for the fault of forty or fifty. Such severity of injustice must forever render incurable the wounds you have already given your Colonies; you irritate them to unappeasable rancour. What though you march from Town to Town, and from Province to Province? Though you should be able to force a temporary and local submission, which I only suppose, not admit, how shall you be able to secure the obedience of the country you leave behind you in your progress? To grasp the dominion of eighteen hundred miles of Continent, populous in valour, liberty, and resistance?

This resistance to your arbitrary system of taxation might have been foreseen; it was obvious from the nature of things and of mankind; and above all, from the Whiggish spirit flourishing in that country. the spirit which now resists your taxation in America, is the same which formerly opposed, and with success opposed, loans, benevolences, and ship money in England; the same spirit which called all England on its legs, and, by the Bill of Rights, vindicated the English Constitution; the same spirit which established the great fundamental and essential maxim of your liberties, that no subject of England shall be taxed, but by his own consent.

If your Lordships will turn to the politicks of those times, you will see the attempts of the Lords to poison this inestimable benefit of the Bill, by an insidious proviso; you will see their attempts defeated, in their conference with the Commons, by the decisive arguments of the ascertainers and maintainers of our liberty; you will see the thin, inconclusive, and fallacious stuff of those enemies to freedom, contrasted with the sound and solid reasoning of Serjeant Glanville and the rest, those great and learned men who adorned and enlightened this country, and placed her security on the summit of justice and freedom. And whilst I am on my legs, and thus do justice to the memory of those great men, I must also justify the merit of the living, by declaring my firm and fixed opinion, that such a man exists this day, [looking towards Lord Camden.]

This glorious spirit of Whiggism animates three millions in America, who prefer poverty with liberty, to golden chains and sordid affluence, and who will die in defence of their rights as men - as freemen. What shall oppose this spirit, aided by the congenial flame glowing in the breast of every Whig in England, to the amount, I hope, of at least double the American numbers? Ireland they have to a man. In that country, joined as it is with the cause of the Colonies, and placed at their head, the distinction I contend for is and must be observed.

* It was Doctor Franklin.

My Lords, this country superintends and controls their trade and navigation, but they tax themselves. And this distinction between external and internal control, is sacred and insurmountable; it is involved in the abstract nature of things. Property is private, individual, absolute. Trade is an extended and complicated consideration; it reaches as far as ships can sail, or winds can blow: it is a great and various machine. To regulate the numberless movements of its several parts, and combine them into effect for the good of the whole, requires the superintending wisdom and energy of the supreme power in the Empire. But this supreme power has no effect towards internal taxation; for it does not exist in that relation. There is no such thing, no such idea in this Constitution, as a supreme power operating upon property.

Let this distinction, then, remain forever ascertained. Taxation is theirs; commercial regulation is ours. As an American I would recognize to England her supreme right of regulating Commerce and Navigation. As an Englishman, by birth and principle, I recognize to the Americans their supreme, unalienable right in their Property; a right which they are justified in the defence of, to the last extremity. To maintain this principle is the common cause of the Whigs on the other side of the Atlantic. and on this. " 'Tis liberty to liberty engaged," that they will defend themselves, their families, and their country. In this great cause they are immovably allied. It is the alliance of God and nature - immutable, eternal, fixed as the firmament of Heaven.

To such united force, what force shall be opposed? What, my Lords, a few Regiments in America, and seventeen or eighteen thousand men at home! The idea is too ridiculous to take up a moment of your Lordships' time; nor can such a national and principled union be resisted by the tricks of office or Ministerial manœuvres. Laying papers on your table, or counting noses on a division, will not avert or postpone the hour of danger. It must arrive, my Lords, unless these fatal Acts are done away; it must arrive in all its horrors; and then these boastful Ministers, 'spite of all their confidence and all their manœuvres, shall be forced to hide their heads.

But it is not repealing this Act of Parliament or that Act of Parliament; it is not repealing a piece of parchment that can restore America to your bosom. You must repeal her fears and her resentments, and you may then hope for her love and gratitude. But now, insulted with an armed force posted in Boston, irritated with an hostile array before her eyes, her concessions, if you could force them, would be suspicious and insecure: they will be irato animo; they will not be the sound, honourable pactions of freemen; they will be the dictates of fear and the extortions of force. But it is more than evident that you cannot force them, principled and united as they are, to your unworthy terms of submission. It is impossible. And when I hear General Gage censured for inactivity, I must retort with indignation on those whose intemperate measures and improvident councils have betrayed him into his present situation. His situation reminds me, my Lords, of the answer of a French General in the civil wars of France, Monsieur Turenne, I think. The Queen said to him, with some pevishness, I observe that you were often very near the Prince during the campaign, why did you not take him? The Mareschal replied with great coolness - J'avois grand peur, qui Monsieur le Prince ne me pris. I was very much afraid the Prince would take me.

When your Lordships look at the papers transmitted us from America; when you consider their decency, firmness, and wisdom, you cannot but respect their cause, and wish to make it your own - for myself I must declare and avow that, in all my reading and observation, and it has been my favourite study - I have read Thucydides, and have studied and admired the master states of the world - that for solidity of reasoning, force of sagacity, and wisdom of conclusion, under such a complication of difficult circumstances, no Nation or body of men can stand in preference to the General Congress at Philadelphia. I trust it is obvious to your Lordships, that all attempts to impose servitude upon such men, to establish despotism over such a mighty Continental Nation, must be vain, must be futile. We shall be forced ultimately to retract; let us retract whilst we can, not when we must. I say we must necessarily undo these violent and oppressive Acts; they must be repealed; you will repeal them; I pledge myself for it, that you will in the end repeal them; I stake my reputation on it; I will consent to be taken for an idiot if they are not finally repealed. Avoid then this humiliating, disgraceful necessity. With a dignity becoming your exalted situation, make the first advances to concord, to peace and happiness; for that is your true dignity, to act with prudence and with justice. That you should first concede, is obvious from sound and rational policy. Concession comes with better grace; and more salutary effect, from the superior power. It reconciles superiority of power with the feelings of men, and establishes solid confidence in it, the foundation of affection and gratitude. So thought a wise poet, and a wise man in political sagacity, the friend of Mæcenas; and the eulogist of Augustus. To him the adopted son and successor of the first Cæsar, to him, the master of the world, he wisely urged this conduct of prudence and dignity; "Tuque prior, tu parce; projice tela manu."

Every motive, therefore, of justice and of policy, of dignity and of prudence, urges you to allay the ferment in America, by a removal of your Troops from Boston, by a repeal of your Acts of Parliament, and by demonstration of amicable dispositions towards your Colonies. On the other hand, every danger and every hazard, impend to deter you from perseverance in your present ruinous measures. Foreign war hanging over your heads by a slight and brittle thread; France and Spain watching your conduct and waiting for the maturity of your errors; with a vigilant eye to America and the temper of your Colonies, more than to their own concerns, be they what they may.

To conclude, my Lords, if the Ministers thus persevere in misadvising and misleading the King, I will not say that they can alienate the affections of his subjects from his crown; but I will affirm, that they will make the crown not worth his wearing. I shall not say that the King is betrayed; but I will pronounce that the Kingdom is undone.

He then moved, "That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, most humbly to advise and beseech his Majesty, that, in order to open the ways towards an "happy settlement of the dangerous troubles in America, "by beginning to allay ferments, and soften animosities "there; and, above all, for preventing in the mean time, "any sudden and fatal catastrophe at Boston, now suffering "under the daily irritation of an Army before their eyes, "posted in their Town; it may graciously please his Majesty, that immediate orders may be despatched to General Gage, for removing his Majesty's Forces from the "Town of Boston, as soon as the rigour of the season, and "other circumstances indispensable to the safety and accommodation of the said Troops, may render the same "practicable."

The Earl of Suffolk condemned the conduct of the Americans in the most determined and unreserved terms. He complimented the noble Earl on his great abilities, but begged leave to pronounce him mistaken; in almost every position he laid down; and thought it extremely improper, considering the present alarming state of America, to cause divisions, and by so doing, to weaken the force of the parent state. He observed, that the noble Earl had animadverted severely on those who had, or were supposed to have advised the measure of dissolving the Parliament; and had likewise thrown out some insinuations, directed against the supposed authors of the present intentions of Administration; As to the first, he avowed himself to be one of the principal advisers, as he looked upon it, nay, foresaw from the beginning, that all the steps taken by the Americans, in Congress and elsewhere, would be to influence the general election by creating jealousies, fears, and prejudices, among the mercantile and trading part of the Nation; that he was happy the ideas he espoused had prevailed, which means those sinister designs were prevented from taking effect; that he was happy to find his conjectures right, and to perceive that those designs were defeated; and that an improper influence, originating whence it might, or in whatever manner, made very little difference. As to the point of advice, in relation to coercive measures, he very frankly declared himself to be equally strenuous: for all conciliating means having proved ineffectual, he thought it high time for the mother country to exert her authority, or forever relinquish it. If the task be difficult now, what must it be in a few years time? Parliament must be obeyed, or it must not; if it be obeyed, then who shall resist its determinations? If it be not, then we may as well at once give up every claim of authority over America. I should scorn (said he) to be present in this House, and sit still without freely declaring my sentiments. I should scorn to continue one of his Majesty's Ministers, and not advise coercive measures, when I was so firmly and fully convinced of their necessity; and I take a particular pride in avowing those sentiments, and mean steadily to abide by them at all events. His Lordship then proceeded to comment on the proceedings of the Congress, in relation to their disapprobation of certain Acts of Parliament, particularly the four or five last adverted to at that meeting. He defended them all and contended, that the Boston Port Bill, if the obstinacy of the Bostonians had not prevented it, would have executed itself, as a satisfaction for the dédommagement done to the East India Company, would have at once put the Port of Boston on its former footing, and have of course made an opening for a complete reconciliation. He insisted strongly that the mother country should never relax till America confessed her supremacy; and that as soon as America had dutifully complied, she would meet with every indulgence consistent with the real interest of both countries; but that any concession on our parts, till the right on which all our pretensions were founded, was allowed, would be to the last degree impolitic, pusillanimous, and absurd. He supposed, he said, that the noble Earl would be alone in his opinion, that this country had not the right to tax America. The right implied, according to him, the necessity of the exercise of it. He thought it a duty incumbent on Administration to pursue their object of subduing the refractory, rebellious Americans; and avowed the Ministerial resolution of enforcing obedience by arms.*

The Earl of Shelburne began with renouncing all personal engagements whatever; and solemnly declared, that he adopted the sentiments of the noble Earl of Chatham, solely on account of their wisdom, justice, and propriety. He said, the specious language of the supremacy of the British Legislature, the interests of Great Britain, of her authority over the Colonies, &c., was artfully held out to delude and deceive both Parliament and people; it was intended to operate on every degree of men; the very Cobler is, he said, swelled up with his own importance, as

* Whatever difference of opinion in the Cabinet might have produced an apparent irresolution previous to the recess, it now became evident that measures were finally settled with respect to America. Though the Military and Naval strength was not increased, a plan of coercion seemed to be determined on. The language of the Lords in Administration was high and decisive. They condemned the conduct of the Americans in the strongest and most unreserved terms; and justified all the acts of Administration, and all the late Laws, without exception. They insisted that all conciliating means having proved ineffectual, it was high time for the mother country to assert her authority, or forever to relinquish it. If the task be difficult now, what must it be in a few years? Parliament must be obeyed, or it must not; if it be obeyed, who shall resist its determinations? If it be not, it is better at once to give up every claim of authority over America. The supremacy of the British Legislature cannot be disputed; and the idea of an inactive right, when there is the most urgent necessity for its exercise, is absurd and ridiculous. If we give way on the present occasion, from mistaken notions of present advantages in trade and commerce, such a concession will infallibly defeat its own object; for it is plain that the Navigation Act, and all other regulatory Acts, which form the great basis on which those advantages rest, and the true interests of both countries depend, will fall a victim to the interested and ambitious views of America. In a word, it was declared that the mother country should never relax till America confessed her supremacy; and it was avowed to be the Ministerial resolution to enforce obedience by arms.

In this debate it did not appear that the Lords in the minority were fully agreed on the propriety of recalling the Troops. Some Lords who were the most earnest for peace, did not think it at all just or wise to leave those who had risked their lives in favour of the claims of this country, however ill-founded, or improperly exercised, as unprotected victims to the rage of an armed and incensed populace; and that too, before any previous stipulations were made for their safety. They thought that if proper concessions were made, the Troops then at Boston were not numerous enough to raise an alarm on account of a supposed ill-faith in keeping them up, and could by no means prevent being a party in a contest with those on the other side, who are as artfully represented to be ready to throw off all obedience, who are described to be traitors, vagabonds, and rebels, guilty of the most flagrant baseness and ingratitude. But surely there is not a noble Lord within these walls - there is not a man without - who does not instantly perceive the notorious fallacy of such a misrepresentation. No man can be at a loss to know, that a majority of both Houses, however constituted, are the Nation; that that majority is led and directed by an Administration consisting of four or five persons; and those again, by one man. Let us, therefore, hear no more of the People, the Parliament, or Great Britain; but consider the issue as simply depending between the parties thus described, between Administration on one side, and all America on the other. He then proceeded to animadvert on the several Acts of the last session respecting America; and contended, without reserve, that the Boston Port Bill did not execute itself, nor was ever meant so to do: for supposing the dédommagement to be repaired, and the injury sustained by the East India Company compensated, what did the Act say? Why, that when his Majesty should think the Bostonians had returned to their obedience, and peace and good government fully established, his Majesty might open the Port on such conditions as he thought proper; and appoint such places for the landing and shipping of goods within the said Port and Harbour as he pleased. Here he highly arraigned the unconstitutional policy which dictated that part of the Act, and wantonly lodged a power in the King and Council, which Parliament, if it regarded its own honour, should have never parted with. He condemned, in general, the madness, injustice, and infatuation of coercing the Americans into a blind and servile submission; and repeated what had been received in the most ludicrous manner, on a former occasion, that a tipstaff would execute the Acts better than a military force consisting of one hundred thousand men.

Lord Lyttelton set out with complimenting the noble Earl who spoke first in the debate, on his great political wisdom, his extensive talents, and the fruits of both, the glorious successes of the late war, which must deservedly crown him with immortal laurels. He grounded his arguments chiefly on the legislative supremacy of the British Parliament. He ridiculed the absurd idea of an inactive right, when there was the most apparent and urgent necessity for exercising it. It would be madness in the extreme, not directly to assert, or forever relinquish it. He could not at all agree with the noble Earl in his encomiums on the Continental Congress; for so far from applauding their wisdom, &c., he contended that the whole of their deliberations and proceedings breathed the spirit of unconstitutional independency and open rebellion. His Lordship pointed to the particular language of some of their Resolu-

the restoration of peace. It was wrong at first to send the force; but it might be dangerous to recall it before that was accomplished. They, however, supported the motion because it looked towards that great object; and because, they said, they thought any thing better than a perseverance in hostility. In argument, it was denied that lenient means had been ineffectually tried with the Colonies; and, on the contrary, insisted that they had been continually irritated by a series of absurd, contradictory, wanton, and oppressive measures. That the proscription of Boston, untried and unheard, whereby thirty thousand people were consigned to famine and beggary for the alleged crimes of a few, was an injustice and cruelty scarcely to be paralleled. That, as if it had been done to inflame them to madness, and to keep hostility always in their eyes, an Army, merely of irritation, as it evidently could answer no other purpose, was sent amongst them. That, unfortunately, passion, obstinacy, and ill-will, Under the direction of inability and ignorance, had been made the principles for governing a free people. That America only wants to have safety in property, and personal liberty; and the desire of independency was falsely charged on her. It was also insisted on that the Colonies never denied or questioned the Acts of Navigation, except when excited to it by injury.

That the specious language of the supremacy of the British Legislature, the interests of Great Britain, of her authority over the Colonies, and other phrases equally sounding, was artfully held out to deceive and delude both Parliament and people; they were pompous words, and might swell the importance of the meanest mechanic; but they would neither prevent the miseries of a civil war, preserve our commerce, nor restore our Colonies, if once lost.

After a pretty long debate for that House, the question was rejected by a vast majority, there appearing, upon a division, no less than sixty-eight who opposed, to eighteen only, who supported, the motion. This division was rendered remarkable, by having a Prince of the blood, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, for the first time in the minority.

This decisive victory restored the confidence of the Minister, and perhaps encouraged him to measures in the other House, which he would not otherwise have hazarded. — Ann. Regis.

tions; and endeavoured to prove, that if Great Britain, should give way on the present occasion, from mistaken motives of present advantages in trade, commerce, &c., such a concession would inevitably defeat its own object; for it was plain, that the Navigation Act, and all other regulatory Acts, which formed the great basis on which those advantages rested, and the true interests of both countries depended, would fall a victim to the interested and ambitious views of America. Now, therefore, was the time to assert the authority of Great Britain; for if we did not, he had not a single doubt but every concession on our side would produce a new demand on theirs; and in the end, bring about that state of traitorous independency, at which it was too plain they were now aiming. He lamented the disgraceful, miserable state of the Troops under General Gage, daily crumbling away with sickness and desertion, destitute of covering and sustenance, and, what was much worse, their spirits broken, and themselves disheartened, with the insolent taunts and repeated provocations of a rebellious surrounding rabble. He reflected severely on the conduct of those, that put him and kept him in so disgraceful a situation. He said he should be glad to know by what secret power, or over-ruling influence, the wishes of Parliament had been defeated. On the other hand, if it was from that gentleman's own suggestions he acted, he freely declared, that however prevalent it might be, from every side of the House, to bestow encomiums on him, he must continue to think his conduct extremely reprehensible, and deserving of censure. His Lordship disclaimed all personal connection with Administration. He said he supported them, because he imagined and believed them to be right.

Lord Camden said he would not enter into the large field of discussion, or collateral reasoning, applicable to the abstruse and metaphysical distinctions necessary to the investigation of the omnipotence of Parliament; but this he would venture to assert, that the natural right of mankind, and the immutable laws of justice, were clearly in favour of the Americans. He observed that great stress had been laid on the legislative supremacy of Great Britain; and as far as the doctrine was directed to its proper objects, it was a just one; but it was no less true in fact, that consonant to all the reasonings of all the speculative writers on government, that no man, either agreeable to the true principles of natural or civil liberty, could be divested of any part of his property without his own consent. He pledged himself, at a proper time, to prove that the law of England did not give the right claimed by Parliament, to tax America. That no book or record expressed such right; that he could not tell where to look for it; that he consulted law and history, and his search was equally fruitless in both. In what King's reign, he asked, could it be found? Was it in the old times, before our Colonies existed; or when? He said that in the time of Charles the First, when that great constitutional lawyer, Mr. Selden, was pressed to declare on what legal grounds resistance was justifiable, he replied it was by the custom of England, and that was part of the law of the land - and concluded by referring to the works of Judge Blackstone, where avoiding to state the rule, when resistance is justifiable, he lays down the Revolution as the only precedent; but adds, though the various circumstances and incidents, which may justify resistance, cannot be exactly defined, it is plain, the people at large, who possess the original rights necessary to their own happiness and preservation, have the same right to recall it, whenever the power and authority thus delegated by them, has been abused, and manifestly employed to their own ruin and destruction.

The Earl of Chatham, in reply, observed that if the Noble Lord (Lyttelton) who suggested that the views of America were ultimately pointed to the defeating the Act of Navigation, and the other regulatory Acts so wisely framed and calculated for that reciprocity of interests so essentially necessary to the grandeur and prosperity of the whole Empire, was right, there was no person present, however zealous, would be readier than himself to resist and crush any attempt of that nature in the first instance - but to come at any certain knowledge of their real sentiments, it would be proper first to do them justice; to treat them like subjects, before they were condemned as aliens or traitors. He entirely acquiesced in the sentiments of his noble friend, (Lord Camden), that the present was not a subject proper for nice, metaphysical discussion: that property was a simple subject, distinct and unconnected with the variously complex ideas in which other questions relative to policy were inevitably involved; that he still remained, and ever should continue of opinion, that the right which God and nature, and the Constitution, had given a British subject to his property, was invariably inalienated, without his own consent; and that no power under Heaven could touch it without that consent, either implied, or expressly and directly given. He treated the idea of taxation, being included in legislation, in the most ludicrous terms. He contended that they were two operations in our Constitution totally distinct and foreign to each other; that the latter plainly originated from the power vested in the Legislative Great Council, to control, direct, and watch over the interests of the whole society, by way of regulation and coercion, for the common benefit, while the former was inseparably connected with property, and must forever suit itself to the true nature and disposition of property in general.

Lord Townshend desired several Acts of his present Majesty might be read. He endeavoured to prove that some of them were nearly connected with the Act of Navigation passed in the reign of Charles the Second. the Resolutions of the American Congress condemning those Acts, shewed, he said, that the views of America are not confined to the redress of grievances, real or imaginary, but are immediately directed to the total overthrow of that great palladium of British commerce, the Act of Navigation. The question was not now barely a question of Revenue; but whether that great commercial system on which the strength and prosperity of Great Britain, and the mutual interests of both countries vitally depended, should be destroyed in order to gratify the foolishly ambitious temper of a turbulent, ungrateful people. He contended strongly if concessions of that nature were to be made, restrictions taken off, and trade allowed to flow, in what was called its natural channels, Ireland, who helped to man our Fleets and Armies; who had contributed so generously and freely to the common support; who had so cheerfully assisted in alleviating our burdens, was much better entitled to it than America.

The Earl of Rochford was for firm and decisive measures. To retreat, he insisted, was to be vanquished; and condemned those who were for conceding at this critical juncture. The unity of the British Empire should, in his opinion, supersede every inferior consideration, because on that its prosperity, stability, and external grandeur immediately depended. He disclaimed, in the name of the King's Ministers, all imputations and insinuations thrown out by a noble Lord. He said he believed the General was as little censurable as they were, and that it was next to impossible to decide on that gentleman's conduct at so great a distance, and without knowing the motives that lead to it.

Earl Gower was well informed that the language now held by the Americans, was the language of the rabble and a few factious leaders; that the Delegates at the Congress were far from expressing the true sense of the respectable part of their constituents; that in many places they were chosen by a kind of force, in which the people of consequence were afraid, unprotected as they were, to interpose; and where it was otherwise, they were borne down by faction in some instances, and perverted by the most false misrepresentations in others; that taking it in either light, the measures proper to be pursued by Great Britain were plain, and did not admit of the least controversy; for either, said, his Lordship, they are disposed as I have now represented, or they are not: if they are, they deserve our utmost protection; if they are not, we should exert and strain every nerve to make them submit. I have all along been of that opinion. I now avow it; and be the event what it may, I never mean to shrink from the consequences of an advice which I am proud to own.

The Marquis of Rockingham observed, that as Ministry had avowed an intention of sending out more Troops to Boston, and as that was a measure totally repugnant to his plan of reconciliation, he was glad of an opportunity of resisting that mischievous and dangerous design of governing the Colonies by force. He said that the Troops which had so idly been sent thither, were, by their instructions, left in so disgraceful a state that he wished them recalled with the utmost possible despatch; and consequently he must be averse to the designs Administration entertained of further exposing our Troops to shame and disgrace; and of course he joined the motion for their recall. He expressed pretty strongly his adherence to his old opinion of the propriety of the Declaratory Act, which he seemed to consider as necessary to the dominion of this country, and no way hurtful to the freedom of America; but he reserved himself to a more proper season for debating that principle, only insisting that the Congress had expressed no dissatisfaction with the Declaratory Act; and he thought it needless to give them more than they desired.

The Duke of Richmond supported Lord Chatham's motion with firmness, and answered his adversaries with accuracy and precision. He contrasted very happily the stubbornness of Ministry in refusing to have the least feeling for the miseries and complaints of British subjects, While they were all awake and full of attention to the most arrogant expectations of foreign Powers; and then mentioned the fact stated by Count De Guines, in his memorial, that the English Ministry, in the question of the Faulkland Islands, had agreed to disarm first.

The Earl of Rochford declared that, upon his honour and conscience, he believed Count De Guines innocent of the infamous charge laid against him; that as to disarming first the Count was mistaken; for that long before he (Lord Rochford) had made the proposal of disarming, he had received a letter from Lord Harcourt informing him that the French had began to disarm; that the proposal he made about disarming, was to do it reciprocally, at a given time; that the object of the armament being at an end, form was not necessary as to the period of disarming, more especially as from all his advices from the King's Ministers abroad, both the French and Spaniards had first began to disarm.

Lord Weymouth opposed the motion. He was for sending Troops to America; but held himself disengaged from co-operating with Administration till he was fully acquainted with the whole train of measures they proposed to adopt, digested into one perfect system; adding, that in his present state of mind, and want of proper knowledge, he did not know if he should even be for augmenting the present military force under General Gage.

The question was then put thereupon:

It was resolved in the Negative. Contents, 18 Non-Contents, 68.

The minority were, Dukes of Cumberland, Richmond, Portland, Manchester, Marquis of Rockingham, Earls Thanet, Abingdon, Fitzwilliam, Tankerville, Stanhope, Spencer, Chatham, Bishop of Exeter, Lords Camden, Wycombe, Ponsonby, Sondes, Grosvenor.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

The Earl of Chatham presented to the House a Bill, entituled "A Provisional Act for settling the Troubles in America, and for asserting the supreme legislative authority and superintending power of Great Britain over "the Colonies".

The Earl of Chatham rose. His Lordship began with reminding the House, that the last time he had the honour of imparting his sentiments to them, he had informed them that with their indulgence he would suborn certain propositionsto their consideration, as a basis for averting the dangers which now threatened the British Empire; and that, in performance of his promise, he had sketched the outlines of a Bill, which he hoped would meet with the approbation of every side of the House. He proceeded to state the urgent necessity of such a plan, as, perhaps, a period of a few hours might forever defeat the possibility of any such conciliatory intervention. He represented Great Britain and America as drawn up in martial array, waiting for the signal to engage in a contest, in which it was little matter for whom victory declared, as ruin and destruction must be the inevitable consequence to both parties. He wished, from a principle of duty and affection, to act the part of a mediator. He said, however, that no regard for popularity, no predilection for his country - not the high esteem he entertained for America on one hand, nor the unalterable steady regard he entertained for the dignity of Great Britain on the other, should at all influence his conduct; for though he loved the Americans as men prizing and setting the just value on that inestimable blessing, liberty, yet, if he could once bring himself to be persuaded, that they entertained the most distant intentions of throwing off the legislative supremacy and great constitutional superintending power and control of the British Legislature, he should be the very person himself who would be the first and most zealous mover for securing and enforcing that power by every possible exertion this country was capable of making. He recurred to his former arguments on the great constitutional question of taxation and representation; insisted the were inseparable, and planted so deeply in the vital principles of the Constitution as never to be torn up, without destroying and pulling asunder every band of legal government and good faith which formed the cement that united its several constituent parts together. He entreated the assistance of the House to digest the crude materials which he presumed to now lay before it, and bring it and reduce it to that form which was suited to the dignity and the importance of the subject, and to the great ends to which it was ultimately directed.

He called on them to exercise their candour on the present occasion, and deprecated the effects of party or prejudice, of factious spleen, or a blind predilection. He avowed himself to be actuated by no narrow principle or personal consideration whatever; for though the present Bill might be looked upon as a bill of concession, it was impossible but to confess at the same time that it was a bill of assertion.

The Earl of Dartmouth observed, that the Bill took in such a variety of matter it was impossible for him to pronounce any certain opinion concerning its propriety; and as the noble Earl who presented it did not seem willing to press the House to any immediate decision, but appeared rather desirous that it should be maturely and fully considered, he supposed it would be quite agreeable to him that the Bill should lie on the table till the papers referred by his Majesty were first taken into consideration; if so, he had no objection to the Bill being received on those terms.

The Bill was then read a first time, viz:

Whereas, by an Act sixth George Third, it is declared that Parliament has full prover and authority to make laws and Statutes to bind the people of the Colonies in all cases whatsoever. And whereas reiterated complaints, and most dangerous disorders have grown, touching the right of Taxation claimed and exercised over America, to the disturbance of peace and good order there, and to the actual interruption of the due intercourse from Great Britain and Ireland to the Colonies, deeply affecting the Navigation, Trade, and Manufactures of this Kingdom and of Ireland, and announcing farther an interruption of all Exports from the said Colonies to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in America: Now, for prevention of these ruinous mischiefs, and in order to an equitable, honourable, and lasting settlement of claims not sufficiently ascertained and circumscribed; may it please your most excellent Majesty that it may be declared, and be it declared by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in thisepresent Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the Colonies of America have been, are, and of right ought to be, dependent upon the Imperial Crown of Great Britain, and subordinate unto the British Parliament; and that the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, had, hath, and of right ought to have, full power and authority to make Laws and Statutes of sufficient force and validity to bind the people of the British Colonies in America, in all matters touching the general weal of the whole Dominion of the Imperial Crown of Great Britain, and beyond the competency of the local representative of a distinct Colony; and most especially an indubitable and indispensable right to make and ordain laws for regulating navigation and trade throughout the complicated system of British Commerce, the deep policy of such prudent acts upholding the guardian Navy of the whole British Empire; and that all subjects in the Colonies are bound in duty and allegiance duly to recognise and obey (and they are hereby required so to do) the supreme Legislative authority and superintending power of the Parliament of Great Britain as aforesaid. And whereas, in a Petition from America to his Majesty, it has been represented that the keeping a Standing Army within any of the Colonies, in time of peace, without consent of the respective Provincial Assembly there, is against law: Be it declared by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, that the Declaration of Right at the ever glorious Revolution, namely, "That the raising and keeping a Standing Army within "the Kingdom, in time of peace, unless it be by consent "of Parliament, is against law,"having reference only to the consent of the Parliament of Great Britain, the legal, constitutional, and hitherto unquestioned prerogative of the crown to send any part of such Army, so lawfully kept, to any of the British Dominions and Possessions, whether in America or elsewhere, as his Majesty, in the due care of his subjects, may judge necessary for the security and protection of the same, cannot be rendered dependent upon the consent of a Provincial Assembly in the Colonies, without a most dangerous innovation and derogation from the dignity of the Imperial Crown of Great Britain. Nevertheless, in order to quiet and dispel groundless jealousies and fears, be it hereby declared, that no Military Force, however raised, and kept according to law, can ever be lawfully employed to violate and destroy the just rights of the people. Moreover, in order to remove forever, all causes of pernicious discords, and in due contemplation of the vast increase of possessions and population in the Colonies, and having at heart to render the condition of so great a body of industrious subjects there more and more happy, by the sacredness of property and of personal liberty, and of more extensive and lasting utility to the parent Kingdom, by indissoluble ties of mutual affection, confidence, trade, and reciprocal benefits, be it declared and enacted, by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and it is hereby declared and enacted, by the authority of the same, that no Tallage, Tax, or other charge for his Majesty's Revenue, shall be commanded or levied, from British freemen in America, without common consent, by Act of Provincial Assembly there, duly convened for that purpose. And it is hereby further declared and enacted, by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall and may be lawful for Delegates from the respective Provinces, lately assembled at Philadelphia, to meet in General Congress at the said Philadelphia, on the 9th day of May next ensuing, in order then and there to take into consideration the making due recognition of the supreme Legislative authority and superintending power of Parliament over the Colonies as aforesaid. And moreover, may it please your most excellent Majesty, that the said Delegates to be in Congress assembled, in manner aforesaid, may be required, and the same are hereby required, by the King's Majesty, sitting in his Parliament, to take into consideration (over and above the usual charge for support of Civil Government in the respective Colonies,) the making a free grant to the King, his heirs and successors, of a certain perpetual Revenue, subject to the disposition* of the British Parliament, to be by them appropriated, as they in their wisdom shall judge fit, to the alleviation of the National debt; no doubt being had but the just, free aid, will be in such honourable proportion as may seem meet and becoming from great and flourishing Colonies towards a parent country, labouring under the heaviest burthens, which, in no inconsiderable part, have been willingly taken upon ourselves and posterity, for the defence, extension, and prosperity of the Colonies. And to this great end, be it further hereby declared and enacted, that the General Congress (to meet at Philadelphia as aforesaid,) shall be, and is hereby authorized and empowered (the Delegates composing the same, being first sufficiently furnished with powers from their respective Provinces for this purpose,) to adjust and fix these partitions and quotas of the several charges to be borne by each Province respectively, towards the general contributory supply; and this, in such fair and equitable measure, as may best suit the abilities and due convenience of all. Provided always, That the powers for fixing the said quotas, hereby given to the Delegates from the old Provinces composing the Congress, shall not extend to the new Provinces of East and West Florida, Georgia, Nova-Scotia, St. Johns, and Canada; the circumstances and abilities of the said Provinces being reserved for the wisdom of Parliament in their due time. And in order to afford necessary time for mature deliberation in America, be it hereby declared, that the provisions for ascertaining and fixing the exercise of the right of taxation in the Colonies, as agreed and expressed by this present Act, shall not be in force, or have any operation, until the Delegates to be in Congress assembled, sufficiently authorized and empowered, by their respective Provinces, to this end, shall, as an indispensable condition, have duly recognized the supreme Legislative authority and superintending power of the Parliament of Great Britain, over the Colonies as aforesaid. Always understood, that the free grant of an aid, as here before required and expected from the Colonies, is not to be considered as a condition of redress, but as a just testimony of their affection. And whereas, divers Acts of Parliament have been humbly represented in a Petition to his Majesty from America, to have been found grievous, in whole or in part, to the subjects of the Colonies, be it hereby declared by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the powers of Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Courts in America, shall be restrained within their ancient limits, and the Trial by Jury, in all civil cases, where the same may have been abolished, restored, and that no subject in America shall, in capital cases, be liable to be indicted and tried for the same, in any place out of the Province, wherein such offence shall be alleged to have been committed, nor be deprived of a trial of his peers of the vicinage: nor shall it be lawful to send persons indicted for murder in any Province of America, to another Colony, or to Great Britain, for trial. And it is hereby declared and enacted, by the authority aforesaid, its operation. And yet, I apprehend it would have proved almost as fatal in its consequences, as the Acts against which we have been so long contending.

The very title conveys a servile idea, offensive to freemen, and in itself, both unjust and impolitic, as it makes an odious distinction between them, tending to produce haughtiness and oppression on one side, servility or resentment on the other, and on both a mutual disgust, which will necessarily lessen the power, security, and happiness of each.

It is true the expression in the Declaratory Act of the Parliamentary power "to bind the Colonies in all cases whatsoever," is changed "to all matters touching the general weal," &c. But since the Parliament are to be the supreme judges of what matters are to come under this description, I see very little security in the distinction, especially as they claim the right of quartering Troops in the Colonies without their consent. Nor would they be secured by the saving clauses in the Bill. But this, in my future remarks upon it, I propose to show, as also, that in many other particulars, it has such an insidious appearance, that I should have thought Lord Bute, Mansfield, North, or Marriot, more likely to be the framers of the Bill, than Lord Chatham. - N. Y. Jour.

* And would not this be an American Land Tax, by the authority of a British Parliament? Would not our enemies, as well as the rest of Europe, ridicule us, for giving into a more pernicious scheme, than we at first opposed? Besides, what can be more insolent, unjust, and cruel, than to tax a people, who are deprived of the means and benefit which Providence intended them, equivalent with their oppressors, who are in the full enjoyment of all their natural rights as a Nation? What think ye, Gentlemen, Farmers, and Landholders, of this honourable scheme? What would the bold and noble asserters of your rights, Lord Camden, Granville Sharpe, and others say, to an acquiescence in such deep laid designs to ruin us?

The above Bill was brought into the House of Lords, the first day of February, and occasion of a long debate, which lasted till ten at night, when, being thought too favourable to the Americans, it was treated with some contempt on that account, and rejected by sixty-eight against thirty-two.

This we have reason to think a happy circumstance for America; for the friendly appearance, and perhaps design of great part of the Bill, would have had a powerful tendency to divide and weaken us, so that if it had passed into a law, We might have been unable to prevent that all and every of the said Acts, or so much thereof as are represented to have been found grievous, namely, the several Acts of the 4th George the Third, chapter 15, and chapter 34; 5th George the Third, chapter 25; 6th George the Third, chapter 52; 7th George the Third, chapter 41 and chapter 46; 8th George the Third, chapter 22; 12th George the Third, chapter 24 - with the three Acts for stopping the Port, and blocking up the Harbour of Boston, for altering the Charter and Government of Massachusetts Bay, and that entitled "An Act for the better Administration of Justice, &c.," also, the Act for regulating the Government of Quebec; and the Act passed in the same session relating to the quarters of Soldiers, shall be, and are hereby suspended, and not to have effect or execution, from the date of this Act. And be it moreover hereby declared and enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all and every the before reeked Acts, or the parts thereof complained of, shall be, and are in virtue of this present Act, finally repealed and annulled, from the day that the due recognition of the supreme Legislative authority and superintending power of Parliament over the Colonies, shall have been made on the part of the said Colonies.

And for the better securing due and impartial administration of justice in the Colonies, be it declared and enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty. by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, that his Majesty's Judges in Courts of Law in the Colonies in America, to be appointed with salaries by the Crown, shall hold their offices and salaries as his Majesty's Judges in England, quamdiu se bene gesserint, and it is hereby further declared, by the authority aforesaid, that the Colonies in America are justly entitled to the privileges, franchises, and immunities granted by their several Charters or Constitutions, and that the said Charters or Constitutions ought not to be invaded or resumed unless for misuser, or some legal ground of forfeiture. So shall true reconciliation avert impending calamities, and this most solemn national accord between Great Britain and her Colonies, stand an everlasting monument of clemency and magnanimity in the benignant father of his people, of wisdom and moderation in this great Nation, famed for humanity as for valour, and of fidelity and grateful affection from brave and loyal Colonies to their parent Kingdom, which will ever protect and cherish them.

The Earl of Sandwich rose, and instantly changed this appearance of concession on the part of Administration. He insisted, that to concede was at once to give up the point; that he was well assured America had already formed the most traitorous and hostile intentions; that the last despatches brought over an account, that they had already attacked and taken one of the King's Forts, and had seized the King's Stores and Ammunition to employ them against him, which, if any thing could be deemed rebellion, it was plain this was. He highly condemned the mode of bringing this Bill forward, and every circumstance attending it; and observed, with no small degree of warmth, that it was no less unparliamentary than unprecedented. He said it was impossible, on so short a notice, to determine on a matter of such singular importance, so extensive in its objects, and so novel in its introduction. As to the stale pretension of preserving our commercial interests, that device could impose on none but those who were wilfully blind, and who were resolved to contradict the plainest evidence of facts, and shut their eyes against reason and common sense; for it was clear the Americans were not disputing about words, but realities; it was to free themselves from the restrictions laid on their commerce, that was the principal motive for their present obedience; it was not the Tea they really objected; for if they could procure it from any other place but Britain, they would be well pleased, of which he had the most undeniable proof in his pocket, in authentick letters, informing him, that there were Ships now lading at Amsterdam, Port l' Orient, and Haere-de-Grace, with various sorts of East India and European commodities, intended for certain parts of the Continent of North America. His Lordship therefore moved, "that the said Bill be rejected."

Lord Lyttelton set out with the highest encomiums on the great abilities and high political knowledge of the noble Earl who framed the Bill, He said his knowledge was as extensive as his intentions were good and great; that in the most trying situations, when the Nation was reduced nearly to desperation and despair, he stood forth alone, on the dangerous ocean of politics, and rescued the Nation from the ruin which was suspended over its head. For these reasons, as well as the particular merit of the proposition now made, be thought both the mover and the matter deserved a more favourable reception. He said, though he could not probably agree with the noble Earl in many of his ideas, particularly relative to the repeal of the Quebec Bill, which was included in those mentioned in the Petition of the American Congress to the King, he must still Continue to think it was extremely improper at once to reject and put a negative on a proposition, which carried on the face of it a plan of reconciliation; and made an opening for changing negotiation for the sword. He avowed his former sentiments respecting the supremacy of the British Parliament; but would gladly enjoy all the substantial fruits of that supremacy, in the way of obedience and submission, in preference to wresting them by force and violence. His Lordship then proceeded to animadvert on the conduct of Administration, and on their manifest misconduct respecting the insufficiency of the force sent to Boston; but was called to order by the Earl of Sandwich; who was also called to order by the Duke of Richmond. His grace insisted Lord Lyttelton ought not to have been interrupted. Lord Lyttelton concluded with a simile drawn from the Roman history, where a General, in the time of Augustus, being sent with a force against the Germans, not adequate to the service, the General, with all his Army, were unhappily cut off. When Augustus heard of it, his observation was, that such a force should have been sent as would have ensured success.

The Earl of Shelburne disclaimed the least knowledge of the contents of the Bill till it was read by the Clerk. He was extremely animated, and painted in the strongest colours, the probable consequences of pushing matters to extremities. A ruined Commerce, starving Manufacturers, increased Taxes, heavy Poor-Rates, Rents fallen, an exhausted Exchequer, and a diminished Revenue, were some of the first effects he predicted, that would inevitably follow from adopting the measures of Administration. His Lordship proceeded to take notice of another matter which had been hitherto overlooked, but which deserved the most serious consideration. It was well known, that the vast supplies of Bread-Corn brought into this Kingdom from America, would now of course be stopped; and that again would add to all our other accumulated misfortunes, riots and tumults of the most alarming and dangerous nature. People must eat, and it would be impossible to reconcile them to measures which would at once cut them off from procuring the necessaries of life, unless at a most exorbitant and advanced price, and the means of purchasing them at almost any price. He ventured to speak with the more confidence of what might be justly dreaded on this occasion, because, when only one part of the case existed, a scarcity of Grain in 1766, when he had the honour of acting as one of his Majesty's Secretaries of State, he well remembered the dreadful alarms that were spread on account of the risings and tumultuous meetings in almost every part of the Kingdom. One day an express arrived from Norwich, another from the inland Counties, to which Troops were sent to quell the Rioters; the next day, one from Southampton and the Western Counties, and a fourth from Chester and the North. I would have these things maturely considered and weighed, said his Lordship. All the Troops now in Great Britain and Ireland, would scarcely suffice to put the proposed measures in execution. Think, then, in time; Ireland naked and defenceless, England in an uproar from one end to the other for want of bread, and destitute of employment. Besides all this, is there then a noble Lord in Administration who will rise and tell me, that he seriously thinks, the powers of Europe, particularly those whose commercial interests and Naval power clash with ours, will sit totally unconcerned, and let slip so favourable an opportunity of humbling that power, and hurting those interests? I cannot believe there is. Perhaps Administration trust to the assurances of the r inveterate enemies and false friends; if they do, all I will add is, that I sincerely pity them.

The Duke of Grafton complained severely of the very unparliamentary manner in which the noble Earl had hurried the Bill into the House. He said, he had the honour of sitting there longer than the noble Earl, and within his recollection he could safely affirm, he never remembered another instance of the kind. For his part, he was astonished how any matter so important in its nature, so extensive in its consequences, and directed to such a variety of objects, each of them worthy of a separate consideration, could be thus brought forward together, and in such a manner. In his opinion, the matter should have been laid before the House, in separate propositions, each of which should be singly discussed, as leading to one great comprehensive system. His own opinion respecting the general question, was, he said, perhaps different from that entertained by either party. When it came before the House regularly, and in a proper mode, he should declare it freely and openly, without reserve or predilection for the sentiments of any set of men; but when he considered the manner of introducing it, and the immense mass of matter it contained, however highly he might estimate the talents of the noble framer, or great a personal regard he might entertain for him, he must be for rejecting the Bill in the first instance.

Earl Gower rose in a great heat, and condemned the Bill in the warmest terms. He contended, that it fell in with the ideas of America in almost every particular, and held out no one security, that although we should be base and dastardly enough to betray the rights of the Parliament of Great Britain, America would agree to such parts of it as the noble Lord seemed to point out as matters of submission or concession but above all, it not only sanctified the traitorous proceeding of the Congress already held, but further legalized it, by ordaining, that another shall be held on the 9th of May next. He then endeavoured to prove that suspending the Acts mentioned in the Bill, would be to every substantial purpose an actual repeal. He defended those Acts one after another; and insisted, that the Act of Navigation would be of no avail, would be no more than a dead letter, if the laws for establishing the Admiralty Courts were repealed; for to talk of laws for restricting and regulating their commerce without the means of enforcing and executing them, was a mere mockery of reason and common sense. He next launched into great encomiums on the Quebec Bill; spoke much of its lenity, moderation, justice, and policy; said it was a measure no less founded in wisdom and justice, than its apparent policy, considering the rebellious temper of the Colonies was properly directed. He repeated what he had advanced on a former occasion, that those of the best characters and greatest property throughout the Colonies, were well inclined to obedience and submission to the mother country, that all they wanted to manifest their zeal and attachment was to be protected; that were it otherwise, Great Britain was called upon by every tie of interest, every motive of dignity, and every principle of good government, to assert its Legislative supremacy entire and undiminished. He avowed his advising every measure hitherto taken against them; and said he did not mean to screen himself from any consequence whatever, but was prepared for the worst, and ready to face the block in such a cause. He observed that the noble Earl who framed the Bill, seemed to entertain the highest opinion of the prowess of the Americans, and to lament greatly the cruelty and injustice of sending a military force against them; yet he remembered the time the noble Earl entertained very different sentiments on an occasion of infinitely less provocation, when he advised their Ports to be filled with Ships-of-War, and their Towns with Soldiers; adding, that an Ensign, with a few Regiments, would reduce them to instant obedience.

Here he was interrupted by the Earl of Chatham, who called on him to name the time and place. Earl Gower was proceeding, but was again called on to specify the time and place; on which, he said, it was in a debate in the other House.

The Earl of Chatham condemned such a procedure in very severe terms; said it was not decent or Parliamentary to mention words spoken out of the House; or if it were, to advert to some particular expressions, which could not be understood without referring them to the other parts of the speech; and in fact, that the noble Earl was mistaken, for no such expressions had ever fallen from him, as he knew too well, by his acquaintance with the force employed during the late war in America, which was not less than forty thousand men, that an Ensign with a few Regiments could not reduce British America, when the part possessed by France of that Continent, which was not a third of the former, employed so great a force for full five years, under the command of one of the ablest Generals in Europe, Sir Jeffery Amherst. This altercation being finished, Earl Gower declared, in the most unreserved terms, for reducing the Americans to submission, and gave his hearty concurrence to the Earl of Sandwich's amendment.

Lord Camden argued the matter generally, and challenged Administration to a full discussion of every separate proposition. He could answer for himself, he dared say he could answer for every noble Lord on the same side, that they never meant to consider so as to decide on the subject-matter in this stage of the business. It was not, he was certain, ever intended. I am not, said his Lordship, by any means prepared to speak fully to any one material part of it; but if, as is always usual on such occasions, they are determined to consider it and to enter into a candid examination, I here pledge myself to prove every leading proposition on which the Bill rests, particularly the main one, which in a great measure includes all the rest, the rescinding the Declaratory Law, asserting that the British Parliament can bind the Colonies in all cases whatsoever. On that ground I am ready to meet my antagonists; and if that argument falls, they must, it is evident, give way. I will maintain the negative on the great principles of the Law and the Constitution, and prove, that in no one stage of the Constitution, were taxation and representation ever separated; and that even in the case of the County Palatines, the very arguments deduced from the exercise of taxing them before they were represented, will incontrovertibly demonstrate, that legislation and taxation are neither co-extensive nor co-equal.

The Earl of Chatham replied to the several objections which fell from the Lords in Administration. He descanted with equal burnout and severity upon the very extraordinary logick employed by the noble Duke, his quondam colleague in office, and very humble servant. The noble Duke, said his Lordship, is extremely angry with me, that I did not previously consult him on the bringing in the present Bill. I would ask the noble Duke, does he consult me, or do I desire to be previously told of any motions or measures he thinks fit to propose to this House? His Grace seems to be much offended at the manner this Bill has been hurried. I am certain he could not be serious, if he gave himself a minute to consider how the case really stands. Here we are told that America is in a state of actual rebellion, and we are now arrived at the first of February, and no one step is taken to crush this supposed rebellion; yet, such being the case, I am charged with hurrying matters; but whether my conduct may be more justly charged with hurrying this business into, or his Grace with hurrying it Out of the House, I believe requires no great depth of penetration to discover. As to the other general objections, I presume it will be recollected, that the last day I submitted the proposition about withdrawing the Troops from Boston, I then gave notice that I would present, in a few days, a plan of general reconciliation. Eleven days have since elapsed, and nothing has been offered by the King's servants. Under such circumstances of emergency on one side, when, perhaps, a single day may determine the fate of this great Empire, and such a shameful negligence, total inattention, and want of ability on the other, what was to be done? No other alternative, in my opinion, remained, but either to abandon the interests of my country, and relinquish my duty, or to propose some plan, when Ministry, by their inaction and silence, owned themselves incapable of proposing any. But even now let them speak out and tell me that they have a plan to lay before us, and I will give them an example of candour they are by no means deserving of, by instantly withdrawing the present Bill. The indecent attempt to stifle this measure in embryo, may promise consequences the very reverse of what I am certain will be the case if the Bill is admitted. The friends of the present amendment may flatter themselves that the contents of the Bill will sink into silence and be forgotten, but I believe they will find the contrary. This Bill, though rejected here, will make its way to the publick - to the Nation - to the remotest wilds of America,

It will, in such a course, undergo a deal of cool observation and investigation, and whatever its merits or demerits may be, it will stand or fall by them alone; it will, I trust, remain a monument of my poor endeavours to serve my country; and, however faulty or defective, will at least manifest how zealous I have been to avert those impending storms which seem ready to burst on it, and forever overwhelm it in ruin. Yet, when I consider the whole case as it lies before me, I am not much astonished; I am not surprised, that men who hate liberty should detest those that prize it; or that those who want virtue themselves, should endeavour to persecute those who possess it. Were I disposed to pursue this theme to the extent that truth would fully bear me out in, I could demonstrate, that the whole of our political conduct has been one continued series of weakness, temerity, despotism, ignorance, futility, negligence, blundering, and the most notorious servility, incapacity, and corruption. On reconsideration, I must allow you one merit a strict attention to your own interests; in that view you appear sound statesmen and able politicians. You well know if the present measure should prevail, that you must instantly relinquish your places. I doubt much whether you will be able to keep them on any terms; but sure I am, that such is your well known characters and abilities, any plan of reconciliation, however moderate, wise, and feasible, must fail in your hands. Such, then, being your precarious situations, who can wonder that you should put a negative on any measure which must annihilate your power, deprive you of your emoluments, and at once reduce you to that state of insignificance for which God and nature designed you.

Earl Gower answered with strong marks of resentment. He said, let the Bill make its way where it might, he was ready to abide the consequences; that he did not doubt but sufficient industry would be exerted to circulate its contents; and that however zealous some persons might be to inflame the people both here and in America, it should not have the least effect on his conduct. He was determined to adhere to the true interests of his country, and the dignity of Parliament; and to stand with them to the last, or perish in the ruins; nor should the terrors of the block itself oblige him to change his purpose. As to the general charges thrown out against Administration by the noble Earl, it was time enough to answer them when he pointed them in such a manner as to call for defence or explanation; that till then they were unworthy of reply, as the persons included in such a censure only shared the fate of all other Administrations he ever remembered since his first knowledge of publick business, his Lordship having uniformly condemned them, though he afterwards thought proper to act with their authors; and if the noble Earl's age did not stand in the way, he had no doubt but that, on the present occasion, his Lordship would give one more proof of his change of sentiment, by warmly espousing the very measures he now so loudly condemned.

The Earl of Hillsborough was severe on the noble framer of the Bill. He spoke fully on legislation, as involving in it every possible power and exercise of Civil Government. He contended that his Lordship's computation of the numbers in America, who were ready to dispute the supremacy of Parliament, was extremely erroneous; that if that country contained three millions of people, he would be bold to say, from his own certain knowledge of their temper and disposition, that one-third at least were willing to submit to the Parliament of Great Britain; that out of the remainder the women, children, and old men, could not be deemed fit to bear arms; so that the noble Earl's facts were no less erroneous than his arguments, when he said that three millions of men, with arms in their hands, would never consent to be taxed by the Legislature of this country. He next endeavoured to correct a mistake of the same noble Earl, where he asserted that French America took forty thousand men to reduce it; being satisfied, he said, that at no one time were there above twelve thousand regular Troops employed on that service. He next defended the Declaratory Law. but insisted that it conferred no new right, for if it had never passed, the Legislative supremacy of Parliament would have remained the same; and concluded with holding out the favourable disposition of Administration towards the Colonies, when they manifested a suitable temper on their part, which could never be till they submitted to the great constitutional claims of the British Legislature.

The Duke of Richmond took a comprehensive view of the question, he examined the Bills mentioned in the claim of rights, one by one, and showed with great ability the foundations on which they rested. He dwelt particularly on the Acts for establishing Courts of Admiralty, and for altering the Charter of the Massachusetts Bay. He said the former erected a jurisdiction, the Judges of which were interested in the decision; and the latter, under the colour of constituting Juries on the plan of those in England. lodged the power of selecting persons fit to serve, in an officer called a Sheriff, it was true, but an officer at the same time as little known in our Constitution, as any Turkish or Russian Magistrate; an English Sheriff being irremovable by any power under Heaven, but for malversation in office, while a Sheriff in the Province of Massachusetts Bay is to be removable by his Majesty, his Governour, or Deputy Gouverneur, by which means the Executive power has virtually the appointing of Juries, and consequently the lives, fortunes, and personal liberty of the subjects of that Province, totally at their disposal and mercy; a state of subjugation, he hoped, no Englishman would ever be so mean, slavish, or servile to submit to. He then insisted that the Administration had uniformly, for a number of years back, endeavoured to deceive the Colonies; that they had so repeatedly violated their most solemn promises, that all confidence was at an end; that out of numberless instances, he should only select one, which was the letter written by the very noble Earl himself, (Earl of Hillsborough) accompanying the Revenue Act, wherein he pledged himself, by the most solemn assurances, that they were mere matter of form, and were meant to be immediately repealed, being intended as a nominal assertion of the Declaratory Law, passed in 1766. [Here his Grace was called to order by the Earl of Hillsborough, who insisted that the promise contained in the letter was not broken, his Grace contended it was, and said he would appeal to the letter itself, which he desired might be read. It was not however read.] His Grace proceeded to recount the particulars relative to that transaction, how the Duties on Paper, Painters' Colours, and Glass, were repealed, in a pretended performance of that promise, while that on Tea, the cause of all the present confusions, was continued. He then turned to the avowed firmness of a noble Earl, high in office, (Earl Gower) who seemed so willing to court danger, to face the block, and fall with the ruins of the Constitution, or triumph in its constitutional maintenance. He comforted the noble Earl with the strongest assurances of his being in no danger; for it was easily avoided, by only at a convenient time altering his opinion; to prove which he would take the liberty of adverting to a particular fact which came within his own knowledge. And then he jocularly observed, that how ever small the minority might appear on the present question, he had seen as small hourly increase till it became the majority; and then told the following anecdote, which happened when Lord Bute was at the head of the Treasury, to prove it: "I remember, said his Grace, at that period, a Bill was brought into this House to prevent the Members from being screened from their debts. I heartily acceded to this Bill upon principle, and had the honour of being joined by the noble Lord then at the head of the Treasury. On the division, the Noes as usual went below the bar, when, missing their leader, they turned short, and were much surprised to see him on the other side. The late Charles Townshend remarked upon this circumstance, that he would hold two to one, in less than a year those very Members who divided against him, would creep under the table to join him. Had he been taken up he would have won the wager." He next reminded the noble Earl (Gower) of an instance of his docility which came more directly home to him, as being personally concerned. It was in the year 1766, before Christmas, when a noble friend of his (the late Duke of Bedford) made a motion for taking into consideration the state of the Nation. He doubted not but the noble Earl was to the full as ready to face the block then as now, in support of what he deemed his duty; but what was the consequence? The noble Earl, the author of the present Bill, having in the interim met him at Bath, and having had some conversation with him, the Parliament was adjourned to the day after the state of the Nation was to be taken into consideration; all inquiry was at an end, and the Nation left to shift for itself.

The Duke of Manchester lamented, in a very sensible manner, the present situation of affairs, and the dangerous consequences of a civil war, which he feared would terminate as the social war among the Romans did, in the inevitable destruction of the whole Empire. He was moderate, pathetick, and drew the attention of every side of the House. He did not pretend to determine on the contents of the present Bill, nor adopt it throughout; all he wished was, that one sober view should be taken of the great question, before, perhaps, we blindly rushed into a scene of confusion and civil strife, the event of which it was impossible to foresee.

Earl Temple said that he had never given, in publick or private, a decided opinion whether it was wise or not to pass the Stamp Act; but that he was abundantly convinced that all the evils and distractions now complained of were derived from the fatal repeal of it; that the Bills of last year were more exceptionable as to the mode than as to the matter. He said nothing with regard to the contents of the Bill which had been read, and finished with expressing his disapprobation of rejecting in so harsh and unprecedented a manner a Bill designed for the most salutary purposes, and presented to their Lordships by a hand so truly respectable as that of his noble friend and relation; this reason alone deciding upon his vote.

The question upon Lord Sandwich's motion was then put: Contents 61; Non-Contents 32.

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That the said Bill be rejected.

List of the Minority.

DUKES.--Cumberland, Richmond, Devonshire, Portland, Manchester, Northumberland.

MARQUISS.--Rockingham.

EARLS.--Stamford, Abingdon, Scarborough, Cholmondeley, Stafford, Tankerville, Stanhope, Effingham, Fitzwilliam, Temple, Radnor, Spencer, Chatham.

LORDS.--Abergavenny, Ferrers, Craven, Romney, King, Fortescue, Ponsonby, Lytteton, Wycombe (Earl of Shelburne,) Sondes, Milton, Camden.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, January 19, 1775.

The Lord North presented to the House; by his Majesty's command, the following Papers.--[See Folio 1489.]

And a list of the said Papers was read.

Mr. Burke observed, there were no letters from Maryland, and desired the noble Lord would inform the House whether any had been received, or whether they were kept back for political reasons; and whether these papers contained all the intelligence the Ministers had received from America.

Lord North replied, that he had brought the papers, but had not examined them; neither did he know whether there were any letters from Maryland, or not; that if there were any, they should be laid before the House. As to the papers containing all the intelligence from America, he would not undertake to say they did, as those he had brought were extracts, containing only the facts in the Original letters; that the authors' opinions were not mentioned, it having been frequently found that the private opinions of people in office being made publick, had been attended with bad consequences, therefore his Majesty's servants had determined, for the future, never to mention the private opinion of any person.

Mr. Burke said, that in some cases it might be proper to keep secret the private opinion of a person; yet, in so critical and alarming affair as that of America, the opinion of a man in power, on the spot, must be of great service; he therefore was of opinion that the whole of the information received from America ought to be laid before the House, and not extracts of particular letters, such as suited the Ministers' purpose.

Lord North moved that the said Papers be referred to the consideration of a Committee of the Whole House, on the 26th.

Ordered, That the said Papers be referred to the consideration of a Committee of the Whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the said Papers.

MONDAY, January 23, 1775.

Mr. Alderman Hayley said he had a Petition from the Merchants of the City of London concerned in the commerce to North America, to that Honourable House, and desired leave to present the same; which being given, it was brought and read, viz:

To the Honourable the Commons of GREAT BRITAIN, in Parliament assembled:

The humble Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of LONDON, concerned in the Commerce of NORTH AMERICA, sheweth:

That your Petitioners are all essentially interested in the trade to North America, either as Exporters or Importers, or as Venders of British and foreign Goods for exportation to that country.

That your Petitioners have exported, or sold for exportation, to the British Colonies in North America, very large quantities of the Manufactures of Great Britain and Ireland; and in particular the staple articles of Woollen, Iron, and Linen; also those of Cotton, Silk, Leather, Pewter, Tin, Copper, and Brass, with almost every British Manufacture; also large quantities of foreign Linens, and other articles imported into these Kingdoms from Flanders, Holland, Germany, the East Countries, Portugal, Spain and Italy, which are generally received from those countries in return for British Manufactures.

That your Petitioners have likewise exported, or sold for exportation, great quantities of the various species of Goods imported into this Kingdom from the East Indies, part of which receive additional manufacture in Great Britain.

That your Petitioners received returns from North America to this Kingdom, directly, Pig and Bar Iron, Timber, Staves, Naval Stores, Tobacco, Rice, Indigo, Deer and other Skins, Beaver and Furs, Train Oil, Whalebone, Bees-wax, Pot and Pearl Ashes, Drugs and Dying Woods, with some Bullion; and also Wheat, Flour, Indian Corn, and salted provisions, when (on account of scarcity in Great Britain) those articles are permitted to be imported.

That your Petitioners receive returns circuitously from Ireland (for Flax-seed, &c., exported from North America) by Bills of Exchange on the Merchants of this City trading to Ireland, for the proceeds of Linens, &c., imported into these Kingdoms. From the West Indies (in return for Provisions, Lumber, and Cattle exported from North America for the use and support of the West India Islands) by Bills of Exchange on the West India Merchants for the proceeds of Sugar, Molasses, Rum, Cotton, Coffee, and other produce imported from those Islands into these Kingdoms. From Italy, Spain, Portugal, France, Flanders, Germany, Holland, and the East Countries, by Bills of Exchange, or Bullion, in return for Wheat, Flour, Rice, Indian Corn, Fish, and Lumber exported from the British Colonies of North America for the use of those countries.

That your Petitioners have great reason to believe, from the best information they can obtain, that on the balance of this extensive commerce, there is now due from the Colonies in North America, to this City only, two millions sterling, and upwards.

That by the direct commerce with the Colonies, and the circuitous trade thereon depending, some thousands of Ships and Vessels are employed, and many thousands of Seamen are bred and maintained, thereby increasing the Naval strength and power of Great Britain.

That in the year 1765 there was a great stagnation of the commerce between Great Britain and her Colonies in consequence of an Act of Parliament, entituled "An "Act for granting and applying certain Stamp Duties, and "other Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in "America,"&c.,* by which the Merchants trading to North America, and the Artificers employed in the various Manufactures consumed in those countries were subjected to many hardships.

That in the following year the said Act was repealed, under an express declaration of the Legislature, that "the continuance of the said Act would be attended with many inconveniences, and might be productive of consequences greatly detrimental to the commercial interests of these Kingdoms;"† upon which repeal the trade to the British Colonies immediately resumed its former flourishing state.

That in the year 1767 an Act passed, entitled "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and "Plantations in America;"‡ which imposed certain Duties to be paid in America on Tea, Glass, Red and White Lead, Painters' Colours, Paper, Pasteboard, Millboard, and Scaleboard; when the commerce with the Colonies were again interrupted.

That in the year 1770, such parts of the said Act as imposed Duties on Glass, Red and White Lead, Painters' Colours, Paper, Pasteboard, Millboard, and Scaleboard, were repealed, § when the trade to America soon revived, except in the article of Tea, on which a Duty was continued to be demanded on its importation into America, whereby that branch of our commerce was nearly lost.

That in the year 1773, an Act passed, entitled "An Act to allow a drawback of Duties of Customs on the exportation of Tea to his Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in America, and to empower the Commissioners of the Treasury to grant Licenses to the East India Company to export Tea, duty free,"&c. !!

By the operation of these and other laws the minds of his Majesty's subjects in the British Colonies have been greatly disquieted; a total stop is now put to the export trade with the greatest and most important part of North America; the publick revenue is threatened with a large and fatal diminution; your Petitioners with grievous distress, and thousands of industrious Artificers and Manufacturers with utter ruin. Under these alarming circumstances, your Petitioners receive no small comfort from a persuasion that the Representatives of the people, newly delegated to the most important of all trusts, will take the whole of these weighty matters into their most serious consideration; and your Petitioners humbly crave this Honourable House that they will enter into a full and immediate examination of that system of commercial policy which was formerly adopted and uniformly maintained, to the happiness and advantage of both countries, and will apply such healing remedies as can alone restore and establish the commerce between Great Britain and her Colonies on a permanent foundation.

And your Petitioners also humbly pray that they may be heard, by themselves or Agents, in support of this Petition.

Mr. Alderman Harley expressed his wishes for a speedy reconciliation with America, and moved "That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command, and that the Petitioners be admitted to be heard, by themselves or Agents, before the said Committee, upon the said Petition, if they think fit."

Sir W. Meredith said, that as the worthy Alderman, whose rank stands so high, and whose character is so honourably distinguished in the list of Merchants, had expressed his wishes not only for a reconciliation, but for a speedy reconciliation with America, he submitted to his judgment whether a speedy reconciliation was practicable or consistent with such a length of inquiry as his motion led to; that of all the evils American Merchants now suffer, suspense is the greatest; that he trusted the Committee already appointed would make the removal of that suspense the first object of their consideration and their care; at least, he hoped that the hands of Government might not be tied up, nor the powers of Parliament restrained from giving that speedy relief which the pressure of affairs requires; that there is still some hope left, that the flames in America may be quenched, if proper and effectual means are speedily applied, but the task will every hour become more and more difficult, and if protracted to the long period, which the proposed inquiry may lead to, impracticable. He should be very sorry to take upon himself the consequences of exposing the situations of private Merchants to publick view, especially at this juncture; but, if they really desired an inquiry into their affairs, he himself would give his time, his labour, and every possible assistance to it; but hoped such an inquiry might not be made use of to defeat every good intention, and clog every salutary measure that might be proposed in the present Committee; he should therefore recommend it to the House to appoint a separate Committee for the consideration of the Merchants' Petition, and for that purpose move an amendment, to leave out, between the word "of" and the word "Committee," the word "the," and insert "a" instead thereof; and to leave out the words "to whom it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command."

Mr. Burke was glad to hear the right honourable gentleman talk of a speedy reconciliation, and therefore must conclude that the price of his bargain with the Minister when he went over to his party, was a speedy reconciliation; yet, at the same time, he was sorry to see how knavish the noble Lord had been, for instead of putting into his hand the reconciliatory measures, he had slipped into his hand a wand, which wand was now become one of the main pillars of Administration. He proceeded to shew how materially the trade and commerce with America ought to be considered before any decisive steps were taken, and declared himself totally ignorant that the Committee appointed for the 26th, were to take into consideration the papers only which lay on the table; he insisted, that every information possible would add to the despatch, and not to the delay of a reconciliation; that as the noble Lord (North) had denied them the opinions of persons on the spot, the Committee could not receive more material information than from the Merchants trading thither, who were greatly interested in the welfare of the Colonies; that if there was not time sufficient to settle the American business, was not the noble Lord in fault in adjourning a month to eat mince-pies and drink Christmas ale, when so material a question was depending? He called the proposed Committee a Coventry Committee, in allusion to a well known practice by which a troublesome person is voted to be sent to Coventry, whereby, without turning him out of company, he is wholly excluded from all attention; he may be ridiculed and laughed at, and cannot interfere in his own detente. He also called it a Committee of Oblivion, consigning every thing the Merchants could allege to entire oblivion. He congratulated the Minister on such a friend as Sir William; the Merchants on such an able and powerful advocate; the Cabinet on such a Counsellor; the right honourable gentleman himself on such a patron; and the King and Parliament on the happiness of baying so respectable a person in a situation to reciprocally impart the desires and wishes of either party to each other. He prophesied the most salutary effects from so happy a beginning. He compared the right honourable gentleman to Sampson, and the Ministers, and the friends of the Declaratory Act, and all the Revenue Acts, to the Philistines; and supposed himself to be involved in the ruin which must follow from pulling down the pillars which had supported the system of destructive policy and oppression, which the right honourable gentleman contended ought to have been resisted. In a word, he turned, twisted, metamorphosed, and represented every thing which the right honourable gentleman had advanced into so many ridiculous forms, that the House was kept in a continued roar of laughter.

Sir Gilbert Elliot replied to Mr. Burke, and ironically complimented him; but begged leave to differ from him as to the matter in debate. He observed, that the Committee appointed for the 26th was intended to consider of the papers, in order to come to some speedy resolution suited to the dignity of Parliament, and the present situation of affairs in America; that the great variety of facts, and mass of matter which would come of course under consideration in the Committee to which the Petition must be referred, would be a work of great and laborious toll; and that the views and objects of the inquiry, originating with the papers, and the Petition being totally distinct in their nature, the determinations and execution arising from both must be different.

* Geo. 3. c. 12. † 6 Geo. 3. c. 11. ‡ 7 Geo. 3. c. 3, c. 46.

§ 10 Geo. 3. c. 17. !! 13 Geo. 3. c. 44.

Mr. T. Townshend contended that it would be fairer, and more manly, to reject the Petition at once, than thus endeavour to defeat it; that the pretence of appointing a Committee was but a mere evasion; and that, indeed, as much had been already avowed by the right honourable Member who proposed the amendment, who pointed out so late as the month of June before it could be supposed capable of determining or coming to any resolution.

Lord Clare was for not submitting to the Americans in the least, and ridiculed the opinion of those who said we had a right to tax America, yet ought not to exercise it. He was warmly for the amendment. He said if we were resolved to sacrifice the supremacy of Parliament, he would much readier consent to it on any other ground than that which the present Petition would lead to, as this would be an inexhaustible source of applications of the same nature; for whenever the Americans had any point to gain, let it be ever so unreasonable, all they had to do was to refuse to pay their debts, to threaten to stop all commercial intercourse with us, and their business would be done; if, therefore, we were to submit, let us fairly give up the point at once; let us sooner even become their vassals, than remain open to demands which could have no bounds, and must be irresistible when they were brought forward in the present form.

Mr. Charles Fox, in favour of the Americans, repeatedly called on Lord North to know who was the man that advised the late Acts, for it was he who had created the disturbances, it was he who had placed General Gage and his Troops in the ridiculous situation in which they were, and it was he who ought to answer to his country for the mischief and expense that might ensue. He attacked the Minister violently; pointed out his delays before Christmas, and his speed after: he said the Committee meant no more than a mere farce to delude the Merchants, as he was certain nothing serious was intended.

Lord J. Cavendish was for the Petition being heard with the papers, and condemned Lord North for his behaviour in bringing in estimates at the beginning of the session before he knew the expense which would be necessary; that it was a deceit to the country gentlemen, who retired into the country satisfied with the estimate at first, and who never imagined there would be any further sum required; that the noble Lord was pressed, and ought to have laid before the House the papers before the holidays, as he was desired.

Lord North defended the delay before the holidays chiefly on two grounds: first, for want of necessary information; secondly, because he understood from several persons, who pretended to know it, that the Address from the Continental Congress to the King was of that conciliatory nature as to make way for healing, lenient measures. As to the question before the House, besides repeating the very great delays which the matters contained in the Petition would probably occasion, it could not with the least colour of propriety, be considered with the papers; one being simply an object of commerce, the other clearly a matter of policy. He said, his reasons for not laying the papers before the House sooner was on account of what the Americans called a Congress, but what he called an illegal and reprehensible meeting, not being finished; and that he was informed a Petition would be sent from them to the Throne, which would reconcile all matters in an amicable manner.

Sir George Macartney was severe against the Petition, though, he said, he wished to be thought a friend to so respectable a body as the Petitioners: Petitions were generally framed, he said, and brought about by some interested persons who had artifice enough to induce others to sign them.

Captain Luttrell. I have listened with attention to this debate, in hopes of receiving such instruction as might enable me to judge which way of acting will be most conducive to the welfare of America and this country, sir, I am sorry to find such a variety of opinions prevail amongst us, as makes it very difficult to determine what measures are likely to prove the most salutary; but being neither willing to be led astray by the oratory of one man, or the party zeal of another, I feel a wish to consider this Petition on the day moved for, and to pursue an opinion I have adopted from my own personal knowledge of the Americans, their country and their coasts. Sir, that the Colonies are inseparably united to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, I trust will never be denied by the friends of either clime; but though it has been asserted, America can subsist without our commerce, I believe nobody will say she can flourish without our protection. If we abandon her to her present miserable situation she must soon sue to us or to some other Power for succour. Insecure in their lives and properties, the Americans must, ere long, experience the fatal consequences of being exposed to the depredations of marauders and lawless ruffians; they will soon cry aloud for the re-establishment of those judicial authorities that have been imprudently overturned, and which are necessary, not only to the welfare, but to the very existence of the subject, among the rudest nations of the globe. Sir, I fear, indeed, the Americans at this hour cannot properly be styled the most civilized people in the known world; but an unfortunate fatality seems to have awaited that unhappy country for a series of years past. The late war was scarce at an end before you put a total stop to their trade with the Spanish West Indies. 'Tis true, it was, strictly speaking, illicit, but it was very beneficial to them, for from thence they got their specie. Then, sir, as if you meant to add insult to bad policy, no sooner had you deprived them of the means of assisting you, but you ungenerously imposed the right of taxation. Sir, if such a power is vested in the British Parliament, you have mistaken the season to exercise it; but I never can consider that we, who are many of us strangers to the resources of that country and its produce, are competent judges which of their commodities can best bear the burden of taxation. Sir, those that are acquainted with America know as well as I do, that from Rhode-Island northwards they have no money; that their trade is generally carried on by barter, from the most opulent Merchant to the necessitous Husbandman. Sir, before your Fleets and Armies visited their coasts, you might almost as soon have raised the dead as one hundred Pounds in specie from any individual in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay. Then, sir, let us suppose the Americans to be the most tractable, the most loyal of all the King's subjects, with every good inclination to pay obedience to the mandates of the mother country, where are their abilities to comply with your present demands? For my part, I know but one method by which you can possibly put America into a situation to assist this country; agree with her upon a fair and certain subsidy to be paid you annually; wait with patience the arrival of her merchandises here, and the sale of them also; then, and not till then, their money will be forthcoming to pay you. Sir, such are my present sentiments with respect to the situation of our Colonies at this important crisis; but I will hope for better days, and better information; because I wish to be convinced that neither America: nor this country are in danger of being undone.

Lord Stanley, for a young speaker, acquitted himself very decently. He expatiated largely on the legislative supremacy and omnipotence of Parliament; spoke much of treason, rebellion, coercion and firmness; and insisted, that if we gave way to their present temper, the consequence would probably be their desiring a repeal of the Navigation Act, and every other Act on our Statute Books that in the least degree affected them.

Mr. Adam and Mr. Innis also spoke for the amendment; Governour Johnstone and Alderman Sawbridge against it.

And then the question being put, that the word "the" stand part of the question; the House divided, Yeas, 81; Noes, 197.

So it passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the word "a" be inserted instead thereof;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

And the question being put, that the words "to whom" it is referred to consider of the several Papers which "were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command," stand part of the question;

It passed in the Negative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of a Committee of the Whole House; and that the Petitioners be admitted to be heard by themselves or Agents, before the said Committee, upon the said Petition, if they think fit.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Friday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the said Petition.

Mr. Burke, then, in a very severe speech, which he pointed chiefly at Lord North, condemned the behaviour of Administration in this business; declaring that they had, for decency's sake, admitted the Petition, yet had determined that it should never be heard. He said he had a Petition in his hand from the principal Merchants in Bristol trading to America; yet, as he found there were two Committees now, the one for hearing evidence, the other for burying Petitions, he plainly saw his Petition would share the fate of the other, and be buried in oblivion, though not in sure and certain hopes of a joyful resurrection; that his worthy colleague (Mr. Cruger) had likewise a Petition of the Merchants of Bristol to present, but it would go to the silent Committee, and the three, he imagined would be left to sleep together. He concluded with asking leave to present his Petition;

Which being granted,

Mr. Burke then presented a Petition of the Master, Wardens, and Commonalty, of the Society of Merchants Venturers of the City of Bristol, under their common seal; which was read, setting forth, That a very beneficial and increasing trade to the British Colonies in America, has been carried on from the Port of Bristol, highly to the advantage of the Kingdom in general, and of the said City in particular; and that the Exports from the said Port to America, consist of almost every species of British Manufactures, besides East India Goods and other articles of commerce; and the returns are made not only in many valuable and useful commodities from thence, but also by a circuitous trade carried on with Ireland and most parts of Europe, to the great emolument of the Merchant, and improvement of his Majesty's Revenue; and that the Merchants of the said Port are also deeply engaged in the trade to the West India Islands, which, by the exchange of their produce with America, for Provisions, Lumber, and other Stores, are thereby almost wholly maintained, and consequently become dependent upon North America for support; and that the trade to Africa, which is carried on from the said Port to a very considerable extent, is also dependent on the flourishing state of the West India Islands and America; and that these different branches of commerce give employment not only to a very numerous body of Artists and Manufacturers, but also to a great number of Ships, and many thousand Seamen, by which means a very capital increase is made to the Naval strength of Great Britain; and that the trade to America has of late years suffered very considerable checks, the first of which was after the passing of the Act for levying Stamp Duties there, which subjected the Merchants here to many and great losses and inconveniences, and threatened them with ruin, from which the repeal of that Act in the following year removed their apprehensions, and restored the trade to its former flourishing state; and that in this prosperous situation the trade continued till the next year, when an Act passed for levying Duties on Glass, Paper, and other articles in America, and it again received a considerable check; but the repeal of a great part of those Duties revived it, till the passing of certain Acts of Parliament, and other measures lately adopted, caused such a great uneasiness in the minds of the inhabitants of America, as to make the Merchants apprehensive of the most alarming consequences, and which if not speedily remedied, must involve them in utter ruin. And the Petitioners, as Merchants deeply interested in measures which so materially affect the commerce of this Kingdom, and not less concerned as Englishmen, in every thing that relates to the general welfare, cannot look without emotion on the many thousands of miserable objects, who, by the total stop put to the Export trade to America, will be discharged from their Manufactures for want of employment, and must be reduced to great distress; and the Petitioners look back with regret to those times in which their trade suffered no interruption; but they presume not to suggest any particular mode of relief to the House, in whose wisdom they place the most unre-served confidence; they venture, however, to express their wishes that the former system, of commercial policy may be taken into consideration; and that the destructive breaches made in their trade by the alarms to which it has been for many years subject, may be closed, the peace of this great Empire restored, and commerce once more fixed on the most solid and permanent foundation.

Mr. Burke moved that the said Petition he referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command.

Lord North objected to it, as it did not desire to be heard. He observed it could not be of any information.

Mr. Burke replied; the noble Lord had objected to one Petition because it desired to be heard, to the other, because it did not desire to be heard; but nothing was to be expected from him but blunders and inconsistencies.

Lord North said it was impossible for him to have foreseen the proceedings in America respecting the Tea: that the Duty had been quietly collected before; that the great quantity of Tea in the warehouses of the East India Company, as appeared by the Report of the Secret Committee, made it necessary to do something for the benefit of the Company; that it was to serve them that nine Pence in the pound weight drawback was allowed; that it was impossible for him to foretell the Americans would resist at being able to drink their Tea at nine Pence in the pound cheaper.

Governour Johnstone said he got up to speak to a matter of fact; that he could not sit still and hear the noble Lord plume himself on actions which, of all others, were most reprehensible in this train of political absurdities; that it was unbecoming the noble Lord to allege that this dangerous measure was adopted to serve the East India Company, when it was notorious the Company had requested the repeal of the three Pence per pound in America, and felt and knew the absurdity of giving a drawback here, and laying a duty there a perfect solecism in commerce and politics; that the East India Company offered their consent that Government should retain six Pence in the pound on the exportation, if the three Pence was remitted in America; that the noble Lord had been requested and entreated, by the Governour himself, in his place, to remove the cause of the dispute, and was foretold the consequence of persevering in error; that the noble Lord had shewn by his conduct, he was neither financier nor politician, or infatuated with those about him; that the East India Company presented the happiest opportunity which could have offered for removing, with credit, the cause of difference. The noble Lord himself had confessed, in repealing the other articles in the original Act, that the Tea was as much an anti-commercial tax as any of those which were repealed on that principle; but the authority of Parliament being disputed, he could not repeal all till that was fully acknowledged. Here, then, sprung the happiest occasion of doing right, without injuring the claims on either side. The East India Company ask; their situation required the relief. It could not be alleged it was done at the instance of American discontent. But the golden bridge was refused; new contrivances were set on foot to introduce the Tea into America. I know, said he, the various intrigues, solicitations, and counter-solicitations, that were used to induce the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Committee to undertake the rash and foolish business. I protested against it as contrary to the principles of their monopoly; yet the power of Ministry prevailed, and the noble Lord would now cover all those facts, which are ready, from their consequences, to convulse the Empire, and take credit for them as having been done with the most innocent intentions to serve the East India Company; when, on the contrary, it must appear to every man, that the glut of Tea in their warehouses was chiefly occasioned by the impolitic and anti-commercial imposition of three Pence a pound in America, which deprived them, and still deprives them of that great vent; and that the losses they have since sustained, by sending Teas on their own account to America, is likewise chargeable to Administration. If this is the manner in which they serve their friends, I desire still to be counted among the number of their enemies.

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question;

The House divided--Yeas 65, Noes 192

So it passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," be inserted instead thereof;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question so amended being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

Mr. Cruger presented a Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers, and others, of the City of Bristol, whose names are thereunto subscribed, which was also read; setting forth -

That the trade to America not only from this Port, but the whole Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, is of the utmost importance; and that the said City is highly interested in its welfare, as from thence very large quantities of every species of Manufacture are exported, whereby employment is given to a great number of Ships, Seamen, and others, on which Manufactures several thousand persons depend for their daily support, whose cause, from motives of humanity, exclusive of every advantage to themselves, it becomes their duty to submit to that tribunal from whence alone redress can be expected; and that the trade of the West India Islands, in all its extensive branches, essentially depends upon the Continent of America, as many articles absolutely necessary for the existence of their inhabitants, are only to be had from thence; and any stop to the commerce and well-being of North America, must mutually affect the whole system, being mediately or immediately connected with each other; and that the Petitioners already feel the unhappy effects of the stagnation of trade at present subsisting in consequence of certain Acts made by the Legislature of Great Britain, from which cause all orders for Goods are countermanded, and the Merchants in danger of being deprived of their returns for those already sent; and that from the circumstances before recited, many thousands of industrious poor are, and will be deprived of subsistence, and Merchants even of the largest property will be reduced to difficulties in their fortunes and credit, heretofore unknown to them; and that, in the present crisis, so very alarming to the interest of the trading part of these Kingdoms, and in its consequences to the landed interest, ever dependent on each other, they have every reason to fear a total loss of their trade, and every evil that will attend an event so much to be deprecated; and, therefore, praying the House to take the premises speedily into their serious consideration, and to adopt such measures as will not only relieve them from the difficulties which press them on the present exigency, but be a security against a return of those frequent interruptions, to their trade they have for many years experienced, which have made destructive breaches in the commercial interests, and disturbed the concord of this great Empire, so that the whole may be fixed on the same solid basis which formerly united the mother country and her Colonies.

Mr. Cruger moved that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command.

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London,

"concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It passed in the Negative,

And the question being put, that the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," be inserted instead thereof,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question so amended being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

TUESDAY, January 24, 1775.

A Petition of the Merchants and Traders of the City of Glasgow, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth --

That the Petitioners are deeply interested in the trade to North America, by exporting annually great quantities of British Manufactures and other Goods, and receiving in return the produce of the Colonies; and have at this time, in effects belonging to them in America, and in debts due to them by the Colonies, to the amount of one million and upwards; and that the trade between Great Britain and the Colonies, has for a long time been carried on to the great advantage of every part of the British Empire; and that it has been a great nursery for Seamen; has given employment to many thousand Manufacturers in Britain, and greatly increased his Majesty's Revenue; and that the Petitioners have observed, with much concern, that certain late Acts of Parliament have created fears and jealousies, and raised much dissatisfaction in the minds Of his Majesty's American subjects, who have been induced to enter into resolves to interrupt the commerce between Great Britain and the Colonies; and that the Petitioners apprehend, if this interruption to trade is long continued, many thousands of British Manufacturers will be reduced to poverty and distress by want of employment; the Petitioners will suffer great loss, and his Majesty's Revenue be diminished; but they trust, with full confidence, in the wisdom and justice of the House, to bring about a happy reconciliation between Great Britain and the Colonies; and, therefore, praying the House to take into their serious consideration this great commercial business, and to give such relief as shall seem best.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting, "it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question;

The House divided--Yeas 68, Noes 26.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the Value of all Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, exported from that part of Great Britain called England, to the British Colonies in North America, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1774, or as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the Value of all Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, exported from that part of Great Britain called Scotland, to the British Colonies in North America, from Christmas, 1768 to Christmas, 1769; distinguishing each Colony.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the Value of all Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, exported from that part of Great Britain called Scotland, to the British Colonies in North America, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1774, or as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year.

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1775.

A Petition of the Merchants, Manufacturers, and Traders, and other inhabitants of the City of Norwich, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That in the said City there hath been, for a long series of years', a very considerable manufacture of various kinds of Worsteds Stuffs, wherein the raw material of Wool, (the produce of Great Britain and Ireland) hath been increased to ten times its value; the amount of which Manufactures, at a moderate computation, exceeded lately the yearly value of one million five hundred thousand Pounds, and therein above eighty thousand persons, men, women, and children, as well in the City of Norwich as in the several Counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, have been employed and maintained; and that a considerable part of the Goods thus manufactured, were sent as well by the Port of Yarmouth, in Norfolk, as by the Port of London, on the account of North American Merchants and Traders, to the several Provinces of that extensive Continent; but since the unhappy differences which have arisen between Great Britain and the Colonies, a stop hath been put to the exportation of the Said Manufactures to North America, and that the inhabitants of the said City liable to the publick taxes, are already greatly burthened with a numerous poor; and if the demand of Norwich Stuffs to any Of the several Ports of Europe, (of late plentifully supplied) should by any means be lessened, the Petitioners are fearful of the consequences which must inevitably happen to the said City from the stoppage of the American Trade; and that, on any further reduction of the Manufactures of the said City, the number of poor Artificers and their families, which will be thrown on the publick expense, will be insupportable; and that the industrious Artificers and labouring men, and their families, will be reduced, by poverty and want of employment, to be without the necessary succours of food and raiment. And therefore, for the revival of the Petitioners' trade and commerce to America, and to prevent the continuance or growth of the above evils, praying the House will take the premises into their immediate and most serious consideration, and grant them such effectual and permanent relief as they shall think proper

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the Said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants and Traders, and others of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

The House divided: Yeas, 85; Noes, 11.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put;

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of Merchants and Manufacturers residing in the Town and neighbourhood of Dudley, in the County of Worcester, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners have, for a number of years past, employed a great many thousand hands in manufacturing of Nails and other sorts of Iron Wares, the greatest part of which have been exported to North America; and in consequence of the present stagnation of their commerce thither, are very much distressed for want of the usual demands; and that in a very short time the many thousands of their hands dependent on the American consumption in those articles, must be out of employ, and thereby totally deprived of the means of subsistence; and that the Petitioners likewise are deeply concerned for the property which some of them, as well as the Merchants and Traders with whom they are connected, have in that country; and therefore praying the House will take the premises into consideration, and adopt such measures as they shall judge most effectual for their relief.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Inhabitants of the Town and neighbourhood of Birmingham; was presented to the House, and read, setting forth.

That the Petitioners are apprehensive, that any relaxation in the execution of the laws respecting the Colonies of Great Britain, will ultimately tend to the injury of the commerce of the said Town and neighbourhood; and therefore the Petitioners request that the House will continue to exert their endeavours to support the authority of the laws of this Kingdom over all the Dominions of the Crown.

A motion was made by Lord North, and the question being put, that the said petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

Mr. Burke objected, saying this was not a Petition concerning commerce; it was a warlike, blood-thirsty Petition, and desired to hear the names of the persons who signed it, read; which was complied with.

He then moved as an amendment to the question, to leave out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and insert the words, "it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

Sir George Savile rose, and acquainted the House, that not understanding any business except the balloting was meant to come on that day, he had left the House as soon as it was over, but on going home, a Petition of Doctor Franklin, Mr. Lee, and Mr. Bollan, the three gentlemen who had the direction of the Petition from the North American Congress to the King, was put into his hand. He stated the contents, which were: "That the Petitioners could explain and throw great light on the Petition presented from the Congress to the King, which, by his Majesty's command, had been referred to that Honourable House, and therefore praying to be heard on the same."

A conversation now ensued concerning a point of order, whether a Petition could be received concerning a Petition which lay before the House, but of which they could have no possible knowledge. This conversation lasted some time, in which Lord North, Mr. Rigby, the Solicitor General, Lord F. Campbell, and Mr. Gascoyne, were against the receiving it, complaining of the thinness of the House, and the lateness of the hour. But it was ably contended that it could be received, by Sir George Savile, Mr. Burke, and Mr. T. Townshend, who all shewed the difference there was between receiving a Petition and complying with its prayer. The thinness of the House, and the late hour, they treated with ridicule, by reminding their opponents, that when the question was first proposed the House was pretty full, and it was in the afternoon.

A motion was drawn up by Mr. Burke, in order for the point to be discussed, but as the House was so thin, there being but forty Members with the Speaker, it was withdrawn.

THURSDAY, January 26, 1775.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the Value of the Exports and Imports to and from North America, from Christmas, 1762, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Port and each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the Value of the Exports and Imports to and from the West Indies, from Christmas, 1762, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Port and each year.

Mr. Alderman Hayley presented a second Petition from the Merchants, Traders, and others, of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, which was read, viz:

To the Honourable the Commons of GREAT BRITAIN, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, sheweth:

That your Petitioners did, on Monday, the 23d instant, present an humble Petition to this Honourable House, stating the nature and importance of the commerce between Great Britain and America; the repeated interruptions which of late years have happened therein; the alarming state to which that commerce is at present reduced, and the true cause, as your Petitioners apprehend, of the same. And relying on the justice of this Honourable House, to take the whole of the weighty matters so stated into their most serious consideration, did humbly pray, that this House would enter into a full and immediate examination of that system of commercial policy which had formerly been adopted and uniformly maintained, to the happiness and advantage of both countries, and would apply such healing remedies as can alone restore and establish the commerce between Great Britain and America on a permanent foundation.

Your Petitioners have ever conceived an opinion, resulting from education, and confirmed by reason and experience, that the connection between Great Britain and America, originally was, and ought to be, of a commercial kind; and that the benefits derived therefrom to the mother country are of the same nature. And observing the constant attention which the British Legislature had, for more than a century, given to these valuable objects, they have been taught to admire the regulations by which that connection had been preserved and those benefits secured, as the most effectual institution which human wisdom could have framed for those salutary purposes. Presuming, therefore, on this opinion, and supported by this observation, your Petitioners beg leave to represent to this Honourable House, that the fundamental policy of those laws of which they complain, and the propriety of enforcing, relaxing, or amending the same, are questions inseparably united with the commerce between Great Britain and America; and consequently, that the consideration of the one cannot be entered on without a full discussion of the other.

Your Petitioners observe by the votes of this Honourable House, that a Committee hath been appointed to take into consideration certain Papers presented to this House by Lord North, on Thursday, the 19th instant; and by the titles and dates of said Papers, and in particular of Nos. 148 and 149 of the same, your Petitioners are warranted in presuming that the said Papers contain matters respecting the present situation of America, and essentially concerning the mutual interests of your Petitioners and that country.

Under all these circumstances, your Petitioners find reason sincerely to lament, that this Honourable House has thought fit to refer the consideration of their said Petition to any other Committee than that to which the said Papers had previously been referred; and your Petitioners conceive, that by the resolution to which this House hath come, respecting the reference of their said Petition, they are absolutely precluded from the benefit of such a hearing in support of their said Petition, as can alone procure them that relief which the importance and present deplorable state of their trade require.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray this Honourable House, that they will take the premises into their immediate consideration, and will direct that your Petitioners may be heard by themselves or their Agents, in support of their said former Petition; and that no resolution respecting America may be taken by this Honourable House, or by any Committee thereof, until your Petitioners Shall have been fully heard in support of their said Petition.

Mr. Hayley moved that the Order made upon Monday last, for referring the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America to the consideration of the Whole House, might be read.

And the said Order being read accordingly,

Mr. Hayley then moved that the said Order be discharged.

He resented the indignity and mockery put on a great body of Merchants, in referring their business, which was the business of the Nation, and of the Empire, indeed, to a separate Committee, whose object was pretended to be no more than to form commercial regulations, which no Petition had required or asked; and which Committee had not a pretended concern in the great points of commercial policy, the ill-conduct of which threatened a most dangerous civil war. He expressed his fears that the rejection of the informations of the trading interest, and the precipitate hurry of resolutions in an uninformed Committee, or informed only so far as Ministry chose, must drive on a civil war with America.

Mr. Hotham contended that the Order should be discharged, and a new one made for hearing the Petitioners; that, on the ground of law, it was no more than what the Petitioners might claim as a judicial right; on the grounds of justice and reason, the claim was equally clear on the one side, equally proper to be granted on the other; and as to expediency, nothing could be more compatible with that than a hearing of the Petitioners, which, by affording information to the House, might guide their deliberations in the paths of wisdom.

Mr. Hans Stanley could not help persuading himself that interested and factious persons had induced the Merchants to sign these Petitions. He argued, with respect to the impropriety of discharging the Order and hearing the Petitioners, substantially thus: the only end which can be proposed in hearing the Petitioners at the bar, is information. What information could they lay before the House? Were they to allege, that whilst the disputes between Great Britain and America subsisted, their trade would undergo a temporary stagnation? This was to say nothing but what was already known; it was known that a stoppage of trade would be occasioned by the American disputes; there was no question but the stockholders and landed interest would be greatly affected by these disputes; but what of that? Unless the supremacy of Parliament and the rights of sovereignty were vigorously asserted by Great Britain, the American traffick could not subsist. To support the sovereignty was therefore to support the trade of Great Britain; and if, in attempting this arduous task, our commerce should be suspended, our funds should sustain a shock, and the landed property of individuals should experience a diminution, yet all these were evils gentlemen should patiently endure with firmness and magnanimity; the Merchants should forego their own interests for the sake of those permanent advantages which they would undoubtedly reap when the Americans were subdued, if, peradventure, a subduction, obtained by force, should be found expedient.

Mr. Hayley said that a Committee of three capital Merchants had attended the signing of the Petition, to prevent inconsiderable or improper persons from putting their names to it. He affirmed that no undue means were used to procure persons to sign it; on the contrary, the greatest caution was taken: many more would have signed it, but were prevented, either from not being known to be concerned in the American trade, or from being deemed too inconsiderable.

Mr. T. Townshend replied to Mr. Stanley with irony, accepting his acknowledgment of the distress that must fall on the commerce, the landholder, and the stockholder; but the place-holder, said he, will batten in the sunshine of his country's ruin; no distress of the publick can affect him; he may talk at ease of the patience with which others are to endure ruin. The contractors of every kind may pant for a civil war; but the event of violent councils must shake to its very foundation the publick credit, on which every thing depends.

Mr. Lewis said he had a speech of an honourable gentleman (meaning Mr. Burke) in his hand, wherein the eloquent declaimer had asserted, that during nine long years we had been lashed round the circle of miserable argumentation, without coming to any conclusion on the subject. The American Merchants, he thought, came too late; that they ought not to have been silent so long; and that having so long confided in Parliament, they ought to continue that confidence. He spoke of the relation of parent and child that subsisted between the countries; he supposed ingratitude in the child, and wished for its chastisement.

Mr. Jenkinson said that Parliament had a right to regulate the internal concerns of America. He instanced an Act for regulating their paper currency; and from their submission to that, he concluded they ought to submit to every act of English Legislature. He entertained no doubt that some resolutions for preserving the supremacy would answer every end of the Merchants' Petition, and restore trade.

Mr. Edmund Burke treated the talk of paper currency with very little respect, and said that Mr. Jenkinson's discourse had not the most remote tendency to prove this, or any other point. For what argument (said he) can be drawn from the instance of an Act to prevent paper currencies, to prove that the Merchants of London ought not to be heard in the American Committee? The most depreciated paper currency ever issued by Rhode-Island, in its worst times, was not more different from good money than this talk from sound argument. The other gentleman (Mr. Lewis) was sitting Member last Parliament. I thought he had a good right to his seat. I lamented that the publick had, for seven years, been deprived of the benefit of his talents; but suppose this had been the same Parliament whose acts he defends, and of whose injustice he was the proto-martyr, and that he had till the last session been silent, and that his modesty had persuaded him to defraud the House of the benefit of his talents to the last hour, would that septennial silence of his argue that he ought not to be heard at the end of the seven years, when he at last chose to interfere in the debates? Then we should have heard him patiently and calmly; nay, if his argument had required an answer, we should have answered him. He then turned to Sir Gilbert Elliot, who, in the former debate, had argued that the House was already perfectly acquainted, in general, with the trade and its importance, and admitted, in its full extent, whatever the Merchants could allege. He said that this gentleman was rather too ready to take the measure of mankind from himself; and because he was so very knowing, did not sufficiently condescend to the ignorance of others. But whatever the knowledge of any individual in the House might be, there was a great difference between knowing and feeling. That the honourable gentleman could easily abstract and generalize his ideas even to the genus generalissimum; but the nature of mankind was such that general observation affected their minds in a slight arid indistinct manner, when the detail of particulars, and the actual substance of things, made a most forcible impression. He illustrated this by a story of a learned Prince, who was of the same part of the Island to which we owe the honourable gentleman; James the First, who, as Osborne tells the story, having ordered a present of 20,000 Pounds for one of his favourites, his Treasurer, a wary and prudent Minister, well read in human nature, and knowing how little the general expression of things operates, and that the words 20,000 Pounds were as easily pronounced as 20,000 Farthings, contrived to place the whole sum in a vast heap before the King's eyes as he passed to his levee, in good Jacobuses; when the King was taken out of his generals, and saw the money itself spread out before his eyes, he was frightened at what he was about, and threw himself, in great agony, on the mass of gold, and scrambling up a handful or two, there, said he, "ge'en that, that's enough." Now, said he, if we are to be generous in sacrificing our trade to our dignity, let us know what the value of the sacrifice is that we make; let us not be generous in the dark; true generosity is to give and see, and know whatever we give. Let us, then, see this thing, this trade we are to give up for our dignity. Your dignity may be worth it all, but let us be informed by the Merchants what all really is. To be generous, without knowing what we give, is not liberality, but negligence; and fearlessness, arising from ignorance, is not courage, but insensibility. He said that the reason given by those who sent the Petitions to the Coventry Committee, for not referring them to that on American Papers, was of a most extraordinary and unheard of nature: it was, that the resolutions of that Committee were to be solely on the grounds of policy, and that the commercial examination would delay the measures necessary for the coercion of America. This was to anticipate and pre-determine the future proceedings in a Committee, as a reason for keeping information from it. How did they know what measures would be pursued there, and on what principles? Was there any instruction to the Committee so to confine itself? Or was it that the Ministry had already not only solved what that Committee was to do, but reckoned upon it so much as a certainty, and as a matter so justifiable, that they did not scruple to avow it, and to make it a ground of argument for what the House ought, or ought not to have brought before its Committee. This proceeding he thought no less alarming than unprecedented. If they meant hostility, the reason they gave for not hearing was the strongest for it. But as their war ever must be dependent upon their finances, and their finances must depend upon their commerce, the true state of that commerce was necessary to be known, especially as Colonies and commerce are inseparably connected.

Having thus pleaded for the necessity of hearing the Petitioners, Mr. Burke proceeded to lament the national calamities about to befall this devoted Kingdom. Besides the horrors of a civil war, besides the slaughtered innocents who are to be victimated to the counsels of a Ministry precipitate to dye the Rivers of America with the blood of her inhabitants; besides these disasters, an impoverished Revenue; famished millions; the stagnation of Manufactures; the total overthrow of Commerce; the increase of the Poor's Rate; the accumulation of Taxes; innumerable Bankruptcies; and other shocks which may make the fabrick of publick credit totter to its basis: these were all depicted in the strongest colours by Mr. Burke. He professedly reserved himself, however, for that day when, if properly supported by the people, he vowed by all that was dear to him here and hereafter, he would pursue to condign punishment the advisers of measures fraught with every destructive consequence to the Constitution, the commerce, the rights and liberties of this country.

Mr. Burke concluded his animated harangue by quoting an instance, related in history, of an archer about to direct an arrow to the heart of his enemy, but found that in his adversary's arms was enfolded his own child. This singular incident he recommended with cautionary admonition to those statesmen who had in contemplation the destruction of America, unmindful that they could not accomplish so baneful a purpose, without, at the same time, plunging a dagger into the vitals of Great Britain. Let your commerce, said Mr. Burke, come before you, - see whether it be not your child that America has in its arms, see of what value that child is - examine whether you ought to shoot; and if you must shoot, shoot so as to avoid wounding what is dearest to you in the world. Without examining your trade you cannot do this.

Mr. Charles Fox spoke on the same side. He arraigned, in the severest terms, the Acts of the last Parliament, as framed on false information, conceived in weakness and ignorance, and executed with negligence. We were promised that on the very appearance of Troops, all was to be tranquillity at Boston, yet so far from subduing the spirit of that people, these Troops were, by neglect of those who sent them, reduced to the most shameful situation, and dishonourably intrenched within the lines of circumvallation, which a necessary precaution for their own safety obliged them to form. That the contrary effect of what the Minister had promised, was foretold; but that the Minister, forsooth, in his usual negligence, avowed that when he was pursuing a treasure of the last degree of importance, though it were treasonable in him, (the strength of the words he afterwards disavowed) yet he thought it would be blameable in him so much as to inquire what the effects were to be of his measures. He believed it was the first time any Minister dared to avow that he thought it his duty not to inquire into the effects of his measures; but it was suitable to the whole of the noble Lord's conduct, who had no system or plan of conduct, no knowledge of business; that he had often declared his unfitness for his station, and he agreed that his conduct justified his declaration; and that the country was incensed, and on the point of being involved in a civil war by his incapacity. He pledged himself to join Mr. Burke in pursuing him, and bringing him to answer the mischiefs occasioned by his negligence, his inconsistency, and his incapacity: he said not this from resentment, but from a conviction of the destructive proceedings of a bad Minister.

Colonel Barré began with a short and spirited history of the late Parliament, who, he said, commenced their political life with a violation of the sacred right of election in the case of Middlesex; they had died in the act of Popery, when they established the Roman Catholick religion in Canada; and they had left a rebellion in America as a legacy. He asserted, in favour of the Americans, that they drew a just and reasonable line, which had been a line of peace, and would be so again, if we had sense enough to return to it. The Americans, he insisted on it, required no more; and they had too much justice on their side to be satisfied with less. He flatly denied that they had objected to the Declaratory Act; and for proof he referred to Mr. Dickinson's Pamphlet, entitled "A New Essay," &c., on which he passed the strongest eulogium. He concluded with a story which his friend Mr. Burke's archer had put him in mind of; than which nothing could be more apposite. There was another story, he said, of the famous William Tell, who, being ordered to shoot an apple off his child's head, effectually did it, and the tyrant who had given the inhuman command, seeing him draw out another arrow, said to him, "What, another arrow?" "Oui, dit-il, il y a une autre; et c'est pour toi, tyran, destinée." "Yes, tyrant, another arrow, and it is destined for thee!"

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn went upon a proposition of quieting the Merchants, by passing a law obliging the several Provinces in America to pay the respective debts due by the inhabitants of the said Provinces to the Merchants of this country.

Lord North said the question had been so fully discussed, that it would be presumption in him to rise at that late hour of the night to trespass on the indulgence of the House, he should therefore decline it; but he thought it nevertheless incumbent on him to say a word in answer to some insinuations, and some general charges made against him by two honourable gentlemen (Messrs. Burke and Fox.) He observed that those gentlemen constantly made a point, not even of attacking, but threatening him. As to general charges, he could only answer them in general terms; and when that black, bitter, trying day should come, which had been prophesied by one of those gentlemen, and that he should bring any particular charge against him, he trusted he should be able to give it a particular answer. As to the other, who found so many causes of censure, and who disclaimed all resentment, he was sure, though he now discovered in him so much incapacity and negligence, there was a time when he approved of at least some part of his conduct.

Lord George Germaine began with a justification of the last Parliament; and insisted that in their proceedings towards America, they had gone upon sufficient information. He made a strong declamation on dignity. His Lordship mentioned the Declaratory Act, professing not to address himself to those who denied our right to tax America, but to those who favoured that Act; they, his Lordship insisted, were bound to support the idea of subduing America; the confession of the right implied the propriety and necessity of exercising it. If the Americans, pointing the late Acts out as a grievance, would petition for their repeal, he would stretch forth the first hand to present it; but, on the contrary, if they claimed such repeal as a right, thereby disputing the authority of the mother country, which no reasonable man ever called in question, he wished the said Acts might be enforced with a Roman severity.

Mr. Fox, in reply to Lord North, said: That my private resentments have not affected my publick conduct will be readily believed, when I might have long since justly charged the noble Lord with the most unexampled treachery and falsehood. Here Mr. Fox was called to order, and the House grew clamorous. He sat down twice or thrice, and on rising each time, repeated the same words; but at length, assuring the House he would abstain from every thing personal, he was permitted to proceed. He then repeated his former charges of negligence, incapacity, and inconsistency; and added, that though he at one time approved of part of the noble Lord's conduct, he never approved of it all; of which a stronger proof could not be given, than that he differed from him. He charged all the present disputes with America, to his negligence and incapacity, and instanced his inconsistency in the ease of the Middlesex election. It was true, he said, the noble Lord had often confessed his incapacity, and from a consciousness of it, pretended a willingness to resign; but the event had proved that whatever his consciousness might have been, his love of the emoluments of office had completely conquered it.

Lord North replied, that the high post he now occupied was not of his own seeking, but was submitted to, because he thought it his duty to obey the commands laid on him; that whatever interpretation might be put by the honourable gentleman, he well knew that it was no desire of his to retain his present situation; that that honourable gentleman was no stranger to how he had been tried on many critical occasions, particularly when we were threatened with a Spanish war, in the affairs of the East India Company, &c.

Mr. Burke rose to explain, but the clamour and call to order was so great that he was obliged to sit down unheard; to use his own words, in a "torrent of candour and a storm of moderation."

The question was then taken, and the House divided - Yeas 89, Noes 250.

So it passed in the Negative.

Ordered, That the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, this day presented to the House, do lie upon the table.

A Petition of the Merchants and Manufacturers of the Town of Manchester, interested in American commerce, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners have for several years carried on a very extensive and beneficial trade with the Continent of America; and that the payments for Goods exported to that country, have been such as to encourage the Merchants and Manufacturers to execute orders from thence with cheerfulness and confidence; and that the stoppage of trade occasioned by the late unhappy differences with the Americans, will soon render it necessary to discharge vast numbers of workmen, who have been maintained by this commerce; and that it is not requisite, were it possible, to enumerate the evils that must arise from the precarious situation on which their intercourse with America now stands; they therefore recommend themselves to the care and protection of Parliament, and rely on the justice, wisdom, and attention to the publick welfare, by which their present apprehensions may not only be removed, but a system for their future commerce formed on a sure and lasting basis.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "it is referred to "consider of the several Papers which were presented to "the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by "his Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers of Wolverhampton, in the County of Stafford, and places adjacent, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the present stagnation of commerce to the North American Colonies, and the prospect of increasing embarrassments, occasioned by the unhappy differences, subsisting between Great Britain and those Colonies, greatly alarm the Petitioners, who are engaged in, and greatly depend on, that trade, for vending various kinds of Goods they manufacture of Iron, Steel, and other metals; and that they view with the deepest concern many Manufacturers already out of employ; and the evils which they before experienced in similar situations daily increasing, which presage the utmost misery to the said Town and its neighbourhood, and, therefore, praying the House will take their trade and distresses under their most serious consideration, and grant them such relief as to the House shall seem meet.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "it is referred to "sider of the several Papers which were presented to the "House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his "Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Merchants and Tradesmen of the Port of Liverpool, whose names are subscribed, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That an extensive and most important trade has been long carried on, from the said Town, to the Continent and Islands of America; and that the exports from thence infinitely exceed in value the imports from America, from whence an immense debt arises, and remains due to the British Merchant; and that every article which the Labourer, Manufacturer, or more ingenious Artist, can furnish for use, convenience, or luxury, makes a part in these exports for the consumption of the American; and that those demands, as important in amount as various in quality, have for many seasons been so constant, regular, and diffusive, that they are now become essential to the flourishing state of all their Manufactures, and of consequence to every individual in these Kingdoms; and that the bread of thousands in Great Britain, principally and immediately depends upon this vast branch of commerce, of which a temporary interruption will reduce the hand of industry to idleness and want, and a longer cessation of it would sink the now opulent Trader in indigence and ruin; and that at this particular season of the year, the Petitioners have been accustomed to send out to North America many Ships wholly laden with the products of Britain; but by the unhappy differences at present subsisting, from whatever source they flow, the trade to these parts is entirely at a stand; and that the present loss, though great, is nothing, when compared with the dreadful mischiefs which will certainly ensue, if some effectual remedy is not speedily applied to this spreading malady, which must otherwise involve the West India Islands and the trade to Africa in the complicated ruin; but that the Petitioners can still, with pleasing hopes, look up to the British Parliament, from whom they trust that these unhappy divisions will speedily be healed, mutual confidence and credit restored, and the trade of Britain again flourish with undecaying vigour.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "it is referred to "sider of the several Papers which were presented to the "House by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his "Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

Sir George Savile offered to present a Petition of William Bollan, Benjamin Franklin, and Arthur Lee, Esqs., stating themselves to have been authorized by the persons who signed one of the Papers presented to the House, by the Lord North, upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command, entitled, "Petition of sundry persons, on behalf "of themselves and the inhabitants of several of his Majesty's Colonies in America," to procure the said Paper to be presented to his Majesty, and praying that they may be heard at the Bar of this House in support thereof.*

And the question being put, that the said Petition be brought up,

The House divided - Yeas 68, Noes 218.

So it passed in the Negative.

The Orders of the Day being read,

* Though it was then late, a Petition was offered from Mr. Bollan, Doctor Franklin, and Mr. Lee, three American Agents, stating, that they were authorized by the American Continental Congress to present a Petition from the Congress to the King, which Petition his Majesty had referred to that House; that they were enabled to throw great light upon the subject, and prayed to be heard at the Bar in support of the said Petition. On this a violent debate arose, partly on the same grounds with the former, partly on different. The Ministry alleged that the Congress was no legal body, and none could be heard in reference to their proceedings, without giving that illegal body some degree of countenance; that they could only hear the Colonies through their legal Assemblies, and their Agents, properly authorized by them, and properly admitted here; that to do otherwise, would lead to inextricable confusion, and destroy the whole order of Colony government.

To these arguments it was answered, that regular Colony government was in effect destroyed already; in some places by Act of Parliament; in others, by dissolution of Assemblies by Governors; in some, by popular violence. The question now was, how to restore order? That this Congress, however illegal to other purposes, was sufficiently legal for presenting a Petition. It was signed by the names of all the persons who composed it, and might be received as from individuals; that it was their business rather to find every plausible reason for receiving Petitions than to invent pretences for rejecting them; that the rejection of Petitions was one principal cause, if not the most powerful cause of the present troubles; that this mode of constantly rejecting their Petitions, and refusing to hear their Agents, would infallibly end in universal rebellion; and not unnaturally, as those seem to give up the right to Government, who refuse to hear the complaints of the subject. This Petition was rejected upon a division, by a majority of two hundred and eighteen to sixty-eight. - Ann. Regis.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, Upon Thursday last, by his Majesty's command.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had made a progress in the matters to them referred; and that he was directed by the Committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

FRIDAY, January 27, 1775.

Mr. Tomkyns, one of the Commissioners of the Revenue, presented to the House, according to their order, an Account of the Value of all Goods, Wares, and Merchandises, exported from that part of Great Britain called England, to the British Colonies in North America, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each Colony.

A Petition of sundry Merchants, Factors, and Manufacturers, of Birmingham, in the County of Warwick, on behalf of themselves and others in that neighbourhood, who are interested in the trade from thence to North America, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the demand from North America to the Manufacturers of the said Town and neighbourhood, has of late years very considerably increased, and many thousands of people have usually found a regular employment, in making various kinds of Goods which have been exported thither; and that the present stagnation of their commerce with that country is already very materially felt; and although it is with the greatest reluctance that they thus trouble the House with their complaints, yet they might stand accused of a want of duty to the House, did they neglect to express their fears; that in a short space of time, a very numerous body of working people will be deprived of the means of subsistence, which becomes the more alarming on account of the high price of those provisions which their industry has heretofore enabled them to procure; and that these, their difficulties, are also much increased by the uneasy apprehensions of their Traders to North America, for the large property which they have entrusted there; and, therefore, beseech the House to take their case into consideration, and grant them such relief as by the House shall be judged necessary.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "it is referred to "consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th "day of this instant, January, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the city of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

The House, according to order, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee,

Mr. Thomas Wooldridge, one of the Committee of American Merchants, was called to the Bar, when he addressed the Committee in the following words:

I am directed by the Committee of Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of America, to represent to this Honourable Committee, that Merchants revealing at this Bar the state of their affairs, is a measure which all would wish to avoid, unless upon such great occasions as the present, when the publick weal is evidently at stake, when their duty as good subjects requires it of them; but when the mode of examination is such as totally precludes them from answering the great publick object, (which, in their opinion, is clearly the case at present) they beg leave humbly to signify, that they waive appearing before the Committee which has been appointed, and that the Merchants are not under any apprehensions respecting their American debts, unless the means of remittance should be cut off by measures that may be adopted in Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee that they had made a progress; and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Petitions.

The other Order of the Day being read;

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday, the 19th day of this instant, January, by his Majesty's command.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee that they had made a further progress in the matters to them referred; and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Tuesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

TUESDAY, January 31, 1775.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command,

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from Governour Martin to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Newbern, North Carolina, 1st September, 1774; received 27th January, 1775, enclosing,

No. 2. Resolutions entered into at a Meeting of the Inhabitants of the District of Wilmington, 21st July, 1774, and an Address to the Freeholders of Craven County.

No. 3. Paper addressed to the Freeholders of Craven County.

No. 4. Extract from the North Carolina Gazette, of the 2d of September, 1774.

No. 5. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Charlestown, South Carolina, 19th December, 1774; received 27th January, 1775, enclosing,

No. 6. Charge given by Judge Drayton, of South Carolina, and Presentments of the Grand Jury.

No. 7. Copy of a Letter from Sir James Wright, Baronet, to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Savannah, in Georgia, 13th December, 1774; received 27th January, 1775, enclosing

No. 8. Extract from the Georgia Gazette, of the 14th of December, 1774.

Together with a List of the said Papers.

And the said List was read.

Ordered, That the said Papers be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday, the 19th day of this instant, January, by his Majesty's command.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of all British Plantation Tobacco imported into that part of Great Britain called England, from the year 1760, to the year 1775, and the quantity exported from England in the same period; distinguishing the Exports and Imports in each particular year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of British Plantation Tobacco imported into that part of Great Britain called Scotland, from the year 1760, to the year 1775, and the quantity exported from Scotland in the same period; distinguishing the Exports and Imports in each particular year.

A Petition of the Manufacturers of Felt Hats, and dealers therein, as also of the Shoemakers in the Town of New-Castle, in the County of Stafford, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth

That the said Town has, for many years past, been the principal place in the Kingdom for Felt Hats; and that large quantities of Shoes have been made there, the bulk of which have from time to time been exported to different parts of America, until the differences unhappily arose betwixt this Kingdom and the Colonies; since then a total stop to their trade thither has taken place; and that their manufactured Goods lie dead upon their hands, payments are suspended, and their works stopped; so that great numbers of their people are quite destitute of employment, whereby the Petitioners are involved in the general distress, and their lower class of people and their families are reduced to very great extremity; and what enhances their unhappiness, is the very high price of most of the necessities of life at this season of the year; and therefore praying that the House would take the same into their serious consideration, and concert such measures as they shall dictate for alleviating their miseries, and that may operate in opening their trade again, and thereby enabling them to afford an opportunity to their working people of procuring a subsistence for themselves and their families.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "it is referred to non-sider further of the several Papers which were presented" to the House by the Lord North, upon Tuesday the 19th "day of this instant, January, and this day by his Majesty's "command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out, stand part of the question?

It was resolved, in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Manufacturers and Traders in Earthen Ware, residing in Burslem, Tunstall, Colridge, Shelton, Hanly, Stoke Lane, Delf Lane End, and places adjacent, in the County of Stafford, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That in Burslem and the several places above mentioned, there are near two hundred separate Potteries for making various kinds of Earthen Wares, which together have found constant employment and support for near ten thousand people; and that a considerable part of the Goods manufactured by the Petitioners were exported into the different parts of America, until the late differences unhappily arose between this Kingdom and her Colonies; and that the Petitioners have great quantities of Goods now lying upon their hands; and instead of receiving from America the orders usually given at this season of the year, those few orders they had received, have since been countermanded, and a total stop is now put to that trade, and the payments for Goods already sold to them rendered very precarious; in consequence of which the Petitioners have been obliged to reduce their works and discharge numbers of their serrants, and unless some speedy alteration in affairs takes place, they must discharge many more, whereby a great number still will be destitute of employment, and reduced with their families to the utmost necessity; and therefore praying the House to take the premises into their serious consideration, and concert such measures as to them may seem expedient, for opening again the commercial intercourse between this Kingdom and her American Colonies.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred:

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented" to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday, the "19th day of this instant, January, and this day, by his "Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

Mr. Edmund Burke moved, "that it be an instruction" to the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the "Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the "City of London, concerned in the commerce of North "America, is referred, that they do inquire into the manner of procuring and signing the Petition of the inhabitants of the Town and neighbourhood of Birmingham, "which was presented to the House upon Wednesday last; "and also the Petition of sundry Merchants, Factors, and "Manufacturers, of Birmingham, in the County of Warwick, on behalf of themselves and others in that neighbourhood, who are interested in the trade from thence to "North America, which was presented to the House upon "Friday last; and how far the persons severally signing the "same are concerned in the trade to North America."

This brought on a debate respecting the manner in which the Petitions had been signed, and by whom: that the first Petition from Birmingham was signed by persons not concerned in the trade to North America, and therefore ought not to have the least weight with Parliament; that the second Petition from Birmingham being signed by the persons really interested, merited a serious consideration.

Sir. W. Bagot opposed the motion.

Mr. Burke replied, that the persons who signed the first Petition were not in the least concerned in the trade to North America, and that they chiefly consisted of shopkeepers. He then read a paper, containing an account of the manner in which the Petition was procured, viz: "On "the 11th of January, 1775, a meeting of the Merchants, "Traders, &c., of Birmingham, was held, to consider of "proper methods to be pursued on account of the alarming situation of their trade, when it was unanimously resolved to wait and see what the North American Merchants in London did, and to be guided by them. On "the 17th another meeting was held, when it was likewise "resolved to petition Parliament. At this meeting, a Mr. "Bolton said he did not think petitioning would have any "good effect; but he had a friend next him, Doctor Roebuck, who knew more of the matter. Doctor Roebuck, "after apologizing for his neither being a trader nor inhabitant, desired them by no means to petition Parliament; for, by a conversation he had lately with a Lord "of the Treasury, he was acquainted that a petition to "Lord North would be much better, he being the only "person that could give them redress; and that to his certain knowledge, there was at that time in the House of "Commons, four Members to one determined to execute "the laws in force against America. In this manner did "Doctor Roebuck endeavour to hinder the people from "petitioning Parliament; but, notwithstanding his endeavours, a Committee was appointed and a Petition prepared, which, after a few amendments, met with almost universal approbation, and publick notice, by advertisement, was repeatedly given that it lay at the Dolphin, in Birmingham, to be signed. In the interim, the Petition in question was procured by Doctor Roebuck, and carried about from house to house clandestinely, without the least notice, to be signed."

Mr. Rice objected to the motion, because the Petition in question, according to his opinion, contained more good sense and sound policy than all the other Petitions put together.

Mr. Burke desired to know whether it was sound policy for Merchants to wish to go to war with the people with whom they dealt?

Sir John Wrottesley should agree to the motion, as he was certain it would redound to the Petitioners' honour; at the same time he begged leave to remind the House, that the trade of the neighbourhood of Birmingham was far more extensive than that of Birmingham itself. He asked Mr. Burke, whether he was ready to discuss the Bristol Petition?

Mr. Burke replied, yes.

Mr. Fox observed, that if any gentlemen suggested that the Bristol Petition was surreptitiously obtained, and offered to prove it, the House ought to hear it; but that it came with an ill grace from Ministry, to say that the motives and manner of obtaining Petitions was not to be considered, when their only answer to the Petitions disapproving their conduct, was that they were surreptitiously obtained; that, indeed, there was one difference between the Ministers' imputation and Mr. Burke's charge; theirs was a mere voluntary suggestion of their own; Mr. Burke offered proof of his.

Mr. T. Townshend was for the motion, saying, that if the allegations set forth were true, the persons guilty of procuring such a Petition ought to be looked on as criminals.

Sir Gilbert Elliot contended that the persons who petitioned had not been guilty of the least fraud, for they styled themselves only the inhabitants of the Town and neighbourhood of Birmingham; and certainly no gentleman would deny but the Petitioners were inhabitants, if not traders.

Mr. Burke admitted they might be inhabitants, but contended that the counter-petition delivered on the 27th, of "the principal Merchants, Traders, Manufacturers, and Factors, of Birmingham," ought to have a preference to that of the inhabitants only.

Sir Edward Astley observed, that had there not been a counter-petition, he should have given a negative to the motion; but as the counter-petition, in his opinion, carried so much more importance with it, he should give his hearty affirmative to the motion.

The question being put, the House divided: Yeas, 37; Noes, 85.

So it passed in the Negative.

The other Order of the Day being read,

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Thursday, the 19th day of this instant, January, and this day, by his Majesty's command.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had made a further progress in the matters to them referred; and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

A Petition of the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, and Assistants of the Borough of Leeds, in the County of York, and of the several other persons whose names are thereunto subscribed, principal Inhabitants, Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers in the Borough of Leeds aforesaid, and in Wakefield, Halifax, Bradford, and other places, within the West Riding of the said County, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners, convinced that the preservation of the commerce of this country and its Colonies, depends upon a due obedience to the laws of England, are greatly alarmed at the unwarrantable proceedings now carrying on by the inhabitants of Boston, and some other Colonies in North America, in open defiance of the supreme Legislative power of this Kingdom, manifestly obstructing commerce, and subverting all legal Government; and that the Petitioners have great reason to believe attempts are now making to excite groundless fears and apprehensions in the minds of many of his Majesty's faithful subjects in this Kingdom, respecting the present situation of American affairs, and by false representations, and other undue means, to prevail upon them to sign Petitions to the House for a repeal of several Acts of Parliament; and that the Petitioners, on the contrary, apprehend the maintaining the authority of the British Legislature, is the best security for all interested in the trade to America; and, therefore, praying the House to take such measures as may seem to them most expedient for enforcing a due obedience to the British Legislature, and restoring order and good Government in America.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Merchants of Leeds, trading to the North American Colonies, or having property there, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth --

That by means of the North American commerce carried on directly from the Town of Leeds, to the North American Colonies, as also by the very great quantities of the Manufactures of the said Town and neighbourhood, passing to the said Colonies, through the hands of the Merchants of London, Bristol, Liverpool, Glasgow, &c., the Petitioners have been enabled greatly to extend the Manufactures of the said Town and County, and given thereby a large employ to a great number of master Manufacturers, and to many thousands of their industrious poor Labourers; and that the North American commerce from the said Town and neighbourhood, taken collectively in its full extent, is an object of great concern to the West Riding of Yorkshire in general, to the Petitioners in particular, and worthy the attention of Parliament; and that, by the unhappy differences: lately broke forth between Great Britain and her American Colonies, the Petitioners labour under the present stagnation of that branch of trade, which in years past has been too considerable not to be sensibly felt by themselves, and in time will be much more so by the industrious Manufacturers of the said Town and neighbourhood; and that the Petitioners having very considerable property in the hands of the North Americans, they cannot, in the present critical situation of affairs, but be anxious for the safety thereof, although in ever so honest hands the same may be deposited; the Petitioners, therefore, alarmed for themselves and families, at the same time feeling for the distresses of those to whom in times past they have been enabled to give support, confiding in the wisdom, the justice, and the moderation of Parliament, pray such relief as to the House shall seem meet.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, by his Majesty's command;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, "concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," be inserted instead thereof,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command,

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage, to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 26th of December 1774; received 31st January, 1775, enclosing,

No. 2. Copy of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to Governour Gage, dated 14th of December, 1774.

No. 3. Copy of a Letter from Captain Cochran to Governour Wentworth, dated 14th December, 1774.

No. 4. Extracts of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to Governour Gage, dated 16th December, 1774.

No. 5. Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 4th January, 1775; received 31st January.

No. 6. Extract of a Letter from the Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 31st December, 1774; received 31st January 1775, enclosing,

No. 7. Extracts from the Printed Votes of the Assembly of Pennsylvania.

No. 8. Extract of a Letter from Deputy Governour Eden, dated Annapolis, Maryland, 30th December, 1774; received 1st February, 1775, enclosing,

No. 9. Extract from the Maryland Gazette, of December 29th, 1774.

No. 10. Copy of a Paper handed about in the City of Annapolis.

Together with a List of said Papers.

And the said List was read.

Ordered, That the Papers be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, by his Majesty's command.

The other Order of the Day being read,

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and this day, by his Majesty's command.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had made a further progress in the matters to them referred; and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

THURSDAY, February 2, 1775.

A Petition of the Planters of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies, residing in Great Britain, and of the Merchants of London, trading to the said Colonies, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth

That the Petitioners are exceedingly alarmed at an Agreement and Association entered into by the Congress held at Philadelphia, in North America, on the 5th day of September, 1774, whereby the Members thereof agreed and associated for themselves and the inhabitants of the several Provinces lying between Nova-Scotia and Georgia, that, from and after the 1st day of December, 1774, they would not import into British America, any Molasses, Syrups, Paneles, Coffee, or Pimento, from the British Plantations; and that after the 10th day of September, 1775, if the Acts and the parts of Acts of the British Parliament therein mentioned are not repealed, they would not directly or indirectly, export any Merchandise or commodity whatsoever to the West Indies; and representing to the House that the British property in the West India Islands amounts to upwards of thirty millions sterling; and that a further property of many millions is employed in the commerce created by the said Islands, a commerce comprehending Africa, the East Indies, and Europe; and that the whole profits and produce of those capitals ultimately centre in Great Britain, and add to the national wealth, while the navigation necessary to all its branches, establishes a strength which weahh can neither purchase nor balance; and that the Sugar Plantations in the West Indies are subject to a greater variety of contingencies than many other species of property from their necessary dependence on external support; and that, therefore, should any interruption happen in the general system of their commerce, the great national stock thus vested and employed must become unprofitable and precarious; and that the profits arising from the present state of the said Islands, and that are likely to arise from their future improvement, in a great measure depend on a free and reciprocal intercourse between them and the several Provinces of North America, from whence they are furnished with Provisions and other Supplies absolutely necessary for their support and the maintenance of their Plantations; and that the scarcity and high price in Great Britain, and other parts of Europe, of those articles of indispensable necessity, which they now derive from the middle Colonies of America, and the inadequate population in some parts of that Continent, with the distance, danger, and uncertainty of the navigation from others, forbid the Petitioners to hope for a supply in any degree proportionate to their wants; and that, if the first part of the said Agreement and Association for a Non-Importation hath taken place, and shall be continued, the same will be highly detrimental to the Sugar Colonies; and that, if the second part of the said Agreement and Association for a Non-Exportation shall be carried into execution, which the Petitioners do firmly believe will happen, unless the harmony that subsisted a few years ago between this Kingdom and the Provinces of America, to the infinite advantage of both, be restored, the Islands, which are supplied with most of their subsistence from thence, will be reduced to the utmost distress, and the trade between all the Islands and this Kingdom, will of course be obstructed to the diminution of the publick Revenue, to the extreme injury of a great number of Planters, and to the great prejudice of the Merchants, not only by the said obstruction, but also by the delay of payment of the principal and interest of an immense debt due from the former to the latter; and, therefore, praying the House to take into their most serious consideration that great political system of the Colonies heretofore so very beneficial to the mother country and her Dependencies: and adopt such measures as to them shah seem meet, to prevent the evils with which the Petitioners are threatened, and to preserve the intercourse between the West India Islands and the Northern Colonies, to the general harmony and lasting benefit of the whole British Empire; and that they may be heard by themselves, their Agents, or Counsel, in support of their Petition.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred red to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and yesterday, by his Majesty's command; and that the Petitioners be heard by themselves, their Agents, or Counsel, before the said Committee, in support of their Petition, if they think fit;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the words "and that the Petitioners," and inserting the words, "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," instead thereof;

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out, stand part of the question,

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the words, "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," be inserted instead thereof,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred; and that the Petitioners be heard by themselves, their Agents, or Counsel, before the said Committee, in support of their Petition, if they think fit.

The Order of the Day being read;

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and yesterday, by his Majesty's command.

Lord North recapitulated the information contained in the Papers; discriminated the temper of the Colonies; pointed out those where moderation prevailed, and where violence was concealed under the appearance of duty and submission; and named such as he thought were in a state of actual rebellion. He spoke of arts which he asserted were employed on both sides the Atlantic to raise this seditious spirit. He drew a comparison between the burdens borne by the people of Great Britain and those of America. The annual taxes paid by the inhabitants of Great Britain, he said, amounted to ten millions sterling, exclusive of the expenses of collection; and the number of inhabitants of Great Britain he supposed to be eight millions, therefore every inhabitant paid at least twenty-five *Sbiling*s annually. The total taxes of the Continent of America amount to no more than seventy-five thousand Pounds; the number of inhabitants of America were three millions, therefore an inhabitant of America paid no more than six Pence annually. He then proceeded to lay down the Legislative supremacy of Parliament; stated the measures adopted by America to resist it, and the almost universal confederacy of the Colonies in that resistance. Here, he said, he laid his foot on the great barrier which separated, and for the present disunited both countries; and on this ground alone of resistance and denial, he raised every argument leading to the motion he intended to make; which, he said, would be for an Address to the King, and for a conference with the Lords, that it might be the joint Address of both Houses. He hinted that the measures intended to be pursued, in ease the King should comply with their Address, were to send more Force; to bring in a temporary Act to put a stop to all the foreign trade of New England, particularly to their fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, till they returned to their duty; at the same time declaring that whenever they should acknowledge the supreme authority of the British Legislature, pay obedience to the laws of this Realm, and make a due submission to the King, their real grievances, upon their making proper application, should be redressed. His Lordship observed that the other Colonies were not so culpable, and he hoped might yet be brought to a sense of their duty to the mother country by more lenient measures. The question, he said, lay within a very narrow compass: it was simply, whether we should abandon this claim, and at once give up every advantage arising both from the sovereignty and the commerce, or to ensure both? Or whether we should resort to the measures indispensably necessary on such an occasion? He concluded with moving,

"That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty our most humble thanks for having been graciously pleased to communicate to this House the several Papers relating to the present state of the British Colonies in America, which, by his Majesty's commands, have been laid before this House, and from which, after taking them into our most serious consideration, we find that a part of his Majesty's subjects in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay have proceeded so far to resist the authority of the supreme Legislature, that a rebellion at this time actually exists within the said Province; and we see, with the utmost concern, that they have been countenanced and encouraged by unlawful combinations and engagements entered into by his Majesty's subjects, in several of the other Colonies, to the injury and oppression of many of their innocent fellow-subjects resident within the Kingdom of Great Britain, and the rest of his Majesty's Dominions; this conduct on their part appears to us the more inexcusable, when we consider with how much temper his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament have acted in support of the Laws and Constitution of Great Britain; to declare that we can never so far desert the trust reposed in us as to relinquish any oart of the sovereign authority over all his Majesty's Dominions, which by law is vested in his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament; and that the conduct of many persons, in several of the Colonies, during the late disturbances, is alone sufficient to convince us how necessary this power is for the protection of the lives and fortunes of all his Majesty's subjects; that we ever have been, and always shall be, ready to pay attention and regard to any real grievances of any of his Majesty's subjects which shall, in a dutiful and constitutional manner, be laid before us; and whenever any of the Colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence; but that, at the same time, we consider it as our indispensable duty humbly to beseech his Majesty that his Majesty will take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme Legislature; and that we beg leave, in the most solemn manner, to assure his Majesty that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by his Majesty, against all rebellious attempts, in the maintenance of the just rights of his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament."

Mr. Dunning: Sir, the noble Lord has endeavoured, by every light into which he can throw the question, to prove that the resistance of the Americans, though it has gone no further than Votes and Resolutions, is actual and open rebellion, and we are to come to a Resolution declaratory of the same idea; I think, sir, that there is no difficulty in proving the direct contrary position; that the Americans are not in rebellion, that the Votes and Resolutions of the several Congresses, both Provincial and Continental, are decent and moderate, though firm declarations of the estimation in which liberty ought to be held, and tempered with the highest expressions of loyalty and duty to their Sovereign. Against what is it that they rebel? Do they deny allegiance to his Majesty? Are they in arms in opposing the King's Troops? By what explanation, or by what misconception their conduct is now to be branded with so violent and so fatal an epithet, I cannot apprehend. You passed Acts in the last session, which, instead of governing America, carried tyranny into the bowels of America, and overturned all legal constitution in one of their Provinces; and you utterly ruined the capital of the Empire in that part of the world, by way of punishing the insolence of a mob. You executed those Acts by force of Arms; the people of the Colonies thinking themselves tyrannically used, and conceiving that the nature of their dependency upon the Parliament of Great Britain was not well understood on either side of the water, in order to treat with this country upon such momentous points, convened a General Congress; the Deputies met in that Congress, came to Resolutions declaratory of their ideas of their submission unto Britain, full of duty and allegiance to the King, and respect towards Parliament; but as all free countries have licentious subjects, and freedom in that country is attended with licentious newspapers, we, the Parliament of Great Britain, are to overlook the conduct of the Congress, and search for proofs of rebellion among the American mobs and Colony newspapers, which have actually been laid before us as state-papers, upon which we are to form our resolutions; yet in the action of those mobs, and in the expressions of these newspapers is not rebellion to be found. And it must be by the most sophistical of all arguments, that such a deduction is to be drawn; a people governed by a Constitution subordinate to our own, but the extent and powers of which are unknown even to ourselves, professing the utmost loyalty and obedience to the King, and using no violence against his Troops, nor being any where in arms, cannot, but by the utmost perversion of sense and expression, be denominated Rebels. I insist that America is not in a state of rebellion. I insist that every appearance of riot, disorder, tumult, and sedition, which the noble Lord has so faithfully recounted from newspapers, arises not from disobedience, treason, or rebellion, but is created by the conduct of those who are anxious to establish despotism; and whose views are manifestly directed to reduce America to the most abject state of servility, as a prelude to the realizing the same wicked system in the mother country. He concluded by insisting that an opposition to arbitrary measures was warranted by the Constitution, and established by precedent.

Mr. Attorney General Thurlow: Sir, the honourable and learned gentleman has greatly exerted his eloquence in order to prove that the present situation of the Americans is not that of rebellion. The error of this idea is pointed out by simply recurring, not to the elaborate arguments of so learned a gentleman, but to the deduction of common sense only. The several Provincial Meetings have ordered an arrangement of the Militia; that the fencible men hold themselves armed, accoutred, and ready for actual service; that thirty rounds of Powder and Ball be provided. And the inhabitants of the Colonies are so alert in obeying these orders, that they go beyond their commission, and seize upon the King's Artillery and Stores; the whole Continent joining in one universal voice of disobedience to the Legislature of this country. Now, sir, if this is not rebellion, I desire the learned gentleman will explain what is rebellion. Throwing the stress of his argument on the point of proving that the Colonists situation is not that of rebellion, is implying that the present proposition is wrong only on that account; and admitting that if they were in rebellion, the present measures would be perfectly right. By every principle of policy, we ought to render ourselves as secure as possible; and if we heard that such menacing circumstances as I have mentioned were breaking out in Scotland, in Ireland, or Cornwall, would not the Ministry deserve impeachment, if they took no previous measures to smother those seeds of rebellion before they grew up too powerful for resistance. Should they wait till all the parties had joined, and were on one march to London? The cases are similar; if the Colonists are allowed to proceed, they join in one powerful army, to resist which will be more difficult, and attended with more mischief, than to prevent the evils of such a campaign by vigorous measures before their forces are in a field: I speak openly upon this point, because I am convinced their intentions are to open hostility against the Troops, and to become independent of this country; and nothing can prevent their throwing off their allegiance, and becoming independent states, and this country losing all the commercial advantages from them she ever enjoyed, but a vigorous adherence to the measures now proposed.

Colonel Grant said he had served in America, and knew the Americans well; was certain they would not fight. They would never dare to face an English Army, and did not possess any of the qualifications necessary to make a good soldier; he repeated many of their common place expressions, ridiculed their enthusiasm in matters of religion, and drew a disagreeable picture of their manners and ways of living.

Mr. Charles Fox spoke better than usual. He entered fully into the question; pointed out the injustice, the inexpediency, and folly of the motion; prophesied defeat on one side the water, and ruin and punishment on the other. He moved an amendment to omit all the motion, but the three or four first lines, and to substitute the following words: "But deploring that the information which they (the Papers) have afforded serves only to convince the House that the measures taken by his Majesty's servants tend rather to widen than to heal the unhappy differences which have so long subsisted between Great Britain and America, and praying a speedy alteration of the same."

Mr. Grenville, spoke well in support of the Legislative power and controlling supremacy of Parliament; but entirely disapproved of the present measures as every way improper, intemperate, and impolitic.

Mr. Cruger said, though interested as he was in the business before the House, he should have remained silent had he not conceived that an honourable gentleman (Colonel Grant) had thrown some undeserved reflections on the Americans, which he should take some notice of before he sat down, but that he chose first to pay a little attention to the general business. He observed that the dispute between this country and her Colonies was of such infinite importance to both, that he hoped he should be forgiven if he said it would be imprudent to enter into it, but with the utmost caution and deliberation; that we were now like men walking on the brink of a precipice; that there was danger in every step, and that, in his opinion, the salvation of this country depended on the measures that were adopted by the House this night. He then apprized the House that the settlement of the unhappy disputes between England and America did not particularly concern any set of men, whether in or out of Administration; that it related to all, was connected with all, and materially affected the interests of the whole state. He then strongly recommended to all parties to go into an examination of the question, free from resentment or prejudice; to consider it with impartiality, to discuss it with temper, and to adopt with unanimity any salutary proposition, regardless of the man or party that may suggest it. He then endeavoured to vindicate the Americans, both as to their courage and gallantry, (in opposition to the assertions of the Colonel:) the latter he did with much good humour and pleasantry, but lost his temper in the former, became personal, and was called to order. He concluded with saying, that as many schemes of accommodation were talked of, he earnestly wished that some one might be adopted which would tend to restore the harmony and affection that once subsisted between Great Britain and her Colonies, and produced so many invaluable blessings to both.

Captain Luttrell. Notwithstanding the variety of opinions, information, and arguments we have heard from the different parts of this House, in the course of the several debates respecting our differences with America, I fear if we venture to consider them in a right point of view, we shall find they have put this country into a situation we are not yet sufficiently aware of, but which requires a very serious attention. Sir, I know it is unfashionable, and by some it will be reckoned troublesome, to talk of our marine in Parliament in times of peace; but after the recent proof we have had of the good disposition of a great majority of the Commons of England towards it, I have no doubt but they will cheerfully listen to the concerns of the Navy; and as the Papers now lying before us make it very materially necessary for me to mention them, I must risk the displeasure of a few individuals, who perhaps from interest or iniquity, have shown an inclination to keep us in the dark. Sir, I congratulate Administration upon the safe arrival of one half of Captain Le Crass's squadron at Boston, because it is attended with this fortunate circumstance, that we know where to find those Ships, and so have the power to recall them from a country where they must prove totally useless, to one that may possibly need their protection. Sir, it seems to me very unaccountable, for what useful purposes these two deck Ships could be sent to Boston, though I did indeed expect, in the course of the correspondence between Vice-Admiral Graves and the Board of Admiralty, some plausible excuse would have been offered us for disarming this country. But though, sir, in this respect, and many others, these letters convey but very limited and insufficient information, they at least tend to authenticate my assertions. For, sir, Admiral Graves, in the very curious accounts he gives us of his situation, in his letters to Mr. Stephens, observes, [Here he read several extracts from the American Letters] that the only part of the Fleet he can employ in actual service, is the twenty-gun Ships and small crafts; for which reason he has been obliged to purchase several Schooners to perform the King's service; that the rest of the Fleet are frozen up, and reduced to act upon the defensive. But, sir, I must request that the letter of the 14th of January, from the Lords of the Admiralty to the Earl of Dartmouth, may be read. Now, sir, I believe there is not a Member in this House that would not expect as much as I did, that the information alluded to in that letter, and the correspondence said to accompany it, should of course follow; and I had indeed some curiosity to see by what magick art the Admiral could station and dispose of a Fleet, which, according to his account and my belief, may be long since locked up in the ice, and attackable from the shore. Loaded wagons have been known to pass upon the ice at Boston at this season of the year. But, sir, not one line of this information is laid before us, though it clearly relates to matters of fact, not of opinion. I conclude there are reasons of state for suppressing it, and therefore shall make no comments on the subject. The House will draw their inferences; I, as a seaman, know how to draw mine. Sir, if the epithet of Traitor be applicable to him who feels for the commerce and persecutions of America, I think the English language wants a name for that man who knowingly and wantonly disarms this country, with no better view nor no other hope than to destroy her Colonies. The Americans, however, feel this consolation, that every Ship and every Regiment you send to Boston, serves but to add strength to their cause; for without much pretension to prophecy, I think I may venture to foretel, that the history of these dissensions will be similar to that in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when the troubles subsisted in Ireland. Sir, the Queen, as impatient to subdue the Irish as you have been the Americans, sent a large Army into that country; and did it immediately answer the end proposed? By no means; the Irish continued to gain strength daily, insomuch, that the Queen, demanding of her Ministers to know the cause of it, received for answer, that her Majesty's Army being there was the true reason; for that their money had found its way into the country, which not only enabled her opponents to purchase Ammunition, and all sorts of warlike Stores, but even to hire foreign officers to act against her. Sir, let us look towards America, and see if this anecdote is not applicable to the present times. But, sir, I must express my surprise, when I consider our insular situation and the true interest of this great commercial country, at the precipitate and indecent manner in which the reduction of the Navy at this important crisis was determined on. Sir, a partial letter produced from one of the Ports, not the most considerable one neither, and a lumped account of a supposed number of seamen in that country or in this, was all the information the House seemed entitled to, to enable us to judge of the eligibility of reducing our Naval force; but it is true, a certain noble Lord did afterwards condescend to re-assume the subject, though in a language which appeared to me strange and ungracious. Sir, his Lordship congratulated us upon being able to reduce the Navy Establishment to that of the year 1769; but, sir, he very ingeniously forgot to remind us, that there are one thousand six hundred effective men gone in four large Ships towards America, which are the complement of five sail of Guard-Ships; so that though the establishment be the same, our Naval force at home is already a quarter part inferior to what it was in 1769; and, sir, I am sorry to see this reduction made at a time when, I believe, it is pretty well known that the Spaniards maintain a large Fleet, under pretence of being at war with the Emperor of Morocco; and that the French, without paying them much compliment, are not less formidable in these Seas than we are; for, sir, from the best accounts I can procure at the different Ports, the numbers of seamen and marines left for the defence of this country, on board the several Guard-Ships and at quarters, do not exceed six thousand five hundred effective men, out of the twenty thousand voted last year by Parliament; how many of the remainder are in other parts of the world, is neither possible nor necessary for me to determine. But, sir, in this situation, is it sensible, is it politick, nay, is it safe, to pursue such coercive measures as, in my opinion, could only be justified if America and Great Britain were contending for the sovereignty of another

Empire? Are we sure, sir, a desperate people, made so by persecution and oppression, will not commit a desperate act; and, in imitation of ourselves in former times, sue to some other Power for protection? Can we believe, sir, that the French and Spaniards will look any longer with an eye of indifference on these disputes, than may be consistent with their interest to do so; or that they have not, at this very hour, priests and emissaries in America, aided, perhaps, by your new Roman Catholick subjects, to blow the coal of contention between America and this country? Do we not know, sir, that the Spaniards have never abandoned the claim they set up to Jamaica; and may we not expect, from their conduct at Falkland's Island, they wait such a favourable opportunity as this to commence hostilities against us? Or can we believe that the French will ever forget the manner in which you made reprisals previous to the commencement of the late war? I fear, indeed, we are about to pursue an effectual, unconquerable, though unconstitutional method, to lay a permanent embargo on our trade; but it is still possible that the French, by way of reciprocity, may insult your Coasts, while great part of your Fleet is frozen up in a distant country. But, sir, I must do the noble Lord on the opposite bench the justice to say, that he has been uniformly explicit in his principles respecting the Navy; he tells us to be jealous of it; that it is the favourite service, and that we must be cautious not to bestow too much upon our Fleet. Alas, sir, the officers of the Navy know by experience, that under the present Administration there is little prospect of either honours or emoluments being bestowed on their service, that need create a jealousy; though, sir, I am aware it may be accounted ungrateful if I omit to acknowledge those very high and distinguished marks of his Majesty's favour conferred on a late memorable occasion, no doubt at the recommendation of the Ministers too, upon some of the oldest flag-officers and most respectable characters in the English Navy; sir, I mean the honour of Knighthood. Such flattering testimony of royal approbation, I admit was sufficient to create a sort of jealousy wherever the news went forth. Sir, those dignified characters will undoubtedly command uncommon respect both abroad and at home. The event has given a consequence to the Naval service, and the youth of it look up with emulation to those high honours they may possibly arrive at, on the close of a life of danger and fatigue, spent in the service of their country. But, sir, I marvel not at this, because the noble Lord, upon a former occasion, was pleased to tell us, that the question with him was, how cheap we could be served? Sir, such an expression might possibly be well adapted to a parcel of Hessians, for I would give his Lordship's economy all due credit where it was consistent with the honour and safety of the Nation; and it might probably prove useful to this country, if he will extend them to the Civil as well as the Military departments of the state. Then, sir, on a fair investigation of the merits; should it appear that the Navy and Army receive more than a proportionable share of the loaves and fishes, let a part of them be appropriated to the inestimable services of the Lords of Treasury, Admiralty, and Trade. Sir, I think the noble Lord who moved this Address, has ventured to assert that Administration have a plan to intercept the trade of the Americans, by means of our Fleet cruising on their Coast. Now, sir, I can divine but one source from whence such an idea can possibly spring; and if I am right in my suggestion, I must dread the future consequences of a certain summer excursion. Sir, I have long been aware that they are attended with a very great and unnecessary expense to the publick, and that the honours of the flag have been shamefully prostituted to the supercilious vanity of those who, as individuals, are by no means entitled to the distinctions they have desired and exacted. But, sir, I have hitherto considered these Naval expeditions to be more like the pageantry of the luxurious Queen of Egypt on the Cydnus, than like a serious and official inspection into the real state of our marine. If, sir, however, from exploring our cold shore, a judgment has been formed of the frozen Coasts of America, I fear we shall, ere long, experience the fatal consequences of such a conjecture. Sir, it is next to impossible that the King's Ships should keep the Sea in the Northern parts of that country, from November to June; and therefore, sir, however the leaders of Government may be disposed towards the officers of the Navy, I will entreat them to pay some regard to the safety of the Fleet, and a little attention to the situation of this country. Then, I hope, sir, that both humanity and interest will dictate to them not to sport with the lives of the few seamen now employed.

Mr. Cosmo Gordon was against any compromise or lenient measures with America, until she entirely submitted.

Mr. Burke, who was this day much indisposed, laid forth the numerous ill consequences that must inevitably follow; called the present moment the true crisis of Britain's fate; painted the dreadful abyss into which the Nation was going to be plunged; called upon the commercial part of the House to rouse themselves at the open declaration of their approaching ruin, and pathetically described to the landed interest the fatal effects that must inevitably reach them.

The Solicitor General defended the measure. He gave every allowance for, and paid all deference to, the interests of Commerce and Manufactures; but contended that in the present case interests were concerned of yet greater consequence; that all the world must acknowledge, that when the clearest rights of the Legislative power of a country were invaded and denied, and when in consequence, the people so denying were in actual and open rebellion, that then there were points of greater importance to be settled and decided, than those of Commerce and Manufacture; An enemy in the bowels of a Kingdom was surely to be resisted, opposed, and conquered, notwithstanding the trade that might suffer, and the fabricks that might be ruined. That descriptions of the immense consequence of our American trade were arguments rather against the opposing Members than for them; for the greater the consequence of the Commerce, the greater the care ought to be, and the firmer the policy that was to preserve it; that the question was not now the importance of the American Colonies, but the possession of the Colonies at all.

The question being put on the amendment moved by Mr. Fox, the Committee divided: Yeas, 105; Noes, 304. So it passed in the Negative.

The question then being put, on Lord North's motion for an Address, the Committee divided; Yeas, 296; Noes, 106.

So it passed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Speaker then resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had made a further progress in the matters to them referred, and had come to a Resolution, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received upon Monday morning next.

Sir Charles Whitworth also acquainted the House that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

FRIDAY, February 3, 1775.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the quantities of Sugar imported into Great Britain from the British Colonies and Plantations, from Christmas, 1762, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the quantities of Muscovado Sugar, and of refined Sugar, exported from Great Britain, from Christmas, 1762, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each year; and the quantities exported to North America.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an account of the amount and value of the Imports from the British Sugar Colonies into Great Britain, from Christmas, 1762, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year.

Mr. Tomkyns, one of the Commissioners of the Customs, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders,

An Account of the amount of the Drawbacks paid out of the produce of the Customs in England, for the three years ending at Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each year; and also,

An Account of all British Plantation Tobacco imported into that part of Great Britain called England, from the year 1760, to the 5th of January, 1774; and the quantity exported from England in the same period; distinguishing the Exports and Imports in each particular year, which is as far as the same can be made up; and also,

An Account of the value of the Exports and Imports to and from North America and England, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year; and also,

An Account of the value of the Exports and Imports to and from the West Indies and England, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Island and each year.

The Order of the Day being read,

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, and of the several Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee.

MONDAY, February 6, 1775.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an account of all the Corn, Flour, and Bread, imported from North America into that part of Great Britain called England, from January, 1767, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each kind of Grain, and the quantity imported in each year.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the first day of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command, the Resolution which the Committee had directed him to report to the House; which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee that an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty our most humble thanks for having been graciously pleased to communicate to this House the several Papers relating to the present state of the British Colonies in America, which by his Majesty's commands, have been laid before this House, and from which, after taking them into our most serious consideration, we find that a part of his Majesty's subjects in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, have proceeded so far to resist the authority of the supreme Legislature, that a rebellion at this time actually exists within the said Province; and we see with the utmost concern, that they have been countenanced and encouraged by unlawful combinations and engagements entered into by his Majesty's subjects in several of the other Colonies, to the injury and oppression of many of their innocent fellow-subjects resident within the Kingdom of Great Britain and the rest of his Majesty's Dominions. This conduct on their part appears to us the more inexcusable, when we consider with how much temper his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament have acted in support of the Laws and Constitution of Great Britain; to declare that we can never so far desert the trust reposed in us, as to relinquish any part of the sovereign authority over all his Majesty's Dominions, which by law is vested in his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament; and that the conduct of many persons in several of the Colonies, during the late disturbances, is alone sufficient to convince us how necessary this power is for the protection of the lives and fortunes of all his Majesty's subjects; that we ever have been, and always shall be ready to pay attention and regard to any real grievances of any of his Majesty's subjects, which shall in a dutiful and constitutional manner be laid before us; and whenever any of the Colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence; but that, at the same time, we consider it as our indispensable duty humbly to beseech his Majesty, that his Majesty will take the most essential measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme Legislature; and that we beg leave, in the most solemn manner, to assure his Majesty, that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by his Majesty against all rebellious attempts, in the maintenance of the just rights of his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament.

Lord John Cavendish moved that it be recommitted. He strongly recommended the reconsideration of a measure which he deemed fraught with so much mischief; commented on the proposed Address; thought it improper to assert that a rebellion existed; mentioned the insecurity created by the Act for changing the Government of Massachusetts Bay; said the inhabitants knew not for a moment under what Government they lived. His head and heart combined to deprecate the horrors of civil war, necessarily involving a foreign one also, with the combined forces of very powerful Nations. He represented the jealousy of our neighbours, from their disgrace and our glory in the last war. If the Americans should hear of our having declared them Rebels, and that more force was coming, might they not determine rather to attack a part than wait for the whole? a small rather than a greater number? He stated our domestic situation, our state with the Colonies and with foreign Powers. He called the attention of the House to the unequal balance of our loss and our gain in the event; in which we might find our Revenue destroyed, our Trade annihilated, and our Empire itself overturned; and if we succeeded in subduing America, we could gain nothing.

Lord Lumley seconded the motion. He expressed himself with modesty, handsomely making his youth a personal plea for his wishing the utmost time for reconsideration on a matter so important.

The Lord Mayor, Mr. Wilkes. Mr. Speaker: the business before the House, in its full extent, respecting the British Colonies in America, is of as great importance as was ever debated in Parliament. It comprehends almost every question relative to the common rights of mankind, almost every question of policy and legislation. I do not mean to enter into so vast, so well-trodden a field. I will confine myself to the immediate business of this day. The Address now reported from the Committee of the Whole House, appears to be unfounded, rash, and sanguinary. It draws the sword unjustly against America; but before Administration are suffered to plunge the Nation into the horrors of a civil war, before they are permitted to force Englishmen to sheath their swords in the bowels of their fellow-subjects, I hope this House will seriously weigh the original ground and cause of this unhappy dispute, and in time reflect whether justice is on our side, and gives a sanction to the intended hostile proceedings. The assumed right of taxation, without the consent of the subject, is plainly the primary cause of the present quarrel. Have we, then, sir, any right to tax the Americans? That is the great important question. The fundamental laws of human nature, and the principles of the English Constitution, are equally repugnant to the claim. The very idea of property excludes the right of another's taking any thing from me without my consent, otherwise I cannot call it my own. No tenure can be so precarious as the will of another. What property have I in what another person can seize at his pleasure? If any part of my property is subject to the discretionary powers of others, the whole may be so likewise. If we can tax the Americans without their consent, they have no property; nothing they can call their own with certainty; for we might by violence take the whole as well as the part. The words liberty and property, so dear to an Englishman, so pleasing in our ears, would become a cruel mockery, an insult to an American. The laws of society are professedly calculated to secure the property of each individual, of every subject of the state. This point is no less clearly determined by the great principles of that happy Constitution under which we live. All subsidies to the Crown have always been considered, and expressly declared, to be grants from the Commons of the Realm, free gifts from the people. Their full consent is stated in the grant. Much has been said of the Palatinate of Chester, and the Principality of Wales, and the period of their taxation; but, sir, there is a more remarkable case in point, which alone would determine this question. If gentlemen will search the Records in the Tower, and the Chapel of the Rolls, they will find that the Town of Calais, in France, when it belonged to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, was not taxed till it sent a Representative to Parliament. A Thomas Fowler actually sat and voted in this House as a Burgess of the Town of Calais. From that period, and not till then, was Calais taxed. The Writ out of Chancery, and the Return in the reign of Edward Sixth, are still extant. I faithfully gave them to the publick from attested copies.

It will, I foresee, sir, be objected; is America then to enjoy the protection of Great Britain, and to contribute nothing to the support of that parent state, which has so long afforded it safety and security, which has carefully and tenderly nursed it to this hour of its present strength and greatness? The Americans themselves have given the fullest answer to this objection, in a manner not to be controverted, by their conduct through a long series of years, and by the most explicit declarations. Equally in words and actions, of the most unequivocal nature, they have demonstrated their love, their ardour, their strong filial piety towards the mother country. They have always appeared ready, not only to contribute towards the expenses of their own Government, but likewise to the wants and necessities of this state, although perhaps they may not be over-fond of all the proud, expensive trappings of royalty. In the two last wars with France, they far exceeded the cold line of prudence. With the most liberal hearts, they cheerfully gave you nearly their all, and they fought gallantly and victoriously by your side, with equal valour against our and their enemy, the common enemy of the liberties of Europe and America, the ambitious, faithless French, whom now we fear and flatter. Our Journals, sir, will bear witness to the grateful sense we had of the important services of our brethren in America, by the great sums we shall find voted to be repaid them for what they expended in the spirited warlike expeditions, which they carried through with equal courage and conduct. The siege and capture of Louisbourg, the various successful operations against the general foe, without the least knowledge, much less participation, on our part, are the fullest proofs of the warm affection of their hearts to this country, and of their readiness to bear more than their share of the publick expense and burthen. But, sir, the whole was the gift of freemen, our fellow-subjects, who feel that they are, and know they have a right to be, as free as ourselves. What is their language even now, at a moment when you are planning their destruction, when you are branding them with the odious appellation of Rebels? In the late Petition of the Congress to the King, they declare, "they are ready and willing, as they ever "have been, when constitutionally required, to demonstrate "their loyalty to his Majesty, by exerting their most strenuous efforts in granting Supplies and raising Forces." This is the unanimous Resolution of a Congress, composed of Deputies from the several Colonies of New-Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Counties of Newcastle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and the two Carolinas.

I have heard, sir, of a plan of accommodation, which, I believe, would reconcile all differences. But alas, sir, it does not come from any servant of the Crown. It comes from the noble Lord, to whom this country has the most essential obligations; to whom it is so highly indebted for its late splendour and glory. The plan is, to assemble another Congress in the Spring, under the authority of the Parliament of Great Britain; the Deputies of the several Colonies to meet together, and to be jointly empowered to regulate the various quotas to be paid by each Province to the General Treasury of the whole Empire. I would, in addition to that plan, propose that a regulation, similar to what actually takes place with respect to Scotland, be adopted as to America. The proportion of each Colony might be settled according to the Land-Tax in England, at one, two, or more Shillings in the Pound. I am not deep politician enough to know what the proportion should be of each Province, which will vary greatly in half a century; but I speak of each quota being at all times to be regulated according to the Land-Tax of this country. The very extensive and flourishing Colonies of the Massachusetts Bay, Virginia, and South Carolina, for instance, should contribute more; the smaller and poorer Colonies of New-Hampshire and New-Jersey, less; but, sir, I insist, not a Shilling can be taken without their consent. After this day's debate, should the Address now moved for, be carried in this House, I greatly fear that not only this wise plan of the noble Lord, but every idea of a reconciliation between this country and her Colonies, will be utterly impracticable.

The Americans, sir, have of late been treated, both within doors and without, in a manner which marks no small degree of injustice, and even a wantonness of cruelty. We have been repeatedly told to-day, that they complain of the Navigation Act, and insist on the repeal of it. We have authentick evidence to the contrary. In the Resolutions of the Congress; they desire only to be put on the footing they were at the close of the late war, "as to the system of Statutes and Regulations;" nor among the various Acts, of which they solicit the repeal, have they once mentioned either the Navigation or Declaratory Act. It has likewise been asserted, that they are forward and angry enough to wish to throw off the supremacy of the mother country. Many express Resolutions, both of the General Congress, and the different Provincial Assemblies, are the fullest evidence of the sense which the Americans entertain of their obedience and duty to Great Britain. They are too numerous to be quoted. Their full claim, as stated by themselves, is so explicit and clear, that I beg leave to read it to the House from their Petition to the King. It declares, "We ask but for peace, liberty, and safety." Surely, sir, no request was ever more modest and reasonable, no claim better founded. It expressly mentions, "We wish not a diminution of the prerogative, nor do we sell—"cit a grant of any new right in our favour. Your royal "authority over us, and our connection with Great Britain, we shall always carefully and zealously endeavour "to support and maintain."

What a contrast, sir, does this make with the proceedings of Administration at home. They are sedulously endeavouring to tear asunder those powerful ties, which have long and happily knit and bound us together.

The Address, sir, mentions the particular Province of the Massachusetts Bay as in a state of actual rebellion. The other Provinces are held out to our indignation as aiding and abetting. Many arguments have been employed by some learned gentlemen among us, to involve them in all the consequences of an open, declared rebellion, and to obtain the fullest orders for our Officers and Troops to act against them as against rebels. Whether their present state is that of rebellion, or of a fit and just resistance to unlawful acts of power, to our attempts to rob them of their property and liberties, as they imagine, I shall not declare. This I know; a successful resistance is a revolution, not a rebellion. Rebellion indeed appears on the back of a flying enemy; but revolution flames on the breast-plate of the victorious warrior. Who can tell, sir, whether in consequence of this day's violent and mad Address to his Majesty, the scabbard may not be thrown away by them as well as by us; and should success attend them, whether in a few years the independent Americans may not celebrate the glorious era of the Revolution of 1775, as we do that of 1688? The generous efforts of our forefathers for freedom, Heaven crowned with success, or their noble blood had dyed our scaffolds, like that of Scottish Traitors and Rebels; and the period of our history, which does us the most honour, would have been deemed a rebellion against the lawful authority of the Prince, not a resistance authorized by all the laws of God and man, not the expulsion of a Tyrant.

The policy, sir, of this measure, I can no more comprehend, than I can acknowledge the justice of it. Is your force adequate to the attempt? I am satisfied it is not. What are your Armies? And how are they to be kept up and recruited? Do you recollect that the single Province of Massachusetts Bay has at this moment thirty thousand men well trained and disciplined? Do you not know that they can bring near ninety thousand men into the field? They will do it, when every thing dear to them is at stake, when they have their liberties to defend against cruel oppressors and invaders. You will not be able to conquer and keep even that single Province. The noble Lord (North) with the blue ribband, proposes only ten thousand of our Troops to be there, including the four Regiments now going from Ireland; and he acknowledges, with great truth, that the Army cannot enforce the late Act of Parliament. Why then is it sent? Boston, indeed, you may lay in ashes, or it may be made a strong Garrison; but the Province will be lost to you. Boston will be like Gibraltar. You will hold in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, as you do in Spain, a single Town, while the whole country remains in the power and possession of the enemy. Your Fleets and Armies may keep a few Towns on the Coast, for some time at least; Boston, New-York, St. Augustine; but the vast Continent of America will be irrecoverably lost. A few Fortresses on the Coast, and some Seaports only, will remain in your possession. All the back settlements will be independent of you, and will thrive in the rapid progression of your violences and unjust exactions on the Towns. A new and amazing landed interest will be created. The ancient story of the Philosopher Calanus and the Indian Hide will be verified. Where you tread it will be kept down; but it will rise the more in all other parts. Where your Fleets and Armies are stationed, the possession will be secured while they continue; but all the rest will be lost. In the great scale of Empire, you will decline, I fear, from the decision of this day; and the Americans will rise to independence, to power, to all the greatness of the most renowned states; for they build on the solid basis of general publick liberty.

I tremble, sir, at the almost certain consequences of such an Address, founded in cruelty and injustice, equally contrary to the sound maxims of true policy, and the unerring rule of natural right. The Americans will certainly defend their property and their liberties with the spirit of freemen, with the spirit our ancestors did, and I hope we should exert on a like occasion. They will sooner declare themselves independent, and risk every consequence of such a contest, than submit to the galling yoke which Administration is preparing for them. An Address of this sanguinary nature cannot fail of driving them to despair. They will see that you are preparing not only to draw the sword, but to burn the scabbard. In the most harsh manner you are declaring them Rebels. Every idea of a reconciliation will vanish. They will pursue the most vigorous measures in their own defence. The whole Continent of North America will be dismembered from Great Britain, and the wide arch of the raised Empire fall. But I hope the just vengeance of the people will overtake the authors of these pernicious counsels, and the loss of the first Province of the Empire be speedily followed by the loss of the heads of those Ministers who advised these wicked and fatal measures.

Captain Harvey. I shall make no apology for intruding on the time of the House, because I think it a duty incumbent on every man, who has the welfare of his country at heart, to speak out on this occasion, and declare his sentiments on so very important a crisis; a crisis, sir, in which I believe this country has not been involved in a more intricate one since the Revolution, and for which we are not only indebted to the refractory spirit of some of those ungrateful subjects on the other side of the Atlantic, but to some no less restless ones on this side of it; and which induces me to believe, that as a great Minister once boasted in this House, that he had conquered America in Germany, so, I very much fear, we shall now be obliged to conquer it, or at least some part of it, again in England; for, till we put a stop to the sedition that is so constantly, so artfully, and so shamefully blown from hence, and give a check to those incendiaries who dare breathe forth such inflammatory poison as every newspaper conveys, we can never hope, without the last extremities, to bring the wicked leaders of those deluded people to a sense of their duty.

To acknowledge, sir, the supremacy of the Legislative power of this country over all its Dominions, and dispute the right of that power to exert itself, as it shall judge best for the good of the whole, is, in my humble opinion, too puerile and too trifling to throw away an argument upon; anti, in our present situation with the Colonies, too criminal not to condemn without hesitation. Either the Legislative power of a Kingdom has authority over all its Dominions, or it has none over any part of them; it cannot be partial; nor do I think any one branch of that Legislature can, by any act or charter whatever, exempt any particular set of its subjects from the authority of the whole Legislature. Could that be done, sir, and could a preference be given to any, I am very sure this House would long ago have turned their eyes towards our sister Kingdom of Ireland, who has every claim to that preference in our affections and for our assistance, being as remarkable for their loyalty and obedience, as they are for their industry, and I am sorry to say, for their poverty.

That America, by every tie human nature can devise, ought to be subordinate to the authority of Great Britain, is beyond a doubt, more especially when we Consider and reflect, at what immense expense of blood and treasure to this country, those very Colonies have been brought to that excess of greatness and riches, as that they shall now vainly think themselves able, and insolently declare themselves ready, to shake off their dependence, and become a separate state. That they have long been aiming at it, is evident from all their proceedings, and from all the papers before you; and that they may possibly become so in some future age (long may it be first) is natural to suppose, from what history teaches us of the vicissitude of all Nations. But this I am certain of, the more they dare to sound that alarm, and the more they struggle for that period, the more it is our duty, as Englishmen, to watch over them, and not let the evil day be anticipated by any remissness or want of firmness on our part, for that would not only be highly criminal towards our King and country to permit it, but also leave an everlasting stain on the present age, if we meanly shake off the task of preventing it from ourselves, and leave it for posterity to struggle with as they can.

Sir, although I am under no kind of apprehensions from the consequences that may ensue from enforcing obedience in the Colonies, from the good opinion I yet have of some cool, dispassionate, well affected men in the Colonies, yet I own, for the sake of tranquillity here, and our Manufactures, I wish there were any lenient measures left to pursue; but I know of none that have not been repeatedly tried; and I very much fear, that mildness and lenity, with which Government has proceeded throughout all their conduct towards the Colonies, that tenderness shewn in every step hitherto taken, has been both here and there construed into timidity, and from advantages drawn from thence, by disaffected and interested people, has produced these disgraceful and fatal effects.

For my own part, sir, if the House will allow me to trespass on their indulgence, and speak of the conduct of so insignificant an individual as myself, I will tell them, that notwithstanding all the threats and menaces, all the harsh censures that were the other night, on this subject, thrown out against all those who had supported the measures of Government, and all the crude epithets that were given to every thing that had been done, to every thing that was doing, and every thing that was to be done, (without knowing very well what that last was to be,) yet, sir, I shall, in defiance of all those threats and menaces, still glory in having given my negative to the repeal of the Stamp Act. I took the liberty on that extraordinary occasion to foretel to the House, the consequences that would ensue from that puerile, pitiful, and baneful measure; and I am now no less proud of declaring, that as my education and profession have led me a very different path from that of a politician; so, sir, from the moment I had a seat in this House, I thought it my duty to study the opinions and conduct of those, whose abilities and whose attachment to their country, justly entitled them to a preference, and very early attached myself to that good, wise, and able Minister, Mr. Grenville, whose loss this country will long feel and lament, and whose memory I shall ever honour and revere; though it is some consolation from what I heard the other night fall from a young noble Member, to find the father's virtues and abilities reviving in the son. However, sir, I will not prove myself undeserving the friendship and confidence that Minister honoured me with, by deviating this day in one single iota from what I am confident would have been his conduct, had we been so happy to have had him still among us; and therefore, as far as my voice goes, I will never consent to the rescinding, the discharging, or the repealing any one resolution, order, or act, that either the last, or any former Parliament, has passed for the declaring, maintaining, and enforcing the Legislative authority of Great Britain over all its Colonies.

Sir, I shall be very happy to give my vote, (and if I had health and abilities equal to my zeal and inclination,) my assistance also, to any proper English constitutional measure that could effectually restore that harmony between the mother country and the Colonies, so essentially necessary to both, but which I absolutely deny (in any one point of view) to be more so to England than to America; but, sir, whilst there are those individuals on this side of the water, some of great abilities, some of great titles, and some few of great fortunes, but all of great passions, whom I fear are so forgetful of their duty, as to be sacrificing the honour and welfare of this country, nay, risking the very existence of it to their own private views and ambition, to their own private piques and resentments, we can never flatter ourselves that any measures will have the wished for effect, but the most determined, the most firm, and the most vigorous ones.

Having said this, sir, let me not be understood to wish, or mean to recommend, the carrying execution through all the Colonies with fire and sword. No, sir, God forbid I should have so sanguine a thought. I flatter myself other means may be found, and I hope, and have not a doubt, but so soon as they find us determined to do our duty, they will be brought to a sense of theirs, and all difficulties will subside without shedding one single drop of blood; but should I be so misunderstood here, and so misrepresented without doors, (which is the prevailing mode,) all I can say is, that I am determined to be as indifferent to it as conscious innocence will ever be to every invidious slander. I look upon all such temporary misrepresentations and abuse, just as I do on the clouds that pass under the sun; they cast a momentary shade on all people and all things; wait but with a little patience, truth, like the sun, will break out, disperse those clouds, and all people and all things appear in their proper lustre. I shall, therefore, sir, wait with patience for that moment, trusting to those abilities, to that temper, and to that firmness, with which the noble Lord by me, who now holds the helm, has hitherto conducted us, through the violent storm, and through all the difficulties in which he found us involved; and make no doubt, but notwithstanding all the obstacles thrown in his way, he will bring us to a lasting and pleasing calm; and, therefore, sir, I shall most heartily concur in this proposed Address, and be against the recommitment of it.

Sir William Mayne. I should not rise to trouble you this day, could I reconcile to my own breast the giving a silent vote on a question, upon which depends not only the existence of this country, but the happiness of millions. The vote I shall give, will be free from the smallest tincture of that prejudice which has industriously been inculcated into the minds of the Americans from this side the water, that they are to expect from every Member of this House who drew his first breath on the other side of the Tweed. No sir; I will give my vote this day, uninfluenced by party, and undictated to by power; I will give it like an honest Member of Parliament, who considers the approbation of his own mind his best Parliamentary reward, and Who acknowledges fie dictator but that of his own conscience.

Some time ago, I gave my support to the Address to his Majesty, holding myself at full liberty to decide upon every point relating to America, when they came specially before this House. Since that time, I have taken all the information from the Papers upon your table, as well as from the proceedings in America, by which I regulate my judgment upon this great and arduous situation of this country. And it is with sorrow I say it, that so very violent has been, and still is, the conduct of the Americans, that there is scarce an opening left for British justice and British humanity to interfere for their relief, or to give protection to those loyal and faithful subjects, of which I trust many are yet to be found in that Continent.

No man, I think, can read the votes and proceedings of the American Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia on the 5th of September last, without amazement, compassion, and indignation; amazement at the act, compassion for the delusion, and indignation at the insult offered to their mother country.

Declaratory of what they say they are entitled to by the immutable laws of nature, the principles of the English Constitution, and the several Charters or compacts, they come to eleven Resolutions, all of which, in my opinion, both in spirit and in substance, are subversive of, and destructive to, every fundamental principle which either constitutes or supports our most excellent Constitution.

In the first Resolution they tell you they have never ceded to any power the disposal of their life, liberty, or property; which is a posture denial of their being British subjects, and of the existence of this Constitution, which we all know has inherent in it a power to make laws to hold in penalty the lives, liberty, and property of its subjects, when the general safety of the whole requires it; as in cases of felony, where life and consequently liberty is forfeited; and in cases of high treason, where both life, liberty, and property are forfeited.

They set forth that their ancestors were, at the time of their emigration from the mother country, entitled to all rights, liberties, and immunities of free and natural born subjects within the Realm of England, and that they, their descendants, are now entitled to the same; a claim which neither the wisdom nor justice of this country will deny them, provided they will yield the same obedience to the Laws and Constitution of this country, which was the pride, the glory, and protection of their ancestors at the time they left it.

It has been strongly urged by the advocates for America, that they were not represented; this has made deep impressions on the minds of many people, who thought if they were allowed an adequate number of Representatives in the British Senate all would be well, and every thing again subside to its original harmony; but how vain this hope, all must see who read the fourth Resolution of the Congress, whereby they expressly tell you that the English Colonies; from their local and other circumstances, cannot be represented in the British Parliament; from which it must be obvious to every one, that it is not a common, mixed representation with Great Britain they wish to enjoy, but a free and independent Legislature of their own.

They likewise claim the full benefit of our most excellent Constitution, though, in the same breath, they deny and resist its legal authority in every part. They declare the keeping a Standing Army in the Colonies, in time of peace, without the consent of the Legislature of the Colony in which it is so kept up, is against law. In times of danger from their foreign and domestick enemies, they acquiesced without murmuring to this Standing Army, kept up at our expense; but no sooner is the moment of danger over, and they feel themselves in a state of security from the calamities of war, and that this Standing Army becomes necessary to secure their obedience and allegiance to the Laws and Constitution of this country - but it is inadmissible, contrary to law, and a flagrant violation of the freedom of their American Constitution.

Can we view with an indifferent eye the Resolutions of the Congress, where, in a style more becoming the haughty Courts of Versailles and Madrid, they inhibit all intercourse of commerce between America and this country. To all Nations with whom we are not actually at war, we can transport our commodities with safety, but it is only on the inhospitable Continent of America that British Manufactures, the produce of British industry, cannot find an asylum.

Much has been said with respect to the reception of the Merchants' Petition. Nobody can or ought to have a higher respect for that honourable body of men than I have; but I must say I think their Petition was decently received and decently treated. The advocates for it pressed for its being referred to the same Committee with the Papers; alleging, if it was not heard in that Committee, that you would decide upon the Papers without having the evidence of the Merchants, which might be essential to your determining properly upon that great question. In the course of the business of this House, it so fell out that on the Thursday fixed for considering the Papers, which was the day before the Merchants' Committee, the House could not pronged upon them, and the consideration of them was adjourned till the Tuesday following. This left the very next day open for the Merchants to come to your bar, and there give you their full evidence, which we could carry in our minds to meet that of the Papers or the Tuesday following; but what was our surprize when this House resolved itself into a Committee, and called for the Merchants; only one single person appeared, who read a written paper, the purport of which was, that they had nothing to offer, as they could not be heard in the same Committee with the Papers, Much has been said too, of foreign powers taking the advantage of our disputes with America. I am persuaded fears of that kind are ill-founded, as all Powers on the Continent of Europe, who have settlements in the Western and Southern world, are alarmed lest, if our Colonies should succeed in shaking off their dependence on this country, theirs would soon follow the example.

Strong suspicions have been thrown out that the Americans have been heated to their present phrenzy by incendiaries from home. If there are Catalines in this country, (I am sure there are none of them within these walls, for we are all honourable men) who have been plotting treasons in the dark against the state, let them be dragged to light; let them be offered up a sacrifice to the just resentments of the people and the violated rights of their country; let their names be handed down with infamy to posterity, and let ages yet to come execrate their memory.

Therefore, upon the whole, if a universal resistance to the Civil Government of America, as by law established, if denying a free and reciprocal interchange of British and American commodities, if resisting every act of the British Legislature, and absolutely, in word and deed, denying the sovereignty of this country, if laying a strong hand on the revenues of America, if seizing his Majesty's Forts, Artillery, and Ammunition, if exciting and stimulating by every means the whole subjects of America to take Arms and to resist the constitutional authority of Great Britain, are acts of treason, then are the Americans in a state of the most flagrant rebellion; a state that every good man must lament, and none more than myself, as I sincerely wish every moderate and constitutional method to be taken to bring back these unhappy and deluded people to a sense of their duty. But if, after all, conciliating measures shall fail. this country has no alternative left but to make use of that power they enjoy, under Heaven, for the protection of the whole Empire; and to shew the Americans that as our ancestors deluged this country with their blood to gain this Constitution for us, we, like men, in defiance of faction at home, or rebellion abroad, are determined, in glorious emulation of their example, to transmit it perfect and unimpaired to posterity, or perish in the attempt. These, sir, are my sentiments on this great question, flowing from the purest dictates of an uninfluenced and unbiased conscience, supported by a heart ready to bleed for the rights and liberties of the people, indifferent to me where I meet the invaders of them, whether on the cultivated plains of Britain, or the more wild and uncultivated deserts of America; so shall give my hearty affirmative to this motion.

Mr. T. Townshend insisted that the imputation of causing a civil war was misplaced; called upon the last speaker to point out those Catalines who had fomented civil dissensions; and said that every one else thought the imputation and description belonged to another set of men. You are, said he, in the last moment wherein there can be any possibility of a pause that may suggest any measures of reconciliation. The Address cries havock!

Mr. Jolliffe said his ideas differed so widely from the noble Lord (North) that he could not give his assent to measures his soul shuddered at. He disapproved of the plan, and was for considering it in every light, lest resistance should be made justifiable.

Mr. Hans Stanley approved of the proposed Address; remarked on the Papers; said he wanted nothing but the Americans to submit; would then hang out the olive branch, propose an amnesty, an act of grace and oblivion, a compact; but thought some examples ought to be made.

Lord Irnham began with asking what are the real springs and motives for Administration carrying on this alarming and ruinous American war? The House of Commons, in my humble opinion, said his Lordship, cannot perceive, by any thing that has been communicated, to us from Papers read at your table, which contain very little more than what we have seen in the publick prints; nor do I think it likely we should grow wiser by any information more candid and satisfactory than that they have already bestowed upon us. However, I shall suppose in their favour, that they have other motives for their conduct, than have hitherto appeared to that part of this House which consists of independent Members.

When I say "they," I mean the noble Lord at the head of Administration, and a few others his chief associates; for, as to the mass of those who support his measures, I believe they do not insist upon more weighty arguments than that constant one he furnishes them with. Since, therefore, Parliament cannot merely, from the materials on your table, approve or sanctify this violent attack upon America; and since the safety or consequence of it cannot be tried on any commercial considerations, which this House has for the present debarred us from, kindly indeed, in one respect, as the view of it would have exhibited a most gloomy and uncomfortable prospect; we are, therefore, in obedience to their will, to combat them on the ground they have chosen; and we must consider this American war, in regard to its being a constitutional, and likewise a political question, under the latter head, including foreign and domestic policy. On the ground, then, that they have chosen, I will meet them, and fairly put our cause to the issue.

First, to consider it in a constitutional light, it militates against the great principles which has constantly been adopted by the friends of liberty, which is the life and soul of true Whiggism - that the interest of the community at large, and their sense of that interest, ought to govern and be the rule for the Executive power to act by, in preference to the will or opinion of any man, or order of men, however dignified, as servants of that community. To evince this clearly, let us look back to the first struggle for liberty, in the reign of Charles the martyr. What was then the great point to be decided? Was it not whether the few, though possessed of all the powers in the state, civil, military, and ecclesiastical, might employ those powers against the will of the many (the body of the people) or should conform themselves to the latter?

On the one side were, not only the Monarch then on the throne, but a high spirited and spendid Peerage, my Lords the Bishops, and indeed the whole hierarchy called the Church, by far the majority of my Lords the Judges, and the other superiours of the Long Robe, with their numerous dependants. These all were for supporting the prerogative of the Crown, as enlarged by the Tudors and Stuarts. They were for the dispensing power, star-chamber prosecutions, ship-money, and other arbitrary claims, as the true plan on which this Nation should be governed.

On the contrary side, were the People of England at large, and as part of themselves, their faithful and independent Representatives in this House; the great commercial Cities of London and Bristol; the important inland Towns, Coventry, Birmingham, Manchester, &c., the Manufacturers, Artificers, and Husbandmen, throughout the Kingdom; both sides appealed to the sword, and after the trial of many a well-fought field, it was determined in favour of the People at Large; and on that decision all your liberty, property, and happiness has been founded - on that principle, of the sovereignty, virtually, ultimately, and really residing in the people. All Whiggism, every rational idea of the Constitution of this, and any other perfectly free country, must rest, and be bottomed on this definition. It was the Constitution of Rome, when in its perfection. The Romans had Consuls, representing the Kingly power; they had also a Senate, but the sovereignty virtually and ultimately resided in the People at large.

Now, sir, let us try the question of this day, as it includes in its consequences the liberty and property of your whole wide and extended Empire, still more extensive than that of Rome. Let us try it, sir, by that touchstone, that criterion, the interest and the opinion of that interest, consequently the will and desire of all who claim the rights of Englishmen. First, sir, your vast and beneficial territories in America; your Kingdom of Ireland; your unpensioned and unwarped neighbours of Scotland; and at home, your citizens of London, Bristol, and Norwich; your trading Towns of Manchester, Birmingham, and Coventry; and, in short, every great commercial and manufacturing City and Town in England; the Whigs dispersed throughout every County; these are all averse to this dreadful and dangerous civil war, and are attached and rivetted to the cause I now espouse, and to which Administration are enemies.

Pray, sir, what can you arrange on the opposite side? And who are for supporting those hostile measures? for, excepting the noble Lord at the head of Administration, and some few others, so very few, that they will easily occur to every one that hears me, the rest of the abetters of this extraordinary attempt, are as contemptible a collection of servile courtiers, renegade Whigs, and fawning, bigoted Tories, as ever strove to support the measures of any Administration. It reminds me of Virgil's arrangement of the opposite forces at the battle of Actium. On the one side were Troops of Bactrians, Arabians, Egyptians, and every servile Nation then in the world; and at the head of them their contemptible divinities. "Omnigenumque Deum monstra et latrator Anubis" - (that Egyptian dog who was the emblem of Servitude.) -- "Contra Neptunum et, Venerem contraque Minervam;" for, sir, Neptune, that is the whole seafaring as well as commercial interest, is against this measure. As to Venus, every grace of body and mind is annexed to liberty. And as for Minerva, wisdom and true policy are on the side of the Americans; and the Arts, of which she is the patroness, must immediately withdraw, when you have removed her olive branch.

And now, sir, to view it next in a political light: first, in regard to foreign Powers, and then in regard to ourselves at home. Is it possible to conceive that any thing on earth could give that heartfelt pleasure to France and Spain that this unfortunate system of oppressing America has done! You had become the masters of all warlike America, which they term bold America; and with that assistance you bid fair to crush their power in every part of the globe, whenever they dared to provoke you; and now you have weakly, impolitically, and dangerously contrived to irritate, injure, and inflame all America against you; and if we are not blind to our own interest, we might easily perceive this by the conduct of the French and Spaniards, on your applying to their respective Courts for orders to stop their Merchants from supplying America with Goods or Warlike Stores. They immediately (apparently against every motive of their interest and policy) comply with your demands; and for what ends, but plainly to urge you on, and to incite you to your own destruction? For depend on it, that notwithstanding all this courtesy and politesse, the Americans will receive from them every ounce of Powder and Ball that they can pay for, as well as all other Goods in abundance. This is, therefore, a measure of confiding in our new friends and old enemies, the French and Spaniards, instead of our old friends and brethren the Americans. This kind of policy is insecure in private concerns, but must be ruinous in this important, this decisive one. And now, sir, to sift and examine it in what is infinitely of more importance, by a political process; by which it may be tried in those respects wherein it would operate as to our own internal happiness and security; that the making our Prince absolute and despotick over all his vast American Dominions, cannot, in the sober apprehension or constitutional creed of any man that hears me, add a tittle to the happiness our Sovereign enjoys, as a Monarch limited by the laws he found established both there and here; and I am fully persuaded, by the frequent gracious declarations that have fallen from his mouth, he, following his natural and noble disposition, unperverted and unseduced, either by his avowed or inward Cabinet, would, of all men living, less wish to possess such despotick power. But that the attempt may prove ruinous to our liberty, property, and every thing dear to our civil rights, I appeal to the history of every state that has heretofore figured on the stage of the world.

The adopting of the measures of supporting large Standing Armies to enforce the sovereignty over their Provinces, (an alluring motive) has subjugated them all in their turns, and extinguished their constitutional provisions and barriers against tyranny. To pass over the lesser states, not only Marias, and Sylla, and Cæsar, but Augustus and Tiberius, those able tyrants, who systematically ruined the Roman liberty - achieved it by Troops raised to maintain the Roman sovereignty over their Provinces. They did, indeed, subdue those Provinces; but they also oppressed the liberty of the Roman Republick; and their project reached still farther than they expected; for it stopped not till the military power, established by them for that end, overturned the imperial power itself. In less than fifty years from the death of Augustus, those Armies, raised to keep the Provinces in awe, had no less than three Emperours on foot at the same time; and thenceforward the military power disposed of the Empire, and gave to whom it pleased the throne of the Cæsars. Whoever will calmly examine those precedents, must be convinced that the like causes must have similar effects. Oppressed by an overgrown Army the liberty of America and Ireland (for that stands next in the Ministerial plan) and afterwards that of Great Britain will follow of course; the monster of Despotism will only grant even to the latter the favour intended for Ulysses, that of being last devoured.

I have now, sir, to the best of my ability, agitated this great question on the ground proposed by Administration, in a constitutional as well as in a political light; and will venture to assert that it appears in both those views formidable and destructive; and that it becomes absolutely necessary to retract the unconstitutional and impolitic steps which Administration have hitherto taken, founded evidently upon Tory and arbitrary principles. Let us, therefore, at length return back to those glorious maxims of universal liberty, established by our great deliverer King William the Third -- that friend to mankind; to whom we owe this Nation, by adhering heretofore to those maxims, had become the most powerful and illustrious on earth; and by whose wisdom the sceptre of this Empire has been placed in the hands of the family who now wield it; which may they ever do with honour and perfect safety, whilst they remain enthroned in the hearts of all the loyal, free-born, independent, and Whiggish subjects throughout Great Britain, Ireland, and America.

Mr. William Adam spoke against the motion. He recurred to first principles; said he was a Whig; declared his readiness to support the Constitution of Great Britain, in which America was included; spoke of the doctrine of resistance; declared the Americans never had a legal power of resistance in their Constitution.

Mr. Scott represented the dangers of a civil war, but pressed the necessity of violent measures on the present occasion

Governour Johnstone. Before you pronounce this dreadful sentence upon a meritorious, sober, and industrious people, I hope the House will indulge me with a few words in discharge of the duty I owe myself, and likewise with a view of transmitting my character fair to posterity, when those black scenes shall be examined without prejudice.

The real question before us is upon the proper measures to be pursued respecting our fellow-subjects in America. In order to judge of this, we must consider the real cause of dispute. I say the substantial difference turns upon the right of Taxation. Most of the advocates on the other side, have endeavoured to slur this point, and allege "that the claims of "the Americans extend far beyond this article, and that the "Act of Navigation itself is in danger." But it is impossible for a judicious mind to read the material papers, and not to see that this is illusory. The Congress has expressly told us, "they are willing to acquiesce in those laws which secure to us the monopoly of their trade, as necessary in the "mutual connection;" and the instructions from Philadelphia, on which the proceedings of the Congress are chiefly informed, avow these doctrines in more full and explicit terms. This method of condemning men by inference and conjecture, contrary to their repeated declarations, I cannot approve; I shall therefore bend the whole force of my argument to the original cause of quarrel - Taxation. 1559

The great and only secret yet found out for preserving the liberties of mankind from the encroachments of that power which is necessary for the Executive in large Kingdoms, is the power of the purse. This was the subject of contention in the civil wars of Charles the First. It is this privilege alone which makes the House of Commons respectable. This is the point which Hampden obtained for us! And I leave every one acquainted with the history of those memorable times, to determine in his own mind, "whether we should ever have enjoyed this blessing, if he had tamely paid the tax, and had not resisted?" From this power we derive the certainty of assembling the Representatives of the people; by this, redress of grievances may precede supplies; and the security that the exercise will not be abused, is derived from hence, that the House cannot impose on others what they are not to feel themselves. By the principles of the Constitution, every man should be represented; but the deviation from a rule too nice practice, is safely borne, because the interest of every particular member remains as a pledge, that no individual can be over-burthened. When this security is removed, there is no longer any safety for those to whom the fact does not apply. What is the case respecting the Americans? Does any Member feel himself affected by the impositions he shall lay on them? Nay, does not the contrary principle prevail? The more he shall burthen America, the more he will relieve himself. Judge Hobert says, "if an Act of Parliament was made constituting a "man a judge in his own cause, it would be void by the "law of nature." Yet such is the precise situation in which we contend we ought to be placed respecting the Americans, and for the denial of which we are ready to condemn our fellow-subjects to all the tortures enacted by the laws of treason.

Let us look round, and view the fate of different states that have yielded or preserved the privileges for which the Americans contend. So soon as the Cortes lost this power, their slavery was complete. Portugal has now no vestige of this palladium - here is tyranny supreme! In France, where the traces are left, (as in the pais d'etat) their happiness is distinguishable from the misery of other parts. In Britain we are yet free, because we retain it. In Holland, Switzerland, and the other states of Europe, they are more or less so as they preserve it.

What are the circumstances that distinguish and protect the British Colonies from those of other Nations? The Representatives of the people met in General Assembly, and the trial by Jury. If the system of taxation by the Parliament of Great-Britain, takes place, what being can be so credulous as to expect the assemblies of the people will ever meet; and it is confessed, that Admiralty Courts, disclaiming trials by Jury, are necessary to enforce this species of taxation. Here, then, are all the essential privileges of an Englishman dependent on this question, and the real interest of the state is in no way concerned in the contrary scale, since the prosperity of the Colonies must ever prove the riches and glory of England. Nothing but the absurd pride or narrow ignorance of the present Administration can be thrown into it. When once this system takes place, we shall then feel the tyranny and oppression of Governours, with all their train of dependants, as in the Provinces of Rome, which are now quoted as an example.

Thus much supposing the Americans right in the dispute (as I believe they are;) but supposing them wrong, I shall now state their excuse, and see what heart can condemn them, and retain any claims to humanity.

The question concerning the right to tax the Colonies, though clear to those who are accustomed to think deeply on the principles of free Governments, is difficult to common apprehensions. Montesquieu has observed, "that in "Despotism every thing ought to depend on two or three "ideas." As for instance, is there any thing so fit to solve this dispute, as the unity of the British Empire, the supremacy of the Legislative authority of Great Britain, the omnipotence of Parliament? Is there any man so ignorant, after having heard those sounding words, as not clearly to comprehend the whole of the controversy? Plodding, thinking creatures, who are accustomed to consider the complicated privileges in a free Government, from whence the harmony of the whole springs, may be puzzled; but men who have never disturbed their repose with such dry considerations, can have no doubt on the matter; be that as it may, certain it is, that the discussion of this most important question was debated in this assembly by the greatest abilities, after the fullest information that ever accompanied any political question. The decision was in favour of the Americans; the Stamp Act was repealed. I admit that "principles of expediency" are alleged as the reason, in the preamble of the Bill; but the men who boldly denied, during this discussion, the power of taxing the Colonies, as constitutionally existing in the Commons of Great Britain, namely, Lord Chatham and Lord Camden, (men of as extraordinary talents as ever adorned society) the one was made Prime Minister, the other was created a Peer and Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, the keeper of the King's conscience! What American could have retained any doubt of his cause in the mind of his Majesty, or the Nation, after such a decision? The Compromising Act soon followed, (for the salve of gratifying a party) violating all the principles of commerce and policy in the lump - giving drawbacks here, exacting duties there; committing the power and authority of the Nation on subjects which never could produce any effectual revenue, and this in a manner that all men of sense must ever condemn

When the Americans saw, by this act of Parliament, that the great question was likely again to return upon them in the progress of time, through the greediness, ignorance, or caprice of statesmen, they met the position in its sly, circuitous, questionable shape; they recurred to their old principles; they revolted against the preamble; they transmitted Petitions; and all failing, they entered into Non-Importation Agreements. This produced Lord Hillsborough's Circular Letter, which I will repeat again and again, till a contrary conduct is pursued; for no satisfactory answer can be given about it, while the present doctrines are avowed. the Americans, thus fortified in their opinions concerning the point of taxation, are unanimous against our power from Nova Scotia to Georgia. If there be any doubt on this fact, why not call Governour Eden? We are told he lately arrived; it would have been becoming to have produced him; but I call on his relations, friends, or any man, to contradict me in this assertion, "that the Americans are unanimous against this power of taxation." They are resolved to resist; and since you have placed them in a situation where they must either be rebels or slaves, the blame must lie with those who have drove them to this dilemma.

In discussing the question of resistance, the gentlemen on the other side have great advantages. We stand on difficult ground, since, from its nature, it never can be defined or admitted as lawful. The first Officer of the Crown has fairly expressed my ideas on the subject. The principle should never be extinguished in any Government, much less in a free country; the occasion must ever be referred to the general feelings of mankind. Now, if depriving a trading Town of its commerce; if cutting off whole societies from the benefit of the element which God has given them; if proceeding to deprive them of the fishery, their subsistence; if altering their Charter and annihilating all their rights, without hearing them in their defence; if establishing in its stead a new form of Government, which leaves all things in confusion; if erecting a system of tyranny in their neighbourhood, and establishing (not tolerating) all the absurdities of the Roman Catholick religion - trial by Jury dismissed - Habeas Corpus denied - the Representatives of the people determined useless - inferiour duties levied by Act of Parliament; in short, precedents for the violation of every thing we hold most sacred in this country; I say, if acts like these can vindicate resistance, the Americans can quote them, and God and the world must judge between us. For my own part, I consider with Lord Somers, that "treason against the Constitution is the first species of that crime." Acts of Parliament are sacred things, and yet they may be so made, grinding the face of mankind, that human nature will revolt at their severity. Dudley and Empson were hanged for acting according to Act of Parliament.

I have now stated the arguments which should induce you to pause at least before you take this irretrievable step. I shall examine next the consequences.

Suppose we should succeed in subduing the Americans, is it not clear from henceforward that we must govern them by military force? Must not our Army be increased in proportion? While his Majesty retains the power of moving his Troops from one part of his Dominions to another, can there be any safety for the liberties of this country? If the mortification begins at the extremities, will it not soon communicate to the centre? Every man acquainted with the history of Nations must foresee the consequences. If we fail in the attempt, which is the happiest event that can occur, what difficulties may not disgust, irritation, and all the horrors of civil war engender? While the justice and moderation of this country are blotted from the face of the earth, and the accumulated expense, when the springs of riches are cut off, must shake publick credit to the very centre.

The noble Lord has hinted, "if repealing the Tea Tax would do, he would yield that," and he speaks even faintly on the power of taxation. If these are his principles, we are yet more inexcusable. We are going to punish men for maintaining what we are ready to yield, and to engage the Nation in endless expense, for the sake of a quiddity. Since, whether renounced on the principles of expediency or right, the satisfaction must be equally complete to the Americans.

But the noble Lord alleges, "that yielding the point of taxation would not now do." This is conjecture on his part; but at least it would produce this good effect--we should divide the Americans; we should unite men in this country, and go to the contest with better hopes of success. The proofs the noble Lord gives for his opinion, are several indiscreet acts of different meetings since the late confusion in America. Such detail never affects me. I think no conclusions can be drawn from them. In all civil wars, when the people are let loose to reason on Government, a thousand absurd doctrines are broached. Let us apply this to our own country; let us remember all the ridiculous circumstances which Hudibras has painted better than I can. But should the great cause of Liberty, in which our ancestors were engaged, suffer from such circumstances? To their feelings we may trust; on the reasoning of the multitude there is little dependence. For my own part, I think with Cardinal De Retz, that "any number above one hundred, is at best but a mere mob." [Here the House felt the expressions as too strong.] It never could be my intention to apply the rule to this House, long trained in form and discipline; though sometimes: there are doctrines and proceedings, even here, that would surprise a stranger into this belief.

But the noble Lord says, "Why not petition first and acknowledge the right, and then we will grant freely." Have they not petitioned? Is there a means of supplication and protestation they have not tried? I am convinced they went to the Crown merely as a mode of introducing their petition here. Now you deny hearing their Agents. An honourable gentleman in Administration says, "he wished we had heard their Petitions." Do not then condemn them for not petitioning, till you have declared your resolution to hear them. Can it be expected the Americans will act on the inuendos of a Minister? If you mean fair, why not declare your intentions by some binding act? After the East India Company, who will trust you? You invited them to petition, under hopes and declarations, and afterwards made use of this very petition to deprive them both of their money and their privileges. In the ceded Islands you invited men to settle under the Royal Proclamation, and then levied four and a half per cent. on their produce, which procedure has lately been condemned in the Courts of Law. In Canada you have been guilty of a greater violation, as liberty is dearer than property. Here you have despised the Royal Proclamation, and forfeited your engagements to mankind. I repeat it again, what man or society of men can trust you?

The next objection to the Americans is the Congress. This is now termed an illegal meeting, Government here lay by with great expectation, waiting their Resolves. If they had been favourable to their views, or had any untoward circumstances broke their union, we should have had much eulogium on the Congress. Now they have come to Resolves favourable to the liberties of mankind, all is abuse. I do not know by what law, (except that of common sense) mankind can be regulated on these occasions. What kind of meeting can that be called which was held in this place at the Revolution? Aldermen and old Members of Parliament mixing in consultation. The necessity on these occasions gives rise to the case. You wished to know the sense of the people of America; was ever the judgment of a people so fairly taken? First the occasion is promulgated; the people choose Representatives; these choose Deputies; the Deputies in Congress publish their proceedings; each Member returns to his respective Colony, where his conduct is again approved; no place, no pension, no bribe, to influence his election or bias his vote. But even as to the legality, the manner of meeting is not new; Government itself called a Congress in the last war, to apportion the quotas of Men and Troops.

One gentleman has said, "that our situation is quite new, and there is no example in history to direct our steps." I say there is a case directly similar, but we are too conceited to profit from such experience, Philip the Second and his seventeen Provinces, are the counterpart of what we are acting. The debates in his Council on sending the Duke of Alva into the Netherlands, are applicable in every part. He was advised by two sensible men, to repair thither himself and hear the complaints of his people, before he came to such rash resolves; but the majority said, as in this case, that his glory was compromised. It was not religion only, but taxing Without the consent of their states, that brought matters to the last extremity. The Duke of Alva, it is true, was victorious every where at first, but his cruelties were but sowing the serpent's teeth. The gueux, the beggars of the Briel, esteemed at that time infinitely more despicable than the New England men are represented, gave the first shock to the power of Spain. In comparing the probability of events, can any man say Great Britain has such a prospect of victory in the contest, as Spain might then have expected. Yet we know the event, and how that mighty Empire was rent in pieces. The present Resolution hurries us into that situation, from which there is no retreating. It obliges the Americans immediately to act. By declaring them in rebellion, they must have recourse to arms; all negotiation is cut off. I think the word "rebellion" both impolitick and unjustifiable. I beg to know what Paper on your table can vindicate that term? The first Law Officer of the Crown said, "a number of men committing treason was rebellion." I differ from him in the definition. According to my conception of the phrase, they must be in military array, to effect some military purpose. One hundred men coining money, are not in rebellion, though committing treason. Insurrections to pull down enclosures, is not rebellion, though deemed a constructive levying war. In the case of Purchase and Dammaree, for pulling down the Meeting Houses, * they were convicted of treason, but no one ever thought of saying the confederates or associates were in rebellion. I think we should be very cautious how we criminate bodies of men on such intelligence. I dare say the noble Lord has been deceived himself; but this I affirm, he has hitherto constantly deceived this House. It appears to me that no intelligence from General Gage can be depended on. I beg the House will attend particularly to what I now say, before they engage their lives and fortunes. It appears General Gage has regularly deceived Administration. No event has turned out as he foretold, or gave reason to hope; the next letter constantly contradicts the expectations raised by the former. He seems never to have known what they were about - no doubt grossly imposed on himself, but the facts are undeniable. When he first arrived, he writes, the real-contents were abashed, and the friends of Government would soon appear. Next, his expectations from the Assembly were disappointed, and he dissolves them in surprise; then, there would be no Congress; next, though there would be a Congress, they would differ and disagree. In short, led on, and leading others by vain expectations, till the last letter, which announces a total disaffection, and which I believe to be the true state of the Provinces.

Singling out the Province of Massachusetts Bay, can answer no purpose, but to expose our partiality. It is the cause of all, and the other Colonies can never be so mean as first to encourage, and then desert them, before the general right is settled.

The noble Lord talks next of stopping their Fisheries; but he says, "the Act is only to be temporary." Does the noble Lord think he can turn the channels of trade as easily as he can turn the majorities of this House? To explain the idea, supposing the New England Fisheries stopped, their utensils must waste and destroy. But, will the English Merchant madly increase his stock, and fit out new Ships, if the Act is merely temporary? If it is perpetual, the people in America are ruined. The consequence is, that the French must in the end reap the benefit of all this strange policy.

We are constantly stating the great obligation we have conferred on the Colonies by our former behaviour towards them; if it was ever so good, we can claim no merit from hence in private or publick concerns, to do injury in future. They do not complain of your former behaviour, but they say, you have altered this very system from whence you would now derive their submission.

There are two arguments of the noble Lord which I must remark upon before I sit down; the first is, "the comparative view of taxation between this country and the "Colonies, according to the number of inhabitants." His Lordship says, "we pay about twenty-five Shillings a head, and they pay about six Pence." Who is there so unacquainted with political arithmetick, as not to know that the small sum people pay in taxation is often a proof of their poverty, and the large sum a proof of their prosperity, by demonstrating the riches from the greatness of the consumption? Let this kind of reasoning be applied to Ireland and Scotland, where we know the multitude to be poor in comparison to the inhabitants of London, whom we know to be rich; besides, if the Colonist does not pay in palpable cash from his own hand, does not he pay all the taxes on the four millions of Manufactures he receives, and part of those taxes on the raw materials he sends hither?

The other argument is still more extraordinary. The noble Lord says, "if we fall in our attempt of forcing America, we shall still be in the same situation we are in at 'present?' What! after our Armies have been disgraced, our fellow-subjects destroyed, all the irritation of a civil war, publick confidence, and fair opinion lost! does the noble Lord think he will be in the same situation himself? I really speak it with regret; for personally I have much regard for the noble Lord, and particularly because I perceive from his faint manner of stating his propositions, that they are not the dictates of his own mind, and that they are forced on him.

I cannot see my other memorandums, and therefore I shall conclude by heartily concurring with the noble Lord who moved for the recommitment of this Address.

Sir Robert Smythe spoke of two kinds of connection which the Americans had with Great Britain. The first, as emigrants, they had a political connection; the commercial connection was next in order. If we had stopped to hear the Merchants' Petition, it was just the same as if we had stopped the measures of Government against the rebels, when they were in the heart of the Kingdom, to hear Petitions from Preston and Manchester: he was therefore for proceeding.

Mr. Burke applied his argument to that prevalent idea, which alone, he said, can make one honest man the advocate for Ministerial measures, namely, that the Americans attack the sovereignty of this country. He said, the Americans do not attack the sovereignty itself, but a certain exercise and use of that sovereignty. He stated, that no tyranny itself found a justification in the mere plea of their unlimited authority. He stated seven acts of tyranny, which justified resistance. He shewed, that the cause of the late rebellions at home, and those disturbances in America, differed widely; that the trade of the country was little affected by those rebellions; that our trade at present is the primary object; that the object of that rebellion was to set an unnatural tyrant on the throne; that he feared the Americans were now what we were then; and were struggling that an insufferable tyranny should not be established over them. He represented the delusion practised by Ministry, who in all speeches argue that Boston alone was in rebellion, and that it was an affair with Boston only; but he shewed that all America was concerned, from clear and positive facts. He proved, that from one end of the Continent to the other, the like resistance had been found; and he pressed the independent Members to consider that; for he said, if people were once convinced that the mischief was so wide, they would think a little more seriously what might have been the cause of so general discontent, and might wish to apply other remedies than fire or sword. He said, that their definition of rebellion was the oddest he had ever heard; it must be the destruction of Tea; but burning Tea was not in their definition rebellion; for such a place had burnt it; that spoiling it in damp vaults was not in their definition; for it had been so treated in such a place. Now, to answer their definition of rebellion, Tea must be drowned like a puppy-dog; and even that was not quite enough; it must be drowned, and drowned at Boston. This was the definition of rebellion. He exerted himself to deprecate the shameless tyranny we exercised. He abhorred political as much as he did religious persecution. His heart seemed engaged. He mentioned with horror the idea of tearing a man from his family and friends the other side the Atlantic, and tearing his heart out in Smithfield, styling it the heart of a Traitor, because he would not believe in virtual representation, and because he would not believe that America was part of the manor of Greenwich. He said, he had two years before called their attention to Virginia, the mother Colony; and shewed that in all their proceedings Virginia had taken the lead; and that therefore it was plain it was not Boston, but America; and if we meant a war with the whole, we ought with our eyes open to prepare for that, and not for a scuffle with Boston. He also put it on its true bottom; you have, said he, your option, America or this Ministry; and he exposed with all his wit, the absurdity of balancing in such a choice.

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn replied to Mr. Burke. He spoke largely of the goodness of Britain to America. Thought it highly necessary to enforce the laws, and complained much of the dispositions of the Americans being encouraged from hence by those who avowed their cause in England.

Colonel Barré allowed that the Americans might be encouraged by their confidence in having friends at home, when they recollected that a few years ago the gentleman's voice who spoke last was made hoarse in condemning the measures of this country towards America. He was never louder than in his invective against Lord Hillsborough for the letter which he insisted deserved impeachment. The Colonel went into a fine eulogium on Colonels Howe, Burgoyne, and Clinton, destined to serve against America. He lamented that this country should lose their services when the course of things must call for it; for a foreign war was inevitable, if we incurred a civil one. He insisted that no honour could be gained there. He avowed a fear that we should not vanquish, and insisted it was our duty to cherish the Americans. He reproached the spirit of Administration, who in the Falkland's Island business, and in all foreign transactions, readily sacrificed the honour of the Nation; but in dealings with our own people, when the people's good ought to be the first object, pride and dignity was their only principle. He shew from Count De Guines's Memorial, that we had agreed on that occasion to disarm first, but now the Americans must submit first; and when they do, they may look to be pardoned when the Ministers are ashamed to punish. He said he felt himself connected with America more than any man in the House; and added, you are this night to decide, whether you are to make war on your Colonies.

Lord North professed good intentions, but did not seem to promise much success in his measures. He made some distinctions between his administration and the Duke of Grafton's; said he did not mean to tax America; and added, if they would submit, and leave to us the constitutional right of supremacy, the quarrel would be at an end.

Mr. Mackworth spoke against the Address, and observed that as the Minister had declared he did not mean to tax America, he was for stopping short, as he thought it an idle quarrel about words, when we were avowedly to get nothing.

Mr. Sawbridge was against the Address. Two parts in it he could not agree to: first, saying the Americans were in rebellion; the second, promising to risk his life and fortune,

The question then being put on the motion of Lord John Cavendish, to recommit the Resolution;

The House divided - Yeas 105, Noes 288.

So it passed in the Negative.

Then the said Resolution being read a second time,

An amendment was proposed to be made thereto, by leaving out from the first "and" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "to assure his Majesty, that "in order to fix the true dignity of his crown, and the authority of Parliament, on a sure foundation, we shall "endeavour to recover the hearts of his subjects in America, too many of whom are unhappily alienated from "their usual affection to their mother country, by attempting to remove all those causes of jealousy and apprehension which have arisen from an unfortunate management "of his Majesty's affairs, and from Acts of the last Parliament made without sufficient information of the true state "of America," instead thereof;

And the question being put that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the said Resolution was, upon the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That a Committee be appointed to draw up an Address, to be presented to his Majesty upon the said Resolution.

And a Committee was appointed, of Lord North, Mr. Grenville, &c.; and they are to withdraw immediately into the Speaker's chamber.

The Lord North reported from the Committee, who was appointed to draw up an Address, to be presented to his Majesty, upon the Resolution this day reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 2d day of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command, that the Committee had drawn up an Address accordingly, which they had directed him to report to the House, and he read the same in his place, and afterwards delivered it in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is as follows, viz:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the  Commons, in Parliament assembled, return your Majesty our most humble thanks for having been graciously pleased to communicate to us the several Papers relating to the present state of the British Colonies in America, which, by your Majesty's commands, have been laid before us, we have taken them into our most serious consideration, and we find that a part of your Majesty's subjects in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, have proceeded so far to resist the authority of the supreme Legislature, that a rebellion at this time actually exists within the said Province; and we see with the utmost concern, that they have been countenanced and encouraged by unlawful combinations and engagements entered into by your Majesty's subjects in several of the other Colonies, to the injury and oppression of many of their innocent fellow-subjects resident within the Kingdom of Great Britain, and the rest of your Majesty's Dominions. This conduct on their part, appears to us the more inexcusable, when we consider with how much temper your Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament have acted, in support of the Laws and Constitution of Great Britain; we can never so far desert the trust reposed in us, as to relinquish any part of the sovereign authority over all your Majesty's Dominions, which, by law, is vested in your Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament; and the conduct of many persons in several of the Colonies, during the late disturbances, is alone sufficient to convince us how necessary this power is for the protection of the lives and fortunes of all your Majesty's subjects. We ever have been, and always shall be, ready to pay attention and regard to any real grievances of any of your Majesty's subjects, which shall in a dutiful and constitutional manner, be laid before us; and whenever any of the Colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence. At the same time, we consider it as our indispensable duty, humbly to beseech your Majesty, that you will take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme Legislature; and we beg leave, in the most solemn manner, to assure your Majesty, that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by your Majesty, against all rebellious attempts, in the maintenance of the just rights of your Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament.

The said Address being read a second time,

Resolved, That the House doth agree with the Committee in the said Address, to be presented to his Majesty.

Ordered, That the said Address be communicated to the Lords at a conference, and their concurrence desired thereto.

Ordered, That a conference be desired with the Lords, upon a matter, of high importance, and concern, respecting the state of his Majesty's Colonies in North America, Ordered, That Lord George Germain do go to the Lords, and desire the said conference.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st day of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command;

And the House having continued to sit till three of the clock on Tuesday morning,

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

TUESDAY, February 7, 1775.

Lord George Germain reported, that he had, according to order, been at the Lords, to desire a conference; and that the Lords do agree to a conference, and appoint the same immediately, in the Painted Chamber.

Ordered, That the Committee who were yesterday appointed to draw up an Address, to be presented to his Majesty, do manage the said conference.

And the names of the Managers were called over, and they went to the conference;

And being returned,

The Lord North reported, that the Managers had been at the conference with the Lords; and had acquainted their Lordships that the Commons had agreed upon an Address to be presented to his Majesty, to which they desire the concurrence of their Lordships; and that they had left the said Address with the Lords.

WEDNESDAY, February 8, 1775.

A Message from the Lords by Mr. Browning and Mr. Leeds:

Mr. Speaker:

The Lords do desire a conference with this House in the Painted Chamber, this day, at three of the clock, upon the subject matter of the conference of yesterday.

And then the Messengers withdrew.

Resolved, That this House doth agree to a conference with the Lords, as is desired by their Lordships.

And the Messengers were again called in; and Mr. Speaker acquainted them therewith.

And then the Messengers again withdrew.

The time being come for the conference with the Lords, Ordered, That the Managers who managed the last conference do manage this conference.

And the names of the Managers were called over, and they went to the conference.

And being returned;

The Lord North reported that the Managers had met the Lords at the conference; which was managed on the part of the Lords by the Lord President of the Council, who acquainted them that the Lords had taken into consideration the Address yesterday communicated to their Lordships at a conference, and had agreed to the said Address, and filled up the blank with "Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and".

A Message from the Lords, by Mr. Browning and Mr. Leeds:

Mr. Speaker:

His Majesty having appointed to-morrow, at three of the clock, a this Palace of Saint James's, to be attended with the Address of both Houses of Parliament, the Lords do intend to be there at that time.

And then the Messengers withdrew.

Petition of the Manufacturing Hosiers of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners, with great humility, approach the natural guardians of all that is valuable to them, and beg leave to represent the impending ruin of the trade and commerce of the said flourishing Town and neighbourhood; that the produce of the Manufactories under their direction has hitherto, in a very great proportion, been exported to the American Colonies, and on the demand from thence depends the employment of many thousands of their ingenious and industrious Artificers. The entire cessation of this important trade, has not only shut up in their warehouses a great part of their property in different sorts of Goods provided for the American market alone, but obliges them daily to dismiss from employment their dependent workmen, who have no resource but in the exercise of that trade; every day will add to the number, from the utter inability of the Petitioners to proceed in the accumulation of an useless stock; and a short time must consign great part of the most useful but most necessitous members of their community to absolute idleness, and all its dreadful train of evils; distressed in themselves, they have no hopes of administering that relief to their wants, which, in every ordinary exigence, humanity has prompted them to; and if not prevented by the timely interposition of Parliament, they see no possibility of repelling that poverty, distress, and ruin, in which the said Town and neighbourhood must be soon involved, whatever be the fate of the Kingdom at large. Abhorring the thought of stimulating the dissensions of this Nation, and urged only by sober important truth, interesting in its extensive operation to every individual, they humbly recur to the wisdom of parliament in this their alarming situation; trusting that the faithful depositories of the people's welfare will find some temperate and honourable means of conciliating the differences of the British Empire, which will revive the hopes of the Manufacturer, and enable him to call back into the arms of industry the poor distressed Artificer.

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

The Orders of the Day being read,

Lord North moved to postpone the further consideration of the American Papers to the tenth.

Mr. Fox said, the noble Lord was all hurry till he had effected measures for rescuing General Gage out of the very dangerous situation he was in; that he now imagined he had got him into a state of security, he meant to proceed more coolly and deliberately, because he dreaded that the defeat and destruction of that General and his Troops, would be solely attributed to his Lordship's negligence and rashness. He contrasted his Lordship's conduct respecting the several Petitions presented by the American Merchants, remarking that Administration would not wait a single day to hear the complaints of so respectable a body; but now that his favourite measure was carried, he seemed to proceed with caution and deliberation. He concluded, by observing that he understood the measure his Lordship had next in contemplation to carry into execution, was the most extraordinary that ever entered into the head of an English Minister, to prevent the New England Provinces from fishing on the banks of Newfoundland.

Lord North replied, that it was impossible for him to escape the censure of the honourable gentleman, let him act as he might. If he had proposed any measure to the consideration of Parliament this day or to-morrow, hurrying matters precipitately would be imputed to him. Now that he had given the House a respite of one day to consider and deliberate, he was charged with procrastination; and to what motive was this delay attributed? Because General Gage was now in safety. For his part, he could not see how any Resolution of either House of Parliament could be a means of immediate security to that gentleman, if he were in danger; he was sure he was not; but was in all imaginable safety and security. As to the Petitions, he denied that the House refused to hear them; neither were they withdrawn, but were still properly under the consideration of the House; nor upon any ground could the information of one day, upon a subject so vast and extensive, be of any material service.

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Friday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the first day of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1775.

Mr. Speaker reported, that both Houses did yesterday attend his Majesty with their Address, to which his Majesty was pleased to give this most gracious Answer:

My Lords and Gentlemen:

I thank you for this very dutiful and loyal Address, and for the affectionate and solemn assurances you give me of your support, in maintaining the just rights of my crown, and of the two Houses of Parliament; and you may depend on my taking the most speedy and effectual measures for enforcing due obedience to the laws and the authority of the supreme Legislature.

Whenever any of my Colonies shall make a proper and dutiful application, I shall be ready to concur with you in affording them every just and reasonable indulgence; and it is my ardent wish that this disposition on our part may have a happy effect on the temper and conduct of my subjects in America.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, February 2, 1775.

The Earl of Dartmouth (by his Majesty's command.) laid before the House more Papers relating to the Disturbances in America, together with a List thereof; which was read by the Clerk, as follows: - [See Folio 1539.]

The Order of the Day being read, for taking into consideration the several Papers laid before the House by the Earl of Dartmouth (by his Majesty's command) on the 20th day of January last, relating to the Disturbances in America, and for the Lords to be summoned,

The House proceeded to take the said Papers into consideration.

And the Clerk having read part of the said Papers, to No. 148;

Ordered, That the further consideration of the said Papers, and also of those delivered this day, be put off till to-morrow, and that the Lords be summoned.

FRIDAY, February 3, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the further consideration of the several Papers laid before this House on the 20th of January last, and yesterday, by the Earl of Dartmouth, (by his Majesty's command,) relating to the Disturbances in America, and for the Lords to be summoned,

The remainder of the said Papers were read by the Clerk.

Ordered, That the further consideration of the said Papers be adjourned to Tuesday next, and the Lords summoned.

TUESDAY; February 7, 1775.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by the Lord George Germaine, and others:

To desire a Conference with this House upon the state of his Majesty's Colonies in North America.

To which the House agreed.

The Messengers were again called in, and told "that the Lords agree to a Conference as is desired, and appoint the same presently in the Painted Chamber."

Then the Lords following were named Managers of the Conference:

Lord President, (Earl Gower.) Lord Privy Seal, (Duke of Grafton.) Duke Chandos, Duke Newcastle, Lord Chamberlain, (Earl of Hertford.) Earl Denbigh, Earl Sandwich, Earl Plymouth, Earl Rochford, Earl Galloway, Earl Loudoun, Earl Dalhousie, Earl Marchmont, Earl Ferrets, Earl Macclesfield, Earl Bucks, Earl Hardwicke, Earl Darlington, Viscount Falmouth, Lord Bishop London, Lord Bishop Landaff, Lord Bishop Chester, Lord Bishop St. Davids, Lord Cathcart, Lord Sandys, Lord Scarsdale, Lord Digby.

The House being informed "That the Managers for the Commons were ready for the Conference in the Painted Chamber;"

The names of the Managers for the Lords were called

And the House was adjourned during pleasure, and the Lords went to the Conference.

Which being ended, the House was resumed:

And the Lord President reported, "That they had met the Managers for the Commons at the Conference," which, on the part of the Commons, was managed by the Lord North; who acquainted the Managers for the Lords "That they having taken into their consideration the state of his Majesty's Colonies in North America, have agreed upon an Address to be presented to his Majesty;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

Then his Lordship read the Address delivered at the said Conference, as follows:

"Most Gracious Sovereign:

"We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the * * * * * Commons, in Parliament assembled, return your Majesty our most humble thanks for having been graciously pleased to communicate to us the several Papers relating to the present state of the British Colonies in America, which, by your Majesty's commands, have been laid before us: We have taken them into our most serious consideration, and we find that a part of your Majesty's subjects, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, have proceeded so far to resist the authority of the supreme Legislature, that a rebellion at this time actually exists within the said Province; and we see, with the utmost concern, that they have been countenanced and encouraged by unlawful combinations and engagements entered into by your Majesty's subjects in several of the other Colonies. to the injury and oppression of many of their innocent fellow-subjects, resident within the Kingdom of Great Britain and the rest of your Majesty's Dominions. This conduct, on their part, appears to us the more inexcusable when we consider with how much temper your Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament have acted in support of the Laws and Constitution of Great Britain. We can never so far desert the trust reposed in us as to relinquish any part of the sovereign authority over all your Majesty's Dominions, which by law is vested in your Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament; and the conduct of many persons in several of the Colonies, during the late disturbances, is alone sufficient to convince us how necessary this power is for the protection of the lives and fortunes of all your Majesty's subjects.

"We ever have been, and always shall be, ready to pay attention and regard to any real grievances of any of your Majesty's subjects which shall, in a dutiful and constitutional manner, be laid before us; and whenever any of the Colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence. At the same time we consider it as our indispensable duty humbly to beseech your Majesty that you will take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme Legislature; and we beg leave, in the most solemn manner, to assure your Majesty that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by your Majesty against all rebellious attempts in the maintenance of the just rights of your Majesty, and the two Houses of Parliament."

The Earl of Dartmouth and the Marquis of Rockingham both rising to speak, a debate arose who should speak first.

In this confusion the Lord Chancellor put the question, "Is it your Lordships' pleasure that the Earl of Dartmouth be now heard?" This called up the Duke of Richmond, who contended that it was a most slavish position to say that any Lord in that House should have a preference before another; and that the preference should be determined by the House.

Lord Mansfield replied that he had always understood it was in the option of the Chairman in either House, (the Speaker in the other, and the Lord Keeper in this,) to so far decide as at least to put the question on which of the two persons he pleased. To prove this his Lordship cited an instance in a Committee of the House of Commons on the Spanish Convention in 1739, when two Members rising at the same instant to make motions of a direct contrary tendency, Mr. Winnington, the Chairman; pointed to one of them in preference to the other, which gave birth to the witty observation of Mr. Pulteney, afterwards Earl of Bath, in the course of the debate, "that the Chairman had made the deadeast point he ever saw in his life."

Lord Camden urged the necessity and justice of their previously accepting the Petition of the Merchants, which he understood the noble Marquis had to present, and hearing the Merchants' allegations; he told the House they not only set there in their representative, but in their judicial capacity, and were therefore bound by all the ties of official duty, to get every light and information upon the subject before them; otherwise, their coming to a determination could not be acting in the spirit of the Constitution. He pressed them but for a day, which would not create any delay, and in that time he had no doubt their Lordships would receive that solid information founded on the truest proofs, commercial experience; which would, perhaps, influence their Lordships to think differently from what they then did.

Earl Gower insisted that such a mode of proceeding was totally unusual and unparliamentary; that very early in life, much about the period the noble and learned Lord alluded to, he remembered a circumstance which came directly in point; it was on an intended motion of the late Lord Halifax's, when the Lord Keeper decided against him, that another noble Lord should be first heard.

The Earl of Denbigh observed that the preference was with the noble Earl, out of the respect due to the other branch of the Legislature.

The question was then put, "Whether the Earl of Dartmouth shall now be heard?"

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

The Earl of Dartmouth accordingly rose, and after putting in his claim to be heard, on the question at large, moved. "To agree with the Commons in the said Address, by filling up the blank with 'Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and'."

The Marquis of Rockingham acquainted the House that the matter which he rose to was to present Petitions, one from the Merchants of London, concerned in the commerce to North America, and the other from the West India Merchants and Planters; that he imagined their contents were of the highest importance, were immediately relative to the business under consideration, and were well worthy of arresting any determination of this House, for at least one day, being certain that, within that short period, information of infinite consequence would be laid before their Lordships, perhaps sufficient to alter, or at least soften the rigour of the measures they were now madly, hastily, and blindly proceeding to adopt. His Lordship then desired the Petitions might be read, which being complied with, he observed, as a question was now before the House, that must be first disposed of; and as consequently the subject matter of Petitions could not regularly come under the cognizance of the House; and that he still hoped the House would be willing to hear the Petitioners, as men suffering under the heaviest misfortunes, none of which could be attributed to their own misconduct, he would be under the necessity, as the only means left, of moving the previous question, which would open a door for taking into consideration a general state of the Petitioners' grievances.

He moved the previous question accordingly, and then his Lordship proceeded.

He observed, that until the previous question was first disposed of, he could not regularly enter into a discussion of the Address; but he would, nevertheless, in this stage of the business, assure the House that there was one paragraph in it which he totally disclaimed, and desired to he understood neither to have act or part in, that was, where both Houses were to assure his Majesty they would, in support of the measures therein recommended, hazard their lives and fortunes; for he now openly declared he would neither risk nor hazard life or fortune in such a cause. He said the noble mover adverted to something which he did not perfectly understand about unanimity. If every man who opposed this Address was presumed to be actuated by false notions of popularity, or factious motives, he believed four-fifths of the Nation would fall under that predicament; but this he could answer for himself, at all events, that he should not tread in the steps of his noble, but ill-fated, ancestor, (Lord Stratford), who first counted popular favour; and then deserted the cause he had embarked in; for as he had set out by supporting the cause of the people against the tyranny and arbitrary measures of Ministers, so he should never, for any temptation whatsoever, desert or betray them, but would persevere, to the last, in endeavouring to obtain for them a full reparation for all the injuries they had sustained.

The Earl of Pomfret contended that the Sea was our proper element; was against a Land war, and strenuously urged the necessity of sending a Naval Force sufficient to block up their Harbours, and by that means to cut off their communication with all other Powers, and put a total stop to their commerce.

The Earl of Denbigh united in this opinion on general principles, but insisted that a Military Force would be necessary for the protection of his Majesty's loyal subjects, who would be otherwise exposed to the fury and violence of their merciless persecutors.

Earl Gower adhered closely to the question before the House, the propriety of entering into an immediate examination of the matter contained in the Petitions intended to be presented by the noble Marquis. He said, the Petitioners were persons who deserved every mark of attention and respect which the House could pay them. Consistently with the interests of the Empire at large; and although their grievances were imaginary; their Complaints were, nevertheless, deserving of indulgence. He trusted, however, when they maturely considered that the steps now taken were to prevent the return of such evils in future, they would cheerfully acquiesce in the wisdom of Parliament in the present instance, and be gratefully thankful hereafter; for if the supremacy of the Legislature was once given up, their trade, commerce, and every possible advantage accruing from either, would soon be annihilated. He therefore hoped that the Merchants would, on the present occasion, submit to a temporary inconvenience, nay, a short-lived distress, to insure the most permanent and important benefits; and manifest that degree of magnanimity which a sense of their own interests: founded in submission and acquiescence to the wisdom of Parliament must, upon mature consideration and past experience, most certainly suggest.

Lord Mansfield said, it was impossible to confine the attention of the House merely to the matter of the previous question. He perfectly coincided in sentiment with the noble Earl, who asserted that we were reduced to the alternative of adopting coercive measures, or of forever relinquishing our claim of sovereignty or dominion over the Colonies; for consider the question in ever so many lights, says his Lordship, every middle way, every attempt to unite the opposite claims of the contending parties, ends, and is ultimately founded in one resolution or the other. His Lordship observed, that one of the most able American writers, after the fullest and clearest investigation of the subject, at last confesses that no medium can possibly be devised, which will exclude the inevitable consequence of either system absolutely prevailing; for that take it up on which ground you would, the supremacy of the British Legislature must be complete, entire, and unconditional; or, on the other hand, the Colonies must be free and independent. His Lordship next proceeded to examine very minutely the several Acts of Parliament complained of in the Congress which assembled at Philadelphia, and endeavoured to prove that every one of them, more or less, confirmed the principles he had laid down, and the conclusions he had drawn from them, and directly struck at the Legislative superintending power, which it was contended they were willing to submit to, not barely to the subject of taxation. He more particularly adverted to the Acts for the establishing the Admiralty Courts in that country; for regulating the Rates of Postage of Letters; for ordering persons in any part of the Dominions of the Crown to be tried in any English County, for being charged with setting his Majesty's Dockyards on fire; for the quartering of Soldiers, and one or two more of the same nature; any one of which, if repealed, would be a total renunciation of the sovereignty, even if the other proposition were true, that we had no right to tax them. But that claim of non-taxation, it was, he said, that introduced all the rest; if the doctrine was a just one in any instance, it must of inevitable consequence extend to all the rest; for it was to the last degree monstrous and absurd to allow they had a right distinct from the British Legislature in any one particular, and not in all; if they had such a right, the defence of it would justify resistance; and to contend that subjects had a right of resisting the Government, was a doctrine he should be glad to hear maintained, on any principle of Civil Government, reason, experience, or common sense. This led his Lordship to the subject of the Petitions, but he contended that they did not at all come in the way of the present motion. He did not doubt but the Petitioners were aggrieved; he did not doubt but they laboured under great and singular distresses; he did not doubt but every degree of men, the landed Gentleman, the Merchant, the Manufacturer, the Mechanick, would all heavily feel, in their several situations, the threatened calamities. Nay, he went further, he did not promise certain success from the present measure. The Army might proceed to hostilities, they might be defeated, the Americans might prevail, we might be forever stripped of the sovereignty of that country; but what of that? the events of war were uncertain; the question was, allowing all the inconveniences as set forth in the Petitions to be precisely just, and taking into full contemplation every possible contingency that human foresight and prudence could suggest, Whether we should relinquish our rights, or resolve at all events to resolutely persist in asserting them? His Lordship again returned to his former argument, of the Acts they had protested against, and observed, that though he was not present when a noble Lord on a former occasion (Lord Chatham) had insisted, that in return for their temporary suspension and constant repeal, he would insist on the most unequivocal declaration on the part of America, of the supreme Legislative controlling power of the British Legislature, in every other case whatever, but that of taxation only, he could not help remarking, that they avoided every declaration, equivocal or unequivocal; for all they promised in return, was to consent to the Act of Navigation, while they were boldly contending for the repeal of every one Act almost which was to give that great constitutional law the least force or effect. He next proceeded to prove, by a variety of arguments, that the Colonies were in actual rebellion; insisted on the right of the mother country over the Colonies; doubted of the expediency of taxing now, on account of the repeal of the Stamp Act; but said it was utterly impossible to say a syllable on the matter of expediency, till the right was first as fully asserted on one side, as acknowledged on the other. He loudly condemned the bad policy of laying the taxes on in 1767; and laid all our present troubles and political confusions at that door. He said it was the most absurd measure that could possibly be imagined, for all the purpose it answered, was at once to throw the Colonies into a ferment and ill-humour, and to hurt the commerce of Britain, by furnishing the Americans with a temptation to smuggle; that is, loading our own Manufactures with duties, and permitting other Powers to supply the American markets with the same commodities, without paying any.

Lord Camden took up the last noble Lord on his assertion, that the Colonies were in rebellion. If rebellion and treason meant the same thing, he would be bold to say the Colonies were not in rebellion. He said he knew no species of treason but those described by the Statute of the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, which were, levying war within the Realm, or compassing or imagining the death of the King. He owned that there were many precedents in the books of constructed treason, where certain acts of an atrocious nature were adjudged and referred to one or other of those; but he contended that no one act hitherto committed in America, came within any of those precedents. He said constructive treason was a dangerous thing; the rule should be certain and definite; for, were it otherwise, no man could tell where it would end, as the lives and properties of the subject would be thee at the mercy of the Judge: the culprit would then suffer at the will of the Judge, not by the spirit or the letter of the law. He insisted he had as great and good a Judge as ever sat in Westminster Hall, Lord Hale, to support him in this opinion, who, after laying down the law of Edward the Third, and the expositions of it in the several decisions of his predecessors, asserts, in the most absolute and unreserved terms, that nothing should be deemed treason, by any parity of reasoning or similarity of circumstances, unless it came expressly within the Statute, or the interpretation of it, as laid down in the several decisions which had been given since the passing of the law. He added, on this head, that the wisdom of the framers of it had provided for any mischief that might arise, by directing the Judges to apply to Parliament for their advice, should any new case arise which did not come within the words or obvious meaning of the Statute. He next replied to the noble and learned Lord, as being seemingly involved in the censure passed on the Administration which consented to lay the duties, one of which, (that on Tea) was now the original cause of the unhappy disputes subsisting between Great Britain and the Colonies. He utterly disclaimed having the least hand in that measure; said he was not consulted in the framing the law which laid on those duties, and that he was at the time closely and laboriously employed in discharging the weighty functions of his office. He next entered into a very full and detailed view of both the previous and detailed question. He said he was astonished to hear a noble Lord, in the course of the debate, advise the very extraordinary measure of blocking up the American Ports, and thereby preventing them from all commerce whatever. He observed, that sending an Army thither in a hostile manner, was insanity the first; but were the present proposed measures adopted, it would indeed be insanity the second. It would be no less than a political felo de se; and would be like a man, who, to be revenged of a person, that he supposed had injured him, should sheath a pomard in his own bosom. Our commerce, says his Lordship, is at once the source of our wealth and of our power; it both gives us seamen to man our Fleets, and money to pay them; without commerce, this Island, when compared with many countries on the Continent, is but a small insignificant spot; it is from our commerce alone that we are entitled to that consequence we bear in the great political scale. When compared with several of the great Powers of Europe, England, in the words of Shakespeare, being no more than a "bird's nest floating on a pool." What then would be the consequence of adopting so wild and dangerous an expedient? We should neither have Ships to defend us, seamen to man them, nor money to pay them, and we must of course fail a prey to the first invader; for both the means of defence, and the sources which were wont to support it, would be at once cut off. He said every engine had been set to work, and art essayed, to prejudice the landed interest, and distinguish it, on the present occasion, from the commercial, as if the latter could sustain any injury that the other must not equally feel. What rose thee Value of the lands but commerce? What supported commerce again but the lands? - their interests being as inseparable as the benefits they derived from each other were mutual and reciprocal. He concluded generally on the high sounding unintelligible phrases of Legislative Supremacy and Parliamentary omnipotence; but, for his part, they conveyed to his mind precisely such an idea, and gave equal satisfaction, as the answer given by the fine gentleman in the play, who, being charged with baseness by his friend, who told him he had eat his meat, drank his wine, and lain with his wife, made no other reply, at the end of every sentence, but, "Sir, I wear a sword."

The Duke of Grafton rose with great warmth, and after observing that his ideas on this important subject did not coincide with what had been urged from any side of the House, and that he meant to reserve his opinion till the great question, with all its several relations and collateral circumstances, came to be taken into consideration and finally decided on, animadverted with no small degree of acrimony and resentment on the conduct of the two learned and noble Lords who preceded him: Of the latter (Lord Camden) he insisted it was mean, and much beneath the dignity of one who acted in the exalted station he did, at the time the duties now mentioned were imposed, to come at this time to screen himself from the disagreeable consequences that measure produced, and shift the blame off his own shoulders to lay it on those of others, whom he was perfectly convinced, and fully conscious, had no more particular hand in it than his Lordship. The measure, said his Grace, was consented to, at least, in the Cabinet. The noble Lord acquiesced in it, he sat in that chair, (pointing to the Lordi Keeper's) while it was passing through this House in its several stages. The learned Lord was the very person who signified the Royal approbation of this law in his official capacity, under the seal of his office; and shall he now come to tell this House and the publick, that it passed without his approbation or participation? He then observed, that matters which had passed in that House were frequently misrepresented without doors; but he was glad of an opportunity of testifying to the publick that it was no measure of his, perhaps it was contrary to his judgment; but he reserved his sentiments on that subject to a future occasion; as what he meant now was, that let the measure be good or bad, all he wished was, that every Cabinet Minister who acted and deliberated in that capacity at the time of passing that law, should equally share the censure, if it was a bad one, or be entitled to an equal claim of merit if it were a good one. In reply to the other noble and learned Lord, he said he totally differed from him as to the commercial effect of that law; for if the law itself was wise, and the principle it originated from expedient and equitable, the regulation was certainly no less so; for there was no other possible mode left of enforcing the Declaratory Law, (internal taxation being totally abandoned by the repeal of the Stamp Act,) but by laying on Post Duties. And he knew of none against which the noble Lord's objections would not lie as forcibly as those proposed to be levied by the Act under consideration. He lamented the misfortune, that the Administration he was connected with was the only one who wanted the assistance of the noble and learned Lord. He was certain that some of the preceding Administrations had profited of his great abilities; and though he was deprived of the support which might be derived from such sage counsels, he was happy that the Nation experienced the good effects in the aid he had given to some of the Administrations which preceded the one in which he was concerned, and perhaps, nay probably, the one that succeeded it.

Lord Mansfield feeling this as a direct attack, implying an interference in the publick Councils, endeavoured to exculpate himself from the charge. He said he had been a Cabinet Minister part of the late reign, and the whole of the present; that there was a nominal and an efficient Cabinet; that for several years he acted as a member of the latter, and consequently deliberated with the King's Ministers: that however; a short time previous to the Administration in which the noble Marquis presided at the head of the Treasury, and some considerable time before the noble Duke succeeded him in that department, he had prayed his Majesty to excuse him; and from that day to the present he had declined to act as an efficient Cabinet Minister. He said he had lived with every Administration on equal good terms, and never refused his advice when applied to; that particularly the noble Marquis must recollect his giving him every assistance his poor abilities were capable of affording; nor was it his fault that noble Duke did not experience the same; for had he been applied to he would have cheerfully rendered him every assistance in his power. That he had not changed his opinion on the present subject, he appealed to every side of the House; for when the repeal of the Stamp Act was brought into it, though he wished to give the measures of Government every support consistent with his judgment and his publick duty; yet, foreseeing the consequences exactly in the same light they have since turned out, he voted against it; but assured the House that he took no other private or ostensible part whatever in that business; and so careful and studious was he to avoid the least appearance of any thing of that kind, that he even returned a proxy that was sent to him against the repeal, sooner than seem to take any publick part against the King's servants. His Lordship likewise alluded to the noble Duke, and assured him that he had not the most distant intention of passing any censure on any measure pursued in the Administration in which he acted; so far from it, that he highly approved of putting the Declaratory Law into execution; all he at most insinuated was, that the present Minister's plan was much better calculated for giving it effect, as it at once destroyed the temptation to smuggle, by reducing the duty from one Shilling to three Pence; for who would risk his whole property against such a trifling duty? or how was it possible that the smuggler could come to market upon equal terms, under all the circumstances attending that trade, with the fair importer.

The Earl of Shelburne, after taking a general view of both the previous and main question, respecting the propriety of hearing the Petitioners, and the madness of a civil war, upon every ground of justice, prudence, and sound policy, in a very able and comprehensive manner, said he hoped the day of inquiry and publick retribution would come, when the author of the present dangerous measures would be discovered, and of that despotick system which has governed our Councils for some years past, clearly developed. Candour obliged him to testify to the conduct and sentiment of the noble Duke, (Grafton), that he was averse to the measure; and the day it was brought in as part of a Money Bill from the other House, never rose to support it, as the strongest mark of his disapprobation. He was certain the noble and learned Lord (Camden) equally disapproved of it; and, for his own part, who had then the honour of occupying a very high post in Administration, his sentiments were too well known to call for explanation. He said further, that his situation gave him an opportunity of knowing the sentiments of a very high personage, and he could affirm, from his own knowledge, that they were extremely favourable towards America. It was therefore a matter well worth knowing, and extremely deserving of inquiry, how this unexpected change was effected, and by what overruling, fatal influence, this great Empire was brought to the eve of being plunged into all the miseries and horrors of civil war.

Lord Lyttelton contended for the universality and unity of the British Empire over all its territories and dependencies, wherever its domination extended. He was severe on the noble and learned Lord (Camden) who spoke so fully on the dangerous consequences of constructive treason. He asserted those little evasions and distinctions were the effects of professional subtilty and low cunning; that it was absurd to the last degree to enter into such flimsy observations on this or that particular phrase or word, and thence draw deductions equally puerile and inconclusive, that the Colonies were not in rebellion. For his part, he should not abide by such far-fetched interpretations, he would be guided by common sense, and only consult the papers on the table, to prove beyond question that America was in rebellion. What! will any noble Lord in this House rise and tell me seriously, that a country is not in rebellion when it openly disclaims all obedience to the laws, all dependence on the Legislature when they offer to appropriate the publick moneys to the very means of resistance! when they prevent the Courts of Justice from assembling, and the Counsellors appointed by the Crown from acting! Will any noble Lord pretend to say, that any or all of those are not manifest acts of rebellion? or that it is not treason in every obvious, substantial, and legal meaning of the word, to attack one of the King's Fortresses, make his Troops render it up, and seize and convert the King's stores to the direct purposes of openly resisting his legal authority by force of arms? Are these acts of the most flagrant rebellion and treason? or are they, according to the ingenious doctrine and legal language of the noble and learned Lord, only to be construed mere misdemeanor or felony? His Lordship next entered into a very spirited defence of his noble and learned friend who spoke on the same side, and dealt his blows very liberally on all those who had attacked him. He bestowed the highest encomiums on his talents, integrity, and political conduct; and charged his accusers with being weak and evil counsellors, no less in their general sentiments than in their personal attacks. He recurred to his former arguments, and contended without reserve for the Legislative supremacy of Parliament over every part of the British Dominions in America, the East and West Indies, in Africa, in Asia, in every part and quarter of the globe, nay, over Ireland itself, if it should become necessary; the right of taxation and legislation being indivisible and unconditional, over every place to which our sovereignty extended.

The Duke of Richmond condemned, in the most pointed and direct terms, what his Grace called the inflammatory and ill-grounded representations of the learned and noble Lord (Mansfield.) He said it was very unbecoming the gravity and dignity of his situation, and of the several high relations he stood in to the state, to endeavour to inflame and mislead at so alarming a crisis. He observed that the noble Lord had laboured all in his power to prove the Colonies in rebellion; but for his part he did not perceive that he used one solid argument in proof of this cruel assertion; an assertion, in every view of it, big with the most horrible and direful consequences; an assertion which, as soon as sanctioned by a vote of both Houses, authorized every species of rapine, plunder, massacre, and persecution whatever. His Grace then turned to the consideration of constructive treason; and observed, that the noble and learned Lord and his friends ought to be the last to approve of lax and indefinite interpretations of treasons, as it might, on some future day, Open a door for obtaining of substantial and effectual justice on those who, through the whole course of their lives, had been as sedulous to evade the law, as they were industrious to break it. He entered fully into the propriety of postponing the contents of the Address; and at least listening to hear what the Petitioners had to offer. It would be decent to pay some degree of attention to so respectable and useful a body as the Merchants, and though no Petition had been presented, it would be manifestly indecent, and totally derogating from the dignity of that House, to blindly and implicitly adopt the present measure, without examination, deliberation, or inquiry. This night's debate, he confessed, brought back strongly to his mind what had often been the subject with him of great astonishment and serious consideration. The measure which had been originally the cause of our present dangerous situation, was now openly disavowed by three Cabinet Ministers, then occupying the first departments of the state. They had, each of them, he remarked, solemnly declared it was no measure of theirs, jointly or separately; one of them (Lord Shelburne) has assured us, from his own knowledge, that it did not seem to be agreeable to the sentiments of a great personage. Whence then, says his Grace, are we to suppose it originated? I will not say that the noble and learned Lord knows; but this I will venture to remind his Lordship of, that when I came into office, I saw several foreign despatches, on the margin of which were written observations in that noble Lord's hand-writing. I need not tell his Lordship, but I shall take the liberty to inform the House, that the correspondence with our foreign Ministers, at a convenient time, is sent round in little blue boxes to the efficient Cabinet Ministers; and that each of them give their opinions on them in writing. These are the opinions and the observations I now allude to. His Grace, besides, in the course of his speech, condemned very severely the Acts respecting America, passed during the last session, particularly to that which gave a new power to the Sheriffs, unknown to the Constitution; that of creating what he called pocket-juries; and the other, which, if possible, is of a much more dangerous tendency, preventing all meetings, under the penalties of high treason; for if it be treason to resist an Act of the British Parliament in the manner now contended for, it must of consequence be treason to assist at the Assemblies, which the Bill for altering the Charter positively prohibits.

Lord Mansfield rose in great wrath: he said he could hardly bring himself to believe the several insinuations thrown out on the other side of the House could be directed at him; yet, on the other hand, if they meant any thing, he knew not otherwise how to interpret them. If they were intended to be imputed to him as a crime, they missed their aim; for in his opinion, they had, perhaps undesignedly, done him the greatest honour. What, do their Lordships insinuate, that I have been the author of the present measures, and it is I that direct them? I should be proud to own them if it were, because I think them wise, politick, and equitable; but surely they will permit me to repeat again, that I have been a nominal Cabinet Minister part of the last reign, and the whole of the present; that I was an efficient Cabinet Minister during part of both periods; but that since the time before alluded to in this debate, I have had no concern or participation whatever in his Majesty's Councils. Threats are thrown out, and inquiries predicted; I heartily wish they may be speedy; I am prepared for them, and put their intended authors to the most utter defiance. It has been urged against me as a crime to-day, that I have courted popularity. I never did court it; but I always have studied to deserve it. Popularity will always fly the pursuers; she must follow. I do not mean to say that I despise it; on the contrary, I sincerely wish for it, if not purchased at too dear a price; at the expense of my conscience and nay duty. If a faithful discharge of one, and execution of the other, be the means of procuring it, I hope I shall always be a warm candidate for popular fame. I have hitherto, to the best of my abilities, acted on that plan, and I hope I shall persevere to the end. I have seen much of Courts, Parliaments, and Cabinets, and have been a frequent witness to the means used to acquire popularity, and the base and mean purposes to which that popularity has been afterwards employed. I have been in Cabinets where the great struggle has not been to advance the publick interests; not by coalition and mutual assistance to strengthen the hands of Government; but by cabals, jealousy, and mutual distrust, to thwart each others' designs, and to circumvent each other, in order to obtain power and pre-eminence. I have been no less careful to observe the effects of popularity, where it has been courted and gained for particular purposes; but where every engagement was abandoned which led to its attainment, when the keeping of them became no longer necessary to the views of self-interest and ambition. I am threatened! I dare the authors of those threats to put any one of them in execution. I am ready to meet their charges, and am prepared for the event, either to cover my adversaries with shame and disgrace, or in the fall, risk the remnant of a life nearly drawing to an end, and consequently not worth being very solicitous about.

Lord Lyttelton rose a second time, to defend his noble and learned friend; and the Duke of Richmond in particular, and one or two other Lords on the same side, having dwelt much on the probable consequence our present civil dissensions might have on the conduct of France and Spain, his Lordship pressed the King's servants to declare what steps they had taken to bring these Courts to an explanation on this subject.

The Earl of Rochford replied, that he believed the noble Lord had spoken by inspiration. He declared he had no sort of conversation with him relative to the subject, whatever appearance it might have of being concerted between them; but he thought it extremely fortunate, that the question furnished him with an opportunity of acquainting the House, that he had received a letter that very day from the King's Minister at Paris, giving him the most full and unreserved assurances that the French Court would prohibit all commerce with the British Colonies; and that should any of the subjects of the Crown of France, after such declaration on their part, presume to carry on any trade with America, his most Christian Majesty meant to be understood, that they were to be deemed out of his protection; and that the British Court were at liberty to seize the Vessels and confiscate their Cargoes. His Lordship said, that it might possibly be objected to this declaration, that we ought not to depend on French faith; and that probably those assurances were given only with a view of lulling us into a fatal security; but he said he had every reason to believe France sincere, as well by the pacifick Councils which at present prevailed in that country, as from the permanent policy of both France and Spain, who were determined, on their own account, against countenancing, abetting, or bringing into precedent, any measure which might operate as an encouragement to the Colonies in the new world, to render themselves independent of the parent state. His Lordship then referred to a work lately published in France, wherein it is expressly asserted, that it would be bad policy in the extreme, for France to interfere in the present disputes between Great Britain and her Colonies.

The Earl of Shelburne returned to his general charges of a fatal and over-ruling influence. He observed, it was very extraordinary that the Bills passed last session of Parliament, respecting America, were disowned by the Law Officers of the Crown; and who, in the name of God, could have framed them, says his Lordship? We cannot suppose it was the Minister Who framed them. We are almost certain that none of the Members of Administration drew them up. We know they were fabricated by some person conversant in the law. It is impossible we can hesitate a minute, therefore, to pronounce them to be the work of some hand who is unwilling to own them. The Law Officers of the Crown have disavowed them. Who then framed them? the publick naturally look at a law Lord, notoriously high in favour in the Cabinet, with whose sentiments and doctrines they perfectly agree. Is not this, my Lords, enough to raise suspicions in the most unsuspecting mind, that the King is betrayed, the Nation undone, and the Ministry rendered mere cyphers, to give a sanction to a system of measures, which, sooner or later, must be the ruin of this country, or at least of its constitutional liberties? The noble and learned Lord has confessed, that though for some years he has ceased to act in the character of an efficient Cabinet Minister, there was a time when it was otherwise; there was a time when he united in his character two things in the English Constitution, the most repugnant in their nature; that of an acting Cabinet Minister, and a Lord Chief Justice of England. For my part, I always imagined, according to the true principles of this Constitution, that it was the great pervading principle and excellence of it, to keep the Judicial and Executive powers as separate and distinct as possible, so as to prevent a man from advising in one capacity what he was to execute in another. I hope the time will come when those matters will undergo a full and impartial discussion, without a personal allusion to any man, when we shall be able to point out, with certainty, the real author of the present measures; and be at the same time informed, where the Judges in Westminster Hall have kept within their own province, and where they have invaded the Constitution, by substituting their own prejudiced and partial opinions for the law of the land. In particular, I sincerely wish, that means may be devised for leaving the Members of the Cabinet, at the time the duties imposed on America were laid, at liberty to declare freely what they know of that matter, so that the real authors may be discovered, and the framers of this pernicious, fatal measure, held forth to publick detestation. The noble and learned Lord has disclaimed having any direct concern in the present business, and endeavours to strengthen his bare assertion, by shewing what little or no temptation he could have to interfere. But the noble Lord knows, every noble Lord in this House knows, a Court has many allurements, besides even place or emolument. His Lordship denies any obligations or personal favours whatever. I am ready to give his Lordship full credit for this declaration; but he will permit me at the same time to observe, that smiles may do a great deal; that if he had nothing to ask for himself, he has had friends, relations, and dependants amply provided for; I will not say beyond their deserts; but this I may say, much beyond their most sanguine expectations. Independent however of these considerations, I think the pride of directing the Councils of a great Nation, to certain favourite purposes, and according to certain preconceived principles, may possibly effect great things, and tempt to great hazards, considering the frame and temper of some men's minds.

Lord Mansfield now rose, in great passion. He said, he thought it had been the leading characteristick of that assembly, when contrasted with the other House, who too often descended to altercations and personal reflections, to always conduct themselves like gentlemen; but he was sorry to see that rule departed from this evening for the first time. He charged the last noble Lord with uttering the most gross falsehoods. He totally denied that he had any hand in framing all the Bills of the last session and was certain, that the Law Officers of the Crown never asserted that they had no hand in them; but whether they had or had not, was of no consequence to him; for he was clear; the charge, when applied to him, was as unjust as it was maliciously and indecently urged.

The Earl of Shelburne returned the charge of falsehood to Lord Mansfield in direct terms; he appealed to the House, whether the words he had used, were not, "that if among the Bills of the last session, there were some disavowed by the Law Officers of the Crown, it was natural for the publick to look at a law Lord, notoriously high in favour in the Cabinet, to whose sentiments the principles of those Bills appeared to be particularly adapted, and with whose doctrines they entirely agreed;" which he called on his Lordship to contradict, if he dared.

The Duke of Richmond animadverted, in very severe terms, on an expression which fell in the heat of debate from a noble Lord (Lyttelton.) He said no man could impute littleness, lowness, or cunning, to any Member of that assembly, (alluding to what his Lordship had pointed at Lord Camden.) for delivering his sentiments freely, unless he drew the picture from something he felt within himself, as, by illiberally charging others with low and sinister designs, the charge could only be properly applied to the person from whom it originated. His Grace entered into a full consideration of the true purport of what had fallen from a noble Lord in office, (Lord Rochford.) relative to the present language and disposition of the French Court. He said, the assurances now quoted, with so much official parade, and so seasonably brought under consideration, without any design, were, or were not, to be relied on; that they were not to be entirely relied on, the noble Lord partly confessed, by insisting, that we were prepared for the worst; he should be therefore glad to know what those preparations consisted in; what proportion they bore to the strength of those, who in the contest might possibly become our adversaries; and above all, he should be obliged to the noble Lord, who presided at the head of the Naval Department, to lay before the House an authentick, precise state of what our Naval Force consisted in; because he had observed, that on a former important occasion, we received the most full and solemn assurances, that our Navy was on a very respectable footing at the time of the dispute about Falkland's Island; yet it was afterwards discovered, that we had not a single Ship-of-War fit to proceed to Sea. His Grace then proceeded to discuss the question at large, relative to our present unhappy disputes with America, and by the several important lights he let in on the subject, and the variety of interesting facts he adverted to and elucidated, he shewed himself to be very fully and thoroughly informed of the conduct of the contending parties; of the provocations given on one side, and the effects they produced on the other; and, above all, the total ignorance of Administration, relative to the temper and disposition of the Colonies.

The Earl of Sandwich, to answer his Grace, apologized for rising at that late hour of the night. He said, he had employed himself in taking notes the whole evening; and intended, before he went away, to have eased himself of the burthen, (an expression of Lord Shelburne's;) but as the matter had been already so fully discussed, he should not, at so unseasonable an hour, trespass on their Lordships' patience, but solely confine his reply to the information desired by the noble Duke, relative to the department over which he had the honour to preside. He said, when he came to the Admiralty Board, the Navy was in the most ruinous condition; insomuch, that within the last four years, there were no less than forty Line-of-Battle Ships broke up, and even six in the course of the last year; that there was not six months Timber of any kind in the Yards, and in some, he believed, not fifty Pounds worth; and that he did not impute the least blame to the great and gallant officer, the first in the world in his profession, (Sir Edward Hawke.) whom he had succeeded, and who had retired purely on account of his age and infirmities. His Lordship next contrasted the present state of the Navy. He said, we had now nearly fourscore Ships-of-the-Line, and several more building in the King's and Merchants' Yards, with a proportionable number of inferior rates, all either stout, clean Ships, or Vessels newly built; that we had three years seasoned Timber in the Yards; that all that were not on actual service, or turned in Guard-Ships, were in dock, where they could not meet with any injury; that the Guard-Ships, which formerly were useless, in cases of emergency, not being fit for the Sea, nor having rigging, or more than a third of their complement of men, were now ready for any service, at a few days notice, which he instanced in the year 1773, at the time we meant to send a Fleet to the Mediterranean, when ten Men-of-War of the Line actually sailed from Plymouth within three days after they received their orders. He next informed the House, that there were twenty Guard-Ships, three of which, of the Line-of-Battle, were on the American station; that we had squadrons besides in the East and West Indies, the Leeward Islands, and Mediterranean; that after sufficiently providing for those respective services, the Naval Force for home protection would consist of seventeen Men-of-War of the Line, besides Frigates, seven thousand two hundred Seamen, and eight hundred Marines; that after the peace of Aix la Chapelle, in 1748, our whole Naval establishment did not exceed that now reserved for the Channel alone, eight thousand Seamen, including Marines, being only voted; and that he would pledge himself to answer all the demands, and co-operate with the intentions of Administration, with only an augmentation of two thousand men. He added further on the same head, that we had a Fleet superiour to any that the combined force of France and Spain could fit out; that our Ships were all clean, well provided, rigged, and ready to proceed to Sea on a few days notice; and that we had a supply of seasoned Timber in our Yards equal to three years consumption. That this was a force fully sufficient to defend us against any sudden attack of the combined Fleets of France and Spain, though he was well assured they had no such intention; but if they had, we were prepared for them; and that he would now pledge himself to the House, and the publick, that with an augmentation of two thousand Seamen more, he would supply Government with such a Naval Force as would at once protect us at home, and be sufficient to enforce its measures respecting America. He begged, however, that the House would not understand that he arrogated any peculiar merit to himself relative to the present state of the Navy, compared to what it was when he was called to the head of the Admiralty, for very little of it fell to his share. He had only performed his official duty; it was to Lord North, who had been the means of so amply providing for it in the House; and to his Lordship, therefore almost the sole merit was due, that our Navy was now put on so respectable a footing. -

The Duke of Richmond controverted several of the positions laid down by the noble Earl, (Sandwich), both respecting the disposition of the French and Spaniards, and the force sufficient to resist them, should they make any attempt on these Kingdoms, or give an occasion for a rupture by their conduct in the American Seas. He again commented very ably on the answer given by the French Minister. What does this answer import, says his Grace, supposing it to be literally kept on their part? That if you detect any of their Ships trading with our American subjects, we shall be at liberty to seize them, and confiscate their cargoes. Does the noble Earl pretend to interpret this explanation, generally, so as to authorize our taking their Vessels at Sea? If he does not, what can such a vague deluding promise avail? If he does, then I will venture to assure his Lordship that he is miserably deceived; and that the first attempt to prevent French or Spanish Ships from navigating the American Seas, for pretences will never be wanting on such occasions, will furnish them with an opportunity of asserting their maritime freedom, of making reprisals, and of justifying their conduct to the other great states of Europe, who are known to be long jealous of what they are pleased to call our despotick claim to the sovereignty of the Ocean. The noble Earl gives us a melancholly account of the deplorable, ruinous state of our Navy, at the time he came to preside over our Naval concerns. He said our Ships were rotten, and our Guard-Ships useless. I would be glad to know from his Lordship what have been the means employed to work this miraculous change. He speaks of so many Ships-of-the-Line proceeding to Sea in three days; and of Captain Barrington's great merit in that business. No Lord in this House has a higher opinion of that gentleman's merit as an officer than I have. I remember well the time the Royal Naval review was at Portsmouth, that able officer had his Ship some hours read), to proceed to Sea, before the Division under the command of a noble Lord in this House, (Lord Edgcumbe.) The noble Earl dwelt greatly on the manner our Guard-Ships are manned and provided; yet I well recollect that in the Royal presence, when we may presume every nerve would have been strained, the Plymouth Division took above three hours in weighing. The apology then made was that the Ships had not more than half their complement of men; and I can affirm, that Captain Barrington's Ship was the only one which seemed to answer the anxious expectations of the spectator.

The Earl of Sandwich replied humorously, in the words of the old ballad of Chevy Chase, written, as he said, in the time of Henry the Fourth. "I trust we have many as good as he." He insisted, without any disparagement to the honourable Captain, there were several as able officers in the Navy as he; that wind and tide, and a variety of circumstances attendant on them, were not to be commanded. He assured the noble Duke, let the consequences be what they might, they would not wait for the French Ships being in Port, or even in with the land; but would seize them without ceremony in the first instance, and trust to the event, be it what it might; Administration being determined to abide, and, if necessary, to enforce the true terms of the explanation, in the sense only it was desired and given. As to the other part relative to the state of the Navy, and his reasons for pronouncing, with so much confidence, concerning it, he told the noble Duke that the case was now entirely different from what it was in 1770; for that towards the conclusion of the late war, when the publick exigencies called for a powerful Fleet, they were obliged to make use of green Timber, of any kind of Timber in the construction of our Ships-of-War; that those Ships rotted at the end of five or six years; whereas these built lately would stand thirty, as they were built of seasoned Timber, of which we had a large three years' stock; and that besides we made use of another precaution, which was still seasoning the Timber while the Ship was building, by giving orders that no Man-of-War should be hastily built, or launched in less than three years after she was put upon the stocks.

The Bishop of Peterborough (Doctor John Hinchcliffe.) Throughout the whole of this day's debate, and indeed on every question relative to America, it has been to me of very serious concern to see so much of your Lordships' time taken up in mutual charges and recriminations. It is but too evident that a complicated variety of very untoward circumstances have combined to bring Great Britain and her Colonies into so great difficulty and embarrassment, that to extricate them requires all your Lordships' temper as well as wisdom. Yet while we have heard, on the one hand, Lords, eminent for their abilities and experience, assert that the Constitution is violated, and the sacred rights of our fellow-subjects encroached upon by principles of arbitrary power, till resistance itself is thought justifiable; we are assured, on the other, by authority no less respectable, that opulence and security have begot a desire of independence in our Colonies; that a spirit of discontent and disaffection is gone forth, which has been unhappily increased by the arts and encouragement of some men here at home, under the influence of like passions, till America is become impatient of all legal restraint, and determined to break through every tie which has hitherto connected her with the mother country.

I rise not to trouble your Lordships as an advocate for either extreme of opinion, but profess that, above all things, I wish for reconciliation upon the very easiest terms that, consistently with the just authority and pre-eminence of this country can be admitted as a ground of re-union. Yet sensible as I am that it is my duty, nor is it less my inclination, to promote peace, yet cannot I, for fear that our commercial concerns should suffer a temporary interruption, wish to see the honour and lasting prosperity of this country sacrificed to its temporary interests. For, waiving all discussion of that great constitutional question, whether or not the Legislative supremacy implies or not the right and power of taxation, there is, to my understanding, a very evident distinction between an Internal General Tax, and a Port Duty, upon any article of trade, which the subject is at liberty to purchase or not, as he thinks proper.

I am aware that the advocates for the total independence of America have endeavoured to prove that a duty so raised is illegal and oppressive as any other tax whatever; but to have made it so, Parliament must have done by the Tea in America, what is done in France by the Salt, have obliged every family to have bought, not as much as they were willing, but as much as it was thought they were able to consume.

That there is a power in this country to regulate the trade throughout all the Ports of the whole British Empire, is what, I believe, hardly one of your Lordships will contest. It would be of use, therefore, in shortening this debate, to recollect that it was for the tumultuous resistance to this acknowledged right of the Legislature, that the Port of Boston was shut up. I am free to own that there may be an oppressive exercise of even an acknowledged right; but it will be a difficult matter to bring the duty upon Tea under that description. The noble Lord (Camden) before me, acknowledges that he made no objection to it at the times it was laid, though he was then in the highest department of the law, with so much credit to himself and satisfaction to the publick; he will allow, therefore, that there was no appearance of illegality in its origin; it was also moderate in its exercise; it affected not a necessary of life, and left the American consumer of a foreign luxury in a much better situation than any subject in Great Britain. But admitting that the people of Boston, either from their own notions of the matter, or from prejudices instilled into them, thought the duty upon Tea an oppression, it surely was incumbent on them to have presented a Memorial or Petition to Parliament; not to have invaded private property with violence, nor to have treated the sovereign Legislature of Great Britain with insolence and contempt. Reparation ought long ago to have been made for these offences; and it is in order to obtain it that I understand Administration think themselves under a necessity of adopting coercive measures as the only means to bring about a lasting union.

As a learned Lord, (Camden) in the course of this debate, has taken occasion to censure the two Acts which passed in the last session, after the Boston Port Bill; I will beg your Lordships' indulgence while I say a few words to each of them. First, as to the Bill for the impartial administration of justice in Massachusetts Bay; was I to take my idea of this Bill from what has fallen from the learned Lord, "that by coupling it with the Statute of Henry the Eighth, it gave a full power to bring the Americans over "here to butcher them in the King's Bench," I should conclude that it was a Bill empowering Administration to tear any obnoxious person from his wife and family, and carry him to a foreign judicature to answer for crimes said to be committed in his own country; whereas, in truth, it is a Bill of mercy, as well as of justice, giving security to persons acting under legal powers, that they shall not, in the discharge of then duty, be subject to the resentment of a factious and deluded populace, who neither acknowledge the laws, nor the authority of the Magistrate; besides the Bill is temporary, and respects only the present tumultuous State of the Province.

As to the other Bill, for altering the Charter of Massachusetts Bay, which the same learned Lord represents as an exorbitant abuse of Parliamentary power, I will only say, that an alteration, full as material, in that very Charter, was made by King William immediately after the Revolution. Shall it then be said, in this House, that it is an abuse of power for the present King, sitting in his Parliament, to do an act similar to what King William, that great restorer of British freedom, did by the advice of his Council only; though that Council was composed of men that loved liberty as well, and hazarded as much in the preservation of it, as any set of Patriots before or since.

As to the Papers upon your Lordships' table, it appears from them to be the general opinion of all those who, either from their office or their situation, are capable of judging what will be the probable effect of it, that a steady perseverance to support the rights of the Legislature will, in the end, bring the Americans to a just sense of their duty and their interest. It will then be time for tenderness and forgiveness. May I not add, it will then be time for indulgence even to popular prejudices, and that idea they are so fond of, the right of taxing themselves. But was Great Britain tamely to submit to the indignities that have been put upon her, her condescension would defeat its very purpose, and be treated as a meanness and timidity. It might, indeed, procure peace; but it would be only drawing ashes over the embers that would still be burning underneath or like the act of an unskilful Surgeon, who heals the wound outwardly, while it is still left festering within.

I shall, therefore, give my vote for this Address; not because I love coercive measures, though, to a certain degree, they may become necessary. I approve of it rather, because it takes the middle way, so much recommended by the noble and learned Lord; for the steadiness is the means, yet reconciliation is avowedly the end proposed. Reconciliation is what I shall never lose sight of; and I am persuaded that, could your Lordships be induced to join unanimously in this Address, it would, speedily bring about what all your Lordships are desirous of, the peace, harmony, and lasting prosperity of the British Empire.

The Duke of Richmond observed, that he thought it was extremely improper for the Right Reverend Bench to take any part on the present occasion, or to be at all accessarily to the shedding of the blood of their fellow-creatures and fellow-subjects. It would be much fitter, if they interfered at all, to act as mediators, than as persecutors; more consistent with the principles they professed to teach; but much more particularly suited to the sacred functions they were called to discharge. He said, that by the specimen now given, he should not be surprised to see the lawn sleeves upon those benches stained with the blood of their innocent and oppressed countrymen on the other side the Atlantic.

The Duke of Manchester animadverted with great energy on the very indecent and unprecedented attack made by a noble Lord, early in the debate, (Lord Lyttelton) on all those who happened to differ with him. He said it was a pretty method of convincing an adversary, to tell him that his opposition to measures was founded in the worst motives; and that nil who entertained contrary sentiments to his own, were weak and wicked Counsellors. Such language had been always discountenanced, and he hoped would always meet with the strongest marks of discouragement and disapprobation in that House, as it would otherwise banish all sober deliberation and free discussion from within those walls; and introduce, in their stead, the most improper personalities and disgraceful altercations.

Lord Lyttelton endeavoured to exculpate himself from the charges of the two noble Dukes. He said, any thing severe he might have dropped respecting a noble and learned Lord on the other side, was only upon certain suppositions. He had not, however, changed his opinion relative to the true interpretation of treason; nor could he bring himself to subscribe to his Lordship's definition of it; as the more he thought on the subject, or heard it argued, the fuller he was satisfied that America was in rebellion. He said he had a very high authority to support him, (Lord Chief Justice Foster) and a real friend to liberty, who enumerates several species of treason, besides those expressly defined by the Statute of the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, and lays it down as law, though a consultation to levy war, in which the person of the King is not meant to be injured, may appear not to be treason within the Statute of Edward the Third, yet that an overt act of one species of treason may be good evidence to prove an intention to commit the other.

Lord Mansfield assured the House that he had not given the least intimation to the noble Lord of what he now urged; but that it was nevertheless the general doctrine laid down by those who had written on the subject. He was personally acquainted with the great law authority now quoted, who assured him he was present in Court at the trial of the offenders in Queen Anne's time, who pulled down the Meeting Houses, and that Holt, Chief Justice, and the rest of the Court agreed that evidence of an overt act of one species of treason, was sufficient proof of an overt act of another species of treason.

Lord Camden still retained his former sentiments; he entered into a warm eulogium on the learned Judge alluded to; insisted the doctrine now imputed to him was not his; offered to meet the noble and learned Lord on the other side on that ground; and remarked that the intended object of the language held this day, was to bring the unhappy Americans to England, to be tried under the Act of Henry the Eighth, and have them butchered in the King's Bench. Early in the debate Lord Mansfield having said that the Ministers of the Church of England were persecuted by the fanatics of Boston, and other parts of New-England, Lord Camden reprehended him very severely for using such inflammatory language.

The Earl of Dartmouth closed the debate. He said that he approved of the measure; that America would be tenderly and gently treated, if they would return to their obedience; that he was directed by his own judgment, not by Lord Mansfield's; and that he believed Lord Mansfield was totally unconnected with the present Administration. *

* This extraordinary debate was attended with some singular circumstances. A great law Lord, who had been so severe in his charge against the Americans, condemned also, in the most explicit and unreserved terms, (to the great surprise of most of his auditors,) the measure of laying on the Duties, in the year 1767, which he declared to be the most absurd and pernicious that could be devised, and the cause of all our present and impending evils. If this declaration was unexpected, the acknowledgment that followed was more so. Three great Lords who were at that time Cabinet Counsellors, and held the first offices in the state, declared separately in their places, that they had no share in that measure, nor had ever given it any approbation; and two of them

The previous question was then put, "Whether the said question shall now be put?"

It was resolved in the Affirmative. Contents 90, Proxies 14-104; Non-Contents 29. *

The following Protest was thereupon entered:
Dissentient,

1st. The previous question was moved, not to prevent the proceeding in the Address communicated at the conference with the Commons, but in order to present the Petition of the North American Merchants, and of the West India Merchants and Planters, which Petitions the House might reject, if frivolous, or postpone, if not urgent, as it might seem fit to their wisdom; but to hurry on the business to which these Petitions so materially and directly related, the express prayer of which was, that they might be heard before "any resolution may be taken by this right honourable House respecting America;" to refuse so much as to suffer them to be presented, is a proceeding of the most unwarrantable nature, and directly subversive of the most sacred rights of the subject: it is the more particularly exceptionable as a Lord in his place, at the express desire of the West India Merchants, informed the House, that, if necessitated so to do, they were ready, without Counsel or farther preparation, instantly to offer evidence to prove that several Islands of the West Indies could not be able to subsist, after the operation of the proposed Address in America. Justice, with regard to individuals, policy with regard to the publick, and decorum with regard to ourselves, required that we should admit this Petition to be presented. By refusing it, justice is denied.

2dly. Because the Papers laid upon our table by Ministers, are so manifestly defective, and so avowedly curtailed, that we can derive from them nothing like information of the true state of the object on which we are going to act, or of the consequences of the resolutions which we may take. We ought (as we conceive) with gladness to have accepted that information from the Merchants, which, if it had not been voluntarily offered, it was our duty to seek. There is no information concerning the state of our Colonies, (taken in any point of view,) which the Merchants are not far more competent to give than Governours or Officers, who often know far less of the temper and disposition of the people, or may be more disposed to misrepresent it than the Merchants. Of this we have a full and melancholy experience in the mistaken ideas on which the fatal Acts of the last Parliament were formed.

3dly. Because we are of opinion, that in entering into a war in which mischief and inconvenience are great and certain, (but the utmost extent of which it is impossible to foresee,) true policy requires that those who are most likely to be immediately affected, should be thoroughly satisfied condemned it in express terms, while the third, who was still high, in office, did not by any means pretend to support it. It seems they were in some way overruled. But the manner in which a measure of Ministry was carried against the opinion of Ministers, was not explained.

It cannot be wondered, that such a disclosure relative to a matter, which had already convulsed the whole Empire, and was still more to be dreaded in its future consequences, should excite the most general amazement, mixed with a great share of indignation and regret in particulars. The fatal and overruling secret influence, which, as they said had so long guided and marred all the publick affairs of the Nation, was accordingly deplored and animadverted upon in different parts of the House.

In the course of the heat, which sprung from much collateral matter that was thrown in upon this occasion, a series of arraignment, justification, assertion, denial, animadversion, and recrimination took place, in which many things passed, that were either new in that House, or extraordinary in their nature. The learned Lord who had condemned the measure of laying on the American Duties in the year 1767, was himself, partly by implication, and in part directly, charged with having a principal share in those secret counsels, which had been stigmatised as the most obnoxious and ruinous to the Nation; notwithstanding his repeated declaration, that he had not acted as an efficient Cabinet Counsellor for several years. These charges were urged and opposed with a degree of asperity, and a harshness of personal altercation, not often heard in that House; with violent threats on the one side, and general defiance on the other. - Ann. Regis.

List of the Minority who Divided upon the Previous Question: - DUKES.--Cumberland, Richmond, Devonshire, Portland, Manchester.
MARQUIS.--Rockingham.
EARLS.--Abingdon, Besborough, Cholmondeley, Coventry, Effingham, Fitzwilliam, Scarborough, Shelburne, Spencer, Stanford, Strathford, Tankerville.
VISCOUNTS.--Courtenay, Torrington.
LORDS.--Abergavenny, Archer, Beaulieu, Camden, Craven, Forrescue, King, Soudes.
BISHOP.--Exeter. (Frederick Keppel)

of the deliberation with which it was undertaken; and we apprehend that the Planters, Merchants, and Manufacturers, will not bear their losses and burthens, brought on them by the proposed civil war, the better, for our refusing so much as to hear them previous to our engaging in that war; nor wilt our precipitation in resolving, add much to the success in executing any plan that may be pursued.

We protest, therefore, against the refusal to suffer such Petitions to be presented, and we thus clear ourselves to our country of the disgrace and mischief which must attend this unconstitutional, indecent, and improvident proceeding.

RICHMOND,	COURTENAY,
CAMDEN,	ABINGDON,
TORRINGTON,	EFFINGHAM,
ARCHER,	PONSONBY,
STANHOPE,	FITZWILLIAM,
CHOLMONDELEY,	SCARBOROUGH,
ROCKINGHAM,	ABERGAVERNNY,
WYCOMBE,	PORTLAND,
CRAVEN,	TANKERVILLE.

Then the main question was put, "Whether to agree "with the Commons in the said Address, by inserting the "words ' Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and?' "

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Dissentient,

1st. Because the violent matter of this dangerous Address was highly aggravated by the violent manner in which it was precipitately hurried through the House; Lords were not allowed the interposition of a moment's time for deliberation before they were driven headlong into a declaration of civil war. A conference was held with the Commons; an Address of this importance presented; all extraneous information, although offered, positively refused; all Petitions arbitrarily rejected; and the whole of this most awful business received, debated, and concluded, in a single day.

2dly. Because no legal grounds were laid in argument or in fact to show that a rebellion, properly so called, did exist in Massachusetts Bay, when the papers of the latest date, and from whence alone we derive our information, were written. The overt acts to which the species of treason, affirmed in the Address, ought to be applied, were not established, nor any offenders marked out. But a general mass of the acts of turbulence, said to be done at various times and places, and of various natures, were all thrown together to make out one general constructive treason.

Neither was there any sort of proof of the continuance of any unlawful force from whence we could infer that a rebellion does now exist. And we are the more cautious of pronouncing any part of his Majesty's Dominions to be in actual rebellion, because the cases of constructive treason, under that branch of the 25th of Edward the Third, which describes the crime of rebellion, have been already so far extended by the Judges, and the distinctions thereupon so nice and subtle, that no prudent man ought to declare any single person in that situation, without the dearest evidence of uncontrovertible overt acts, to warrant such a declaration. Much less ought so high an authority as both Houses of Parliament, to denounce so severe a judgment against a considerable part of his Majesty's subjects by which his forces may think themselves justified in commencing a war, without any further order or commission.

3dly. Because we think that several Acts of the last Parliament, and several late proceedings of Administration, with regard to the Colonies, are real grievances, and just causes of complaint; and we cannot, in honour or in conscience, consent to an Address which commends the temper by which proceedings so very intemperate have been carried on; nor can we persuade ourselves to authorize violent courses against persons in the Colonies, who have resisted authority, without at the same time redressing the grievances which have given but too much provocation for their behaviour.

4thly. Because we think the loose and general assurances given by the Address, of future redress of grievances, in case of submission, is far from satisfactory, or at all likely to produce their end; whilst the Acts complained of continue unrepealed, or unamended; and their authors remain in authority here, because these advisers of all the measures which have brought on the calamities of this Empire, will not be trusted while they defend, as just, necessary, and even indulgent, all the Acts complained of as grievances, by the Americans; and must, therefore, on their own principles, be bound in future to govern the Colonies in the manner which has already produced such fatal effects; and we fear that the refusal of this House, so much as to receive previous to determination (which is the most offensive mode of rejection) Petitions from the unoffending natives of Great Britain and the West India Islands, affords us but a very discouraging prospect of our obtaining hereafter any petitions at all, from those whom we have declared actors in rebellion, or abettors of that crime.

Lasily. Because the means of enforcing the authority of the British Legislature, is confined to persons of whose capacity, for that purpose, from abundant experience, we have reason to doubt; and who having hitherto used no effectual means of conciliating or of reducing those who oppose that authority; this appears in the constant failure of all their projects, the insufficiency of all their information, and the disappointment of all the hopes, which they have for several years held out to the publick. Parliament has never refused any of their proposals, and yet our affairs have proceeded daily from bad to worse, until we have been brought, step by step, to that state of confusion, and even civil violence, which was the natural result of these desperate measures.

We therefore protest against an Address amounting to a declaration of war, which is founded on no proper Parliamentary information; which was introduced by refusing to suffer the presentation of Petitions against it, (although it be the undoubted right of the subject to present the same,) which followed the rejection of every mode of conciliation; which holds out no substantial offer of redress of grievances; and which promises support to those Ministers who have inflamed America, and grossly misconducted the affairs of Great Britain.

RICHMOND,	CHOLMONDELEY,
CRAVEN,	ABINGDON,
ARCHER,	PORTLAND,
ABERGAVENTNY,	CAMDEN,
ROCKINGHAM,	EFFINGHAM,
WYCOMBE,	STANHOPE,
COURTENAY,	SCARBOROUGH,
TORRINGTON,	FITZWILLIAM,
PONSONBY,	TANKERVILLE.

Ordered, That the words "Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and" be inserted in the said Address.

Ordered, That the said Agreement be communicated to the Commons at a Conference.

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by the Whole House.

Ordered, That the Lords with White Staves do wait on his Majesty, humbly to know what time his Majesty would please to appoint to be attended with the said Address.

A Message was ordered to be sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Browning and Mr. Leeds:

"To desire a Conference with that House this day, at "three o'clock in the afternoon, in the Painted Chamber, "upon the subject matter of the last Conference."

Ordered, That the Managers of the last Conference be the Managers of this.

Upon reading the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the American commerce, setting forth

"That the Petitioners are essentially interested in the commerce, which, for many years, hath been carried on with the British Colonies in America, to the increase of the Manufactures, the improvement of the Revenues, the support of the Naval strength of Great Britain, and to the extension of the general trade of the whole Empire: And considering the happy effect of those laws which the British Legislature had, from time to time, enacted for the regulation of this commerce, the Petitioners were warranted in presuming that human wisdom could not have framed a more effectual institution for the attainment and security of these valuable objects. It is to the operation of laws incompatible with this institution, that the Petitioners can alone attribute the frequent interruptions which of late years have prevailed in this commerce; the total stagnation which at present subsists in the export trade with the greatest and most important part of North America; the certain ruin with which the whole of that valuable and extensive commerce, and thousands of industrious Manufacturers in these Kingdoms, are threatened; the large and fatal diminution which the national revenue must inevitably sustain, and the sensible decline of publick credit. Under these circumstances, the Petitioners are constrained, by a sense of that duty which they owe to themselves, their fellow-subjects, and their posterity, to appear before this right honourable House with these their respectful but just complaints. The Petitioners approach this right honourable House with the greater confidence, when they reflect, that the Peers of this Realm are the hereditary Counsellors of the Crown, and the constitutional guardians of those invaluable interests, by which the most distant subjects of the Empire are inseparably united. And relying on their justice for a fair construction of the motives which induced them to this necessary application, the Petitioners rest assured that they shall not be deemed to have brought under the consideration of this right honourable House, matters of trivial concern, when they humbly submit, that the fundamental policy of those laws of which they complain, and the propriety of enforcing, relaxing, or amending the same, are questions essentially connected with the commerce between Great Britain and America; and consequently, that the consideration of the one cannot be entered on without a full discussion of the other;" the Petitioners, therefore, most humbly pray this right honourable House, "That they will enter into an immediate examination of that excellent system of commercial regulation, on the faith of which the intercourse between Great Britain and her Colonies hath been founded and maintained to an extent, and with a success, of which history affords no example. And weighing the true cause of that disorder by which this happy intercourse hath been disturbed, will apply such healing remedies as can alone restore and establish the same on a permanent foundation;" and therefore, praying their Lordships, "That no resolution may be taken by this right honourable House, respecting America, until they shall have been heard by themselves, their Agents, or Counsel, in support of this Petition."

It is ordered that the said Petition do lie on the table.

Upon reading the Petition of the Planters of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies residing in Great Britain, and of the Merchants of London trading to the said Colonies, whose names are thereunto subscribed, setting forth -

"That the Petitioners are exceedingly alarmed at an Agreement and Association entered into by the Congress held at the City of Philadelphia, in North America, on the 5th of September, 1774, whereby the Members thereof agreed and associated for themselves and the inhabitants of the several Provinces lying between Nova Scotia and Georgia, that from and after the first day of December, 1774, they would not import into British America any Molasses, Syrups, Paneles, Coffee, or Pimento, from the British Plantations; and that after the tenth day of September, 1775, if the Acts and the parts of Acts of the British Parliament therein mentioned, are not repealed, they would not directly or indirectly export any Merchandise or commodity whatsoever to the * East Indies. And the Petitioners do most humbly represent, that the British property or stock vested in the West India Islands, amounts to upwards of thirty millions sterling; that a farther property of many millions is employed in the commerce created by the said Islands, a commerce comprehending Africa, the * East Indies, and Europe; that the whole profits and produce of these capitals ultimately centre in Great Britain, and add to the national wealth, while the navigation necessary to all its branches establishes a strength which wealth can neither purchase nor balance; that the Sugar Plantations in the West Indies are subject to a greater variety of contingencies than many other species of property, from their necessary dependence or external support; and that therefore, should any interruption happen in the general system of their commerce, the great national stock thus vested and employed, must become unprofitable and precarious; that the profits arising from the present

* It is thus in the Journal, but in the original Petition it is West.
* It is thus both in the Journal and in the original Petition.

state of the said Islands, and that are likely to arise from their future improvement, in a great measure depend on a free and reciprocal intercourse between them and the several Provinces of North America, from whence they are furnished with provisions and other supplies absolutely necessary for their support and the maintenance of their plantations; that the scarcity and high price in Great Britain and other parts of Europe, of those articles of indispensable necessity, which they now derive from the middle Colonies of America, and the inadequate population in some parts of that Continent, with the distance, danger, and uncertainty of the navigation from others, forbid your Petitioners to hope for a supply in any degree proportionate to their wants; that if the first part of the said Agreement and Association for a Non-Importation, hath taken place and shall be continued, the same will be highly detrimental to the Sugar Colonies; and that if the second part of the said Agreement and Association for a Non-Exportation, shall be carried into execution, which the Petitioners do firmly believe will happen, unless the harmony that subsisted a few years ago between this Kingdom and the Provinces of America, to the infinite advantage of both, be restored, the Islands which are supplied with most of their subsistence from thence, will be reduced to the utmost distress, and the trade between all the Islands and this Kingdom will of course be obstructed, to the diminution of the publick Revenue, to the extreme injury of a great number of the Planters, and to the great prejudice of the Merchants, not only by the said obstruction, but also by the delay of payment of the principal and interest of an immense debt due from the former to the latter;" and therefore praying "That their Lordships will be pleased to take into their most serious consideration that great political system of the Colonies heretofore so very beneficial to the mother country and her Dependencies, and adopt such measures as to their Lordships, in their great wisdom, shall seem meet, to prevent the evils with which the Petitioners are threatened, and to preserve the intercourse between the West India Islands and the Northern Colonies, to the general harmony and lasting benefit of the whole British Empire; and that they may be heard by themselves, their Agents or Counsel, in support of their Petition."

It is ordered that the said Petition do lie on the table.

Ordered, That the proper Officer do lay before this House an Account of the Value of Exports and Imports to and from North America and England, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each Colony and year, and British Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, from Foreign; also,

Aa Account of the Value of Exports and Imports to and from North America and Scotland, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas 1773; distinguishing each Colony and year, and British Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, from Foreign; also,

An Account of the Value of Exports and Imports to and from the West Indies and England, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each Island and year, and British Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, from Foreign; also,

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 13, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty,

The House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Buller moved that an additional number of two thousand men be allowed for Sea Service for the year 1775.

He stated the respective services our Ships were on, and said that the proposed augmentation was necessary to enforce the measures of Government in America.

Lord North remarked, that the subject had been so amply discussed on Friday, by being so much blended with the means of restraining the Fishery of Massachusetts Bay, that he should have the less to offer upon this occasion; that the rebellious disposition and motions of that and other Colonies made it necessary to have such a guard upon

An Account of the Value of Exports and Imports to and from the West Indies and Scotland, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each Island and year, and British Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, from Foreign; and also,

An Account of the Value of Exports and Imports to and from Africa and England, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each year, and British Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, from Foreign.

WEDNESDAY, February 8, 1775.

The Lord Chamberlain reported, that the Lords with White Staves, had, according to order, waited on his Majesty, humbly to know at what time his Majesty would please to appoint to be attended with the Address of both Houses; and that his Majesty had appointed to-morrow, at three o'clock, at his Palace of St. James.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons to desire a Conference this day with that House, on the subject-matter of the Conference of yesterday, acquainted the House that the Commons do agree to a Conference with their Lordships, as desired.

The House being informed that Managers for the Commons were ready for the Conference in the Painted Chamber,

The names of the Managers for the Lords were called over;

And the House was adjourned during pleasure, and the Lords went to the Conference;

Which being ended, the House was resumed,

And the Lord President reported, that the Managers for the Lords had met the Managers for the Commons at the Conference, and had acquainted them as directed.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Browning and Mr. Leeds:

To acquaint them that his Majesty had appointed to-morrow, at three o'clock, at his Palace of Saint James, to be attended with the Address of both Houses; and that the Lords intend to be there at that time.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1775.

The Lord Chancellor reported, that both Houses of Parliament did, yesterday, present to his Majesty their humble Address, to which his Majesty was pleased to return the following most gracious Answer:

My Lords and Gentlemen:

I thank you for this very dutiful and loyal Address, and for the affectionate and solemn assurances you give me of your support in maintaining the just rights of my crown, and of the two Houses of Parliament; and you may depend on my taking the most speedy and effectual measures for enforcing due obedience to the laws and the authority of the supreme Legislature.

Whenever any of my Colonies shall make a proper and dutiful application, I shall be ready to concur with you in affording them every just and reasonable indulgence; and it is my ardent wish that this disposition may have a happy effect on the temper and conduct of my subjects in America.

the Coasts of North America, that the augmentation was highly necessary; and as the people of New England could not be restrained from the Fishery without some Sloops stationed for that purpose, the circumstance made it doubly requisite to provide accordingly. He gave no precise explanation, but only general assurances that this would be the last application of the kind. He said he could not possibly pretend to foretel every event that might happen, and consequently could not bind himself by any specific promise or engagement.

Governour Johnstone observed, that this was a most extraordinary mode of procedure, and that he was at a loss to determine whether it proceeded from ignorance or design. He was certain, however, that it gave full scope to gaming in the Alley, for stocks had been falling gradually, till they had now come down five per cent. It furnished a happy opportunity to those in the secret to enrich themselves at the publick expense. He did not mean to bring home this charge to any particular person or set of men; but it was well known it had been frequently practised by the confidential people in office.

Lord North knew nothing of what had been done by such people, but believed upon his honour that none of the present confidential servants in office did game in the funds; for it would be basely betraying the confidence of their Prince.

Lord John Cavendish and Colonel Barré accused the noble Lord of great inconsistency, in thinking so far to blind the House as to have it believed that the augmentation asked for could answer any purpose but to convince the Americans of the inveteracy of the mother country against them, and to throw a reconciliation to a yet greater distance; that a few thousand seamen added to the service would never effectually answer the purpose, if that purpose was to prohibit the trade of the most commercial Colonies in America; that the noble Lord must mean only to trifle with the House and with mankind, in declaring one day America to be in rebellion, the next prohibiting the commerce of Massachusetts Bay, and the third coming for so insignificant an augmentation; that the gentlemen on the same side of the House had repeatedly asserted that the commerce of the New Englanders, and much of that of the other Colonies, was contraband; and that America was peopled with smugglers, to the great detriment of that advantage which would otherwise flow to this country. How could Administration, therefore, with any degree of consistency, suppose that such a system of smuggling, added to a new created system of the same, the Fishery, be all kept under by any thing less than the most powerful armaments?

Mr. Cornwall, taking an historical circuit of American affairs, in order to shew the connection and dependence of the Minister's measures on each other, replied to the objections that had been started. He remarked, that to pass Acts to restrain commerce, and to declare the extra Provincial meetings in the Colonies illegal, whose object principally was to import Arms and Ammunition, in order for the purposes of rebellion, would be nugatory and absurd, unless corresponding measures were taken to enforce those Acts; that as to great Armaments and Fleets of Men-of-War of the Line, the gentlemen of the House in that line of the military well knew them to be unnecessary and out of the question; that Sloops and the smaller Frigates would answer all the purposes by being properly stationed; that the Newfoundland Fishery was so local that a few Sloops-of-War would nearly command the whole, unless some foreign Power had a superiour force there, with whom we were at war, or on ill terms; that in regard to the objections which had generally been made against using force with the Americans, he could not see their propriety, since he was persuaded that the Americans were determined to make the dispute a question of dependency on the Crown of this Realm.

Mr. Charles Fox contended strongly, that taking the affairs of America on the very footing upon which the honourable Member had thrown them, that their conduct betrayed nothing but incapacity; that the gentlemen on the Treasury bench were repeatedly telling the House of the rebellion of the Americans, and how strongly they are persuaded that they mean to throw off all dependence on this country; how then, said he, are we to account for that slothful, dilatory conduct of Administration, to sit quiet for so many months, and to seem in their management to have no idea that force could ever be used or would ever be necessary. If Administration were really persuaded of the views and intentions of the Americans; if rebellion was written among them in such legible characters, why did they not take the earliest opportunity of preventing those intentions and of stifling that rebellion. Had they conducted themselves upon the principles of common sense, they certainly would have been earlier in their intelligence to Parliament, earlier in their application, and more vigorous in their measures. But this, sir, is under the supposition that they knew the rectitude of their intentions, and approved of their own conduct. He then deviated into a personal attack on Lord North, but was uncommonly spirited throughout.

Captain Walsingham insisted that our present Naval force was by no means adequate to the execution of our professed intentions; for that the squadron we designed for America would answer no purpose of stopping their commerce; or, if we did send a sufficient one, our own Coasts, comparatively speaking, must be left totally defenceless, as he was well informed that France alone had seventy-five Men-of-War of the Line now, more than one half of which were manned and fit for actual service. He then gave an account of a conversation which passed lately between him and a French gentleman well acquainted with the state of their Navy, from which he was fully satisfied that the whole of our force, in every part of the world, would not be sufficient to defend us at home, should we blindly rush into a civil war.

Mr. Temple Luttrell. I rise up under a number of disadvantages, and shall scarce be able to express my sentiments without much agitation and embarrassment, a novice as I am at political disquisitions, and attempting, (from a seat which till this hour I might not call my own) to speak on a subject of such high import, in the presence, and possibly against the opinion of the most experienced statesmen in any country of the universe. But, sir, it has been earnestly recommended to me, as well by the electors of the Borough of which I have the honour to be a Representative, as by several other persons of respectable consideration, that I will exert the utmost of my humble endeavours and faculties, towards the establishing of peace, and conciliating the affections of the American Colonies with their parent state of Great Britain, and to promote the joint happiness of both divisions of this mighty Empire, on the firm basis of equity and mutual good offices; and I should hold it an unpardonable omission of duty, were I to remain now silent, especially as I was precluded by the dependence before Parliament of a controverted return, from declaring my disposition towards the oppressed Colonists, at the opening of the present session, when a Speech from the Throne, of the most inimical tendency to America, and therefore the most alarming and dangerous tendency to the whole British Realm, received the thanks of this House. I was under the same preclusion when Commerce here stood adejected suppliant, in just apprehension from the impending storm. Well, sir, might she be alarmed, to see a pilot at the helm, as the winds and the billows arise, who, rather than part with the guns, throws the merchandise overboard; save them sir, he may, by so costly a sacrifice, but not for jubilee or triumph; they shall be saved for signals of distress, and to solemnize the obsequies of your Empire.

The Merchants were not then to be heard, lest their candid story should set in the proper point of view those insidious fragments of official letters laid on your table. What human understanding could cement such a mangled correspondence together, so as to derive any clear accurate knowledge of the real condition or sentiments of the Americans? Whatsoever might extenuate offences, excuse error, and restore perfect amity between the two countries, did the partial hand of Administration wickedly suppress, while in too glaring a light was exhibited every fact that could serve to widen the breach and inflame the passions, and blow up a faint, luckless spark of animosity to the full combustion and horrors of a civil war! These misrepresentations, however, answered the ends proposed, for both Houses were blindly entrapped to give their sanction to as sanguinary a scroll, (in the form of an Address) as was ever laid by a prostitute Senate at the feet of deluded Majesty. Did not your ancestors, sir, manfully fight, did not some of them heroically fall, to preserve those constitutional rights of the subject to every Briton, which you have now, by one vote, pledged yourself, at the hazard of life and fortune, to subvert and to annihilate throughout the better part of the whole British Monarchy?

I do not conceive it possible that any man here present can feel as he ought, be conscious of the least participation in the superintendence of the Commonwealth, and remain a mere tranquil observer, when so interesting a subject comes before you; a subject on the issue of which, perhaps, his own individual happiness or misery, doubtless the happiness or misery of his nearest posterity, will depend. With what hebitude, sir, must the blood circulate through his veins! What must his definition be of an ignominious supineness and apathy? This is not a debate of slow animation, in which few persons are concerned, and of limited influence; we are now to decide upon the fate of millions, through a long series of ages, and the part which every man shall take on this occasion must stamp him with characters indellible through all eternity - a Patriot or a Parricide. It is, sir, from the collisions of controversy that those radiant sparks are struck out by which Truth lights her sacred torrid - nor have I less expectation from those gentlemen who are but just initiated into Parliamentary business, than from your veteran politicians, "deep on whose front engraven" (to use the phrase of Milton) "deliberation sits and publick care." Such veterans might, indeed, be our surest guides, were we now about to agitate questions wrapt up in subdolous Machiavelian mystery, and only to be developed by the acutest abstract reasoning. The present juncture, sir, requires only a well principled heart, and a head moderately conversant with the nature of men and things.

It is not, I own, I feel, given to a young Member to deliver his ideas with that guarded correctness, that unagitated confidence, which long habitude of speaking usually supplies; but will he, sir, yield with less ductility to the dictates and honest zeal of inward conscience? He comes among you at least with a judgment unbiased; he has not pledged himself to any partial junto, whose maxims and interests he is at all events to adopt for the measure of his political career; he has not stood forth an accomplice to any of those manifold mischiefs and blunders which have heretofore been committed in the administration of your Colonies; he has had no share in inflaming the evil by temporary anodynes; nor has he treated the imperial concerns of that wide-stretched Continent, as only accessory to, and of trivial account when compared with his own private schemes of ambition and aggrandizement. Upon the whole, sir, I can but think him rather the more likely to execute the share of such important award committed to his discretion, as becomes an upright delegate of the people at large, heedless whether his conduct therein may quadrate with the narrow, selfish views of this or that set of men who are candidates for titles or power; not but that I have the satisfaction to see here present some characters animated with the true patriotick spirit, who have long and worthily been seated within these walls; on whose eminent talents, on whose approved integrity, America rests her best hope.

Such gentlemen as come within the scope of any of those disadvantageous allusions I have just thrown out, will consider that a well-timed recession from error claims the next praise to a perfect exemption therefrom: they will no longer endeavour to palliate a dreadful disease, which, if once arrived at a full paroxysm, it will baffle the Esculapian skill of their expertest state doctors to cope with.

Our present sagacious rulers had, it seems, drawn their political clue in that quarter of the globe to so Gordian a tie, that despairing to revolve by patience and sober wisdom through the several implications their hands had wrought, they took a summary recourse to the edge of the sword. Sir, their sword-law will best agree with the arbitrary principles and system of government applied to almost every department of the state by that flagitious confederacy which hath latently presided over the councils and arcana of the cabinet ever since the accession of our present most gracious Sovereign. I say, sir, that these occult dictators to the royal conscience should prefer the sword-law, I am not at all astonished; but that the ostensible adviser, a man of profound judgment and the clearest penetration; a man whom the most slanderous of his enemies allow to possess the tenderest feelings of social affection, to be even prodigal of the practices as well as professions of humanity, that he, sir, should, with a ruthless composure, adopt and carry into execution their bloody mandates, may well create general consternation and the deepest concern. It was pronounced by a consummate Minister, who once held the reigns of Government with so much honour to himself, and transcendent glory to the whole Empire of Britain, that the Canadian America was conquered in Germany. It is, it seems, by the German policy of dominion, which our own clan-bred feudists are ever prone to expose, that British America is to be reduced to vassalage: but let the all-potent minions beware, lest while they are bowing the stubborn necks of these Colonists to the yoke, they find not their own necks bow to the block of an executioner.

Sir, the far more considerable part of the people of England do now wish us to use temper, moderation, and forbearance towards America. "Dignos esse qui Romani fiant," (said the illustrious Consul to the Senate of certain tributaries in allegiance to the Roman eagles) "eos, qui nihil præterquam de libertate cogitent." Sir, when the two most renowned Republicks of ancient time had long contended for universal empire, and victory over many a well-fought field had held almost an equal balance, then it was the rigid censor (M. Cato) denounced that memorable judgment, "Delenda est Carthago." Sir, the Carthaginians were the natural rivals of the trade and glory of Rome; they had, in cool blood, inhumanly put to death one of the most perfect heroes and patriots her annals could boast: in their national character they were perfidious to a proverb; and they early led their children to the altar to lisp assent to solemn adjuration of eternal warfare and vengeance against Rome. In short, sir, the further existence of these Africans Was become quite incompatible with the peace and security of the Roman Commonwealth.

The words "Delenda est Carthago" were, in the reign of our Charles the Second, borrowed by a Member of the other House of Parliament, the famous Earl of Shaftesbury, in height of passionate resentment, against the Hollanders: but, sir, though the Hollanders had, to the most substantial injuries, added the provoking insult of sailing up to the emporium of your commerce, with brooms at their mast-heads; though they had by many an inveterate combat on the Ocean brought your marine power, and consequently our very being as a people, to as desperate a crisis as ever befell Rome during the rage of the Punick wars, yet, sir, it is a well-known anecdote of that day, there was scarce a Peer in the assembly but stood aghast and shuddered at the unchristian severity of the sentence. "Delenda est Carthago" has been applied for the third time: it has, sir, been recently and publicly applied, by an avowed zealous partisan of the present administration of your Government, to our fellow-subjects of America, and the news will, I fear, ere long reach your Colonies.

I am not master of language sufficient in energy to give the due comment to such an expression; but, sir, should it be here uttered in sobriety, and calmly listened to, might you not be apt to imagine yourself seated midst the Deputies of the Indian Tribes, near the interiour Lakes of that Continent, and sacrificing to the demon of revenge, rather than with the Deputies of the free, polished natives of the British Isles, in their imperial seat of legislation? I can, indeed, easily conceive that the gentleman alluded to (Mr. Van) was rather more forward, rather more ingenious, than the chieftains of his cause will thank him for: they hardly could mean that the final catastrophe of this their tragick plot should be discovered just at the opening of the very first act.

It was a noble sentiment of Fenelon (Archbishop of Cambray) that "he loved his friend equal to himself; his "country far better than his friend and himself, mankind "in general beyond all put together." What that amiable prelate makes Mentor say, on revealing a celestial form to the son of Ulysses, (who had just attained to years of manhood) may afford an allegory to assist the British Legislature at some future period, in the safest and sagest conduct towards her Colonists. "I have guided you through "rocks and quicksands, through the ensanguined battle, and "the various calamities incident to the human species; I "have taught you, through forcible experience, the good "and the bad maxims by which Government may be carried on; it is now time that you be fully emancipated. "Love your fellow-creatures; endeavour to renew the "golden age; avoid effeminacy, profuseness, and ostentation; let simplicity be your best ornaments; on virtue "and your own just actions rest your chief security; pure "liberty, peace, delightful abundance, and unsullied glory "ever attend you."

I am sensible, sir, that I have too long withheld the attention of the House from persons of far superiour weight and abilities. I shall, therefore, at a future day; hope for the same indulgence that has now been shewn me; while I urge that to Compel the Americans, by a military force, to acknowledge the paramount and unbounded authority of Parliament, in the taxation of their property - property created by their intellects and industry is neither just, politick, nor practicable; a measure totally repugnant to the liberal notions of rectitude which have ever characterized the happy natives of England, and irreconcilable with the spirit of those very rules and institutes, by which the three estates of this Realm hold existence.

Mr. Sawbridge said he perceived that Administration were hurrying the Nation to certain ruin, but he should reserve himself to speak on our present conduct towards America till a fitter and some more convenient opportunity.

Mr. Buller's motion was then agreed to without division.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee that they had come to several Resolutions, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

Sir Charles Whitworth also acquainted the House that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty.

TUESDAY, February 14, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty, the Resolutions which the Committee had directed him to report to the House; which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same were read, and are as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that an additional number of two thousand Men be allowed for the Sea Service, for the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, including four hundred and ninety Marines.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding four Pounds per man per month, be allowed for maintaining the said two thousand men for thirteen months, including Ordnance for Sea Service.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding one hundred and five thousand three hundred and twenty-six Pounds, sixteen Shillings and eight Pence, be granted to his Majesty, upon account of the reduced Officers of his Majesty's Land Forces and Marines, for the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding eight hundred and seventy Pounds, three Shillings and nine Pence, be granted to his Majesty for defraying the charge for allowances to the several Officers and private gentlemen of the two Troops of Horse-Guards reduced, and to the superannuated gentlemen of the four Troops of Horse-Guards, for the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding six hundred and twenty-eight Pounds be granted to his Majesty, for the paying of Pensions to the Widows of such reduced Officers of his Majesty's Land Forces and Marines, as died upon the establishment of half-pay in Great Britain, and were married to them before the twenty-fifth day of December, one thousand seven hundred and sixteen, for the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that provision be made for the Pay and Clothing of the Militia, and for their Subsistence during the time they shall be absent from home on account of the annual exercise, for the year One thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

The said Resolutions being severally read a second time, were, upon the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House:

The other Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further the Supply granted to his Majesty:

Ordered, That the Estimate of the charge of an augmentation to his Majesty's Forces for the year 1775, be referred to the said Committee.

Ordered, That the Estimate of the charge of the difference of pay between the British and Irish establishment of one Regiment of Light Dragoons, and two Regiments of Foot, from the 1st March to 24th December, 1775, both days inclusive, being two hundred and ninety-nine days; as also of the charge of levy money, for the augmentation to Major General Preston's Regiment of Light Dragoons, for the year 1775, be referred to the said Committee.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Lord Barrington moved, that sixty-seven thousand seven hundred and six Pounds, seven Shillings and one Pence, be granted for the service of the year 1775, to enable his Majesty to augment his Land Forces with four thousand three hundred and eighty-three Men, Officers and Non-Commissioned Officers included.

His Lordship introduced his motion with explaining the several military arrangements, with stating the force to be kept at Boston, which he said would be about ten thousand men, and with giving general assurances, that no more Troops would be wanted to enforce the execution of the laws; and added, that part of the additional expense would be incurred by the appointment of some additional Officers to each Regiment.

Colonel Barré said, that such appointment was putting the Nation to an unnecessary expense, as it was to no manner of purpose.

Lord Barrington replied, this appointment would take place only in such Regiments as were on actual service, and as the operations against the Americans were intended to be carried on by detachments, an additional number of Officers would consequently be wanting.

Colonel Barré agreed to this reasoning, if that was the mode meant to be adopted, in case of hostilities.

Mr. Coxe was strong against the Resolution, and severe against the authors of so weak, cruel, and unnatural a measure.

Mr. T. Townshend insisted, that nearly half the number of Men, and all the Officers now wanted, might be taken from the Hail-Pay and Chelsea Out-Pension Lists, without putting the Nation to the heavy expense now proposed. He said, that there were sixteen thousand Out-Pensioners, many of whom were fit for actual service; and if they were not, they were at least fit to supply the places of the draughts that might be sent to complete the Regiments now at Boston: that many of them were young men; and, on the whole, contended that the greatest part of the expense now proposed might be saved, as the difference of pay between the Pensioners and those doing duty was not above a Penny a day.

Colonel Barré reminded Lord North of what had fallen from him on a former occasion, that we should want no new levies for enforcing measures against Boston, as with the Regiments from Ireland, and the Troops quartered in America, the force would be fully sufficient.

Lord North replied, that he did not recollect any such expression; that it must be a mistake, as the paper he now held in his hand, was the same he spoke from, when he was supposed to make use of the words now alluded to by the honourable gentleman.

The question then being put, the Committee divided - Ayes 91, Noes 15.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had come to several Resolutions, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

Sir Charles Whitworth also acquainted the House, that he was directed by the Committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Friday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty.

THURSDAY, February 16, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty, the Resolutions which the Committee had directed him to report to the House, which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same were read, and are as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding sixty-seven thousand seven hundred and six Pounds, twelve Shillings and one Penny, be granted to his Majesty for defraying the charge of an augmentation to his Majesty's Forces, consisting of four thousand three hundred and eighty-three men, for the year 1775.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding nine thousand five hundred and thirty-six Pounds, ten Shillings and seven Pence, be granted to his Majesty, for defraying the charge of the difference of pay between the British and Irish establishment of one Regiment of Light Dragoons, and two Regiments of Foot, from the 1st of March to the 24th of December, 1775, both days inclusive, being two hundred and ninety-nine days; as also, for defraying the charge of Levy-Money for the augmentation to Major-General Preston's Regiment of Light Dragoons for the year 1775.

Mr. Hartley observed, that as we had hitherto proceeded totally- in the dark, and determined on measures without sufficient previous information, so we were resolved to continue to proceed in the same blind blundering manner. We first agreed to go to war, without inquiring into the motives that should induce us to take so momentous a step, and then consented to employ a certain number of forces, without being acquainted with the particular services for which they were destined.

Sir G. Savile spoke much against the power vested in the Commander-in-Chief; and in the course of his observations made some very severe and pointed strictures on the Quebec Bill.

Lord Beauchamp warmly defended the justice and policy of the Quebec Bill.

The said Resolutions then being severally read a second time, were, upon the questions severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 20, 1775.

The House, according to order, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st and 5th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

Lord North rose and said: Sir, as I mean to offer to the consideration of the Committee some propositions which may be the ground of a Resolution, and which I conceive to be founded on the Address which the House has presented to his Majesty, I desire that the said Address may be read. [The Address was read accordingly.] His Lordship remarked, that the Address, both as it was proposed, and in the sense in which it was understood when agreed to, meant to hold out to the Americans, that on the matter of taxation, although the Parliament of Great Britain could never give up the rights, although it must always maintain the doctrine that every part of the Empire was bound to bear its share of service and burthen in the common defense; yet, as to the matter of that right, and with respect to the mode of the contribution, if the end could be obtained, and if the Americans would propose any means, and give assurance of the prosecution of those means by which they should contribute their share to the common defence - he had said, he did not apprehend Parliament would hesitate a moment to suspend the exercise of that right; but would concede to the Americans, raising their share of the contribution by themselves. This was the direct and avowed sense, in which the Resolution for the Address was moved. I publicly, said his Lordship, gave my opinion, and very explicitly said, that if the Americans would propose to Parliament, any mode by which they would engage themselves to raise, in their own way, and by their own grants, their share of contribution to their common defence, the quarrel on the subject of taxation was at an end.

As nearly as I can recollect, these were my very words; but these, sir, were the words only of a private Member of Parliament; they were but opinion given in debate. The words contained in the Address seem to many gentlemen to require this comment, this explanation, by Parliament itself, in some clear, explicit, and definitive opinion. That if the promise of indulgence on this point of taxation means really to hold out the grounds of peace, we ought to explain on what terms we will accede to it: and what the propositions are, which we are willing to accept. To be explicit, then, as to my own opinion, I must say, that if the dispute in which the Americans have engaged goes to the whole of our authority, we can enter into no negotiation, we can meet no compromise. If it be only as to the suspension of the exercise of our right, or as to the mode of laying and raising taxes for a contribution towards the common defense, I think it would be just, it would be wise, to meet any fair proposition, which may come in an authentick way from any Province or Colony; and on this ground it is that I shall propose to the Committee the following Resolution:

"That it is the opinion of this Committee, that when "the Governour, Council, and Assembly, or General Court, "of any of his Majesty's Provinces or Colonies in America, shall propose to make provision, according to the "condition, circumstances, and situation of such Province "or Colony, for contributing their proportion to the corn- "men defence, (such proportion to be raised under the "authority of the General Court, or General Assembly, of "such Province or Colony, and disposable by Parliament,) "and shall engage to make provision also for the support "of the Civil Government, and the Administration of Jus- "tice, in such Province or Colony, it will be proper, if such "proposal shall be approved by his Majesty and the two "Houses of Parliament, and for so long as such provision "shall be made accordingly, to forbear, in respect of such "Province or Colony, to levy any Duty, Tax, or Assess- "ment, or to impose any farther Duty, Tax, or Assess- "ment, except only such Duties as it may be expedient to "continue to levy or to impose for the regulation of com- "merce; the nett produce of the Duties last mentioned to "be carried to the account of such Province or Colony "respectively." *

This Resolution, added his Lordship, marks the ground on which negotiation may take place. It is explicit, and defines the terms, and specifies the persons from whom the proposals must come, and to whom they must be made. It points out the end and purpose for which the contributions are to be given, and the persons from whom the grant of them is to originate. It takes away every ground of suspicion as to the appropriation of the Revenue when raised, to purposes for which the Americans never would grant it. And from the nature of it is seen, that it must be conclusive so long as the Americans observe the agreement. But

* Whilst parties thus pursued their debates with much eagerness and animosity, and nothing but defiance was hurled at America, on the part of Government, the noble Lord at the head of Administration amazed all parties, and seemed for a time almost to dissolve his own, by that famous conciliatory motion with respect to America, which was then, and has been since, the subject of so much discussion.

Upon the first bruit of conciliatory measures being proposed by the Minister, it was surmised, that he was going either to resign, and would first make a disavowal of those publick measures which had been lately pursued, or that from some strange convulsion in the internal Cabinet, the whole political system of Government was to be changed; all those Members who were within hearing, accordingly hastened to the House, with the most eager expectation. Nor was the astonishment less within doors. From some perplexity in its construction, and obscurity in the words, the extent or drift of the motion was not immediately comprehended. The Courtiers looked at each other with amazement, and seemed at a loss in what light to consider the Minister. That numerous high-prerogative party, who always loved a strong Government, in whatever hands it might be lodged, and according had, upon principle, ever opposed any relaxation in favour of the Colonies, heard the propositions with horror, and considered themselves as abandoned and betrayed. Even some of the old staunch friends of Government, who had always gone, with every Administration. and uniformly pursued the same line of conduct, in all changes of men and measures, began now more than to waver. In a word, the Treasury Benches seemed to totter, and that Ministerial phalanx, which had been so long irresistible, ready to break, and to fall into inextricable disorder - Ann. Regis.

many objections from various quarters, and on different grounds, will be made to it. If there be any persons who think we ought to make no advances towards accommodation, because they understand such to be concessions which we ought not to make - if there be any who may think the terms which this Resolution holds out are disadvantageous, I would not wish them to agree to it. But they will give me leave (who think, that even were we to impose terms in the hour of victory itself, this proposition would be a good, would be a just one,) to propose it now, before any blood is shed. Some gentlemen may ask the question - will you treat with rebels? I am not treating with rebels. it has never been yet said, that all the Americans are rebels, or that all the Colonies are in rebellion - it cannot, I hope, be said. There is certainly in the Province of Massachusetts a rebellion. But, sir, could I open the door even to rebels to return to their duty, I should be happy. The specifick rebellion of the Massachusetts is, that the people of the Province reject and oppose with force of arms, the Government, as established by the King and Parliament. the moment that they acknowledge that Government, and meet in assembly to act under it, the rebellion is at an end. The propositions Contained in the Resolution, form an express declaration, and do not begin a negotiation.

Others, perhaps, will say it is proper that Parliament should bind itself; I answer, that whenever Parliameut confirms an agreement it always does bind itself. Others will look to the effect; and ask what consequences do you expect from this? Will you, in the mean time, suspend your operations of force? Certainly not. The putting ourselves off our guard is certainly not the way to treat on safe grounds or with effect. The ground on which we stand at present is, in all human probability, such as will enable us to enforce what we have a right to demand; and is therefore the most likely to claim attention, and to produce that effect, by peace, which we are otherwise in a situation to procure by force of arms. Whether the Americans will accede to this or not, must depend on various circumstances that cannot be foreseen. If their outward pretensions be the real principles of the opposition which they have made, they must, consistently with those principles, agree to this proposition. If they do not meet us on this ground, it will evince that they have other views, and are actuated by other motives. It will have been wise, it will have been just, it will have been humane, that we have held out the terms of peace; if they reject it, their blood must be upon their own heads. But I have better hopes; there are people, and I hope whole Colonies, that wish for peace; and by these means I hope they will find their way to it. *

* Extract of a Letter from LONDON, to a Gentleman of PHILADELPHIA, dated FEBRUARY 23, 1775.

Enclosed I send you an authentick Speech, made by Lord North at the time he introduced his deceitful plan as to American taxation, and forming a system for disunion in North America. You may rely on the authenticity of the Speech, as it was taken in short-hand by a Member in the House.

"Grievances can only be settled by a dutiful application. When subjects apply in that manner, it is right to grant whatever indulgence is necessary. The exercise of the right of taxing every part of the British Dominions, by no means to be given up; the propositions I have now made only states upon what ground it may be suspended. That it may be asked whether it is possible for Parliament to come to some Resolution on that subject, while they are sending Fleets and Armies in order to lay the trade of the Colonies under restrictions; but he thought it best at this outset to let them know what we expect, and whether they meant to dispute the whole of our authority or no; that though it was not worth while to spend the lives of is Majesty's subjects in levying a trifling tax among them, it was worth every exertion to secure their allegiance, and to enforce the supreme Legislative authority of this country; that their Congress was an illegal assembly; that they were separate States, independent of one another, and had no connection but in that relation to Great Britain; that as our Army and Navy Establishment was necessarily increased on their account, and for their protection, they ought to contribute their just proportion to that expense, subject to the disposal of Parliament; that he should never depart from the proper exercise of that right when they refused to contribute voluntarily, which, if they did. he should think it right to suspend the exercise of our right to tax them here, except for the regulation of commerce; and to remove every objection, that other taxes might be raised upon them under colour of regulations on commerce, he meant that the produce of such Duties should be applied to the particular use of that Province, where they were levied.

"That Parliament cannot divest itself of the right of taxation in every part of the Empire, because it may become necessary to demand assistance and supply from every corner of it. That the Colonies complain Parliament is ignorant of their true state; but this is only a specious pretence - let them first tax themselves, and then it will be seen whether suspension of taxation accompanies their contribution; that Governour Pownall. Sir, when in the last session of the last Parliament, I remarked to the House that the circumstances of the American affairs were brought to a crisis, and that that crisis was actually in event, wherein all opinion as to the modes of policy must be useless and at an end, and that your future deliberation would be only employed on measures of force, I took my leave of debate on this subject; I had imposed on myself a determined silence, and since I have had the honour of a seat in this Parliament, have adhered invariably to that resolution.

I have been always an advocate for the Colonies, and the British subjects in America. I have always defended their rights, where I thought any infraction was made on them. Where they have got into disputes on points where I could not think they were right, I have endeavoured to excuse or extenuate their fault; where I could not do that, I have yet at all times endeavoured to alleviate the resentment which may have been raised in this country against them. It would not therefore, be suitable to the conduct which I have held, nor could I feel it proper for me to become their accuser and their persecutor, as some Governours have done; much less could I ever bring myself to calumniate them.

I had early opportunity of seeing the commencement of this business. I was at the Congress held at Albany in 1754. I had the means of then knowing the real opinions of some of the first men of business and ability in that country. I saw that a crisis of this nature was then taking its rise. I have, in the course of my employment in that country, seen the progressive advance of it; the whole scope therefore of my conduct, whilst I was employed, and of every opinion which I have given, whenever I have been listened to, has been to advise such modes of policy as might prevent matters coming to the point at which they are now arrived; but when I saw that such advice, neither in this country nor in America, was listened to that matters were actually come to force, and all modes of policy ceased to have effect, and were at an end, I would not become an adviser of measures of force, nor ever have been advised with in them. Yet, taking up the matter on the ground whereon it now stands, without consideration of that influence either of persons or things that have caused this effect; without looking into the conduct of various sets of men and various Ministers, with whom I never had any connection, and with whom I never shall form any; having stood, and being determined to remain unconnected with all parties; speaking my own private sentiments, looking to things and not to men, I act from my own principles. On this ground, having by my publications pledged myself to the publick, I wished to be tried and judged by those this proposition was no dishonourable concession, because, in the present condition of things, the mother country, in the moment of victory over them, would demand no more; that we are not treating with enemies, nor wishing to take any advantage of them, but only to settle a dispute between subject and subject on a lasting foundation; that it might be objected America paid enough already, but that he begged leave to remind the House that the subjects of Britain were subjected to the payment of 1,800,000 Pounds yearly to discharge the interest on the debt contracted last war, our conquests in which left them in a state of ease and security. But it may be said, will you treat with Rebels? I am not inclined to treat, but to demand: nor do I mean in the least to suspend our military operations by Sea and Land till they submit to the laws.

"Whether any Colony will come in on these terms I know not; but I am sure it is both just and humane to give them the option.

"If one consents, a link of the great chain is broken. If not, which possibly may be the case, and that they make no offer whatever, or none that we could with any propriety accept, it will convince men of justice and humanity at home, that our dispute with America was not about modes of taxation, but that they have deeper views, and mean to throw off all dependence upon this country, and to get rid of every control of the Legislature; that he hoped at least this would not lessen our unanimity at home, though he never expected to see that unanimity so much wished on a matter of this importance."

A circumstantial account of the important Debates in the American Committee on Lord North's motion of Monday, February 20, 1775.

On Sunday evening February 19, a Treasury Letter, desiring an attendance in the House for the next day, was sent to the most active persons in opposition, as well as to all those who support Ministry, as Lord North had a motion of importance to make. It is unusual to send such letters to the Members who oppose. This message, therefore, occasioned much speculation. Early on Monday it was universally given out that Lord North intended to move a conciliatory proposition, which would have a tendency to quiet the troubles that unhappily distract the British Empire.

About four o'clock Sir Charles Whitworth took the chair in the American Committee. Lord North immediately rose; and having laid open his design in a speech of rather less than an hour, concluded with the following motion:

principles, and I challenge any one to say that I have ever varied either in my principles or in my conduct. Taking, then, the matter on the ground whereon it now stands; when I see that the Americans are actually resisting that Government which is derived from the Crown, and by the authority of Parliament; when I see them opposing rights which they always acknowledged, and for asserting which I could produce the best authority, (I mean their own authority, as expressed by one of their ablest agents;) when I see them arming and arraying themselves, and carrying

"That it is the opinion of this Committee that when the Governour, Council, and Assembly, or General Court of any of his Majesty's Provinces or Colonies in America, shall propose to make provision, according to the conditions, circumstances, and situation of such Province or Colony, for contributing their proportion to the common defense, (such proportion to be raised under the authority of the General Court or General Assembly of such Province or Colony, and disposable by Parliament,) and shall engage to make provision also for the support of the Civil Government and the administration of justice in the said Province or Colony: it will be proper, if such proposal shall be approved by his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament,) and for so long as such provision shall be made accordingly, to forbear, in respect to such Province or Colony, to levy any Duty, Tax, or Assessment, or to impose any further Duty, Tax, or Assessment, except only such Duties as it may be expedient for the regulation of commerce. The nett produce of the Duties last mentioned to be carried to the account of such Province or Colony respectively."

The motion was supported by Governour Pownall, Mr. Jenkinson, Sir G. Elliot, Mr. Cornwall, and Mr. Wedderburne.

The principal arguments used by these gentlemen, and particularly by Lord North in favour of the proposition, were the following:

That in the late Address of the two Houses, a promise was given to redress the grievances of the Americans. It was, indeed, impossible to define what Parliament ought to deem a real grievance among the many factious complaints of the Americans; but as there was one point upon which they and others were most particularly clamorous, the matter of taxation, it would be proper to come to a fair and indulgent explanation on that subject; and as many new restrictions on the trade of the Americans have been already proposed, and as many more were intended in that situation, the Colonies ought fairly to know what they are to expect, and what is expected from them.

Justice and policy, he said, required, that every person under any Government should be compelled to become contributory to that Government, according to his ability, and to the further support he derives from it. This principle ought to extend to the Colonies, and to all other dependencies of this Empire, just as much as to any part of Great Britain; and the slightest relaxation of any penal or restrictive Statutes now made or hereafter to be made, in consequence of their disobedience and contumacy, ought not to be so much as listened to, until they come to Parliament and offer such contributions as that sovereign judge and legislator should decide to be their just and fair proportion towards the common defense of the whole Empire; and that this offer must be understood as the condition upon which we are to accept their allegiance.

This proposition ought not to be settled by a Congress. Such a mode could only tend to promote factious combinations in the Colonies, who, as Colonies, have no sort of relation among themselves; they are all the Colonies of Great Britain, and it is through her alone that they have any relation to each other.

At present, the quota which each Colony ought to pay, cannot be settled; but the proportions (when the Americans come to make their offers) must be adjusted upon the following standard: The wealth and population of each Colony; its advantages relatively to the other Colonies; and its proportion to the wealth and other advantages taken together with her burthens and necessities of Great Britain.

There had been much talk of the restrictions on the Colonies; but when the Goods which they take from this country, only because they are the best and cheapest, shall be deducted from the account of restriction, the Americans will have but little ground for exemption on that account; and they will be found so much on a par with the inhabitants of Great Britain, in commercial advantages, that reason and justice require they should be put on a par with regard to their contributions; and to pay (after the above deduction) full as much in taxes as the people of Great Britain. Seventy millions of debt in the last war was incurred solely on their account; and in equity the Americans ought to bear at least their fair proportion of it. The Army and Navy of England are employed for their protection in common with the rest of the Empire; they ought therefore to contribute both to the Army and Navy; and when a Fleet is sent to the East Indies, the Colonies ought to pay their share of the charges, just as well as when it is stationed on the Coast of North America: for this force being for the common benefit, the Colonies are virtually included in the protection derived from it, wherever it is employed.

As to the mode of taxation, provided the substantial supply is obtained, it is our interest to indulge the Colonies in this particular as much as we can; partly, because we may not be as knowing in the detail as the American Assemblies, and we may oppress when we meant only to tax; and partly, because it has been found almost impossible for Parliament to lay taxes there, which would produce any thing in any degree adequate to their purposes.

Lord North confessed, that he rather imagined this proposition would not be to the taste of the Americans, and would not be complied with by several of the Colonies. However, if but one of them submitted, that one link of the chain would be broken; and if so, the whole would inevitably fall to pieces. This separation would restore our Empire; and divide et impera was a maxim never held unfair or unwise in Government. If this hope should be frustrated, and that the proposition should do no good in America, it will not, however, fail in England. First. It will stand as an eternal monument of the wisdom and clemency, of the humanity and justice of British government. Secondly. It will show the Traders and Manufacturers of England, the temper and moderation of Parliament, and the obstinacy.

this opposition into force by arms; seeing the question brought to an issue, not on a point of right, but a trial of power; I cannot but say that it is become necessary that this country should arm also. It is become necessary that this Government should oppose its force to force; when that force is to be employed only in maintaining the Laws and Constitution of the Empire. These, sir, are my reasons for acquiescing (though I have neither advised, nor been advised with) in measures of force. The Americans themselves have rendered them necessary; but, sir, another and disaffection of the Americans; and will of course support them under the decay and loss of trade, and all the miseries of war. They will bear with patience all these temporary losses, when they are assured that they are incurred for the sake of a large Revenue, which is to ease them from the many and heavy taxes which at present oppress their industry. Thirdly. It will animate the Officers and Soldiers we send out to America to a vigorous and manly exertion of their native courage, without doubt or scruple, when they are assured they no longer fight for a phantom, and a vain, empty point of honest, but for a substantial benefit to their country, which is to relieve her in her greatest exigence.

That this is putting the quarrel upon a proper ground - a dispute for Revenue - a dispute to compel America to come to the relief of Great Britain. That it was no conceding proposition, but what true policy must suggest, if they had actually subdued America, and had her prostrate at their feet. That it is not to abandon the authority of Parliament, but to confirm it; it is to enforce it in the most effectual manner, and for the most essential objects - because the taxing power is, by this Resolution, in the hands of Parliament - and to be exercised merely, according to its discretion. All the vigorous measures, either by penal laws or by the military force, are to go on exactly as before, and no further relaxation whatsoever is intended. This is the ultimatum.

If it should seem to be abandoning the high ground taken in the Address, or to be contrary to the assurances so frequently given, "that no terms should be held out to America previous to its submission," this is nothing said Lord North, but what is common. The greatest Powers have done it. In the war of the succession, it was a fundamental point, that no Prince of the House of Bourbon should ever sit on the Throne of Spain. This was several times repeated, and in the most Solemn manner - such politicks are necessary to gain, or to animate allies - yet all the Powers which composed this Confederacy: yielded, and a Prince of the House of Bourbon did sit, and of the same House does now sit, on the Throne of Spain. In the Spanish war of 1739, we declared, that we would never treat with Spain until she had given up the point of search. Yet peace was made without her giving up this point and the search continues. Lord North added to these several other instances, in which great Powers had abandoned their pretensions, and disappointed the hopes they had held out to their allies.

From the LONDON GENERAL EVENING POST.

We are assured the following is Lord North's explanation of the above Resolve:

"By this Resolution of the House of Commons, America is offered all she can ask for - the security of her liberties, consistent with the safety of the state.

"The Americans grant that they are willing and ready to contribute a share to the necessary expenses of Government. Now, all that Parliament ask by this Resolution, is, that the different Assemblies would state what sums they are severally able to grant; that they are now only required to lay before the British Legislature an estimate of the proportion of taxes they will levy, according to the relation they bear to Great Britain and the rest of the Colonies.

"That when the rate or quota is once fixed, Parliament will give all the security they can ask for the establishment of their liberties, by fixed Constitution; that they will stand on a better predicament than Scotland, as they will be allowed to fix the mode and raise the taxes (by such ways and means as they shall think most agreeable and expedient) by their own Assemblies, being secured against any exorbitant demand of the British Legislature; for by this barrier, the English Commons cannot tax them much without taxing our constituent more.

"The Americans have even said their sole objection was applied to the Parliament's claim of taxing them unrepresented; that this is not given up, therefore all objections should cease of course.

"The best friends to America have always allowed the power of compelling every branch of the state to assist in bearing the common burthens, and that this power can be lodged nowhere more fitly than in the Parliament, which connects and presides over the component part of the Empire, and directs all their operations for the attainment of a common good.

"That the power will never be exerted, except when a Colony refuses to comply with and fulfil its own engagements; and it is therefore beneficial, as it is the interest of all America, that every Province be obliged to contribute its fair and just proportion."

America's best friends in Europe agree, that the Colonies ought to aid in defraying the expenses of the state. Lord Chatham proposed that this should be done by a legal Congress; Mr. Burke, and Mr. Hartley, by the old mode of requisition; but still they all agree in this, that taxes ought to be levied, and that if the Colonies refuse, they must be compelled to it.

Lord North's proposition, therefore, in this respect, stands on the same ground with the rest; but it is better on this account, that it invites the different Assemblies to propose the annual sums that they are willing and able to bear, and leaving the mode of levying to the Legislature of each Province; promising also, that the moneys arising by the Duties proposed for the regulation of trade, shall be applied to the sole use of the Province in which it was raised, and accounted in part of the sum stipulated to be contributed by it.

The Tea Act also will be repealed, if asked for.

These propositions to come from the different Assemblies in a dutiful Address.

That his Majesty does not wish to distress America, but must not lose the authority of Government.

reason which has weighed with me, as to the mode of those measures, is, that items founded in precedents, the authority of which I am sure; gentlemen that may at present disapprove them, will not reject. I refer myself to the Parliament that sat after the execution of Charles the First, when the Government was formed into a Republick; a Parliament that perfectly understood the distinction between that resistance which is justifiable, and that which is rebellion. The Colonies affecting to be the subjects of the King only, and not subordinate to the state, revolted from the Government of the state, denied the authority of Parliament, and set up a Government of their own, independent of that state and Parliament. The case is not very different from what has been affected to be stated in the present situation of things. See, then, what was the method taken by that Parliament; they made a law totally to prohibit from trade Virginia, Barbadoes, and the rest of the Colonies which were under that revolt; and as it is a precedent which has weighed with me for acquiescing in the proposition of bringing in a Bill to restrain the Colonies of New England from trade, other than to England, and from fishing, until they acknowledged the authority of Parliament; and as it contains not only a prohibitory, but a declaratory law of the right of Parliament, I will beg leave to read it: * but although I have acquiesced in those measures, my eye has always looked to peace, nor have my endeavours ever ceased to labour for it, and I seize this first moment which I cannot but hope I see some dawn of peace, to speak to it for this once more. At present, matters are come to the last extremity - this country and America are in the situation of open and declared war; they are on the very point of striking the blow which must be the beginning of shedding of blood. When two independent Nations are in that situation, they generally, amidst their friends and allies, can find some common mediator, that may at least bring them to some terms of conference, some mode of explanation, that may avert the war that is ready to commence; but where can that mediator be found that can stand forward between the subjects and the Government of a country. Who can have sufficient authority to interpose in such a case, to prevent the fatal consequences? If the country gentlemen, the landed staple interest of this country, that have never taken any share in this business, as a party, will not on this occasion stand forth, there can be no such mediator. They alone are in that predicament which will enable them (and it becomes their actual duty) to stand forth on this occasion. It is their interest also, as well as their duty; for it is their interest that is principally at stake - and I do feel myself, I own, extremely happy to see that the noble Lord who has laid the proposition on your table, although as a Minister it is his duty to support the authority of this country, and carry on such measures as his Majesty, by the advice of Parliament, has thought fit to adopt; yet, sir, I do think it is

* The law referred to by Governour Pownall, is in Scobell's Acts and Ordinances, 1650, cap. 28. "Whereas in Virginia, and in the Islands of Barbadoes, Antigua, St. Christopher's, Mevias, Montserrat, Bermudas, and divers other Islands and places in America, there hath been, and are, Colonies and Plantations which were planted at the cost and settled by the people and by authority of this Nation, which are and ought to be subordinate to, and dependent upon England; and hath, ever since the planting thereof, been, and ought to be, subject to such Laws, Orders, and Regulations as are and shall be made by the Parliament of England: and whereas divers acts of rebellion have been committed by many persons inhabiting in Barbadoes, Antigua, Bermudas, and Virginia, whereby they have most traitorously, by force and subtilty, usurped a power of government, and seized the estates of many well-affected persons into their hands, and banished others, and have set up themselves in opposition to, and distinct from this State and Commonwealth; many of their chief actors in, and promoters of these rebellions having been transported and carried over to the said Plantations in foreign Ships, without leave, license, or consent of the Parliament of England; the Parliament of England taking the premises into consideration, and finding themselves obliged to use all speedy, lawful, and just means for the suppression of the said rebellion in the said Plantations, and reducing the same to fidelity and due obedience, so as all peaceable and well-affected people who have been robbed, spoiled, imprisoned, or banished, through the said treasonable practices, may be restored to the freedom of their persons, and possession of their own lands and goods, and due punishment inflicted on the said delinquents, do declare all and every the said persons in Barbadoes, Antigua, Bermudas and Virginia, that have contrived, abetted, aided, or assisted those horrid rebellions, or have since willingly joined with them, to be notorious robbers and traitors, and such as, by the law of Nations, are not to be permitted any manner of commerce or traffick with any people whatsoever; and do forbid to all manner of persons, foreigners and others, all manner of commerce, traffick, and correspondency whatsoever to be used or held with the said rebels in the Barbadoes, Bermudas, Virginia, and Antigua, or either of them."

humane, it is nobly spirited in him, as a private Member of Parliament, as one of that candid body which will, I hope, join him to stand forth as the mediator upon this occasion, holding out such terms as may prevent a people from being driven to desperation; and may open a door to reconciliation, upon such terms as shall establish the authority of this country, and give security to the rights and liberty of America. And I own I feel extremely happy to find that they are such terms as a wise and honest man might offer, even if the success of war had put into your hands the right of enforcing every thing that you claim; for even if we go to war, this business must finally end in negotiation; and I wish the Committee would attend to what I am going to say, (for I know it to be true) that the country of America must, for the future, be governed under regulations and forms, and a Constitution that must be settled by compact. The relation between the two countries must, in its future process, stand upon the compact; or this country must hold its dominion in the Colonies by the tenure of a war that will cost more than they are worth, and finally ruin both. In whatever instance you come to regulate their trade, you will always find yourself involved in disputes, and must have a never failing source of quarrel between this country and that, until the regulations and restrictions under which the whole of the American trade is to be carried on for the future, are settled by compact; if you mean to have peace for the future, this must be done. If you mean to retain that superintending controlling power of government which you have over the Colonies, so as that it may act with effect, and yet retain them as subjects administered under government, and not subjected by force of arms, even their Constitutions must for the future be settled by compact; their Charters, which the King grants them, are not and cannot be considered as such compact; for if it was, the King making terms with any parts of his Dominions, might dismember the Empire, and set all the various parts of it together at variance and in war. Such compact, therefore, temporary as it must be in its nature, must be under the supervision and supreme control of Parliament. Parliament must necessarily have a right to interfere, and I think should so far interfere, as to examine, to settle, and to give the several Colonies, once for all, such a Constitution as is fit for such dependent communities within the Empire; by settling with them and for them such articles, terms, and conditions as may be confirmed by act of Parliament, in like manner as was done in the union of the two parts of the present Kingdom, which articles, when once confirmed by Parliament, cannot, according to the law of Nations, of justice and policy, be altered without the consent of the parties; until the Colonies, holding their Governments under the terms of dependency on the Empire, shall break those conditions, or endeavour to emancipate themselves from them.

On the point of taxation this Resolution goes to every thing that can or ought to be proposed; and is, if rightly understood, and accepted as it ought to be, a fair and just preliminary that must lead to peace. Although those spirits in America which are irritated, and in their resentments look to men rather than things, may be indisposed to receive any terms whatever, and willing to hazard all, rather than treat with men against whom those resentments are raised; and although those that take up this matter here, only as a measure of opposition, may endeavour to ridicule and obstruct every good effect which it might have; yet those men of weight and property, both here and in America, who have a real interest at stake, and not pledged to any party, but act from principle, must and will see that the line of this proposition will lead finally to such settlement, in which alone their interest can be effectually secured, and the safety of both countries be firmly and permanently established.

If the Committee will indulge me with their further patience for a moment, I will proceed to make one or two very short remarks on the tenor of the Resolution itself. The Resolution says, and says properly, that no proposition can be received by this country but what comes from the General Court or Assembly of the respective Provinces - that is the only authority, most undoubtedly, that this country can acknowledge and treat with - that is the only body that can have any authentick power remake any propositions; and although I know that those propositions cannot be any way regularly communicated to any Congress or meeting of all the Provinces; that no proposition coming from any such Congress or meeting could have authority to pledge or engage the Provinces in any propositions that may be made - yet as I do apprehend that no General Court or Assembly of any Province will listen to any matter that shall be proposed to them on this subject, or make any proposition hereupon; but as they take the tone from the opinion of that General Congress which they have of late accustomed themselves to meet in, I should hope that some how or other the propositions of this Resolution may find their way to such Congress, so as to become a matter of their attention.

The next observation which I shall make is, that by the terms of this Resolution, whatever contributions are agreed and settled, as to be raised by the Colonies, are to be raised under the appropriation of the common defence. This condition, sir, is wisely grounded and decided, for it will remove every idea of appropriating it to a matter which the Colonies most fear; it will avoid every suspicion of a misapplication to purposes for which it never was meant to be raised.

An honourable gentleman (Mr. Charles Fox) in a late debate, though he took up the idea in opposition, certainly was the first and the only one in that line of debate who hit upon the real jet of the dispute between this country and America. He very ably stated, that the reason why the Colonies objected to the laying taxes for the purpose of a Revenue in America, was that such Revenue in the hands of Government, took out of the hands of the people that were to be governed, that control which every Englishman thinks he ought to have over that Government to which his rights and interests are entrusted. The mode of appropriation specified in this Resolution takes away the ground of that opposition - for although Parliament is to have the disposal and expenditure of this Revenue, yet as the settlement proposes that the Colonies shall, by a particular revenue, make provision for the establishment of their own Government, and specifies that the general revenue which shall be raised, is for the common defence, no part of this money so raised can be applied by Parliament so as to destroy that control which they so much contend for. The misapplication of that four and a half per cent. which was raised for the publick service and common defence, to purposes totally foreign and alien to that end, has ever left in the minds of the Colonists a suspicion which has stood in the way of all propositions made for raising any general revenue; but this Resolution totally removes every ground of such suspicion, and leads to matters worthy of the attention of those who may have the carrying it into execution.

Upon these grounds it is, sir, that although the propositions contained in this Resolution may not come into direct negotiation; and although they do not contain all flint I do suppose negotiation will lead to, yet containing all that 'tis possible could be proposed in the present state of the business, I do believe that they will finally open the way to reconciliation and peace, and as such I have given my support, and do give my most hearty consent to them.

Mr. Charles Fox. I congratulate my friends, and I congratulate the publick, upon the motion which the noble Lord has now produced. He, who has been hitherto all violence and war, is now treading back his steps to peace. I congratulate my friends and the publick on those measures which have produced this effect. It is now seen what the effects are which a firm and a spirited opposition will produce; it is the opposition which has been made in this House, although ineffectual, to oppose the measures of Ministers, whilst they were pleased to be violent, yet has had that effect, that they now find it their interest and their safety to be otherwise. The noble Lord has receded from his proposition of violence - has begun (I mean if he is sincere) to listen to reason; and, if the same spirit of opposition continues to resist violence, and to support the liberties and rights of the Colonies, he will grow every day more and more reasonable. He has quoted as an authority the conduct of Nations towards each other; that, in the outset of their demands they claim more than they are willing to accept. The noble Lord has done the same, and, I dare say, will in a future day be as ready to recede from what he has now proposed, as he has now been humble enough to give up what he before so strenuously defended.

I say this upon the supposition that the noble Lord is sincere; but I cannot believe it. Besides the opposition which his Lordship found obstructing his way, he felt that even his friends and allies began to grow slack towards the vigour of his measures; he was therefore forced to look out for some propositions that might still induce them to go on with him, and that might, if possible, persuade the Americans to trust their rights to his candour and justice. What he has now proposed to you, does accordingly carry two faces on its very first appearance. To the Americans, and to those who are unwilling to proceed in the extremes of violence against them, he holds out negotiation and reconciliation. To those who have engaged with him on condition that he will support the supremacy of this country unimpaired, the proposition holds out a persuasion that he never will relax on that point; but, sir, his friends see that he is relaxing, and the Committee sees that they are all ready to withdraw from under his standard. No one in this country who is sincerely for peace, will trust the speciousness of his expressions, and the Americans will reject them with disdain.

Mr. Jenkinson. The honourable gentleman who spoke last, has, among other objections, stated that the proposition now made to you is a total change of measures, and is totally new. Sir, it is so far from a change of measures, that it makes part of those Very measures in which the House engaged itself when it presented the late Address to his Majesty. It speaks out as to what indulgence was held out and promised, and it speaks out as to the ground on which that indulgence can be granted. It lays down as a rule at the foundation, that every part of the Empire must bear its share to the common defence; and as to the mode by which the Provinces and Colonies may contribute their share, it leaves that to the very course which their principles have always claimed it ought to go in. But it does it, sir, in a way that maintains and supports the supremacy of Parliament. The terms on which this agreement is to be established, must have the sanction of Parliament; the Revenue raised must be at the disposal of Parliament. Sir, this is so far from being a proposition new at this day, that it is the very proposition which Mr. Grenville made to the Colonies the year before he brought forward the measure of the Stamp Act; and, would the Colonies at any time have come forward and proposed any measures in this line of common service, the Government of this country would, I believe, at all times have been ready to listen to them. If there be any thing new in this proposition, it is that it speaks out explicitly and definitely; and, if the Colonies reject it, it leaves them without excuse in the eyes of all mankind.

Mr. Welbore Ellis. At all times, sir, when I rise to speak in this House, I do it with a diffidence of my own opinion, but more so on the present occasion, as I am afraid I shall not only differ from my friends, but perhaps from every man in this House. I am extremely sorry to differ from the noble Lord. It is from the sincere opinion I have of his abilities and integrity, not from any fear of his power. But, sir, on the present occasion, the proposition which is now made to you, is so directly contrary to my idea of the Address, as I agreed to it, that I cannot, consistent with the opinion I then gave, accede to it. Sir, I was in hopes to find, and in any measure that I can agree to, I must expect to meet with, as the first step in the business, an express and definitive acknowledgment from the Americans, of our supremacy. Without that point first settled, I can neither receive nor consent to any other propositions. If I ask myself whether the present Resolution expresses the meaning of the Address, I certainly must answer no. If I am called upon as a gentleman, to say whether it does or not, I must, as a gentleman; upon my honour, declare that I think it does not. So far, therefore, as I have pledged my opinion in that Address, I find myself as a man of honour bound to oppose this proposition. But my mode of conceiving things can be no rule to other persons; and I own that I do not wish to impose my opinion upon any other person whatever. I wish not to influence any other person. Having therefore said thus much to explain and justify my own conduct, I think the best thing I can do is to sit down.

Mr. Adam spoke against the Resolution, upon the ground of its waiving, if it did not give up, the supremacy;

Mr. Cornwall explained the nature of the supremacy, and shewed how the measure now proposed was not only consistent with it, but the best and wisest measure, as a measure of finance. He confirmed what his right honourable relation had said as to its being no new proposition, but having been formerly made by Mr. Grenville.

Mr. T. Townshend replied to Mr. Cornwall.

Mr. Ackland. It is, sir, with the greatest diffidence I rise to deliver my sentiments on this occasion to the House. Astonished at propositions I so little expected, I rise to beg permission of the House to make the following motion: That the Chairman do leave the Chair. I am prompted to it by a conviction, that the propositions laid before the House by the noble Lord, can, on the principles of the gentlemen on the other side, produce no good consequences; on the principles of the gentlemen of this side, must produce many bad ones. Sir, I have supported Administration on every American step they have taken during the session, because I approved them; and as long as I continued to approve them I should have continued to support them. But, sir, I cannot approve this measure, and therefore beg to make the above motion.

Mr. Dundas, Solicitor General of Scotland, spoke in very strong terms, to mark the contradiction of the present measure to the Address, and to every other measure to which he had given his consent; declared that he could never accede to any concessions whatever, which he understood this to be, until the Americans did, in direct terms, acknowledge the absolute supremacy of this country; much less could he consent to such concessions, while they were in arms against it.

Sir Gilbert Elliot. The debate has taken a different turn from any that I could have conceived; and gentlemen have taken up ideas so contrary to every thing contained in the motion, that I own I cannot but wish to explain it as I understand it to be; not only as it stands in the present Resolution, but as I conceive it to be a part of a measure already entered into. The Address to his Majesty, in consequence of our considering the Papers, contained, in the sense in which I agreed to it, two correspondent lines of conduct. With force to repress those that were in rebellion; with the protection of this country to defend those who were acting under the authority of it, to establish the Government, and to enforce the laws of this country in the Colonies, was one line of that conduct. You have addressed his Majesty to enforce all those measures that were necessary to carry this into effect. You have augmented your forces both by sea and land; you have raised money for this purpose; you have proceeded to measures of restriction, and are in a way to proceed still further in that course; in the whole of which nothing is looked to but the support and establishment of the supreme authority of this country. The other line, whose direction is concurrent and concomitant with this, has been the holding out a promised indulgence to those who will do their duty towards this country. In an Address you can only state this in general and vague terms. You could not, without taking it up as a particular point of consideration, and as a particular measure, express yourselves in an explicit and definitive manner to that point. While you are going on with the one part of this united measure, will you stop short in this, to which you have pledged both your honour and humanity? Sir, so far from the measure now proposed being contradictory to, or inconsistent with the other, the plan on which you sat out at the opening of this business, would be defective, would be unjust, without it. While, therefore, you are maintaining the authority of this country, and that with measures of force, forget not your humanity and your policy. Each proposition is to me but part of one measure; and, as part of a measure which I have approved in the whole, I must give my consent to it.

Colonel Barré. How this new scheme of letting the Americans tax themselves, ever came into the noble Lord's head, I cannot conceive. Whether it be the genuine product of his own new wisdom and policy, or whether it arises from prodigious cunning; whether from advice of any new friends, or springs from the friendship of old enemies, is impossible to conceive. By what I can collect, it is not likely to gain him any new friends from this side the House; and should have thought it was going to lose him several friends from that side, had not the right honourable gentleman who spoke last risen to his aid. When that gentleman pleases to exert his eloquence, there is something so powerful, so persuading, so leading in it, that those who were in doubt become immediately convinced. His opinion, whenever explicitly given, becomes like a standard, under which even troops which have turned their backs, may be rallied and brought again to their ranks; and, notwithstanding what we may have thought some few moments ago, we shall yet see all the troops reconciled to the march they are to make. And I begin now to see, that whatever may be the various doubts, the opinions and speeches on different sides, when we come to a division, I believe the use of a standard in this House will be seen, in that there will be scarcely any difference in numbers of those who have hitherto divided on either side. But though the noble Lord's new motion will cause no new divisions amongst us here, yet it is founded on that wretched, low, shameful, abominable maxim which has predominated in every measure of our late Minister, divide et impera. This is to divide the Americans; this is to break those Associations, to dissolve that generous union in which the Americans, as one man, stand in defence of their rights and liberties. If you are so weak as to imagine, from any thing which that sincerely associated band of Ministers can find in their own hearts, you can believe that the Americans are so foolish or so base to each other, you will be deceived. They are not such gudgeons as to be caught by such a foolish bait. But the noble Lord does not expect it will be accepted; it is meant only to propose something specious, which he knows the Americans will refuse, and therefore offers to call down tenfold more vengeance on their devoted heads, rendered thus ten times more odious, by refusing such fair, such reasonable, such just, such wise, and such humane offers; but neither will this snare succeed.

Lord North. I agree, sir, that it is very probable the propositions contained in this Resolution may not be acceptable to the Americans in general. The Resolution certainly does not go to all their claims; it is, however, just, humane, and wise; and those in America who are just, who are wise, and who are serious, will, I believe, think it well worthy their attention. The gentleman has charged me with mean, low, and foolish policy, in grounding my measures on that maxim divide et impera. Is it foolish, is it mean, when a people, heated and misled by evil Councils, are running into unlawful combinations, to hold out those terms which will sift the reasonable from the unreasonable; that will distinguish those who act upon principle, from those who wish only to profit of the general confusion? If propositions that the conscientious and the prudent will accept, will at the same time recover them from under the influence and fascination of the wicked, I avow the using that principle which will thus divide the good from the bad, and give support to the friends of peace and good Government. A right honourable gentleman who always speaks and acts like a man of honour, and when he differs from his friends does it like a man of honour, thinks, that according to the sense in which he understood the Address, that the propositions now proposed by me, totally deviate and depart from it; I will beg leave to refer that gentleman to the explicit language which I held when I proposed the Address; was it not precisely, almost literally the same as what I now propose? I can even refer to my very words as being the same. I will appeal to the House as to the manner in which I explain the idea of the indulgence which the Address held out and promised; and having held out and promised such indulgence, if I had not followed it by some propositions which were open, explicit, and definitive, I might indeed have been charged with throwing out deceptions to gentlemen here, and with laying a snare for our fellow-subjects in America. Whatever may be the reception these propositions shall meet with, I feel that I have done my duty fairly and consistently.

Mr. Edmund Burke declared he came to the House this day, upon the report of a change of measures, with a full resolution of supporting any thing which might lead in any way towards conciliation; but that he found the proposition altogether insidious in its nature, and therefore purposely rendered to the last degree obscure and perplexed in its language. Instead of being at all fitted to produce peace, it was calculated to increase the disorders and confusions in America, and therefore he never could consent to it. He readily admitted that the proposition was a contradiction to every thing that Parliament had declared; a shameful prevarication in Ministers, and a mean departure from every declaration they had made. He was, however, willing to purchase peace by any humiliation of Ministers, and, by what was of more moment, even by the humiliation of Parliament. But the measure was mean indeed, yet not at all conciliatory. The mode of argument on the side of Administration, he said was the most ridiculous that ever had been known in Parliament. They attempted to prove to one side of the House, that the measure was a concession; and to the other, that it was a strong assertion of authority - just on the silly principle of the Tea Act, which to Great Britain was to be a duty of supply, to the Americans a tax of regulation. He was equally surprised, he said, by another extraordinary phenomenon. Up to this day, during the whole course of the American debates, the Ministry had daily and hourly denied their having any sort of contest about an American Revenue; that the whole was a dispute for obedience to trade laws, and to the general Legislative authority. Now they turned short, and to console our Manufacturers, and animate our Soldiers, they told them for the first time, "the dispute is put on its true footing, and the grand contest is not for empty honour, but substantial Revenue." But Manufacturers and Soldiers, said he, will not be so consoled or so animated, because the Revenue is as much an empty phantom as the honour, and the whole scheme of the Resolution is oppressive, absurd, impracticable, and what, indeed, the Ministers confess the Americans will not accept; nay, what they own America has already rejected. It is oppressive, because it was never the complaint of the Americans that the mode of taxation was not left to themselves; but that neither the amount and quantum of the grant, nor the application; was in their free choice. This was their complaint, and their complaint was just. What else is it to be taxed by Act of Parliament, in which they are not represented, but for Parliament to settle the proportion of the payment, and the application of the money? This is the purport of the present Resolution. If an Act of Parliament compelled the City of Amsterdam to raise an hundred thousand Pounds, is not Amsterdam as effectually taxed without its consent, as if duties to that amount were laid upon that City? To leave them the mode may be of some ease as to the collection; but it is nothing to the freedom of granting, in which the Colonies are so far from being relieved by this Resolution, that their condition is to be ten times worse than ever. I contend that it is a far more oppressive mode of taxing than that hitherto used; for here no determinate demand is made. The Colonies are to be held in durance by Troops, Fleets, and Armies, until singly and separately they shall do - what? Until they shall offer to contribute to a service which they cannot know, in a proportion which they cannot guess, on a standard which they are so far from being able to ascertain, that Parliament which is to hold it, has not ventured to hint what it is they expect. They are to be held prisoners of war, unless they consent to a ransom, by bidding at an auction against each other and against themselves, until the King and Parliament shall strike down the hammer, and say "enough."

This species of auction to be terminated not at the discretion of the bidder, but at the will of the sovereign power, is a kind of absurd tyranny which I challenge the Ministers to produce any example of in the practice of this or of any other Nation. The conduct the most like this method of setting the Colony Assemblies at guessing what contribution may be most agreeable to us in some future time, was the tyranny of Nebuchadnezzar, who, having forgot a dream, ordered the assemblies of his wise men, on pain of death, not only to interpret his dream, but to tell him what his dream was. To set the impracticability and absurdity of this scheme in the stronger light, I ask, in case an Assembly makes an offer which should not be thought sufficient by Parliament, is not the business to go back again to America? and so on backwards and forwards as often as the offer is displeasing to Parliament; and thus, instead of obtaining peace by this proposition, all our distractions will be increased tenfold, and continue forever. It is said, indeed, by the Minister, that this scheme will disunite the Colonies. Tricks in Government have sometimes been successful, but never when they are known, avowed, and hackneyed. The Boston Port Bill was a declared cheat, and accordingly, far from succeeding, it was the very first thing that united all the Colonies against us, from Nova Scotia to Georgia. The idea of deducting the value of Goods supposed to be taken by the Colonists, because we sold cheap, at a time when we did not suffer the Colonies to make a trial, and by such arithmetick to deduce the propriety of their paying in nearly an equal proportion with the people of England, was of a piece with the rest of the policy and the argument of this profound project. I strongly protest against any scheme which shall begin by any mode of extorting Revenue. Every benefit, natural or political, must be had in the order of things, and in its proper season. Revenue from a free people must be the consequence of peace, not the condition on which it is to be obtained. If we attempt to invert this order, we shall have neither peace nor revenue. If we are resolved to eat our grapes crude and sour, instead of obtaining nourishment from them, we shall not only set an edge on our own teeth, but on those of our posterity forever. I am therefore for the reconsideration of the Resolution, until it can be brought to some agreement with common sense.

Mr. Dunning assured the House that he had been much alarmed for the noble Lord (North) in the course of the day; for though the noble Lord had been actually five times on his legs, yet all his eloquence seemed thrown away, and his authority on the point of losing its weight. Young Members and old, nay, even the known phalanx of Ministerial supporters, seemed to totter, and it appeared to him, as if it was going to be, "to your tents, O Israel;" but in the moment of the noble Lord's distress, when all his own eloquence, all his acknowledged authority seemed lost, a gentleman of great abilities arose, (Sir G. Elliot,) but he was too wise to waste his eloquence; he did not attempt to argue, but with great good sense, he warned the party not to divide among themselves. I saw, said Mr. Dunning, the instantaneous good effect of this wholesome admonition; no wit, no argument could have had half the effect - it operated like a charm - and though I do not see well, I could discern from various faces, that the Minister was safe, and was rescued from the disgrace I had begun to apprehend for him, of being in a minority. He then shewed that the new proposition was, indeed, scandalously contradictory to all the professions of the Minister, and therefore justified the opposition of the Minister's old friend; but for his part, he opposed it, not as being conciliatory, which he wished it was, but as being futile and treacherous.

The question then being put,

The Committee divided - for the Resolution, 274, against it, 88.*

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had made a further progress in the matters to them referred; and had come to a Resolution, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received upon Friday morning next.

Sir Charles Whitworth also acquainted the House, that he was directed by the Committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for receiving the Report from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of the several Papers

* Notwithstanding the general dissatisfaction with which this motion was received by the friends of Administration, who thought their dignity not a little lowered by it, and believed the effects of conciliation or disunion proposed by it, to be very uncertain, it was thought better not to give a triumph to opposition by rejecting a proposition made by the Minister. It was thought, also, that this Resolution being susceptible of a variety of interpretations, as had appeared in the debates, such an interpretation might be hereafter adopted, as should be most suitable to their circumstances. Accordingly, though some of those, who, in the beginning, had, openly declared themselves, and could not recede, voted (on grounds totally adverse to them) with the Opposition; the rest of the Members went as usual; and the question was carried on a division, 274 to 88. - Ann. Regis.

which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st and 15th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

Ordered, That the Report be received upon Monday morning next.

MONDAY, February 27, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and 1st and 15th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command, the Resolution which the Committee had directed him to report to the House; which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is followeth: viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that when the Governour, Council, and Assembly, or General Court, of any of his Majesty's Provinces or Colonies in America, shall propose to make provision, according to the condition, circumstances, and situation of such Province or Colony, for contributing their proportion to the common d'efence, (such proportion to be raised under the authority of the General Court, or General Assembly of such Province or Colony, and disposable by Parliament,) and shall engage to make provision also for the support of the Civil Government, and the Administration of Justice, in such Province or Colony, it will be proper if such proposal shall be approved by his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, and for so long as such provision shall be made accordingly, to forbear, in respect of such Province or Colony, to levy any Duty, Tax, or Assessment, or to impose any farther Duty, Tax, or Assessment, except only such Duties as it may be expedient to continue to levy or to impose for the regulation of commerce; the nett produce of the duties last mentioned to be carried to the account of such Province or Colony respectively.

The said Resolution being read a second time,

Lord North moved that the House do agree with the Committee therein.

Mr. Scott, after condemning the whole system of Colony administration for some years back, said, that in such a state of confusion, uncertainty, and political versatility, he was for agreeing to the Resolution, as a basis to erect something on hereafter, which might be the means of producing a permanent and comprehensive plan of reconciliation.

Mr. Ackland. I hope the House will pardon me, if I beg their attention a few moments, and but for a few moments; for I should make a very ill return to the favourable indulgence shewn me on a former day, if I presumed to trouble it long on this. Uninformed, unacquainted, unexpected a proposition of so extraordinary a nature, as that laid before us by the noble Lord on that day, I felt myself forced from a seat of silence, which perhaps would then have, and might still better become me; but which I should have thought, under such circumstances, it would have been shameful to have continued. After having maturely considered the Resolution, whether on the principles of accommodation with American demands, or of enforcing the authority of this country, I think it nugatory and humiliating. Does the noble Lord really think, that a people who deny all right of taxation, will be satisfied with having the mode of taxation left to them? Does he not think the Americans will feel themselves as effectually put under contribution as any town or country ever yet was, in any state of open war? Will he presume to call that an amicable plan, which asks for contribution at the mouth of your cannon and point of your bayonets? Sir, by holding out these terms of accommodation, ridiculous in themselves, and nugatory in their effect, by making the first offer to treat with those men you have just declared rebels, you will lower the dignity of this country; you will bring your Government into contempt, and, by the insult of the offer, irritate, not appease, that spirit which you are now about publicly to declare to the whole world, you tremble to encounter. This, sir, I am confident, is the light the Americans will see it in; and these are the principles on which they are expected to accommodate.

Before I give my assent to any measure, I ought to inform myself what is meant to be founded on that measure, and what consequences are meant to be drawn from it; for, by these means alone I can judge of the propriety or impropriety of the measure. I do not doubt, therefore, that the noble Lord will answer me with as much candour, as I shall ask with diffidence. Now, the words I would wish to draw the attention of the House to, are these: "according to the condition, circumstances, and situation "of such Province for contributing their proportion, shall "be approved." Sir, the questions I would ask, are, is this proportion to be annually offered by the Colonies, and annually refused or accepted by Parliament? Or is it in the first instance to be settled for a certain period of years, or is it to be settled forever? These questions demand a serious answer; in the first case, you perpetuate the seeds of discord, and lay the foundation of a dispute that can never end, but in a total convulsion of the British Empire. In the second, adopting a temporary expedient, you withdraw your own shoulders from a burthen you have no resolution to bear, leaving the great point in dispute as unsettled as you found it, leaving it to arise at that fixed period whenever that period shall arrive, to be the cause of new quarrels, and fresh bloodshed. If you settle it forever, do consider what a miserable bargain you are contending for. The Americans are supposed to double in twenty years, it is but reasonable to suppose, that their wealth and opulence will increase in proportion; that, therefore, what would be a reasonable proportion now, will, in a few years, become comparatively with their increased wealth, a miserable pittance.

I must here take notice of an argument the noble Lord has enforced more than once with great weight; it is, that these terms are such as should be offered, after the most complete victory. For the sake of the argument, I will agree with the noble Lord, and therefore conclude, that they are improper to offer before the victory. That, sir, which is generosity, which is magnanimity after victory, is timidity and foul disgrace before it. There may be situations in which states may as he found, where they cannot, without certain ruin, acquiesce even in just claims; there are situations too, in which states may grant more than is asked, and give more than is desired, with honour, security and advantage. The first of these situations precede great commotions; the second succeed complete victory. I remember, sir, the Romans, in a war they had with the Italian states, granted them when conquered, those privileges which, with a firmness peculiar to their Nation, with a firmness that led them to universal empire, they haughtily refused them before their contest.

I will not take upon me to say what confidence the people reposed in Administration before, but I will take upon me to say, that whatever it might be, it is now entirely done away; they no longer expect to find firmness, resolution, and unanimity in the Councils of the King's servants; that they have seen them weak, irresolute, disunanimous. For the reception these propositions met within these walls, I will appeal to the unequivocal effects they had at their first opening, on the Members of this House. I will recall to the noble Lord's memory, the feelings he must have had during those awful moments in which the common sense of the House stood amazed at the propositions that were held out to her, when uncertainty, surprise, distraction, were seated on every countenance, when the doctrine held out to us, was so new and unheard of, so contrary to every principle we had been thought to adopt, that no man could guess at the opinion of his neighbour, when those, who had relied on that firmness, which the noble Lord had so often and so publicly pledged, turned pale with shame and disappointment, when within the space of a few awful moments, the dignity of Government and the honour of this country, were given up forever. That this was the immediate effect, I believe every gentleman who hears me, and was present on that very extraordinary day, must admit. I have expressed myself warmly. I felt, and do still feel my disappointment warmly. I estimated the noble Lord's publick wisdom, prudence, and above all, his political resolution, at as high a rate as I honoured, and do still honour, those private virtues which adorn his character, and which shine illustriously pure amidst a licentious and a dissipated age.

I will address a few words to the honourable Lord, and have done; I will tell him that decision and resolution, even when employed to but indifferent purposes, render their possessor respectable; I will speak with tenderness, I will not tell the noble Lord what effect, even with the best intentions, the contrary qualities will have. I will conclude with telling the noble Lord that if he adopts a decided line of conduct, he will have decided friends, and he may still stand on firm ground; but that if he continues to waver between both he will fall to the ground unsupported by either.

Mr. Temple Luttrell. Sir, upon a former occasion I presumed to state a few of my sentiments to the House, relative to the war impending over the Americans, because I was sure I could not answer it to my own feelings, I thought I could not answer it to my country, had I neglected, at the very earliest moment that might offer, to declare my utter abhorrence of those unconstitutional, arbitrary, and diabolical projects devised by his Majesty's Ministers for the destruction of that unhappy people. I flatter myself a certain illustrious character may soon be left out of this opprobrious list of projectors; there seems to be a divine gleam of radiance coming round his temples; and I foresee almost, if not altogether, as marvellous a conversion into the right path as that which happened in days of yore, to the great persecutor of the Christian followers on the plains of Damascus.

To what black storm in the political firmament we are indebted for this sudden change, I, sir, move in too contracted a sphere to discover; but the noble Lord will allow me to tender him my hearty congratulations, that he is at length awakening to that clemency, and to that justice, which will best agree with the innate temper of his heart. There is a long line of statesmen seated in firm array not far from your chair, who have, ever since the birth of this Parliament, uniformly shrunk (and I am sure their consciences always must shrink, whatsoever their politicks or their eloquence may do) from the great American question; they have wished to defer, to the latest hour possible, all discussion of this critical topick, in hopes, as they term it, to learn what is actually doing on the other side of the Atlantic. Sir, I can inform them; there rises not a sun in that hemisphere, but sets to such additional grievances and outcries as the most soothing future concessions, the most exemplary future sacrifices on your part, will scarce be able to atone for.

However grating to the ears of some individuals the subject may be, I shall take the liberty, with the indulgence of the House, to affirm, that these measures of compelling the Americans, by force of arms, to acknowledge the paramount and unlimited authority of Parliament, in the taxation of their property - a property created by their faculties, and by their industry, are not just, not politick, not practicable, but a traitorous infringement on the Constitution of the Colonies, which rests upon the same fundamental principles that uphold the property and uphold the franchises of every native of this Island.

Sir, I ever will contend that the united Parliaments of England and Scotland cannot legally impose a tax on the subjects of any other part of the British Dominions, without the consent of such subjects, either by themselves in person, or by their Representatives. Let the champions of Despotism avail themselves of all their knowledge and sophistry, I will venture to maintain this proposition, not arrogantly presuming on my talents or skill to manage it, but on its own clear intrinsick merits, and the conviction that, to every dispassionate mind, must naturally result from its investigation. The coercion proposed militates against the privileges of all emigrants of their description, from the time of the Patriarchal disjunctions to this day; emigrants who carried with them (as their penates) certain inherent rights natural to mankind - immutable and unalienable: confirmed to them for an heritage by that blessed Constitution of Saxon contexture under which they were born. Laws established on first necessity and impotence between them and the present state, either by express or tacit assent, were not of an universal, indefinite obligation, they were of a fiduciary nature, adapted to the comparative state of the contracting parties, for the purpose of temporary expedience, and must, of course, vary conformably to such other relative alterations as lapse of time and the vicissitude of human affairs may affect. Acts of Parliaments, or other diplomattick titles, may be produced to shew a formal, and perhaps uncontested assumption of power at some given period of time, but will not countervail the primeval and indefeisible rights of mankind, whenever such rights shall be asserted by a clear major part of the community. On this ground, and this ground only, rests our spiritual reform under Harry the Eighth, and that most glorious of all civil Revolutions - the Revolution by which James the Second lost the throne of these Realms. Those gentlemen who plead for the omnipotence of Parliaments, and the infallibility of their codes, should advert to the many absurd, contradictory positions and doctrines laid down during the contention of the several pretenders of the Plantagenet line, and afterwards of the heiresses of the House of Tudor.

In fact, sir, your Statutes of those days borrowed too frequently their maxims and complexion from whatsoever brow might happen to be encircled with the regal diadem. In the reign of Richard the Second, a law passed to transfer the power of both Houses of Parliament to twelve Barons. By an Act under one of the Henries, the King's Proclamation, with the consent of his Privy Council, was then-forward to carry with it the force and efficacy of a law of the land. And we all know that the Parliament of 1641 voted itself perpetual, never to be dissolved nor prorogued but by its own consent: and the Act read by an honourable Member to the Committee on the present Resolution, and which he treated with so much deference, because it declared the people of the Massachusetts Bay in a state of revolt, was passed by this immaculate Parliament.

Now, sir, let us suppose (what in these our uncorrupt days there can be no reason to apprehend) that a Statute should be procured by some future Minister and minion of the Sovereign, vesting the whole Legislative as well as Executive power in the Crown, totally to abolish both Houses of Parliament; would such Statute be valid and binding on the subject throughout Great Britain and America? All persons have natural rights - a free people have legal rights, independent of Parliamentary edicts, and of which no form of Government whatever can deprive them. Laws not founded on constitutional justice are, in themselves null and void; nor are the makers of them legislators, but usurpers. A very wise and learned writer, Judge Blackstone, has in his Commentaries the following passage: "If the sovereign power advance with gigantick strides and threaten desolation to a State, mankind will not be reason'd out of the feelings of humanity, nor will sacrifice their liberty by a scrupulous adherence to those political maxims which were originally established to preserve that liberty."

If the powers and pretensions of a few adventurers and fugitives, occupying, about two centuries ago, a small corner of a graceless desert, and possessed of none of the good things of this life, are to ascertain the powers and pretensions of three millions of people, spread over a land flowing with milk and honey, and a thousand leagues in circumference, they may, with the same justice and propriety, be brought two centuries hence to ascertain the rights and pretensions of thirty millions, when the inhabitants of this diminutive Isle shall scarce reach a fourth part of that number; neither can I own such disparity in the calculation of increase to be at all exaggerated, if we consider the various drains from this country, and the daily influx of persons of both sexes at the very meridian of life into these inviting regions; besides, new settlers usually restrict themselves to hunting and agriculture - to toils which afford vigour to the body and enterprise to the mind. They live on plain, wholesome diet; their progeny is healthful, and of boundless increase; whereas, in Nations that have reached their full zenith of luxury, the mass of the people are occupied at sedentary arts and manufactures, drawing in, from morn to eve, an impure, confined atmosphere, or brooding over Unwholesome furnaces; hence the vital stamina are hurt, the appetites soon appaled, the spirits easily depressed; they become enfeebled ere the sand of their mortal glass be half ran out; their offspring is sapless and emasculate.

America has been loudly charged with ingratitude towards the parent country, from whom she received protection during the late conflict of war. 'Tis not quite clear how far the balance of that account is in her disfavour;

however, she cannot be so ignorant of the real springs of war or peace, as to persuade herself that your numerous embattled Legions, under triumphant Fleets sent to her Coasts, were supplied purely from motives of parental affection or sympathetick benevolence. Had, sir, that vast territory been planted with Portuguese scions, instead of those from your own stock, ponderating as the political scales of Europe then were, would you not have afforded to a people, in their natural and moral character, as far from unison with yourselves as discord is from harmony, an equal supply of men and treasure? Remember, sir, your prowess at the eve of that same war, near the banks of the Tagus.

The love or enmity of one people to another cannot be estimated by their occasional alliances, compacts, or guarantees, as a body politick. It is but a century ago that our English Brigades served with unparalleled ardour in the Army of that arch enemy to civil and religious liberty, Lewis the Fourteenth of France; the execrated revocator of the edict of Nantz; the aspirer to universal despotism. We served, sir, against a people whose tolerance and charity of religion, whose whole system and freedom of government we at that very time held in emulative veneration; a people whose assistance we supplicated and obtained scarce twenty years after, to deliver us from monarchical tyranny.

Such coercion was highly impolitick, because it is from the prosperity, peace, and contentment of her Colonies, that resources of wealth and laurels of honour are won to a mother country. History teaches us that populousness and affluence are the product of that clime alone where the people may reap in security a full harvest of their labour; where they have affluence in their leaders and governours; where no exactions are inflicted by an alien hand; where the municipal, if not the imperial jurisdiction, together with the power of levying taxes, are vested in substitutes of their own free choice or approbation.

That saying of a despot, "Oderint dum metuant," may be applicable to the swarthy sons of the opposite division of the globe; but, sir, it will never accord with the sentiments of our brethren in America. Threats and violence used against hearts of the same sturdy temper with your own, must induce the most calamitous events to both parties. There will be seeds of equal courage and perseverance found in the one battle as in the other, with this difference at the onset, that the arm of the aggrieved is usually braced to bolder, more decisive efforts of rage and despair, than that of the aggressor: "Aquilæ non generant Columbus." Let us, sir, rather rejoice that our breed has not degenerated; that these Colonists have a sense of rational freedom becoming the sons of such high-minded progenitors. Ill would it answer your purpose to bring their bodies under a short-lived subjection, and to leave impressed upon their minds an unabated rancour and aptness for revolt. Revenge is an unchristian passion; yet how rarely do we find the human soul possessed of a sublimer heroism, without this alloy.

Neither, sir, am I altogether unacquainted with the people of whom I am now speaking. Curiosity once led me to travel many hundreds of miles along their flourishing and hospitable Provinces. I found in most of them the Spartan temperance, in many the urbanity of Athens; and, notwithstanding the base and groundless imputations on their spirit, which the cankered tongue of prejudice and slander has with so licentious a virulence here poured forth against them, they will, I am confident, if set to the proof, evince the Roman magnanimity, ere Rome fell under seep-tered usurpation. But, sir, if a foreign enemy should appear at your gates, and you need their assistance, will there then be found among them many a Coriolanus? He stands single as the prodigy of forgiveness, in the annals of a people whose attachment to their native land was carried to the utmost height of enthusiasm. How soon that foreign enemy may appear at your gates, I know not. According to the horological predictions of a most enlightened state soothsayer, we have about seven years more of profound tranquillity with the House of Bourbon to trust to; but, from the symptoms of our domestick distraction, and the improved state of the government and finances of our neighbours, I should judge it prudent to be somewhat better provided than we are at present for an early rupture; not entirely to dismantle our Ports and our Coasts of soldiers and seamen, sent to immolate the martyrs to liberty of their own flesh and blood, on the distant Continent of America.

It has been made evident to you that a defection of the Northern Colonies will soon bring on the complete ruin of your West India settlements, which cannot elsewhere affordably provide themselves with Cattle, Lumber, and divers other articles requisite for the support of a Plantation.

Let us turn our eyes to the inland trading Towns here at home; those large iron founderies which used to supply the anchors of commerce and implements for husbandry and the ingenious arts, are now set at work in moulding the sword and the bayonet to enslave America. From the former commissions there accrued constant returns of profit, and numberless comforts; from the latter, what can be expected but poverty, dejection, and mourning? Peace with America will make your thousands of Manufacturers and Artisans a thriving, obedient people; war with America will make them idle, profligate, and tumultuary. In short, the first open hostilities committed by your Troops on that Continent, will realize to the race of man, from one extremity of the earth to the other, more fatal evils than were even contained in the fabled box of Pandora.

It is well known, through melancholy observation drawn from the fate of the Assyrian, Persian, and Roman Empires, that national societies, as well as the individual mortals of whom those societies are composed, have their non-age, their adult vigour, and their decline. Whatsoever share of indulgence and independency Great Britain shall, "in this her florid and athletick stage, generously bestow on her rising Colonies, they will, no doubt, amply repay to her in some future generation, when she is verging towards that awful goal which must close her race of glory.

The military coercion of America will be impracticable. What has been the late of your famous Bills passed in the last session of the deceased Parliament? I mean, sir, the Boston Port Bill, and the Bill for altering the Charter of Massachusetts Bay. America, as an earnest of her triumph over the future labours for which envy and malice may reserve her, has, like another Hercules in the cradle, already grappled with those two serpents sent for her destruction. Neither shall we be long able to sustain the unhallowed war at so remote a distance; unexplored deserts, wood-land ambuscades, latitudes to which few of our soldiery have been seasoned; - the Southern Provinces scarce to be endured in the summer months, the Northern Provinces not approachable in the winter season; - shipwrecks, pestilence, famine. The unrelenting inveteracy and carnage of York and Lancaster, will here be joined to all the elementary hardships and maladies of a bigot crusade. Shall not such dreadful eras in our earlier chronicle, serve us for beacons at this perilous crisis? Those rash expeditions, indeed, undertaken by a few martial zealots on misconceived piety, began to decline at the death of the hot-brained, savage-hearted King, under whom they were first enterprised; and the sluices of kindred blood which had long inundated the land in the red and white roses, were at length happily put a stop to, by a single matrimonial contract. Now, sir, who can look forward to a probable epoch in the red volume of time, when the sword drawn in this quarrel shall be sheathed in peace! I can see no end, till slaughter, proscription, extirpation, shall totally have annihilated either one or the other people.

Far be it from me to anticipate by conjecture to either country so dreadful a sentence; but, sir, without a gift of preternatural foresight, I may remark, that there are features in the aspect of infant America which denote, at maturer years, a most colossal force. the Helvetick and Flemish Confederacies have demonstrated what extraordinary obstacles a small band of insurgents may surmount in the cause of liberty. The Helvetick Confederacy consisted of a few straggling peasants, bannered against a mighty Prince; yet, firmness and desperation supplied that energy, which the best disciplined numbers could not resist. The tragick scenes of Numantia, and of Saguntum, show to how dire a catastrophe a spirited people will devote themselves, sooner than submit to an unjust dominion. It appears from one of the American letters of a late date, brought to your table, that the inhabitants of Boston were inclined to copy, in part, these dire examples; that they meditated to abandon the Town with their wives and families, and the reducing it to ashes. Did not we ourselves give a very striking proof, at the commencement of the twelfth century, to what an incendiary height the flame of vengeance might reach, when we invited over, and received into the very centre of this Island, a whole army of Frenchmen to aid us against a tyrant Monarch and his iniquitous Counsellors? We owe, perhaps, that sacred palladium of our liberty, Magna Charta, as much to a Dauphin of France, as to a King of England.

The Americans allege that what they now contend for is that reasonable portion of liberty with which they were chartered as their birthright not by any earthly potentate, but by the King of kings, "to make their lives happy in "the possession of which liberty, they do now hourly invoke that King of kings, or to make their death glorious "in its just defence."

What is the aim and scope of the Resolution before you? To lure some of the less refractory Provinces of America to dissociate from, and betray their fellow-sufferers; to join in raising a contribution throughout one half of the Colonies, to support your armaments and outrages against the other half, with a view to annihilate trade, cut off every natural channel of livelihood and subsistence, and butcher the disobedient; and how are these seceders to be recompensed for such signal perfidy? Why, by a temporary exercise of certain empty forms and modes of taxation, confirming at the same time a right in the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain to fix the gross amount of all Continental subsidies whatsoever; that is, in fact, they are to be still subject to a Ministerial majority in this House, which may levy imposts on them, not by any fair scale of proportion to the burthen laid on the mother country, but the demand may perhaps be carried beyond their abilities, or they may be liable to the discharge of an immense national debt. By way of earnest, however, against the numerous abuses in future, to which this curious plan lies open, they shall instantly repose entire faith and confidence in the present set of the King's Ministers at Westminster, so remarkable for consistency, lenity, and wisdom.

The noble Lord puts me in mind of King Arthur, in our modern dramattick mask, where that first of the British worthies stands balancing between Grimbald and Philadel. He has just caught a glimpse of the cloven foot of the infernal fiend, by whose dazzling snares and incantations he has been thus long fascinated, and is turning to the fair, heavenly spirit, who would guide him into the ways of happiness and honour. Let him not stop short, but pursue the only track that can save his country - perhaps save himself from perdition.

I should be as strenuous an advocate for the just authority of Parliament as any man; but I think we ought candidly and effectually to relinquish all vain pretences to supreme sovereignty, in cases where they are not maintainable on principles of justice, of sound policy, or the Constitution of the land. If you persist in pride and error, what will be the consequence? Intestine enmities will be increased - devastation and havock must ensue. When questions of such weight and magnitude as these now in agitation concerning America, shall come before you, every Member ought to reflect, that the fate of a whole Nation may possibly depend on his single vote. Whosoever gives the power of oppression, is in fact a tyrant; whosoever gives the power of murder, is in fact an assassin. I am against this Resolution, because I think that so far from extinguishing the flame, it will only throw oil upon it to aggravate its fury; and, however conciliatory it may seem at first sight, when it comes to be analyzed on the other side of the water, it cannot possibly have any other construction put upon it, than that of adding insult to injury.

Sir P. J. Clerke said he should not be surprised, such was the fluctuating state of our counsels, to see another Resolution proposed in a few days, totally contradicting the present, and those persons who are most zealous in support of this Resolution, equally warm in support of the next.

Mr. Hartley. I am called upon on this occasion, particularly as I made a conciliatory proposition on this subject of the American disputes to the House before Christmas, which I shall, at a proper time, offer to the House as a regular motion. The proposition alluded to, was to make a free requisition to the Colonies for a supply towards the expense of defending, protecting, and securing the Colonies. The present motion is not free but compulsory; it is attended with menaces and threats, therefore not a lenient or conciliatory measure, but only thrown out as such for a pretext. To say, give me as much money as I wish, till I say enough, or I will take it from you, and then to call such a proposition conciliatory for peace, is insult added to oppression. The proposition which I made before Christmas, was what it appeared, a free requisition. A requisition by a Secretary of State, is an ancient, legal, approved, constitutional way. It states the case, represents the services necessary to be done, and requires the free aid of the subject for those necessary services, leaving, as a constitutional control, to the subject whose money is required, the judgment upon the necessity of the services stated, and the right of appropriating the money so granted. How totally different from this proposition, is that before us now, which says neither more nor less than this: Give me what I ask, leaving likewise the quantity to my discretion, or I will take it by force. Besides, this proposition is a direct breach of faith towards America, who have been assured by a circular letter from the Secretary of State, that his Majesty's Ministers never meant, nor ever would entertain the thought of raising a Revenue in America by taxing. This proposition before us is a direct breach of the publick faith so pledged to America, by a circular letter from a Secretary of State, in which his Majesty's royal word was particularly plighted. The noble Lord's proposition, who was upon the same bench when the above mentioned circular letter was written, is that we will forbear to tax just so long as they will give us a Revenue to our content. What is this if it be not extorting a Revenue by threats of taxing? The only concession contained in this proposition is, that it gives up at once the mode of our proceedings with Mine. rica for these last ten years, as it confesses that it would be proper to proceed in the way of requisitions. This proposition pretends to condemn the exercise of taxation before you have made a requisition at least, and have met with a refusal, though by uniting them in the same proposition, it destroys the very nature of the requisition, by making it compulsory.

Let us inquire now, whether ever North America did refuse to contribute to the common defence, upon requisition; so far from it, that they ever have contributed in case of necessity, even beyond their abilities, as the records of thanks to them, and retribution for the excess of the zeal and fidelity, which stand annually upon your Journals, during the late war, do fully and incontestibly prove. Throughout the whole course of this contest since the war, they have over and over offered to contribute to the necessary supply when called upon in a constitutional way. I have extracted proofs of these from Addresses, Petitions, &c., for the whole period of the last ten years. Their Petitions you have thrown out of your doors, their repeated Addresses, Remonstrances, Letters, and Memorials, you have treated with contempt. I have now in my hand a score of proofs that they have offered to pay upon requisition,, according to the utmost of their abilities, if those requisitions were made in a legal and constitutional way. I have collected offers of this kind, and I have got them from, I think, almost every Colony. I Can shew them repeatedly from Massachusetts Bay, from New-York, New-Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Carolina, and these repeated from time to time during the whole of this contest. I have them in my hand, and will beg to read them to the House. [Reads them.] And to conclude the whole, North America assembled at the Continental Congress, pledge themselves, "that whenever the exigencies "of the state shall require a supply, they will as they have "always heretofore done, contribute their full proportion "of men and money." The terms in which all these offers are expressed, are clear, uniform, and explicit. All that they require is, that they may stand upon the footing of freemen and free British subjects, and giving and granting their own money. For these reasons I object to the motion before us, and shall, with the permission of the House, endeavour to put the proposition upon its proper grounds, by another motion on some future day.

Mr. Thomas Powys wanted to know the sum each Col-any was to raise, the manner it was to be appropriated, and whether it was to be granted annually, or for a definite number of years.

Lord North was for preserving the right of Parliament to tax the Colonies; but for transferring the exercise of that right to the Colony Assemblies. He was for leaving the Colonies at liberty to contribute voluntarily to the alleviating the publick burthens, and for reserving to Parliament a right of rejecting or increasing those voluntary aids at pleasure. Among other things, he said, if the Colonies reject just conditions, they must be reduced to unconditional obedience; that such of the Colonies as did not comply with the Resolution, would have the Acts rigidly enforced against them; that he did not nor could, at present, pretend to specify the exact sum they ought to raise, as it would probably fluctuate by bearing a certain proportion to the sums raised in Great Britain; and that whatever propositions they might make, would be received in a legal way from an assembly lawfully and properly constituted, in order to be laid before Parliament for their final approbation. In answer to the honourable gentleman who asked whether the grant was to be an annual one, or for a term of years, he replied he could not tell; but for his part he should wish it to be the latter, otherwise it would return to interrupt the publick business every session, and consequently be a perpetual subject of discussion and disagreement.

Mr. T. Townshend said, that the House was at a loss even so much as to conjecture what were the intentions of Administration, or what the present Resolution pointed at; that nothing hitherto offered by the noble Lord, had in the least degree operated towards the alteration of his sentiments. He thought the Resolution impracticable, whether it meant to enforce obedience, or effect reconciliation.

Sir Richard Sutton said the objects to which the Resolution was directed, were very apparent.

Mr. Charles Turner cited some of the most objectionable parts of the American Bills of last session, and said that they were the most tyrannical and oppressive that were ever passed.

Mr. Hans Stanley said, that some time before the late Address of both Houses to his Majesty, this proposal was talked of and approved by several persons of very high rank in business, Instructions as to the sums to be raised must undoubtedly be confined to people in confidence. He then proceeded to distinguish between the acts of a Congress, and an assembly legally and constitutionally convened, and grounded the whole weight of his argument on that distinction, shewing that it might be extremely proper to agree to propositions made by one, while it would be madness so much as to treat with the other.

Mr. Alderman Sawbridge was very pointed on some of the expressions which fell from the last honourable Member, relative to those who appeared the partisans of America. He owned himself of that number, and gloried in the imputation.

General Burgoyne. Sir, from the time I have been under orders to serve in America, I have thought it an unbecoming part to give my voice as a judge in any American question, this upon your paper only excepted. But having taken some share in the debates of last year, which have been misrepresented, and having appeared in some divisions this year, before I had any knowledge or suspicion of my destination, I anxiously wish to take this occasion to explain the motives upon which I have invariably acted; and notwithstanding the exhausted state of the debate, I rise with confidence in the House, that they will give that indulgence to my situation, which I should have little claim to upon any other pretensions.

Sir, I think an explanation the more necessary, because both without doors and within, allusions and references are making continually to the sentiments of those who are to act in the military department - a very important, but very unenviable lot. In some of the licentious prints of the times, there have not been wanting suggestions to the publick, that a sanguinary Minister had chosen the Generals best fitted by their inclinations to carry havock and destruction through the Continent of America. Within these walls we have been treated very differently indeed; we have found an attention, a respect, a favour of opinion and of expression, that has imprinted upon my mind, and I am persuaded equally upon the minds of my colleagues, a sincere satisfaction and a deep sense of gratitude to gentlemen on all sides of the House. But still, sir, I have observed through the course of the debate an opinion to prevail, that a great latitude of orders is to be given, and that in acting under such latitude, we shall be influenced by the speeches we hear in this place, some of which are supposed to convey the most inflammatory ideas, others, ideas of the most humiliating concession. I do not know, sir, that any such latitude will be given, at least it will hardly extend to my inferiour station. The utmost merit I shall be able to claim in this expedition, will probably be that of an attentive, an assiduous, circumscribed obedience. But I can speak with confidence of those under whom I am to leave this country, as well as of the high and respectable officer who now commands in America; such men will not want the oratory of this House to give a due tone to their spirit or their humanity.

A noble sentiment fell from an honourable gentleman in my eye, (Colonel Barré) "that bravery and compassion were associate virtues;" may they remain blended on the minds of every military man in America; let a persuasion uniformly prevail, that upon a review of our conduct hereafter, by our dispassionate and impartial countrymen, our bravery will be judged by the test of our compassion, Should we inevitably be made the instruments of punishment, let every action of the unhappy conflict be directed and marked by that temper which ever ought to discriminate the correction of the state from the sudden and impetuous impulse of passion and revenge; but with these principles at the heart of every soldier, and these they will be; for there is a charm in the very wanderings and dreams of liberty, that disarms an Englishman's anger; with these principles at the heart, care must be taken that the honour, the ascendancy, the impression of the British arms be not insulted or diminished in the hands of those to whom they are entrusted; and while we remember we are contending against fellow-subjects and brothers, it must not be forgot we are contending in the crisis, and for the fate of the British Empire.

An honourable young Member, (Mr. Ackland) who has entered into the Army with a zeal that justly entitles him to the esteem of every officer, and whose Parliamentary spirit and talents have this day proved him a most valuable acquisition to this House, asked, early in the debate, whether it could be supposed those Americans who denied the authority of British Legislature, would accept the mode of taxation proposed by these Resolutions? I believe they will not; and I differ with him so far upon this occasion, as to say I do not like the Resolution the worse upon that account. While it holds out conciliation to those who wish to return to obedience and fidelity, and must be accepted by all rational men and well intentioned subjects, the refusal of it will be as explicitly and decisively declaratory, as any manifesto could express, of the principles on which they act, who continue to resist, and it puts the dispute on clear ground.

Sir, in foreign wars, the conscience of the quarrel belongs to the state alone. The soldier draws his sword with alacrity; the cause in which he engages rests between God and his Prince, and he wants no other excitements to his duty, than such as the glory of his country, personal honour, and just ambition will suggest. In civil discord, (without inquiring casuistically, whether in any, or in what possible case, a military servant of the Crown can be justified in declining a service to which he is legally commanded,) I believe a consideration of the cause will find its way to the breast of every conscientious man; and in the execution of his duty, he will find sorrow and remorse on one side, or satisfaction and inward comfort on the other, according to the private judgment he entertains. I perceive gentlemen on every side of the House acknowledge the truth of this general observation. Sir, I shall be astonished if any gentleman denies the particular application of it. Is there a man in England, (I am confident there is not an officer or soldier in the King's service) who does not think the Parliamentary rights of Great Britain a cause to fight for, to bleed and die for? Sir, I will assert that the professed advocates of America have never ventured to meet this argument fairly. They have always shifted it to collateral inquiries, accusation, recrimination, and examination of the measures by which we have been led into our present dilemma. Sir, past errors may be great and manifest; every Administration for ten years past may have had their share. It is not my present purpose to justify any. Inquiries may be very proper, at a proper time; but as a Member of Parliament, I hold myself indispensably called upon to take up the question upon this important, now this unparalleled moment in the English history, when we tamely suffered Government to be suspended, when we sit here the mere shadow of authority, the phantom of a Parliament, assembling only to lament the substance we have lost, and to propose and subtilize questions of our own impotency.

Sir, another method of evading a debate upon the true merits of this question, has been, to confound the understanding. Ingenious men will run changes upon real and virtual representation, external and internal taxes, revenue and regulation, till one's head grows dizzy with distinctions, and the most gross absurdities and contradictions become, for a moment, specious. But it is not in rhetoric or sophistry to argue the great rational majority of the people of England out of the plain, simple proposition which is contained in the Declaratory Act of the sixth of the present King. The reason of the Nation has been long convinced; the trial now only is, whether we have spirit to rapport our conviction.

Sir, if the whole body of the Kingdom does not rouse at this alarm, and shake off that torpidity under which our publick spirit has long shamefully languished; if every class and distinction of men do not join in this great cause; if our Merchants and Manufacturers do not in one instance take example from the Americans, and render it glorious by adapting it to a better cause; if they do not feel insult and affront in the suspicion, that while one country dares the interruption of commerce to effectuate her chimerical claims, the other will not exert equal fortitude to vindicate her fundamental rights; if this be our wretched state, I agree that the sooner a formal surrender is made, the better; let Great Britain revert to her primitive insignificance in the map of the world, and the Congress of Philadelphia be the Legislature to dispense the blessings of empire. Let us spare the blood of our subjects, let us spare the treasures of the state; but let us at the same time confess we are no more a people.

Sir, after this avowal of my principles, it might be thought that I sought the situation in which I am going to be employed. I publicly declare I did not seek it. I will take leave to say, on the part of my colleagues, it was sought by none of us, but it was accepted with that submission which is due from servants of the crown, and with that sense of gratitude to his Majesty which the importance of the trust required. I feel an additional call of gratitude on my own part for the honour my name receives in being classed with those of the distinguished officers to whom I have alluded.

I will trespass no longer upon the time of the House. With the sentiments I have expressed, I take leave of all American questions; with these sentiments I shall take leave of my country; I shall endeavour to maintain them in arguments, if admitted to any intercourse in America. I shall enforce them to the best of my power, if called upon to act in the line of my profession, conscientiously convinced that upon the due support of them both here and on the other side the Atlantic, the existence of this country and Constitution directly, emphatically, and conclusively depends.

Governour Johnstone replied to several things which dropped from the noble Lord. He said that, on a former occasion, Parliament had charged the East India Company with eleven millions for Ships, Forces, &c., sent to their assistance, but owned afterwards it was not so much; and he doubted not but that several of the millions now so roundly charged to the account of America, would be discovered to be no better founded, though we even brought the expenses of the present formidable Armament to account. He supposed, if America consented to the grants now proposed, that they would in time be managed as the Irish are, and that douceurs out of the sums raised would be distributed with equal success among the Colonists, and what could not be effected one way would be carried another: blue ribbons, red ribbons, Lords and Knights, would bring about great things. The Minister well understood to put this House in good humour at all times; and he supposed in time that he would cause this good humour to reach the other side of the Atlantic, though he had hitherto failed in his attempts. He concluded by observing, that there had been no precedent for our obliging the Colonies to raise taxes, but the Romans, who plundered those who were under their dominion, and brought the plunder to Rome, which was in the end the cause of the destruction of that once glorious and powerful Empire.

The question was then taken, and the Resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1775.

The Lord North acquainted the House, that he had a Message from his Majesty, to this House, signed by his Majesty; and he presented the same to the House, and it was read by Mr. Speaker, all the Members of the House being uncovered, and is as followeth, viz:

GEORGE R.

His Majesty being determined, in consequence of the Address of both Houses of Parliament, to take the most speedy and effectual measures for supporting the just rights of his Crown and the two Houses of Parliament, thinks proper to acquaint this House, that some addition to his Forces by Sea and Land will be necessary for that purpose; and doubts not but his faithful Commons, in whose zeal and affection he entirely relies, will enable him to make such augmentation to his Forces as the present occasion shall be thought to require.

G.R.

Ordered, That his Majesty's said most gracious Message be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty;

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday morning next, resolve itself into the said Committee.

The other Order of the Day being read,

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st day of this instant February, by his Majesty's command.

Lord North moved, "That leave be given to bring in a "Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces "of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and "to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on "any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other "places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, "and for a time to be limited." He supported his motion, by declaring, that as the Americans had refused to trade with this Kingdom, it was but just that we should not suffer them to trade with any other Nation. That the restraints of the Act of Navigation were their Charter; and that the several relaxations of that law, were so many acts of grace and favour; which, when the Colonies ceased to merit, it was but reasonable the British Legislature should recall. In particular, he said, that the Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, and the other banks, and all the others in America, was the undoubted right of Great Britain. Therefore, we might dispose of them as we pleased. That, although the two Houses had not declared all Massachusetts Bay in rebellion, they had declared, that there is a rebellion in that Province. It was just, therefore, to deprive that Province of its Fisheries. That in the Province of New-Hampshire, there was still a Governour and a Government; but Government was weak in that Colony; and a quantity of Powder had been taken out of a Fort there by an armed mob. Besides, the vicinity of that Province to Massachusetts Bay was such, that if it were not added, the purpose of the Act would be defeated. Rhode-Island he stated not to be in a much better situation than Massachusetts Bay; that several pieces of Cannon had been taken there, and carried up into the country; and that they were arraying their Militia, in order to march into any other Colony, in case it should be attacked; and this could, in the present circumstances, be for no good purpose. That from Connecticut had marched a large body of men into the Massachusetts, on a report that the Soldiery had killed some people in Boston; and though this body had returned, on finding the falsity of that report, an ill disposition had been shewn; and that this Colony was in a state of great disorder and confusion. To this he added, that the River Connecticut afforded the inhabitants of that Colony an opportunity of carrying on the Fishery. The same might be said of Rhode-Island; and as the same argument of vicinity might be applied to both the Provinces as well as to New-Hampshire, in order to prevent the defeating of the Act, they also ought to be included in the prohibition to Fish and to Trade.

His Lordship added, that he was not averse to admitting sash alleviations of the Act as would not prove destructive of its great object. 1st. Therefore, he would move it only as temporary, to the end of the year, or to the end of the next session of Parliament. 2dly. He would permit particular persons to be excepted, on certificates from the Governour, of their good behaviour; or upon their taking a test of acknowledgment of the rights of Parliament.

Mr. Dunning thought the Americans had a right of fishing on the banks of Newfoundland. He said there was no rebellion in Massachusetts Bay; nothing that could be construed into treason; even if there was a rebellion in some parts, why was the whole to be punished? Why New-Hampshire? Why Rhode-Island? Why Connecticut? If the fact was true, that General Gage had attacked, was sacking and burning the Town of Boston, and the Connecticut people resisting, the latter were not in rebellion. He said the Ministers were the best authors of a receipt to make a rebellion.

Mr. Attorney General Thurlow said, that no Resolutions, though of both Houses, can make a fact, or decide the law. He had given his opinion upon Papers laid before him, that there was a rebellion in Massachusetts Bay. He defended his opinion, by an explanation of the facts upon which he gave it; first as to treason, next as to rebellion.

Mr. Dunning to explain. Rebellion is that state between Government and its subjects, which, between two hostile states, would be war.

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn rose to prove a rebellion in America, from the honourable gentleman's definition.

Mr. Speaker Norton gave his opinion on the point of law, divested of the facts, and left the Committee to apply the facts, and the opinion. The law does not know the word "rebellion." Levying war against the King, is treason; so is endeavouring to wrest the sword out of the hands of the Executive power.

Governour Johnstone said that the proposition was absurd and cruel; absurd, because it took away trade from our own Colonies, which, those who understood that trade, must know we should not be able to transfer to ourselves when it was taken from them; that God and nature lind given that Fishery to New and not to Old England; that when it was once destroyed, we should not be able to restore it to those from whom it was thus violently taken, because the little capital, vessels, and implements of fishermen, (many of them poor,) were only kept up by constant returns of profit; when the profits failed, the capital and implements would not be restored. That France, who was sufficiently alert at taking advantages, would come in for a part, at least, of the benefits of which we thus thought proper to deprive our own people. It was cruel, he said, in the highest degree, and beyond the example of hostile rigour; that a maritime people always drew a considerable part of their immediate sustenance from the Sea. This Bill, therefore, would be inhumanly to starve a whole people. except such as a Governour should think it proper to favour; that this partial permission must give rise to unjust preference, monopoly, and all sorts of jobs. He said he had served in the Navy the whole of the last war; he had in his eye several Captains, who had cruized off the enemy's coasts during the whole war, and he appealed to them for the truth of what he asserted, that it was a constant rule in the service to spare the fishing craft, thinking it savage and barbarous to deprive poor wretches of their little means of livelihood, and the miserable village inhabitants of a sea-coast of their daily food.

Mr. T. Townshend urged strongly the contradiction which prevailed in the principles of the proposed Bill; for, if the other Provinces were in rebellion, as well as the Massachusetts, why were they not declared so? If not, why were they included in the very same punishment?

Sir George Savile rallied with pleasantry some arguments of the lawyers about treasons, and exposed the idea of depriving a whole Province of its subsistence, because a rebellion, we know not where, nor by whom, is lurking in it; and then punishing a second Province, because it is next door to rebellion; a third, because it would be doing nothing if you let them escape; and a fourth, because otherwise Ministry could not square their plan. He then took it up in a serious light, and said that he had heard with pleasure many young Members speak with much ability on this occasion. They all had apologized for their want of experience in this session; that he was obliged to consider and apologize for himself as a very young Member of Parliament. This will appear, said he, very strange to those who know that I have sat a great many years in this House. It is true, I have carried through many Turnpike Bills, several Draining Bills, a multitude of Navigations, and Inclosures without number; but I am now come quite a novice to the ways and means for the ruin of Trade and Commerce, and the dismemberment of a great Empire. He then entered into the general argument concerning the justice of making all parts of a state contributory to the support of the whole, and that those who receive protection ought to submit to taxation. He admitted the general maxim to be true; but observed, that this was only in cases where all the parts received the same protection in equal benefits and equal privileges; otherwise equal payment for unequal protection would be injustice itself. That people by compact might give up a part of this right; but then this compact ought to be proved, and it ought to be proved also that an adequate compensation was given for it, else the bargain would not be fair. And this brought him to the doctrine of resistance, which had been handled as best suited the purposes of those who used it. That if rebellion was resistance to Government, he could not consider all rebellions to be alike there must be such a thing as justifiable rebellion and submitted to the House whether a people taxed without their consent, and their Petitions against such taxation rejected, their Charters taken away without hearing, and an Army let loose upon them without a possibility of obtaining justice - whether a people under such circumstances could not be said to be in justifiable rebellion?

Sir W. Meredith expressed great sorrow and surprise that the honourable gentleman should call the rebellion in America a justifiable rebellion, since it was the laws which they resisted; and he (Sir George) had consented to the Declaratory Act, which asserted a right in Parliament to make laws to bind America in all cases whatsoever. The power of God himself was bounded within the limits of strict justice; a power to bind, in all cases whatsoever, had never been claimed by the greatest tyrant upon earth, nor by any earthly power, before the Declaratory Act. He thought, therefore, the honourable gentleman should move a repeal of the Declaratory Act, and of every Act that he thought injurious to the freedom of America, before he exhorted the Americans to bring on themselves, their families, and their country, all the horrid consequences of rebellion. He had opposed, and ever would do, the principle of laying internal taxes on America; but it was not taxation, but the trade of Great Britain which the Americans now opposed. The Tea Duty is the only tax that remains; a tax, which the Americans first resisted, had afterwards complied with, and paid regularly; but when the East India Company sent the Tea to be sold at a lower price than the smuggler of Dutch and Swedish Teas could afford, then they began to resist the law; then they destroyed the Merchants' property; then they began to threaten ruin to the commerce of this country, not in support of liberty, but merely to support their own illicit commerce. He had promoted the repeal of the Stamp Act, but would never bare taken the part he did, could behave supposed the Ministers who gave up the advantages would have maintained the principle of taxing America; neither would he have consented to a repeal of the Stamp Act, had he not believed that the Ministers of that time would have made some effectual provision for the security and protection of the Merchants who trade to America: instead of which, the Americans were then taught that they had nothing to do but to threaten our Merchants with ruin and our Manufacturers with famine, and then, upon such threats, the Legislature of Great Britain must submit to their will. Three times, in the space of a few years, they had thrown the whole trade of Great Britain into confusion; that it had better be given up than preserved on such conditions. Life itself, was not worth keeping in a state of uncertainty and fear. Things were now brought to a crisis. The conflict must be borne, and he hoped would never end, but in relinquishing our connections with America, or fixing them on a sure and lasting basis. As to the proposal of stopping the Fisheries, whatever distress it might bring on the Americans, they had no reason to complain. It was no more than they had begun to practise themselves. They had taken a resolution as far as in them lay to rain our Merchants, impoverish our Manufactures, and starve all the West India Islands. To them, therefore, it can only be said -

-Nec lex hâc justior ulla, Quam necis artifices arte perire suâ.

Lord John Cavendish and Mr. Townshend replied that they had been in office with the right honourable gentleman who spoke last, when the Declaratory Act passed, and afterwards long continued in intimacy with him, but had never heard publicly or privately of his objections to the Declaratory Act before this year. They thought it very odd that he should have voted for several severe and proscriptive Acts, in order to force the Americans to obedience to taxes, since he thought that we had no right to impose any, and that in this respect he had gone far beyond the most zealous partisans of the rights of this country; as little could they reconcile his voting last year against the repeal of the Tea Duty, with his aversion to the right of taxation.

Lord Beauchamp and Sir Richard Sutton supported the motion on the equity of prohibiting the trade of those who had prohibited ours.

Mr. Burke said that he did not mean to trouble the Committee long, nor to be heard beyond those to whom he immediately applied himself. That by the proposed Bill they had disposed of four of their Provinces. Some were troubled with a concealed rebellion; others were concealers of that concealment; some were infected, others next door to the infection. Provision, too, was to be made by licenses and dispensations, and tests for those in the several Provinces who were more innocent or more in favour. But there was a fifth Province for which no provision at all had been made, which was likely to be as great a sufferer as any of the other four, though not in rebellion, or in the neighbourhood of rebellion. This Province had used no other force, but of one kind, which was not very terrible on earth, though it was said to offer violence to Heaven, the force of prayers and petitions; that this Province was England, which had now several hundreds of thousands of her property in the four Provinces of New England.

He then shewed that New England was not a staple Colony, and could only pay her debts through the Fishery and the Trades which depended upon it; and that to stop their Fishery would be to beggar the English Merchants and Manufacturers. This he explained by entering into the nature of the New England trade. He further said, it had been asserted, falsely, that the New England people had refused to pay their debts. It had been said, also, truly, that they had no compassion on the English Manufacturers. But had their dishonesty been as true as the want of compassion, both might have been natural to those we called Rebels; but what ought we to think of a British Legislature, disabling the payment of debts, and having no bowels of compassion towards the sufferings of our own innocent constituents.

The question then being taken, the Committee divided: For Lord North's motion, 961; against it, 85.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair;

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee that they had made a further progress in the matters to them referred, and that he was directed by the Committee to make a motion when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be now received.

Sir Charles Whitworth accordingly reported from the said Committee that he was directed by the Committee to move the House that leave be given to bring in a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited;

And Sir Charles Whitworth moved the House accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited: And that the Lord North, the Lord Beauchamp, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Charles Townshend, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Cornwall, Mr. Jenkinson, Sir Charles Whitworth, and Mr. Cooper, do prepare, and bring in the same.

Sir Charles Whitworth, also acquainted the House, that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the lord North upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the first day of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

Ordered, That Mr. Alderman Oliver, have leave to make a motion, it being half an hour after eleven of the clock.

And he moved the House accordingly.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the amount of the Duties and Excise, drawn back on all Goods of the West Indies, exported from England, for the last three years; distinguishing the several articles, and each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the amount of the Duties on all Goods imported from the West Indies to England, for the last three years; distinguishing the several articles, and each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the amount of the Excise on all Goods imported from the West Indies to England, for the last three years; distinguishing the several articles, and each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the Tonnage of all Ships and Vessels employed in the trade between Great Britain and all the Colonies in North America, and the West Indies, during the three last years; distinguishing each year, and each Colony; likewise the tonnage of all Ships and Vessels employed in the trade with Africa.

MONDAY, February 13, 1775.

Mr. Royer, from the Commissioners of the Customs in Scotland, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders:

An Account of the value of all Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, exported from that part of Great Britain called Scotland, to the British Colonies in North America, from Christmas, 1768, to Christmas, 1769; distinguishing each Colony; and also,

An Account of the value of all Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, exported from that part of Great Britain called Scotland, to the British Colonies in North America, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony; And also,

An Account of the amount of the Drawbacks paid out of the produce of the Customs in Scotland, for the three years, ending on 10th October, 1773; distinguishing each year; And also,

An Account of the value of the Scotch Exports and Imports to and from the West Indies, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Island, and each year; And also,

An Account of the value of the Scotch Exports and Imports to and from North America, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony, and each year.

WEDNESDAY, February 15, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee, be now read,

And the said Order being read accordingly;

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day three weeks, the 8th day of March next, resolve itself into the said Committee.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the quantity of Corn and Flour exported from Great Britain to the Sugar Colonies, for ten years past; distinguishing each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the value of Goods exported from Great Britain to Ireland, from Christmas, 1772, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the quantity of Train Oil and Blubber, imported into this Kingdom, from Christmas, 1772, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing the countries from which the same have been imported, and the quantity imported each year.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the quantity of Rape Seed and Rape Oil imported into this Kingdom, from Christmas, 1772, as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing the countries from which the same have been imported, and the quantity imported in each year.

A Petition of the principal Manufacturers of the Borough of Bridgport, in the County of Dorset on behalf of themselves and thousands of others, Inhabitants of the said Borough and places adjacent, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners being Master Manufacturers of Nets, Lines, and Twine, for the use of the Fisheries carried on on the respective shores and banks of New England and Newfoundland, and other parts of North America; as also of Canvass for Sails for the Vessels and Boats employed in the said Fisheries, have usually employed in the said Borough and the neighbouring Villages, several thousand labourers in the manufacture of the said articles, who solely depend thereon for subsistence, no other manufactory of any sort being carried on there; and that in consequence of the Non-Importation Agreements lately entered into in America, the Petitioners have not received, and find they are not this season to expect, a demand for a Shilling's worth of Goods for those parts; and that the loss of that valuable branch of their trade distresses them the more, as from a consideration of the importance of the Fisheries, and the impossibility of carrying them on without Nets, Lines, &c., they had flattered themselves the Americans, in their Non-Importation Resolutions, would have made some exception in favour of these articles; and from thence, as well as in compassion to the poor labourers, were induced to continue their Manufactories, so that they have now large stocks of Goods on hand, of a construction peculiar to those parts, which will therefore be of little value to them without a return of this trade; and that from the necessity the Americans must be under of an immediately supply of these articles for carrying on the Fisheries, the Petitioners apprehend Manufactories of them already are, or instantly will be set up there, or such other sources of supply discovered, and connections formed, as will forever deprive them of a return of this trade; and that, should this be the case, the Petitioners, already much distressed, shall become great and lasting sufferers; and their labourers, many of whom are already without employment, and the rest employed only in part, must inevitably be reduced to a condition deplorably miserable, being neither capable, nor having an opportunity of turning their hands to any other business; and therefore praying the House to take their and their poor labourers' present distress and impending ruin into consideration, and to grant such speedy and effectual relief as to the House shall seem meet.

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command -

Extract of a Letter from the Earl of Dunmore to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Williamsburg, 24th December, 1774.

Ordered, That the said Paper be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the first day of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

A Petition of the Merchants and Master Manufacturers of Woollen Goods, of the Towns of Wakefield, Halifax, Bradford, Huddersfield, and country adjacent, interested in the Trade to America, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth

That by means of the North American Commerce carried on directly from the said Towns and the country adjacent or through the hands of the Merchants of London, Bristol, Liverpool, Glasgow, Hull, and other places, the Petitioners have been enabled greatly to extend their Manufactories, and give thereby a large employ to many thousands industrious poor labourers; and that the North American Commerce, taken collectively and in its full extent, is an object of great concern to the West Riding of Yorkshire in general to the Petitioners in particular, and worthy the attention of Parliament; and that by the unhappy differences subsisting between Great Britain and her American Colonies, the Petitioners labour under the present stagnation of that branch of trade, the loss of which is sensibly felt, and in time will be much more so, by the Petitioners and the aforesaid industrious poor labourers; and that the Petitioners, thus circumstanced, are justly alarmed for themselves and families, at the same time feeling for the distresses of those whom in times past they have been enabled to give support, humbly represent to the House their present unhappy situation, confiding in the wisdom, the justice, and moderation of Parliament to remove the causes thereof, in such manner as to the House may seem meet.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last the first day of this instant, February, and this day, by his Majesty's command;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," instead thereof,

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America," be inserted instead thereof?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question so amended, being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

Mr. Tompkins, from the Commissioners of the Customs, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders,

An Account of the quantities of Sugar imported into England from the British Colonies and Plantations, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year; and also,

An Account of the quantities of Refined Sugar, and of Muscovado Sugar, exported from England, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each year, and the quantities exported to North America, West Indies, and foreign parts; and also,

An Account of the value and amount of the Imports from the British Sugar Colonies, into England, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year; and also,

A particular Account of the Expense of collecting and managing the Revenue of Customs in England, for three years, ending Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each year.

FRIDAY, February 17, 1775.

Mr. Bruere, from the Commissioners of Excise, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders,

An Account of the amount of the Excise paid on Rum imported from the West Indies, for the last three years, distinguishing each year; and also,

An Account of the amount of the Excise paid on Coffee imported from the West Indies, for the three last years; distinguishing each year.

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House an Act passed by the Assembly of Virginia, in the year 1684, entitled "An Act for the better preservation of the Peace of Virginia, and preventing Unlawful and Treasonable Associations."

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by such Members of this House as are of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council.

The Lord North presented to the House, according to order, a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited; and the same was received, and read the first time.

Resolved, That the Bill be read a second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time upon Thursday morning next.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

The other Orders of the Day being read,

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st and 15th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

MONDAY, February 20, 1775.

Mr. Comptroller of the Household reported to the House on the Address of Friday last, that his Majesty would be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House an Act passed by the Assembly of Virginia, in the year 1684, entitled "An Act for the better preservation of the Peace of Virginia, and preventing "Unlawful and Treasonable Associations," had been presented to his Majesty; and that his Majesty had commanded him to acquaint this House that he will give directions accordingly.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of Imports to the British Sugar Colonies from North America, for three years last past; distinguishing each year.

Mr. Tompkins presented to the House, pursuant to their orders,

An Account of all Corn, Flour, and Bread, imported from North America, into that part of Great Britain called England, from the 5th of January, 1767, to 5th January, 1774, which is as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each kind of Grain, and the quantity imported in each year; and also,

An Account of the value of the Exports and Imports to and from the West Indies and England, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas, 1762; distinguishing each year; and the value of British Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, from Foreign Goods, Wares, and Merchandise; and also,

An Account of the value of the Exports and Imports to and from Africa and England, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas, 1773; distinguishing each year; and the value of British Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, from Foreign Goods, Wares, and Merchandise.

WEDNESDAY, February 22, 1775.

Mr. Rowe, from the Commissioners of the Customs, in Scotland, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders,

An Account of the quantities of Sugar imported into Scotland from the British Colonies and Plantations, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year; and also,

An Account of the quantities of Muscovado sugar and Refined Sugar exported from Scotland, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each year, and the quantities exported to North America; and also,

An Account of the amount and value of the Imports from the British Sugar Colonies, into Scotland, from Christmas, 1762, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each Colony and each year.

A Petition of the Merchants of Whitehaven, in the County of Cumberland, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners and their predecessors, have, for many years past, carried on an extensive trade with America, during which time the Manufactures of this Kingdom have been sent out from the said Port to a very considerable amount; and in return, the Petitioners have imported the produce of that Continent in such articles as have not only been beneficial to them, but have also greatly increased the Revenue of this Kingdom; and in the prosecution of which trade a great number of able seamen have been brought up and employed; and that the Petitioners, with the deepest concern, observe the present unhappy disputes subsisting between this Kingdom and North-America, which are now brought to such a crisis, that, unless some speedy remedy he adopted, will effectually put an end to all future intercourse, and thereby not only prevent the Petitioners from such benefits as they formerly enjoyed, but also he injurious to the commercial interest of this Kingdom in general; and therefore praying the House will take into consideration the cause of these unhappy disputes, and endeavour to establish such a permanent system as may promote the perfect tranquillity of this Kingdom and her Colonies.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st and 15th days of this instant: February, by his Majesty's command;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "the Petition of the "Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, "concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America is referred," be inserted instead thereof?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Merchants, Linen Drapers, and principal Inhabitants of the Town and neighbourhood of Belfast, in the Kingdom of Ireland, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners observe with the deepest concern, the unhappy differences which at present subsist between Great Britain and her American Colonies, and are apprehensive of the fatal consequences which may arise from them; and that, as their export trade with the American Colonies consists chiefly in the exportation of Linen Manufacture, and that of white and brown Linens only, by the Non-Importation Agreement, the Petitioners are deprived of this the only valuable branch of export they are permitted to carry on with those Colonies, and of which they already begin to feel the unhappy effects; and that, if the Linen Manufacture decays, this Kingdom must be reduced to such a state, as, from want of employment at home, to increase emigrations, reduce the value of lands, and diminish every branch of the poor remains of the trade they enjoy; and that the chief commodities which the Petitioners have liberty to import from America into this Kingdom, being Flaxseed, Lumber, Wheat, and Flour, should the Non-Exportation take place, they must necessarily be deprived of Flaxseed to raise Flax to carry on their Linen Manufacture; of Staves for Casks to contain our Beef, Pork, and Butter, for the supply of Great Britain, his Majesty's Navy, and the West India Islands; and that this train of consequences is destructive to the landed property, manufactures, and commerce of this Kingdom, and of course must occasion a very sensible diminution of his Majesty's Revenues, from the then absolute inabilities of the inhabitants; and therefore praying that the House would take the premises into their consideration, hoping that some expedient may be found out, whereby these consequences may be prevented, harmony restored, and established upon a solid and permanent foundation.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to Consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st and 15th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred" instead thereof

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the words "the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred," be inserted instead thereof?

It was resolved in the Affirmative:

Then the main question so amended, being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Aldermen, Sheriff, principal Manufacturers, and Inhabitants of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham, whose names are thereunto subscribed, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners very sincerely lament the unhappy differences which have already arisen between Great Britain and her Colonies, and cannot, without great concern and abhorrence, reflect upon that seditious spirit which hath broken out with such violence in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, particularly in the Town of Boston, whose inhabitants, by their disobedience, have set at defiance the laws and Government of this Kingdom; and that the Petitioners having seen the very ungrateful return made by the Bostonians, for the uncommonly mild and indulgent kindness testified to them by the British Senate, in the repeal of the American Stamp Act, are much surprised to find that Petitions have been repeatedly urged in their favour to the House, and in particular by some of the manufacturing Hosiers of the Town of Nottingham; and that the Petitioners, from their intimate knowledge of the manufactory of this Town, well know that the allegations of such Petitions are highly exaggerated; and that the zeal of the Petitioners hath led them beyond the bounds of sober and important truth, representing calamities which have never yet, nor in the remotest probability ever will, be felt and experienced by the inhabitants of the said Town, in the degree stated; and that the Petitioners, from the present disposition of the Americans, apprehend that the trade and commerce of Great Britain with her Colonies, cannot be effectually restored and permanently secured, without a due and proper submission and obedience to the laws and Government of this Kingdom; and therefore beseech the House to take such measures as may seem most likely to secure and maintain the supreme authority, honour and dignity of Great Britain, enforce a due obedience to her laws, and restore subordination, order, and good Government in America.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the commerce of North America, is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words, "it is referred to consider of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st and 15th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put:

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, is referred.

THURSDAY, February 23, 1775.

Mr. Gascoyne, from the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, presented to the House, pursuant to their Address to his Majesty,

Copy of an Act passed in the Colony of Virginia, the 16th of April, 1684, entituled "An Act for the better preservation of the Peace of Virginia, and preventing Unlawful and Treasonable Associations." *

And the title of the said copy was read.

Ordered, That the said Copy do lie upon the table, to be perused by the Members of the House.

* An Act for the better preservation of the Peace of VIRGINIA, and preventing Unlawfull and Treasonable Associations.

Whereas, many evil and ill-disposed persons, inhabitants of this his Majesty's Colony and Dominion of Virginia, contrary to their duty and allegiance, on or about the first of May, in the thirty-fourth year of his Majesty's reign, and divers other days and times tumultuously and mutinously assembled and gathered together to cut up and destroy all Tobacco Plants, and to perpetrate the same in a traitorous and rebellious manner, with force and arms entered the Plantations of many of his Majesty's good subjects of this Colony, resolving, by open force, a general and total destruction of all Tobacco Plants within this his Majesty's Dominion, to the hazarding the Subversion of the whole Government, and ruin and destruction of his Majesty's good subjects,

Mr. Alderman Hayley presented the following Petition, which was read:

To the Honourable the Commons of GREAT BRITAIN, in Parliament assembled:

The Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of LONDON, interested in the AMERICAN Commerce, Sheweth,

That your Petitioners are deeply concerned to observe, by the votes of this Honourable House, that a Bill is brought in "to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the "Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, "and the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and "Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; "and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or "other places therein to be mentioned, under certain restrictions, and for a time to be limited:" Your Petitioners beg leave to represent that the said Bill, should it pass into a law, will, in its operations, deprive thousands of his Majesty's loyal subjects of their actual subsistence, and reduce them to extreme distress, even that of famine, the said Provinces not generally raising Corn sufficient for their support, and by this Bill they will be prevented from receiving any supplies from their sister Colonies, and precluded from their natural resource, the Sea.

That your Petitioners have reason to believe that very great numbers of men bred and employed in the Fisheries, who in hardness and intrepidity are not exceeded by any in this extensive Empire, will be impelled by the pressing calls of hunger and want, to such a conduct as may be productive of devastation and bloodshed, which may endanger the peace and welfare of that part of his Majesty's American Dominions; or be induced to emigrate to the Islands of Miquelon and St. Pierre, there to fish for the French, and give our rivals the means of supplying the market in Europe, and thereby render it difficult for us to regain that valuable branch of commerce.

Your Petitioners beg leave further to represent, that there is now due from the said Provinces and Colonies to the City of London, very large sums of money; that their remittances are principally made by means of the Fisheries, and consequently the ruin brought on those Colonies will ultimately fall on Great Britain.

That among the other grievances of which our fellow-subjects in America so generally complain, is of their being deprived of Trial by Jury, in particular cases, and the extension of the jurisdiction of Admiralty Courts; which grievances your Petitioners, with much concern, find are not only continued, but extended by the present Bill, and if, by God's assistance, and the prudent care and conduct of the then Lieutenant Governour and Council, the mutinaries had not been timely prevented, for which treasons and rebellions against his Majesty, and this his Government, some notorious actors have been indicted, convicted, and some of them executed, and suffered such pains and punishments as for their treasons and rebellions they justly deserved. Now to the end and purpose that none of his Majesty's subjects may be at any time hereafter seduced by the specious pretences of any persons, that such tumultuous and mutinous assemblies to cut up or destroy Tobacco Plants or any other the crop or labours of the inhabitants of the said Colony, are but riots and trespasses; and to the end, his Majesty's subjects of this his Dominion may be the better secured in their estates and possessions, the Burgesses of this present General Assembly pray that it may be enacted, And be it enacted by the Governour, Council, and Burgesses of this Assembly, That if any person or persons whatsoever, to the number of eight or above, being assembled together, shall, at any time after the first day of June, now next ensuing, intend, go about, practice, or put in use with force, unlawfully to cut, pull up, or destroy any Tobacco Plants, either in beds or hills, growing within the said Colony, or to destroy the same either curing or cured, either before the same is in hogsheads, or afterwards, or to pull down, burn, or destroy the houses or other places where any such Tobacco shall be, or to pull down the fences or enclosures of any Tobacco Plants, with intent to cut up or destroy the same, (and such person or persons being commanded or required, in his Majesty's name, by the Governour or other Commander-in-Chief, or any one of the Council, or one or more of the Justices of the Peace of the said Colony, commanding and requiring such persons to disperse themselves, and peaceably to depart to their habitations) shall continue together by the space of four hours after such Proclamation made, at or nigh the place where such persons shall be so assembled, that then every such persons so willingly assembled, in forceable manner to do any of the acts before mentioned, and so continuing together as aforesaid, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be deemed, declared, and adjudged to be traitors, and shall suffer pains of death, and also lose and forfeit as in cases of high treason: Provided always, That no person or persons whatsoever shall incur the pains and penalties hereby inflicted, unless he or they be prosecuted and indicted thereupon, within twelve months after the offence committed, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

they think it their duty to represent to the Honourable House, that it is their firm opinions that the disquietude which universally prevails in the minds of their fellow-subjects in America will not be removed unless lenient measures be pursued, and their grievances redressed.

Your Petitioners therefore most humbly pray that the said Bill may not pass into a law.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table until the said Bill be read a second time.

The Order of the Day being read;

Ordered, That the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of the Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited, be read a second time to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1775.

The Lord North, presented to the House, by his Majesty's command, the following extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth.

"Boston, January 18, 1775.

"MY LORD: It was thought impossible that the phrenzy which had seized the people could be of very long duration, unless constantly supported by new events; and there were hopes, if tranquillity could be for a time preserved, that people would have leisure for reflection, and think seriously of their danger, though the leaders have taken pains to assure them that Great Britain would be deterred from pursuing her measures, through their resolute opposition to them, and the Resolves of the Continental Congress. I find, by accounts from several parts of the country, that those hopes were not without foundation; that the people's minds are greatly cooled, and many begin to want courts of justice, and that the friends of Government have shown themselves openly in many places. I conceive the Press, which has been more open to Government than usual, to have been of very great use, through which channel the conduct of the leaders has been laid open, and the absurdity of the Resolves of the Continental Congress exposed in a masterly manner, which has served to lower that impression of high importance which the Congress had made upon people's minds.

"I hoped to have procured an Association of many considerable people in this Town, but find them more shy of making open declarations, notwithstanding they are protected, than people are in the country, where they depend only on themselves and their friends for security. They give for excuse, that they must first know the resolutions from home on all that has passed in this country, and that it's time to declare when they are assured that the mother country will not relax, but resolve to pursue her measures. If they begin to associate in the Town it's likely they will also fall on means to pay for the Tea, for, as they are mostly traders, it would be very advantageous for them to have the Port opened in the present conjuncture of their commercial affairs.

"We hear from New-Hampshire, that the people who were concerned in the rash action against Fort William and Mary, in that Province, are terrified at what they have done, and only anxious to obtain pardon for their offence."

The Lord North also presented to the House, by his Majesty's command,

No. 2. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-Hampshire, 28th December, 1774; received 20th February, 1775.

No. 3. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 14th January, 1775; received 20th February, enclosing,

No. 4. Copy of a Proclamation.

No. 5. Copy of a Letter from the Lords of the Admiralty to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 21st February, 1775; received 22d, enclosing,

No. 6. Extract of a Letter from Vice Admiral Graves to Mr. Stephens, dated 8th January, 1775.

No. 7. Copy of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to Vice Admiral Graves, dated 20th December, 1774.

No. 8. Copy of a Letter from Captain Barkley to Vice Admiral Graves, dated 20th December, 1774.

No. 9. Copy of a Letter from Governour Wentworth to Vice Admiral Graves, dated 30th December, 1774.

No. 10. Copy of a Letter from Captain Wallace to Vice Admiral Graves, dated 15th December, 1774.

No. 11. Copy of a Letter from Captain Wallace to Governour Wanton, dated 15th December, 1774.

No. 12. Copy of a Letter from Vice Admiral Graves to Mr. Stephens, dated 15th January, 1775.

No. 13. Proceedings of a Meeting of Deputies appointed by the several Counties of Maryland, at Annapolis, from 8th to 12th December, 1774; extracted from the Maryland Gazette; received from Robert Eden, Esquire, Deputy Governour of the said Province, 17th February, 1775.

Together with a List of the said Papers.

Ordered, That the said Papers be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st and 15th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

The House being informed that the Sheriffs of the City of London attended at the door, they were called in; and at the Bar, presented to the House,

A Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled.

And then they withdrew.

And the said Petition was read:.

To the Honourable the Commons of GREAT BRITAIN in Parliament assembled:

The humble Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and commons, of the City of LONDON, in Common Council assembled, Sheweth,

That although your Petitioners bear all due respect to the policy of those Acts of Parliament, which have anciently preserved to Great Britain a necessary and beneficial share of commerce with our Colonies, yet they are exceedingly alarmed at the consequences that must ensue, if the Bill now depending to restrain the Trade and Commerce of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, had the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited, should pass into a law; and that the said Bill, as the Petitioners conceive, is unjustly founded, because it involves the whole in the punishment intended for the supposed offences of a few; and that it must in its consequences overwhelm thousands of his Majesty's loyal and useful subjects with the utmost poverty and distress, in as much as they will be thereby deprived of the Fisheries, Which are the natural means of supporting themselves and families' and that the extensive commerce between Great Britain and her Colonies, will by this Bill be greatly injured, as a capital source of remittance will be stopped, which will not only disconnect the future commercial intercourse between those Colonies and this country, but it will eventually render them incapable of paying the large debts already due to the Merchants of this City; and that the utmost confusion will probably ensue from enforcing this Bill, if passed into a law, as it cannot be supposed that a great number of men, naturally hardy and brave, will quietly submit to a law which will reduce them almost to famine, they not having within themselves Provisions sufficient for their subsistence; and that it will induce the French to extend their Fisheries, and by that means increase the wealth and strength of our rivals in trade, to the great prejudice of this country; and that the Petitioners feel for the many hardships which their fellow-subjects in America already labour under, from the execution of several late Acts of Parliament, evidently partial and oppressive, and which seem to be extended and continued by this Bill, in as much as it confirms those Acts which in particular cases deprive the American subject of Trial by Jury; prohibits the inhabitants from carrying Provisions from one Colony to another; invites a contraband trade under military protections; prevents any subject of Great Britain or Ireland from being part owner of certain American Ships or Vessels, and vests an undue and dangerous authority in the Governour and Council of Massachusetts Bay. Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray this Honourable House, that the said Bill may not pass into a law.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table, until the said Bill be read a second time.

The Order of the Day being read, for the second reading of the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited;

The House was moved that the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, interested in the American Commerce, which was yesterday presented to the House, and also the Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, this day presented to the House; and which Petitions were then ordered to lie upon the table until the said Bill be read a second time, might be again read.

And the same being read accordingly;

The said Bill was read a second time.

Sir John Griffin Griffin, after expressing his sincere wishes to see a happy conclusion put to the American disputes without bloodshed, declared, that upon reading the Bill, he felt himself alarmed, and was jealous that, if the greatest caution and delicacy was not to be used in perfecting the Bill, it would rather provoke than effect any good purpose; he would not, therefore, without certain assurances, give his consent to its going to the Committee. He contended, that the first operation of the Bill should be so calculated, that the innocent might in no event be confounded with the guilty, and observed, that the power given to the Government and Council of New-Hampshire and Massachusetts Bay, to take off the restrictions laid by this Bill by proclamation, appeared to be so limited, that they could not issue such proclamation so as to secure those who were evidently well intentioned from the penalties of the Act: he insisted, that in common justice, the commencement of its operation should be delayed to such a period, as would give those so inclined, time to return to their duty; and concluded, that if this was not to be the case, he should be adverse to its going one step further. On the contrary, if he heard from authority, that none but the unrelenting and intractable would feel its influence, he should wish the Bill success, considering it as very proper and consistent with every resolution taken on the subject of our unhappy disputes with America.

Lord North replied, that it was intended to fill up the blanks in such manner as would answer the purposes wished for by the honourable gentleman, and that the first operation of the Bill would not have effect sooner than at the expiration of one month at least after its arrival.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Tuesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, upon the said Bill.

Ordered, That the said Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, interested in the American Commerce, be referred to the said Committee

On the motion of Mr. Alderman Hayley, it was Ordered, That it be an instruction to the said Committee, that they do admit the Petitioners to be heard, by themselves, their Counsel, or Agents, against the said Bill, upon their Petition, if they think fit.

Ordered, That the said Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, be referred to the said Committee.

TUESDAY, February 28, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, upon a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited;

A Petition of the people called Quakers was presented to the House, and read; taking notice of the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited; and that the Petitioners are informed, that, in the Island of Nantucket, on the Coast of New England, there are about five thousand inhabitants, nine-tenths of whom are of the people called Quakers; and that the said Island is for the most part barren and sandy, not yielding Provisions for a twentieth part of its inhabitants; and that the inhabitants almost wholly depend on the Whale Fishery for their subsistence, purchasing with the produce of the said occupation, Grain, and other necessities, from the neighbouring Colonies; and that if the said Bill should pass into a law, these people would unavoidably be exposed to all the hardships of famine, as no Provisions can be imported from any of the neighbouring Colonies, and their trade, by which they subsist, will be totally prohibited; and that the said inhabitants, to the best of the Petitioners' information and belief, are entirely innocent in respect to the present disturbances in America; wherefore, in consideration of the miseries impending over so large a part of their brethren and others, their fellow-subjects in that Island, and in the neighbourhood, under the like circumstances, the Petitioners entreat the House, that the said Bill may not pass into a law, as thereby, a most grievous punishment would be inflicted on the innocent, and a body of men, whose occupation is hazardous, their gains uncertain, and their labours necessary to themselves and the community, would be subjected to inevitable ruin and destruction.

A Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and principal Inhabitants of the Town and County of Poole, was also presented to the House and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners observe that a Petition is presented to the House from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, against the Bill mentioned in the preceding Petition; and that the Petitioners beg leave to observe, that the restraints intended to be laid upon the Newfoundland Fishery of the Colonies, mentioned in the said Bill, if carried into a law, will not by any means be injurious to Commerce, as the Petitioners against the Bill conceive, because the foreign markets can be amply supplied by extending the Newfoundland Fishery, of subjects resident in England; and that the annual produce of the Newfoundland Fishery, carried on by subjects resident in the mother country, exceeds five hundred thousand Pounds; and that the Newfoundland Fishery of the mother country is a constant nursery of Seamen for the Navy, that great bulwark of the Nation, every fifth man employed being, by the tenth of William the Third, obliged to be a Landman, a consideration of infinite weight, the Petitioners imagine, and this the more especially, as the profits of the trade centre entirely in this Kingdom; and that the profits of the Newfoundland Fishery carried on by the Colonies mentioned in this Bill, do not centre here; nor is the Newfoundland Fishery of the Colonies a nursery of Seamen for the Fleet, because the Americans are not obliged by law to make use of Landmen, nor are the American Seamen compellable like the British Seamen, to serve their country in times of war; the Petitioners are therefore greatly alarmed, lest a Petition from so respectable a body as the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of London, should operate not only to their prejudice, but to the general prejudice of the Kingdom, on a point of such importance to the national prosperity, humbly submit the foregoing facts to the consideration of the House, and soliciting, no less for their own immediate advantage, than for the universal benefit of their country, such encouragement of the British Fishery to Newfoundland, as the Parliament shall think proper.

And the said Petitions were severally ordered to be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the said Bill is committed.

A motion was made, and the question being put, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair,

The House divided - Yeas 97, Noes 24.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. David Barclay called in.

He appears as Agent for the Committee of North American Merchants, and means, with the permission of the Committee, to examine some witnesses in support of their Petition.

Mr. Brook Watson called in.

He is a Merchant, and has some acquaintance with the Fisheries of North America.

Question. What acquaintance has he with that trade?

Answer. I would beg permission in the first place, to acquaint the Committee what is the foundation of the evidence I shall lay before them.

In 1765, and the beginning of 1766, I was called to the Bar of this House, to give such information as I could with respect to the Fishery of North America; from that time I took great pains to get further information on that subject, by writing to my correspondents versed in that business; and in 1766, I went to North America, and there I had corroborated the information I had before received; and from that information, I then formed a state of the Fisheries, which I would beg leave to refer to. The paper is in my pocket.

The title of the paper is, "State of Exports from Great Britain to, and Fisheries of, North America, in 1764." Fisheries of New England, meaning the four Provinces.

Produce of the Cod Fishery, 300 vessels of fifty tons each, on an average, each navigated with eight men, caught 240,059 quintals of Fish; (the quintals being 112 pounds each;) of which 240,059 quintals, 102,265 was deemed merchantable Fish; (i.e.) fish fit for the European market, where freight and all charges upon it at that time, it was valued at twenty Shillings per quintal, the sum of £102,265. The remaining part being 137,794 quintals, is called Jamaica Fish, (i. e.) Fish fit for the West India market, and that was valued at fourteen Shillings per quintal, including freight and charges, and amounted to the sum of £96,455 16s.

The whole quantity of Fish produced 3,600 barrels of Cod Oil, part of which was carried to the West Indies, and the remainder to Great Britain, and valued at an average at forty Shillings per barrel, making the sum of £7,200, which added to the sum of the Cod Fishery, makes £205,920 16s.

Then follows the produce of the Mackerel, Shad, and Alewife Fisheries. Ninety Mackerel Sloops and Schooners employed; burthen about forty tons each, on an average; navigated with six Men; caught on an average 200 barrels each, making 1,800 barrels for the West India market, valued at 22s. 6d. per barrel, makes £20,050.

Ten thousand barrels of Shad and Alewife for the West India market, at 12s. 6d. per barrel, makes £6,250.

Whale Fishery.

One hundred and fifty Sloops, burthen seventy tons each on an average, three-fourths navigated with thirteen Men each, and the other fourth with seven, caught as follows:

Two thousand tons of Spermaceti Oil, sent to Great Britain, and there valued at twenty-four Pounds per ton, makes £48,000.

One thousand five hundred tons of common Whale Oil, shipped likewise to Great Britain, at sixteen Pounds per ton, makes £24,000.

Sixty tons of Whale Fins, shipped also to Great Britain, at three hundred Pounds per ton, makes £18,000.

Total produce of the Whale Fishery, £90,000.

Total produce of the New England Fisheries in the year 1764, amounts to £322,220 16s.

Then follows the number of tons of Shipping, and of Men employed in the New England Fisheries.

In the Cod Fishery.

Three hundred Cod Vessels, of fifty tons each, navigated by eight Men, makes 15,000 tons of Shipping, and 2,400 Men.

Two hundred and forty thousand and fifty-nine quintals of Cod Fish, taken by those vessels, require 13,225 tons of Shipping to carry them to market, each one hundred tons of which shipping being navigated by eight Men, require 1,050 Men to navigate them; thus the Cod Fishery then employed 28,225 tons of Shipping, and 3,450 Men.

Shipping and Men employed in the Whale Fishery.

• One hundred and fifty Whale Sloops of seventy tons each, three-fourths-navigated with thirteen Men, and the other fourth with seven, is 10,500 tons of Shipping, and 1,728 Men; 3,560 tons of Shipping to carry them to market, each one hundred tons, requiring eight Men to navigate them, makes 3,560 tons of Shipping, and 284 Men.

Hence the Whale Fishery employed in that year, 14,060 tons of Shipping, and 2,012 Men.

Shipping and Men employed in the Mackerel Fishery.

Ninety Vessels of forty tons each, navigated with six Men, makes 3,600 tons of Shipping, and 540 Men.

Thus the whole of New England Fishery, employed 45,880 tons of Shipping, and 6,002 Men, in 1764.

That is the whole state of the New England Fisheries.

Q. Whether he believes that the Fisheries have increased or decreased since 1764?

A. Believes they have increased very much.

Q. What markets are the Fish sent to?

A. The Fish taken by the people of New England is in part sent to the Spanish and other European markets, and the rest to the West Indies.

Q. Has he ever received any remittance from Europe, for proceeds of Fish - I mean from Spain to Portugal?

A. I do yearly receive remittances from Spain for Fish shipped from North America, but not from the New England Fisheries. My trade is not carried on to those Provinces.

Q. What is his opinion of what will be the consequence of our not supplying the European markets for one season -- whether it probably would not be the loss of that trade?

A. I can only give my opinion on this question. I conceive, that should the New England Fishery be stopped, the markets which have been supplied from thence, cannot be supplied from any other part.

Q. Whether he has known any person concerned in the Whale Fishery on the Coast of North America from Great Britain?

A. I shall speak freely on that subject. I was concerned in it myself in the year 1760, or 1761. A considerable sum of money was subscribed to carry on the Whale Fishery in the River and Gulf of Saint Lawrence, and Straits of Bellisles, from Great Britain, which money was put into my hands in order to manage and direct the Fishery. Ships were to be fitted out from hence; and notwithstanding every precaution was taken, such was the event, that I believe three-fourths of the capital was sunk, and the Fishery given up.

A. Whether he knows of any Rum of the manufacture of New England sent to Quebec?

A. I have known 1,100 tons of British Brandy shipped from the Port of London in one year; and that trade is now supplanted by the Rum trade from New England.

A. What return do the New England Merchants receive for the Rum sent to Quebec?

A. A great deal of Money, and a little Wheat.

Q. Whether the number of Men employed in the Cod and Whale Fishery were Sailors - I mean Navigators?

A. I believe there is no constraint by law to oblige people fitting out their Ships from New England, to employ any number of green men; and that none of them are navigators, strictly so called, though I believe them all very good Seamen. The reason why I think so is, that their Cod Fishery is fitted out on shares; their men have a share of what they take home; they take none but stout able-bodied men, who are accustomed to the Seas. The Whale Fisher can carry none but good Seamen; for those Vessels which carry thirteen men, do so, that they may man two Boats; the others, which carry seven men only, can man but one Boat; they must be expert rowers, and the few men left in the Vessel must know how to work her. As to the people employed in the Mackerel Fishery, I believe to be young people, by that means trained up for the other Fisheries.

Q. Whether the Mackerel and Cod Fisheries are carried on at the same time, or succeed one another?

A. The Cod Fishery is carried on from February to September, (or October, I believe,) the Mackerel Fishery can only last during the Summer months, June, July, and a small part of August.

Q. Whether there are eight Men to every hundred tons of Shipping actually employed to bring the produce of these Fisheries to market?

A. As a Merchant, I believe that such Vessels as are sent from New England to the Spanish and other European markets with Fish, are seldom navigated with less than eight Men to the one hundred tons. From this Kingdom, perhaps I should navigate them with seven; for our Seamen are better, and more used to square-rigged Ships than the Americans.

Q. What sort of Vessels are employed in bringing the Fish to the European market?

A. I believe the Vessels usually employed in carrying Fish from New England, are square-rigged, double-decked Vessels, burthen from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and sixty tons.

Q. How are they rigged?

A. When I said square-rigged Vessels, I did not mean Sloops and Schooners, but Ships, Snows, and Brigs.

Q. Whether Brigs and Snows are not chiefly employed in that navigation?

A. I can't say whether it is so or not.

Q. Whether Brigs and Snows do not require fewer Men to navigate them than Ships of the same burthen?

A. I believe a Ship of one hundred and sixty tons will not take more Men to navigate her in the Western Ocean, than a Snow or Brig of the same burthen.

Q. Whether Vessels of one hundred and sixty tons actually carry twelve Men?

A. I believe such as are bound to Europe from New England with Fish, do not carry less.

Q. Whether he means that the twenty Shillings per quintal, is Currency or Sterling?

A. I meant Sterling money of Great Britain.

Q. Is the Fish dearer or cheaper now, than in 1764?

A. I believe cheaper.

Q. What is the price of New England Fish at present?

A. I can't say.

Q. Is the New England Fish better than what is taken by Ships fitted out from Great Britain?

A. A great deal better.

Q. What are the returns from Spain and Portugal in payment of the Fish?

A. Bills of Exchange returned to the Merchants of London, in payment for British Manufactures sent by them to North America, and some little part of the proceeds of the Fish is returned in Salt.

Q. Whether the Hooks, Lines, and small Cables, Nets, and other materials for carrying on this Fishery, is not exported from this country?

A. I believe every thing, except Salt, and the Timber of which the Vessels are built, is carried from this country.

Q. Is not the nett proceeds of the Fish remitted to this country?

A. I believe it is.

Q. Whether the circumstance of their catching their Fish cheaper has not been the cause of their success, and whether these Fisheries could not be carried on out of Newfoundland.

A. The only Fishery I was ever engaged in, was the Whale Fishery, which I never heard was carried on with success out of Newfoundland.

Q. Whether, if a bounty were given on the Newfoundland Whale Fishery, as well as on the Greenland Fishery, the whole Fishery might not be carried on as advantageously there?

A. I believe not. My reason is, that the bounty on the Greenland Fishery is confined to Ships of a certain size; the Vessels proper for carrying on the Whale Fisheries in the American Seas are small, swift sailors, and easily managed. The Whale Fishery in the Greenland Seas is confined to a certain distance, where they are sure of finding Whales, or not at all; the Vessels from North America sometimes take their Whales on that Coast, sometimes on the Coast of Africa, and the Brazils, and even as far South as the Falkland Islands.

Q. Whether most of the Newfoundland Fisheries don't return to this country to winter?

A. I believe they do.

Q. Whether the Whale Fishery fitted out from England before mentioned, did not fail on account of the ignorance of the people of this country in the Spermaceti Whale Fishery?

A. The Fishery which was fitted out under my direction was not for Spermaceti Whale, but for the Bone Whale; Spermaceti Whales are seldom if ever found in the River or Gulf of St. Lawrence, or the Straits of Bllisle.

Q. Whether the Fish Ships do not carry back the Manufactures of Spain, and other countries, to North America?

A. The returns are very trivial from thence, except in Salt.

Q. Whether there might not be other advantageous returns carried back?

A. I have no doubt but there might; but the articles are so bulky, that it would be difficult to smuggle them.

Q. If care was not taken by our Ships to prevent smuggling, would not such articles be smuggled?

A. If care was not taken to prevent smuggling, the Americans would doubtless smuggle all they could.

Q. Does he not know there is great smuggling in America?

A. I do not know. I never smuggled.

Q. What are the Ships' crews composed of, who carry the Fish to foreign markets?

A. North Americans, I believe, in general.

Q. Whether the capital employed in the Fisheries be North American or English, in the greater proportion?

A. I believe there are men of property in North America engaged in the Fisheries; but in general, the Fisheries are carried on with the capital of Merchants in Great Britain. I mean that the Merchants of Great Britain have given credit to those of North America, and that that credit is partly employed in the Fisheries, and that the returns are made in the produce of the Fisheries. The information I wish to convey is, that if a Merchant of England should trust a person concerned in the Fishery of North America, that person failing, the Merchant of England would lose his debt; and that this is all the concern the Merchants of England have in the New England Fisheries.

Q. Do the Merchants of England then intrust the North Americans with their property without any views of profit?

A. The Merchant has no doubt of compensation for the risk he runs.

Q. Whether he apprehends that the credit given by the Merchant of Great Britain is for this or that particular trade, or in general?

A. The Merchants of England when they supply Goods and necessities for the Fisheries to those of New England, do it on commission, and give them credit for a certain time, if not then paid, they receive a legal interest for it till it is paid.

Q. Whether any part of the Fishery on the Coast of New England, &c., is necessary for the support of the New England people on shore?

A. I believe that very little of the Cod Fishery is consumed in New England.

Q. Is the Shad and Alewife a necessary there?

A. I believe in some parts of New England it is.

Q. Whether methods used at Marblehead to cure the Cod Fish does not make it more valuable than that cured at Newfoundland?

A. The nature of their Cod Fish is such that the part fit to be sent to Europe is more valuable at many of the Spanish markets than any other Fish, and particularly at Bilboa - it is owing to their being obliged to go so far to take the Fish; hence it lays so long in the hold of the Ship that it grows more mellow than Fish cured immediately after they are taken out of the Sea.

Q. Whether the New England people do not cure their Fish in such a manner as to make it more valuable?

A. There are natural advantages attending their Fisheries which I would explain. They go to take the first share of Fish in the month of February, when the wind generally blows from the Westward, that wind carries them to the bank where they take their Fish; the Ships going from Great Britain there would have a much longer voyage, and meet with that contrary wind.

Q. Whence arises the greater value of their Fish? Is it from the method of curing it?

A. I believe that all the advantage their Fish has over that of Newfoundland arises from the causes already stated; and in the next place, as they take their Fish in deeper water, they take larger Fish, which are held in greater estimation; and further, I would observe, that Vessels carrying on the Newfoundland Fishery out of Great Britain are, fifteen-sixteenths of them, double-decked, square-rigged Vessels, fit to bring the Fish to Europe; hence they are not so fit for carrying on the Fisheries as the Schooners of New England; and if such square-rigged, double-decked Vessels were employed in taking the Fish, a great part of it might perish before they could get into a place to cure it.

Q. Whether he believes the method of curing Fish in New England does not make the Fish better for land carriage than that of Newfoundland?

A. I believe not.

Q. What markets would Bilboa and other Spanish Ports resort to for Fish if they could not get the Fish of New England?

A. It is hard to say. The Pope might grant them a dispensing power to eat flesh in the time of lent, and they might not eat Fish at all; but if they had not that Fish from New England, they could get it from no other place.

Q. Whether the Non-Importation scheme, if strictly adhered to, would not destroy their Fishery?

A. There is no doubt of it.

Q. Whether there are not great quantities of salted Mackerel consumed in New England?

A. Believes very little.

Q. How many Ships from St. John sail to Lisbon with Baccalxo?

A. Can't say.

Q. How many from New England?

A. Believes the Portugal market takes very little. It goes to the Spanish market - Bilboa, he believes, takes three-fourths.

Q. How is Lisbon and Oporto served with Baccalxo;

A. From Newfoundland, totally.

Q. Whether all the Ships employed in the Fishery for this Kingdom do not go to the banks of Newfoundland?

A. I believe they must all go to the banks before they arrive at Newfoundland, where they generally lay up, and carry on their Fishery in Shallops.

Q. Whether they don't fish in as deep waters, and catch as large Cod, as the people of New England?

A. The New England Fishermen do not all go to the banks of Newfoundland; there are other banks, such as those of the isle of Sable, Cape Sable, and the Isle of Shoal.

Q. Whether the Fish are not as large on the hanks of Newfoundland as in any other place?

A. I have no doubt but the Fishing Vessels out of Newfoundland do take as large Cod as the New England Vessels; but in general not.

Q. What's the price of a gallon of Rum now at New England?

A. I can't say what it is now; but a year back about one Shilling two Pence, sterling.

Q. What is the price of a gallon of Rum at Barbadoes, or any other of the West Indian Islands?

A. I never had any concern in that trade; I speak at random; perhaps two Shillings four Pence, or two Shillings six Pence.

Q. What is the reason that the people in New England can distil Rum cheaper than they can in the Islands?

A. They carry cargoes from New England of Lumber and Fish to the Islands, with the proceeds of which they purchase Molasses, which they distil into Rum, and carry part of it to Africa, where they buy Slaves and carry them back to eat up the Fish.

Question repeated.

A. The Jamaica Fish, which is not fit for the market, they sell at the foreign Islands in the West Indies. The French are not allowed to distil the Molasses, therefore they soil it cheap, and take in return Fish and Lumber, which the New England people would not sell elsewhere.

Q. Whether the Fishermen are employed all the year in the same Fisheries, or in succession?

A. I did not say the Seamen were employed in different Fisheries; I said, that the Mackerel Fishery could only employ them during the Summer months, and I will now add, that when the Cod Fishermen come home, they lay up till they go out again the next season, and the like with the Whale Fishermen. Some of the Ships employed in carrying the Fish to Europe may come here from Spain to load with the Manufactures of this country for North America.

Q. Is there not a trade of consequence with the Ports of Alicant, Barcelona, and other Ports of Spain, for inland consumption?

A. I believe that they casually send to such Ports; but such is the nature of their Fish that it will not bear land carriage, therefore is generally consumed in their sea-ports.

Q. Whether it is not carried to the Ports of Italy?

A. I believe very little.

Q. Is there not a trade established in the Baltick from Christianstad and Archangel, in order to rival our Fisheries?

A. Fish taken in the Baltick is called Stock Fish - that is, Cod cured by the frost, and do not hold in that estimation with our Fish.

Q. Whether if upon a supposition the trade to the Ports of the Mediterranean from America being stopped, it would not give advantage to the trade of the Baltick?

A. A very probable consequence.

Q. If Spain could not provide herself with New England Fish could she supply herself any where else?

A. I can't tell.

Q. Will France supply it?

A. France having free access to the Ports of Spain would supply them with Mud Fish.

Q. Whether the people of Great Britain carry on the Newfoundland Fishery with equal advantage with France?

A. No doubt with much greater advantage.

Q. How, if this restriction takes place, are the West Indies to be supplied with Fish?

A. The West Indies would not be supplied in that case,

Q. Are Christianstad or Archangel in the Baltick?

A. No.

Q. Is Christianstad in Russia or Denmark?

A. In Denmark.

Q. Does he know of the Fish trades established there?

A. I do not; but believe it is particularly in the Stock Fish, with which the Navy have been supplied.

Q. Is the Stock Fish equal to our Cod Fish.

A. There is not any Salt used in curing Stock Fish, and it bears a greater price; it is much drier, and does not weigh near so much in proportion to its bulk.

Q. Is it used in the Mediterranean in the room of our Cod?

A. Can't say.

Q. Whether it is for the interest of Great Britain to have the Newfoundland Fishery supplied with New England Rum, or with British Corn Spirits?

A. I believe it is the interest of this country to supply the Fisheries with every necessary on the cheapest terms, and that New England Rum is supplied them at a much lower price than British.

Q. Whether there is not a trade between Russia and the other Powers of the Baltick, with the Mediterranean for Stock Fish?

A. I can't say.

Q. Whether it is not exported from Christianstad and Archangel?

A. I don't know whether Spain and Italy use Stock Fish or not; that it is exported from those parts I am certain.

Q. Whether Stock Fish was not formerly used on board the King's Ships?

A. I believe it was.

Q. Is it now?

A. Don't know.

Q. How many Vessels sailed from New England for the Cod Fishery, to the banks of Newfoundland?

A. I believe that the Vessels from New England which proceed on the Fishery in February, do not generally go so far as the banks of Newfoundland.

Q. Whether the refuse Fish and Lumber which goes to the West Indies, the Merchants to whom they are consign, ed are not sometimes authorized to sell the whole, both Ship and Cargoes, and send home the proceeds to this country?

A. Yes.

Q. From what Ports do the Shipping employed in the New England Fishery fit out?

A. The greater part of them from Marblehead, Salem, and Cape Anne, for the Cod Fishery, and for the Whale Fishery from Nantucket.

Q. Whence do they draw the materials for carrying on their Fisheries?

A. From Great Britain all.

Q. Whether, supposing the trade of New England was stopped for five years, the Vessels fitted out in England for the banks of Newfoundland would not supply the markets with Fish now supplied by New England?

A. I believe not, and that a very valuable part of the Fishery belonging to Great Britain would thereby be lost.

Q. Whether that is matter of fact, or of opinion?

A. Of opinion.

Question repeated.

A. It is not possible for me to say what will certainly be the consequence of such a stoppage.

Q. Whether the banks of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia would not supply the loss of the New England Fisheries?

A. Nova Scotia is an infant Colony; it has not a capital to support this Fishery.

Q. Whether if the New England Fisheries were stopped they could not be carried on from Great Britain?

A. I am of opinion that the stopping of one Fishery, and the creation of another, would take up much time, and in the interval the trade would be lost.

Q. Whether there is not an established Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland from the West of England; and if the Fisheries of New England were stopped, they would not increase to supply its deficiencies?

A. The West country people carrying on the Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland would no doubt exert their endeavours, but their efforts would fall short.

Q. Why?

A. In the first place, one great material necessary for carrying on the Fisheries is men, and you have them not; the next is money, and I am pretty clear their capitals are fully employed; having, therefore, neither men nor money, nor Ships built for the trade, hence I think it could not be carried on.

Q. How do you know they want men?

A. On this foundation I have given my opinion: that now, when all Ships are supposed to be at home, I have been obliged to pay thirty-eight Shillings per month for Seamen, when this time twelve months, I paid only twenty-eight Shillings.

Q. How does he know this country will not furnish a capital to carry on this trade to any degree?

A. I have no doubt but if Government would supply Men, Money, and Ships, they will find Merchants enough to carry it on.

Q. How does he know the Merchants of this country will not furnish Money to carry on this trade?

A. Only from general knowledge that the Merchants' capitals, who are concerned in the Fisheries, are already fully employed.

Q. Is the trade of this country carried on by Government, in Men, Ships, or Money; or are not the Merchants capable of carrying on the trade of this country to any extent?

A. I believe, that were the New England Fisheries to be stopped, the Merchants who carry on the Newfoundland Fisheries could not furnish, at this time, either Men or Money to carry on such additional Fisheries.

Q. How does he know that?

A. I deliver it as my opinion, from general commercial knowledge only.

Q. Whether he knows there ever was a time when the trade on the banks of Newfoundland have been stopped far the want of Men?

A. Have no doubt but that during the late war, when Men were scarce, that the Newfoundland trade decreased; but since the peace it has increased very much, which I attributed to the facility of getting Men.

Q. Does he know of any time when the Newfoundland Fishery stopped for want of Men?

A. Can't point out the precise time when stopped; but have heard from the Newfoundland people complaints of the great difficulty of getting Men, when the Nation was lately arming against Spain.

Q. Whether Nova Scotia and Quebec could not carry on these Fisheries?

A. Nova Scotia and Quebec have neither Vessels nor Men of their own; nor could they be supplied with either but from New England, even should you supply them with all the Money necessary for carrying them on.

Q. Whether the New England people do not get our countrymen to fish for them?

A. Believe not.

Q. Whether there is not among the West country fishermen a general complaint of want of employment?

A. Do not know of any such complaint.

Q. Did he ever know it?

A. Don't recollect I ever did.

Q. Whether the people of New England can't fit out their Vessels cheaper than those sent from the West of England?

A. I have no doubt but the people of New England can carry on the Fishery at a much less expense than any other people.

Withdrew.

Mr. Stephen Higginson.

Q. Of what country is he?

A. From Salem, in the Massachusetts Bay; a Merchant.

Q. Whether there is as much Corn and other Provisions produced in that Province as will supply the inhabitants?

A. Apprehend not.

Q. Whether there is sufficient Corn and other Provisions produced in all the New England Provinces for their support?

A. No.

Q. From whence do they receive additional support?

A. From the Carolinas, Virginia, Maryland, and New-York, chiefly.

Q. Whether he is acquainted with the trade of the Fisheries carried on in New England?

A. Not much acquainted with the Whale Fishery, but have considerable knowledge of the Cod Fishery.

Q. How many Vessels are employed in the Cod Fishery?

A. About seven hundred Vessels.

Q. Of what burthen are they?

A. Five hundred of them estimated from forty to seventy tons; the other two hundred from about fifteen to forty.

Q. How many hands do seven hundred Vessels carry?

A. On an average they carry about six.

Q. How many hands are employed on shore for the Cod Fishery?

A. About half the number are employed in curing the Fish that there is in taking of them.

Q. How many Vessels employed in carrying the Fishery to market?

A. Should imagine about three hundred and fifty, from seventy or eighty tons, to about one hundred and seventy or one hundred and eighty; they carry about eight hands, one with another.

Q. What would these people do if the Fishery was stopped?

A. I can't readily resolve that question; suppose they would remain where they are as long as they could subsist, in hopes of being engaged in their old employment.

Q. But when that hope failed, and they could no longer subsist?

A. Then they will probably go elsewhere.

Whether they would settle at Halifax?

A. In general, I think not.

Why?

Several reasons; one is, the Fishermen in Salem and other Towns are a very quiet and steady set of men. They esteem the people of Halifax to be dissolute, and of a quite contrary turn. I think, therefore, they would not sit down among a people so different in their manners. Another reason is, that they think the Government of Halifax is arbitrary, and have a terrible notion of it. Another; those who have been there, have disliked the country very much, as being inhospitable, and affording but a very hard and coarse fare.

Q. Would they go to Miguelon and St. Pierre, and fish for France?

A. Don't think they would generally; from Marblehead some perhaps would.

Q. Why would they from thence?

A. Because the people there are of various Nations, Spaniards, Portuguese, and Dutch; but the others are born in the Towns where they live, have tenements and freeholds there, and would not leave their place of abode, I conceive.

Q. From whence do the Manufactures used in New England come?

A. I suppose from Great Britain.

Q. How do they pay for them?

A. By the proceeds of the Whale and Cod Fisheries chiefly.

Q. Do you receive Molasses in return for Fish?

A. A great quantity.

Q. What do they do with it?

A. It is chiefly manufactured into Rum; part is consumed in America, and part exported.

Q. Are the Merchants of Massachusetts Bay in debt to Great Britain?

A. Certainly.

Q. If the Fishery is stopped, what other means of paying their debts?

A. I know of no means but the articles of Pot and Pearl Ash, Lumber, Furs, Ships, and Flaxseed.

Q. What would that be in comparison to the debts?

A. Very small.

Q. Whether, supposing the Fishery stopped in New England, and allowed in Nova Scotia, they would not follow the Fishery in Nova Scotia?

A. I don't think they would.

Q. Whether there is not a constant export of Provisions from New England to the West Indies?

A. There is from Connecticut and the Massachusetts; they export Cattle and other live stock.

Q. Whether Indian Corn is not exported to the West Indies?

A. Don't know that there is any.

Q. Is not Provisions carried to Newfoundland?

A. They supply the Newfoundland Fishery considerably, with Rice, Bread and Flour.

Q. Why the Spaniards and Portuguese, of Marblehead, would be more afraid of going to Halifax, than Miguelon and St. Pierre.

A. I don't know that they would.

Q. If they send their Fish to Spanish markets this year, would they not bring back the proceeds to America, and not to Great Britain?

A. I imagine the proceeds of the Fish would centre here this year as usual.

Withdrew.

Called in again.

Q. Whether the Indian Corn and Flour exported from the Bay for the Newfoundland Fishery, is not imported from Carolina, Pennsylvania, and New-York?

A. It is. The Bread and Corn exported to Newfound- land Fishery, is not one eighth part of the Cork and Flour imported from the Southern Colonies.

Q. Is not part of the Exports to Spain the manufacture of New England? .

A. No.

Q. Does he know whether the Debt due to the Merchants of Great Britain is regularly paid or not?

A. They have been paid with less punctuality for the four or five years last past than before.

Q. To what do you attribute that?

A. To their having imported, in the years 1770, 1771, and 1772, more Goods than was sufficient for their market.

Q. Do the Merchants of England still continue to trust the Americans?

A. I know of no instance of their having refused to give them credit.

Q. Whether this Bill will enable the Merchants to pay their debts better?

A. Certainly not. The alteration will be quite the reverse; and will cut off the source of payment.

Q. Does he understand the state of the French Fishery on Newfoundland?

A. Not particularly; but have learn't from our Fishermen that they have of late increased it.

Q. If the Fishery from New England was stopped, would not the French have a part of it?

A. Suppose they might.

Q. Is he acquainted with the method of the French Fishery?

A. Yes.

Q. Do the French fish for themselves, or buy it of the New England Fishermen?

A. I never heard of their buying any.

Q. Can the French cure the Fish as well as New England men?

A. I don't imagine they can; for the same reason that the Newfoundland Fish is not so well cured, the climate being more subject to fogs.

Q. Whether, if the Provinces are restrained from fishing, their nets would not rot, and materials become unserviceable?

A. They certainly would very soon.

Q. Whether, if this Bill takes place, the Provinces would be in distress for want of Provisions?

A. I imagine they will.

Q. Whether the people of Nantucket who follow the Whale Fishery, will not be ruined by its being stopped?

A. They must be entirely ruined.

Q. Could the people of Great Britain cure the Fish as well as the New England men?

A. They may as dry, but the quality of the Fish will be inferior.

Q. Is there not a Coast Fishery for the supply of fresh Fish?

A. A vast deal. In the sea-ports of Massachusetts Bay, quarter of the people live on fresh Fish.

Does it extend to the four Provinces?

A. Not in the same degree.

Q. What would become of those articles, Potash, &c., if not exported?

A. I suppose the manufacture of Pot and Pearl-ash would cease till the trade opened again.

Q. Whether the Non-Exportation Agreement would not affect the Merchants here, as much as the Bill?

A. I believe not; those articles being not above three-twentieths of the whole.

Q. Does he know any thing of the sale of the Fish in the Spanish Ports, and of the consumption inland?

A. Yes.

Q. Whether the New England Fish is sent as far inland as the Newfoundland Fish?

A. The early spring Fish from New England is sent further, it being much tougher, and for this quality a much greater price is given than for the Newfoundland Fish.

Q. Do you know this to be fact?

A. I do.

Q. Whether Fish cured in Newfoundland is carried to Portugal, and thence to the Brazils?

A. Can't say.

Q. Whether the Non-Importation Agreement will not prevent their sending the Fish to the West India Islands?

A. Apprehend not. Withdrew.

Mr. John Lane.

He is a New England Merchant.

Q. What sum of Money is due to London only from the four Provinces in New England?

A. I believe there may be near a million of Money due.

Q. Whether remittances made from those Provinces for the last twelve months, have not been as good as heretofore?

A. I found no great difference.

Q. Whether, in case no interruption is given to the trade to New England, that his house will not as freely give credit to their correspondents there as heretofore?

A. Certainly I should trust them as usual, if there was no interruption in the trade.

Q. How are the remittances usually made?

A. In Oil, Pot and Pearl Ashes, Whale Fins, and from returns for the Cod Fishery from Portugal and Spain.

Q. Whether the returns are not chiefly made from the Fishery?

A. I take the Cod Fishery to be one third, or near one half.

Q. To what sums have those returns amounted in a year?

A. The Cod Fishery is about 220,000 or £230,000, and that is half nearly of the remittances; the other articles are as follows: from New England, from May, 1772, to May, 1773, in Oil, near £100,000; in Pot and Pearl Ash, near £40,000; Furs, £75,000; Whale Fins, £5,000; Lumber, £3,500.

This is to the Port of London only.

The whole amount is about £155,000.

From May, 1773, to May, 1774, the quantity and value was increased; Oil, £114,640; Pot and Pearl Ash, £35,800; Furs, £9,300; Whale Fins, £3,500; Lumber, £9,500.

Q. What sum does he think might be returned in these articles in that year?

A. I apprehend about £420,000.

Q. How long has the debt of £1,000,000 been accruing?

A. It is very difficult to say; but I suppose a debt to such an amount might accrue in less than three years.

Q. Is not interest paid after the year's credit expires?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it punctually paid?

A. Our interest is paid on a running account; and if we are ever paid, we are paid interest as well as principal.

Q. Can a constant losing trade be carried on?

A. We have other resources in this trade; namely, in Ships built purposely for sale, with their freights from the West Indies, besides Bills of Exchange in return for Lumber; but the Lumber is to no great amount.

Q. Does this trade yield a profit?

A. It certainly does.

Q. Whether the interest on the principal is not included in the remittances?

A. It certainly is.

Q. How long has the debt of one million been accruing?

A. It is impossible to answer that question; believe I can only speak with respect to myself; we never tell one another how long our debts have been due.

Q. Whether you give more than one year's credit?

A. Never; but we think ourselves well paid if we receive our money in two years, and then expect interest on our principal.

Q. Whether the Merchants of New England must not be ruined, and become incapable of paying their debts, if this Bill should pass?

A. Yes, if it is carried into a law and remain so.

Q. Whether the nine-tenths of all the remittances are not conveyed by means of the Fisheries?

A. I have made no calculation of it, but believe it is not much short of it.

Q. You said that the amount of the Fisheries came to about £220,000 in one year?

A. I mean only the Cod Fishery, and not the Whale Fishery; and both Fisheries together are almost our whole dependence.

Q. Whether this million Debt has not accrued within these six months?

A. I can't tell how to answer that question. We have exported Goods as usual for the five or six months preceding the Non-Importation Agreement.

Q. Whether considerable fortunes have not been made in this trade?

A. I don't recollect any great fortunes made; that is, I don't remember any person retiring from this trade on having made an easy fortune by it.

Q. Are there more failures in that trade than in any other?

A. I think not; the trade is confined in a few hands; I recollect only one house having stopped payment.

Q. Is it now in fewer hands than formerly it was?

A. By the failure of that House, it is lessened, but not more than that one.

Q. Have not many withdrawn themselves from this trade?

A. Some have considerably.

Q. Where?

A. At Bristol.

Q. Why have they done so?

A. I can give no particular account, why; the Bristol people use to complain of want of remittances.

Q. Would a Merchant withdraw himself from a gaining trade?

A. Certainly not.

Q. Whether quick returns on small profit, are not the life of trade?

A. It certainly is; but we have not had such good fortune with America; but quick returns can't be had in the nature of things from Massachusetts Bay.

Q. Whether the trade to New England has been increased, or decreasing?

A. Increasing for several years.

Q. Can a trade increase without adequate payments?

A. The payments are adequate, though they come slowly.

Q. Whether trade in a few hands is as beneficial as when it is in more hands?

A. Don't know how to answer this question.

Q. Whether he is acquainted with Mr. Reeve, of Bristol?

A. Yes; he was a North American Merchant, and carried on as large a trade as any house in London.

Q. Was he not ruined by the American trade?

A. He had many bad debts, and therefore could not satisfy the demands on him.

Q. Has he not heard that his misfortunes proceeded from other causes?

A. Has heard so.

Q. Whether the Merchant who gives improper credit must not be ruined by that trade in which he gives such credit?

A. This is the case in every trade in the world.

Q. If the Resolutions of the Confess should be adhered to, will it not equally affect the remittances to the Merchants of Great Britain as this Bill?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Whether the Merchants do not carry on business, as carriers, profitably, though the parties to the trade are losers by it?

A. This question, as to the New England trade, is immaterial, as the Ships in the trade belong generally to the Americans.

Q. What is the annual value of the Exports from Great Britain to New England?

A. About 440,000 or £450,000.

Q. In what manner then is the million of Debt to be paid off in two years?

A. I said it might be done in two or three years, taking in all our resources.

Q. Whether he apprehends that in any trade where credit is given, the whole of the debt can be paid at any one time

A. I don't well understand this question; I rather think it may be done, but it is not usual.

Withdrew

Mr. Seth Jenkins. He comes from the Island of Nantucket; there are between five and six thousand inhabitants there, men and boys, employed in the Whale Fishery; they have no other employment there. About twenty families can be maintained from the produce of the Island, which is fifteen miles long, and three broad. There is only one Harbour there, and one hundred and forty Vessels belong to it; one hundred and thirty-two of which are employed in the Whale Fishery, burthen from fifty to one hundred and fifty tons. They belong chiefly to the people called Quakers; nine-tenths of the people on the Island are Quakers. They sail at all seasons of the year for the Whale Fishery; they fish on all parts of the Coast of America, sometimes on the Coast of Africa, and the Coast of Brazils, and even as far as the Falkland Islands. The longest time of a voyage is twelve months; some make two or three trips in a year - I mean those that fish on the Coast of America. The Island is supplied with Corn and other Provisions for their support, from Virginia, Carolina, New-York, Philadelphia, and Connecticut; four sail go in a year to North Carolina, for Provisions and Naval Stores; two or three in the constant trade to New-York, and two in the constant trade to Philadelphia. They bring back Ship-Bread and Flour. The people of this Island receive all their Manufactures from Great Britain, chiefly from London, and pay for them by remittances in Oil. The whole number of the Whale Fishery Ships from North America, is three hundred and nine; they come, forty-eight of them, from Boston Bay, eight from Falmouth, six from Martha's Vineyard, fifty-five from Dartmouth, forty-five from Rhode-Island and Providence, twelve from New-York, three from Connecticut, one hundred and thirty-two from Nantucket.

Q. In case this Bill should pass, and the trade was restrained, and Fishery prevented, what would the inhabitants of Nantucket do?

A. I think these people would be induced to stay at home, in hopes that so severe a law would soon be repealed.

Q. When they could no longer subsist on the Island, what then would they do?

A. They must emigrate to the Continent, and settle there in the best manner they could.

Q. Would they go to Halifax, and settle there?

A. No.

Q. Why do you think so?

A. Because it is a Military Government, and the soil of the country is very bad; and there is nothing to induce them to go there.

Q. Whether you have known any Vessels go from England to the Coast of Africa to fish for Whales?

A. Yes; two or three; but they caught no Fish. I fancy it was because they did not know how. It requires long experience - the Spermaceti Whale Fishery especially.

Q. If the inhabitants of Nantucket are obliged to emigrate to the Continent, and settle there, whether the fishermen would return to the Island again?

A. It is impossible for me to tell.

Q. Whether the inhabitants of the Island don't depend for their subsistence on the Fish they catch on the Coast?

A. Not so much as on those they catch abroad; some from Towns of the Provinces do, but not in general.

Q. How long could they subsist without the Fishery?

A. Perhaps three months.

Withdrew.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had heard the Petitioners, the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, interested in the American Commerce, in support of their Petition by their Agent, and had made a progress in the Bill; and that he was directed by the Committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Bill.

WEDNESDAY, March 1, 1775.

Mr. Rowe, from the Commissioners of the Customs in Scotland, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders, An Account of all British Plantation Tobacco imported into that part of Great Britain called Scotland, from the year 1760 to the year 1775, and the quantity exported from Scotland in the same period; distinguishing the exports and imports in each particular year; and also,

A particular account of the Expense of collecting and managing the Revenue of Customs in Scotland, for three years, ending 10th October, 1773; distinguishing each year.

Ordered, That the said Accounts do lie upon the table, to be perused by the Members of the House.

Mr. Tomkyns, from the Commissioners of the Customs, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders, "An Account of the quantity of Corn and Flour exported from that part of Great Britain called England, to the Sugar Colonies, for ten years past, viz: from Christmas, 1763, to Christmas, 1773; which is as far as the same can be made up; and also,

An Account of the quantity of Train Oil and Blubber imported into England, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing the countries from which the same have been imported; and also,

An Account of the quantity of Rape Seed and Rape Oil imported into England, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up, distinguishing the countries from which the same have been imported; and also,

An Account of the Value of Goods exported from that part of Great Britain called England, to Ireland, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773, which is as far as the same can be made up.

Ordered, That the said Accounts do lie upon the table, to be perused by the Members of the House.

The Order of the Day being read;

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited;

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received upon Monday morning next:

Ordered, That Mr. Benjamin Lister and Mr. George Davis do attend this House upon Monday morning next, when the said Report is ordered to be received, in order to be examined touching the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and principal inhabitants of the Town and County of Poole.

MONDAY, March 6, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited, was committed, the amendments which the Committee had made to the Bill, and which they had directed him to report to the House; and he read the Report in his place, and afterwards delivered the Bill, with the amendments, in at the Clerk's table, where the Report was read.

And Mr. Benjamin Lister, one of the persons who was ordered to attend this House upon the report of the said Bill, in order to be examined touching the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and the principal inhabitants of the Town and County of Poole, was called in, and at the Bar examined relative thereto.

Mr. Lister says he is a Merchant trading to Newfoundland; has traded thither for thirty-eight years.

Q. Can the foreign markets be supplied, if the New England Fishery is stopped?

A. They certainly may.

Q. What is your reason for saying so?

A. We can extend the Fisheries to any degree, having Men, Money, and Ships to carry it on?

Q. What number of Ships are now employed in the British Newfoundland Fishery?

A. About four hundred sail, burthen about thirty-six thousand tons; upwards of two thousand Fishing Shallops, burthen twenty thousand tons more.

Q. What number of Men are now employed in that trade?

A. About twenty thousand.

Q. What number of those return yearly to Great Britain and Ireland?

A. About twelve thousand.

Q. What number of green Men are taken out yearly?

A. Three thousand and upwards.

Q. How many quintals of Fish are taken annually?

A. Above six hundred thousand quintals.

Q. What is the value of each quintal, on an average of seven years, at market?

A. About fourteen Shillings per quintal.

Q. What other advantages arise from the British Newfoundland Fishery, besides the Cod Fishery?

A. Salmon, Cod Oil, Seal Oil, and Furs.

Q. What quantity of Salmon?

A. Three thousand tierces and upwards.

Q. What are they worth per tierce at market?

Q. Three Pounds five Shillings per tierce, or something more.

Q. What quantity of Cod Oil is made?

A. Three thousand tons.

Q. What is it worth per ton?

A. On an average, twenty-three Pounds per ton.

Q. What quantity of Seal Oil?

A. About eight hundred tons yearly.

Q. What is it worth per ton?

A. Twenty-five Pounds per ton.

Q. What is the value of the Seal Skins and Furs, per annum?

A. Between three and four thousand Pounds; but the quantity of Seal Skins might be more but for the heavy duty here, which amounts to a prohibition. For which reason so many are not brought to this market as otherwise would be, but they are carried to New England and there manufactured into Leather for Shoes, Boots, &c., and carried back to Newfoundland.

Q. In what manner are the returns made for the produce of the British Newfoundland Cod Fishery?

A. Some part in the produce of the country to which the Fish is sent, and some in specie; others in raw materials, Silk, Oil, Barilla, Cotton, and Bills of Exchange.

Q. In what manner do they carry on the Fishery in the time of war?

A. In a much less degree than in time of peace, on account of the Men being impressed; a great many go to New England to avoid being impressed, and are employed in the Fishery there, from whence they do not return.

Q. You said that twenty thousand Men are employed yearly in this Fishery, how happens it that only twelve thousand of those return to Great Britain or Ireland?

A. The other eight thousand remain in Newfoundland, and are employed in building Boats, Shallops, in catching Furs, and in the Seal Fishery, which is carried on in the Winter.

Q. The residence then, you think, of the eight thousand Men there is necessary for carrying on the British Fishery?

A. Yes, I think it is.

Q. Whether the Ships fitted out for the Newfoundland Fishery, from Great Britain, are not fitted out at one-third more expense than those from North America?

A. I am no judge of the matter.

Q. How many Men are employed to one hundred ton of Shipping, on an average?

A. I have not considered the matter.
And then he was directed to withdraw.

And the amendments made by the Committee to the said Bill being severally read a second time, were, upon the question severally put thereupon, with an amendment to one of them, agreed to by the House.

Mr. Rice moved to add a clause to the Bill for exempting the Ships belonging to the inhabitants of Nantucket employed in the Whale Fishery only.

And the said clause was twice read with a blank, which being filled up, the said clause was, upon the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

A motion was made that the Bill, with the amendments, be engrossed:

Lord Howe expatiated on the necessity of the measure, as the only moderate means of bringing the disobedient Provinces to a sense of their duty, without involving the Empire in all the horrors of a civil war.

Mr. Charles Fox said, that this Bill must have been calculated to put an end to all that remained of the Legislative authority of Great Britain over America. That it must be intended to shew to the Colonies that there was no one branch of supreme authority, which Parliament might not abuse in such a manner, as to render it reasonable to deny, and necessary to resist it. To prove this he went through the history of the several steps, by which the authority of Parliament was denied, by having been abused. At first said he, the Americans being pressed by Parliament's not choosing to leave them their old privilege, whether that privilege was by law, custom, or mere indulgence, of taxing themselves internally, they denied only our right of internal taxation. However, it was soon proved to them, by argument and practice, that an external tax could be made to answer all the purposes, and to produce all the mischiefs, of internal taxation. They then denied the right of taxing for Supply. Parliament next proceeded violently to deprive them of their Charters, and to make them other Acts relative to their trials; then they denied your power of internal Legislation. But still in the midst of all their violence and all their provocation to it, they never hitherto have formally rejected the power of Parliament to bind their trade. But the British Legislature is now to convince the Americans, that if but a single branch of Legislative power is left to this country, we can make that single power answer at1 the purposes of a power to tax.

This Bill, which is to restrain their commerce until they submit, until they cease to resist our taxing authority, and indeed, whatever else is thought fit to be imposed on them, will convince, he said, the Americans, that this power, thus used, may be made by far the most oppressive, and worse than any of those they had hitherto denied. He was quite satisfied, that the Bill Was meant for nothing else but to exasperate the Colonies into open and direct rebellion. Hitherto rebellion was only asserted, and that ambiguously, of one Colony. It would from this Bill probably become apparent, and universal in all; and thus give an opportunity for drawing the sword, and throwing away the scabbard. He indeed acquitted the Ministry of a design of raising a rebellion for the mere purpose of havock and destruction. But said, that as by their injudicious measures they had brought the Colonies into a state of the greatest disobedience, disorder, and confusion, without being at the same time within the legal description of rebellion, this was a state of things full of the greatest difficulties, and in which it required the utmost nicety to conduct Government. But when things were brought to the length of rebellion, the course of proceeding, however desperate, was simple and obvious. And now, as by this Act all means of acquiring a livelihood, or of receiving provisions were cut off, no other alternative was left, but starving or rebellion.

Mr. Jenkinson drew a very different inference from the fact of the progressive detail of the several parts of our Legislative authority in America. That fact, so strongly stated by Mr. Fox, shewed dearly that the Colonists aimed at a rebellious independence from the beginning; for having at first only denied our right of internal taxation, when that right was modelled to their own pretences, they quarrelled just as violently with this mode as with the former. Afterwards, when their multiplied disorders had made internal regulations necessary, they denied the power of making these regulations. They first provoked penalties by their disobedience, and then denied the right of the power which had been put under a necessity of, inflicting those penalties. The reasons, he said, alleged in censure of the acts of legislature, were in reality their strongest justification and best panegyrics. He thought there, fore this Act to be in every respect just, and considering the offence of those who are the object of it, merciful.

Mr. T. Townshend urged the cruelty and injustice of an act which made no discrimination between innocence and guilt, which starved all alike, and which had a tendency to fix an eternal hatred of this country and its Legislature in the minds of the Americans. With regard to the original provocation stated to have produced the penalties, he denied the fact; but asserted, on the contrary that our violating their privileges, or grossly shocking their old respectable prejudices, first produced the disobedience, and then the disobedience was punished by the most cruel and unnatural acts.

The Solicitor General of Scotland (Mr. Henry Dundas) said, the Act had his most hearty, approbation. That it was just, because provoked by the most criminal disobedience: it was merciful, because that disobedience would have justified the severest military execution. This measure was not sanguinary and as to the famine, which wasso pathetically lamented, he was afraid it would not be produced by this Act. That though prevented from fishing in the Sea, the New Englanders had fish in their Rivers, to which this Act did not prevent them from resorting; and that though he understood their country was not fit for grain, yet they had a grain of their own, Indian Corn, on which they might subsist full as well as they deserved; but whether they might so subsist or not, was no part of his consideration. He looked on the Act as coercive, and that the coercion which put the speediest end to the dispute, was certainly the most effectual. That when it was said no alternative was left to the New Englanders but to starve or rebel, this was not the fact, for there was another way, to submit. He wished, however, that some test to discriminate the innocent from the guilty had been adopted. That this test, notwithstanding it had been originally stated as part of the plan by Lord North, had been dropped by his Lordship. That it might serve to introduce a rule of obedience for all, and might prevent the innocent from being involved with the guilty in a common punishment. But the Act was on the whole so right, and he approved and admired it so much, that he could not quarrel with it for this defect.

As to what had been apprehended from the loss to the Merchants of Old England, by disabling those of the New to pay their debts, he said, that when the Colonists had submitted, they might then resume their Fisheries and their Trade, and thus be enabled to pay their debts. In the mean time, that part of the capital stock of England, which was now employed in carrying on the Fisheries of New England, would be employed in carrying on our own, and thus our Merchants could suffer no loss whatsoever. This was as dear as any demonstration of Euclid.

Lord John Cavendish was shocked with the perfect ease and alacrity with which they voted famine to a whole people; and he was in particular surprised at the ideas of clemency, entertained by the learned gentleman who spoke last. He commended this measure, because it was not sanguinary; hut to kill by starving, was not cruelty; and provided a man's blood was not shed, he might be destroyed with great gentleness - in any other way whatsoever. This Act he considered as alienating the Americans for ever, and rendering useless any possible plan of reconciliation.

Mr. Rice did not adopt this proposition but with the greatest pain and reluctance. He knew it was harsh; but that harsh measures were unfortunately necessary. He was satisfied from a careful comparison of all the parts of the proceedings of the Americans with each other, that independency was their object; that they intended to throw off the commercial restrictions, as well as the taxes: on which latter point he was as much inclined to relax as any other gentleman, if he could be tolerably assured that such relaxation would not be introductory to a further and a worse opposition on their parts He thought he saw, by the obstinate conduct of Boston in holding out so long, and under such inconveniences, that their designs were very deep; and he was convinced that the satisfaction to Custom House Officers, required as a condition of pardon by the Act which shut up their Port, was their principal reason for this stubborn opposition. And this pointed clearly to the true object of their resistance.

Mr. Edmund Burke was afraid any debate on this subject was to little purpose. When this Parliament; originally disengaged to any system, and free to choose among all, had, previous to any examination whatsoever, begun by adopting the proceedings of the last, the whole line of our publick conduct was then determined. [Here the majority raised a great cry of approbation.] He said the cry was natural, and the inference from what he had said just; that the road by penitence to amendment was, he knew, humiliating and difficult; and that the greater part of mankind were disposed, like Macbeth, to think

"I am in blood
"Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
"Returning were as tedious as go o'er;"

and thus they pass towards the further bank, be the channel ever so wide, or the flood ever so deep and rapid. That as this measure was in the same spirit as all the former, he did not doubt but that it would be productive of the very same consequence.

That this was, in effect, the Boston Port Bill, but upon infinitely a larger scale. That evil principles are prolifick; this Boston Port Bill begot this New England Bill; this New England Bill will beget a Virginia Bill; again a Carolina Bill, and that will beget a Pennsylvania Bill; till one by one Parliament will ruin all its Colonies, and root up all its commerce, until the Statute Book becomes nothing but a black and bloody roll of proscription - a frightful code of rigour and tyranny - a monstrous digest of Acts of penalty, incapacity, and general attainder; and that, open it were you will, you will find a title for destroying some trade, or ruining some Province.

That the scheme of Parliament was new and unheard of in any civilized Nation, "to preserve your authority by destroying your Dominions." It was rather the idea of hostility between independent states, where one not being able to conquer another, thinks to reduce its strength gradually, by destroying its trade and cutting off its resources. That this mode was never used by Princes towards their subjects in rebellion; the maxim in such cases always was, to cut off the rebels but to spare the country, because its strength is the strength of the Sovereign himself. Here the principle was reversed; the force used against the rebels was trifling (though very expensive) but the trade, which was the wealth of the country, was to be destroyed.

He then entered into the difference of expense, and the loss between the two modes; and proved, in detail, that these Bills would, in all probability, cost the Nation more than the maintenance of an Army of forty thousand men. That when things were come to violences he thought the sword much the most effectual, and though severe, not so unjust as these universal proscriptions, because it would fall only on those who resisted. But this Act confounded all kinds of people, all sexes, all ages, in one common ruin. That nothing could be at once more foolish, more cruel, and more insulting, than to hold out, as a resource to the starving Fishermen, Ship Builders, and the infinite number of other Mechanicks employed in Trade and Fishery, and rained by this Act, that after the plenty of the Ocean, they may poke in the brooks, and rake in the puddles of their respective countries, and diet on what we considered as husks and draft for hogs.

It was, he said, foolish and insulting; because, when you deprive a man of his trade and occupation, you deprive him of the means of his livelihood, if there were ever so much Fish in the streams, or Corn in the fields. That a Shoemaker's livelihood goes when a Fisherman can no longer pay him for his shoes. He has no resource in other people's plenty. How is he to get at Horse-beans or Indian Corn, or at the worst of food for himself and his starving family? Then he shewed that the ruin of the staple trade of a people, involved in it the ruin of the whole community; and proved, by entering mmately into its nature and employment, that the British capital employed in the New England trade could not possibly be turned to the British Fishery; and (treating very lightly the demonstration of Euclid) he shewed, that one year's intermission of the course of the New England foreign trade, would be the certain loss of the whole debt now due to the English Merchants.

But the point on which he rested most was this: the sentence was, in the mildest way, beggary, if not famine, on four great Provinces. The condition of their redemption was, "When it should be made appear to the Governours, and the majority of the Council in two of these Provinces, that the laws would be obeyed." By what evidence, said he, is this to be made to appear? Who is to produce it? What facts are to be proved? What rule has the person who is to make it appear, to go by? What rule have the two Governours to determine, so as to acquit them in employing or in refusing, either to Government here, or to the people there? You sentence, said he, to famine, at least three hundred thousand people in two Provinces, at the mere arbitrary will and pleasure of two men whom you do not know; for you do not know who will be Governours when this Act takes place. And, lest these two should risk an act of mercy, you add, as a control to them, the majority of two Councils, whom you do not know, and one of them, at present, has no existence. And as to the other Provinces, Connecticut and Rhode-Island, the Act has not left a man in these two Provinces, who, by the exertion even of an arbitrary discretion, can relieve two hundred thousand people more, or any innocent or repenting individual, let their behaviour be what it will. A Governour of another Province, who can never regularly and officially know their true state, can alone be arbitrary in favour of justice.

This, said he, is because in these two ill-starred Provinces, the people choose their Governours; but is that a crime in individuals, which is the legal Constitution of the country? If it be a bad one, England has given it to them, and has not taken even a step towards altering it. On this point, of the unheard of power given to Governours, of starving so many hundreds of thousands at their mere pleasures, of which, he said, no history of real, and even no fabulous invention of fictitious tyranny, had ever furnished an example; he dwelt a long time, and placed it in an infinite variety of lights, and kindled into such warmth, that he was at length called to order. But he continued to repeat the strong terms, as, he said, he had a right to give such epithets to the Bill as he pleased, until it had passed the House. If that should be the case, he would then be silent, because it would be against order to speak of it as it deserved, and against prudence, to offend a body of men who had so much power, and would shew, by passing that Bill, how harsh an use they were disposed to make of it.

He said, however, he was convinced by the whole tenour of the debate, as well as by his private conversation, that most of those who would vote for this Bill had never read it; that what they did was not out of malice, but out of respect to the opinions of others, who, by presenting them such a Bill, shewed how little they deserved this unlimited confidence. He said, that if any were in that situation, he hoped they would have the benefit of the prayer made for those who alone had done an act worse than this, "Forgive them, they know not what they do."

The Lord Advocate of Scotland began with disclaiming any thing of cruelty, as foreign to his nature and disposition; but authority must be preserved, though the guilty, and sometimes even the guiltless, by accident, should suffer. That rigour was annexed to the idea of punishment, and that punishment was right or wrong, according to the desert of the parties; that whatever necessity made this punishment so rigorous, or extended it to so vast a latitude, was owing to those who, taking part with America, in this House, or elsewhere, encouraged them to resist the just authority of Parliament. They were, he said, guilty of the blood of the Colonists. That he was sure the taxation of America was just and defensible, by every principle of the Constitution; and that though this ground of taxation was very much beaten, yet, as the whole question originated there, it was necessary to shew the foundation of the right; this he did by a distinct enumeration of the Acts of Parliament. He was clear and methodical; but the House was not disposed to listen to an argument which they had heard so frequently discussed. He said, with temper, that he gave way to that disposition of the House, and was content to give his approbation to the Bill.

The question then being put, the House divided: Yeas 215; Noes 61.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a third time upon Wednesday next, if the Said Bill shall be then engrossed.

WEDNESDAY, March 8, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the third reading of the Bill now engrossed, to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain and Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited, be now read;

And the said Order being read accordingly;

The said Bill was read the third time.

Mr. Hartley moved to add the following engrossed clause to the Bill, by way of rider:

"Provided always, and be it further enacted, That 'nothing in this Act contained, shall extend, or be construed to extend, to prohibit the importation into any or 'either of the said Colonies or Provinces, of Fuel, Corn, 'Meal, Flour, or other Victual brought coastwise from any 'part of America.'"

This clause, said he, cannot be objected to, even by the most vindictive spirit, against the four Provinces of New England, who are the objects of this Bill, as it is extracted from the Boston Port Bill of last year; the lenity or humanity of which was never so much as pretended, even by its advocates. There cannot be a reason why you should throw away this year the little share of humanity which you had the last; more especially as we are come to discover, and even to acknowledge, by the votes of this House, that we have proceeded hitherto, in this business with America, with rashness, misjudgment, and precipitation. The vote I allude to is passed but a few days since; which says, or pretends to say, that it would have been 'proper' (that is the term) to have proceeded in a way of asking a supply of the Americans, by the constitutional way of requisitions, before proceeding to compulsory or forcible methods. Having confessed ourselves wrong in the foundation, it is but equal justice to our fellow-subjects of America, to suppose that those riots and resistance would not have happened, if we had not begun with them confessedly in an unconstitutional way. Surely, then, it is not a time to add to the severity of our acts, in proportion as we find that we have been unjust in the outset, and that they have been less to blame. It is surely but a little matter to ask, that you would not be more cruel towards America, who have never been heard on their defence this year, than you were the last. Besides, what construction can the Town of Boston put upon your present measures, if you refuse the clause now offered? They will be besieged, as in actual war with any foreign enemy. General Gage has fortified the Neck which joins Boston to the Continent, by which he may intercept provisions; and by this Bill you proclaim the same intention by Sea. Do you expect that they will submit to be starved, in passive obedience? What resource have they left, but resistance; and, perhaps, to take advantage of the smallness of numbers of General Gage's Troops, before they are reinforced; for this Act puts it out of all doubt that you mean to proceed to all extremities. I have been informed by those who know best the temper of the Americans, and I hope and believe that they will hold out their patience to the utmost, and that they will not strike the first blow; but what is the difference to them, whether you strike the first blow by the musket or the sword, or to equal effect, by famine? The refusal of this clause will be a declaration on your part, that you mean to bring famine upon them to the utmost of your power, and therefore a warning to them of the mercy which they are to expect at your hands. As to the Bill in general, it has been so ably debated, that I shall only add two remarks. This Bill, by destroying the North American Fishery, not only destroys that nursery of Seamen, but will disable the Provinces under the prohibition, from the means of paying their debts to this country, who, therefore, will finally be the sufferers; and when the next year comes, and you find this consequence, you will then turn accusers of the North Americans for not paying their debts, and you will add, according to the usual falsehoods towards the Americans, that they never intended to pay their debts; and, by the distance of the place, and the falsehood of representations, you will impute those very effects which you have produced yourselves, as the justifying causes of resentment. This is the unjust way in which the Americans have been treated on all occasions. I myself asked the other day, why, on a particular occasion of a slight riot of not more than a few hours continuance, four Regiments and a train of Artillery were ordered to Boston? To justify this enormous intervention of the military, I was told in this House, that indeed the riots were trifling, but that the Americana had come to a resolution to arm the country. What, then, was the real fact, as testified by dates? The fact was, that the resolution to arm was not taken till the Troops were seen in the Offing. It was the sight of the Troops, upon so trivial an occasion, that gave them to understand what they were to expect; and by dates the fact is verified, that they did not take to arms till some months after the Troops were ordered; but it was upon their first notice of the Troops being to come, and the resolution to arm against the worst, was actually debated but a few hours before the Troops were landed. So it is that facts are misrepresented in America, and so let me put in my caution now, that the Americans do now actually pay their debts like honest men, to the utmost of their power, and let me be beforehand with this charge; if, when the natural consequences of these measures come next year, we should hear any false accusations of the Americans, as combining not to pay their debts. I shall make but one remark more, but which seems to me to be of the utmost importance to the whole commercial system of England, which is, that the Plantation-built bottoms are two-thirds, or three-quarters, or all the bottoms upon which the British Merchandise, to every quarter of the globe, is carried on. When we meditate a blow at the American trade, we should recollect at least that there is this one manufacture (if I may so call it) of Ship-building, upon the encouragement of which our very existence as a trading people depends. However we may think it our interest to suppress the rivalry of the Colonies with ourselves in other Manufactures, yet in this trade of Ship-building, they are our most material and essential support. This revengeful blow at the American Ship-building, will fall most immediately and fatally upon the Manufacturers and Merchants of every commercial article in this Kingdom. For these reasons I am against the whole principle of the Bill, and if we cannot prevail to have it rejected, I humbly move, at least, the admission of the clause which I have just offered.

Lord North said, as the Bill not only meant to restrain the Colonies of New England from trade, so long as they would not trade with us, but also to let them feel the inconveniences which they must be exposed to while they deny the authority of Parliament, he could not, until their conduct gave Parliament some grounds for it, agree in opinion that Parliament should relax from the coercion which this Bill meant to execute. He thought it was right that they should feel some of those distresses which the power of this country could bring upon them, while they dared to set their power in opposition to it. But even in the exertion of force, nay of arms, if it should become necessary, he never should wish measures which were cruel. The case of the Boston Port Bill was quite different. The Town of Boston had obstructed our trade, and had committed an act of outrage against it; it was proper, therefore, to prevent that Town from being a place of trade, until they had made recompense; but as they had not then formally arrayed themselves against the power as well as authority of this country, further restraints, such as were in the present Bill, were not then necessary, and the permitting Provisions and Fuel to go up to the Town by water, was inserted in that Bill. The further restraints which a more violent conduct had now rendered necessary, were inserted in the Bill, and instead of relaxations from these, more severe ones must follow, if their conduct made such further necessary.

Mr. Burke was warm against the Bill. It was not, he said, sanguinary, it did not mean to shed blood, but, to suit some gentleman's humanity, it only meant to starve five hundred thousand people, men, women, and children at the breast. Some gentlemen had even expressed their approbation of famine, in preference to fire and sword. This Bill not only had taken from these people the means of subsisting themselves by their own labour, but, rejecting the clause now proposed, took from them the means of being subsisted by the charity of their friends. You had reduced the poor people to beggary, and now you take the beggar's scrip from them. You even dash from the mouth of hunger the morsel which the band of charity would stretch out to it. On the subject of famine he was fine and pathetic.

Lord Clare said he would not enter the list with the honourable gentleman who spoke last; it would be the waging an unequal war; but he had in his hand a friend who was a match for him; my old friend, Sir Joshua Ghee, a great friend to America, though no patriot; a man who has written better on trade than any other man living, and who knew more of America. Now, sir, my friend, Joshua Ghee, with a kind of prophetick spirit, says, if ever the people of New England should aim to set up for themselves, what must we do? Do, sir, why the very things which are now doing. Joshua Ghee says you must restrain their trade, and prohibit them from the Fishery, and you will soon bring them to their senses. I hope Joshua Ghee will be a prophet there too. But here are his words. [He here read a long passage from the book, and then commented on it.] Now, sir, nobody that ever read this passage, thought this conduct, as here proposed, to be cruel, but necessary and wise, sir. But since we have got a language in this House that is fitter for the turbulent harangues of an American Congress, than for a British Parliament, every thing which would restrain American independency, is unjust and cruel. But if so, sir, how come gentlemen not to oppose the augmentation of the Army and Navy for these purposes. They retired from that question; some never looked to it; others retired sturdily like Ajax; they did not turn their backs, but, sir, they retired.

Mr. T. Townshend. If the augmentation of the Navy and Army had been proposed as a force with which to make war on America, I would, sir, have been as sturdy as Ajax, not retiring, but attacking; I would have set my face against it; I would have used every power I had to oppose it; I would have carried my opposition to turbulency, since the noble Lord will so describe it. The reason why I did not oppose it, I will avow; it is a fair one. I knew that it was determined that a great part of the force which we then had was to be sent to America. I trembled for the safety of this Realm, thus stripped of the strength intended originally for its defence; I was glad when I heard an additional defence was to be proposed for it. I would not oppose this necessary measure, though I would not in any thing mix myself with the measures of Ministry. He then went into the argument on the subject of famine and starving.

Mr. Charles Fox. I think, sir, you have now, by refusing this proposition, completed the system of your folly. You had some friends yet left in New England. You yourselves made a parade of the number you had there. But you have not treated them like friends! Rather than not make the ruin of that devoted country complete, your friends are to be involved in one common famine! How must they feel, what must they think, when the people against Whom they have stood out in support of your measures, say to them, "You see now what friends in England you have depended upon; they separated you from your real friends there, while they hoped to ruin us by it; but since they cannot destroy us without mixing you in the common carnage, your merits to them will not now save you; you are to be butchered and starved indiscriminately with us. What have you to look to for support but resistance? You are treated in common with us as Rebels, whether you rebel or not. Your loyalty has ruined you. Rebellion alone - if resistance is rebellion, can save you from famine and ruin." When these things are said to them, what can they answer? What part have they to take? They must resist in common with those with whom you have united them in ruin. I thought your measures were intended to divide the people. But when you mean to destroy you unite all, because you wish to destroy all. Thus much I thought it right to say, that I might mark the spirit of your measures.

Governour Pownall having now, after two days debate, heard so much about the starving principles of this Bill, and of the famine which was to be the effect of it in New England, rose to say a few words, in order, by stating the fact, to wipe off from the Bill an imputation, which not only the oratory of those who opposed it, but the indiscretion of some who had defended it, brought upon it; the foul stain of hard heartedness and cruelty; as also to calm any apprehensions which gentlemen, by their oratory, working on a fact taken for granted, had endeavoured to raise in the breasts of the humane. As to the starving and famine, supposed as an effect which might follow from the operations of this Bill, it was a supposition too idle to combat. The Colonies of New England were provision Colonies; they were great grazing settlements; they had not, indeed, been equally attentive to tillage as the farmers of the middle Colonies had been, but they raised sufficient Corn, Rye, and Barley, for their subsistence; that although they imported some Flour and Biscuit from Philadelphia and New-York, yet the first was chiefly for the luxury of the rich, and the latter for fitting out their Shipping. If it became necessary to restrain their trade, the latter would not be wanted; and if people will go to war, they must expect to give up the former. If the Bill proceeded upon any such principles of hard-heartedness, or if he could see any such cruel effects in it as had been stated, he would have opposed it instead of acquiescing in it; instead of any such mischievous effect on the Colonies, we should have need to watch that it did not produce a contrary effect, namely, that of turning their thoughts more seriously to tillage; if it should, might it not have the effect fabled in the story of Antæus, that the moment in which they touch the ground, from that moment they should derive strength. He concluded by saying that he considered this Bill simply as a commercial regulation; as a temporary withholding of those indulgences which particular laws and connivance had given, in relaxation of the general laws on which the Plantation trade had been originally established; as withholding these indulgences so long as the Colonies should think fit to prohibit the trade of Great Britain; it was from seeing and considering it in this light alone, that he acquiesced in it.

Mr. Henry Dundas, (Solicitor General of Scotland.) In what I said in a late debate, I did not say that I approved of measures of starving a whole people; but that, if matters between us and the Americans were come to that issue, that we must at last use force, and perhaps the sword; surely those measure which would prevent them from being able to resist, might prevent us from coming to the harsher measures of the sword and bloodshed, I thought these measures would bring them to their senses, and would therefore, in the end, prove mercy to them. This I hoped would be the true operation and effect of this Bill; and, therefore, approving that operation, I must disapprove this motion.

On the question, that the said clause be read a second time? The House divided: Yeas, 58; Noes, 188.

So it passed in the Negative.

Resolved, That the Bill do Pass; and that the Title be, An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations.

Ordered, That Mr. Cooper do carry the Bill to the Lords, and desire their concurrence.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, Februury 27, 1775.

Upon reading the Petition of the Aldermen, Sheriff, principal Manufacturers, and Inhabitants of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham, whose names are thereunto subscribed, setting forth -

"That the Petitioners very sincerely lament the unhappy differences which have already arisen between Great Britain and her Colonies, and cannot, without great concern and abhorrence, reflect upon that seditious spirit which hath broken out With such violence in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, particularly in the Town of Boston, whose inhabitants, by their disobedience, have set at defiance the Laws and Government of this Kingdom; that the Petitioners; from the present disposition of the Americans, most humbly apprehend that the Trade and Commerce of Great Britain with her Colonies, cannot be effectually restored, and permanently secured, without a due and proper submission and obedience to the Laws and Government of this Kingdom;"and therefore, praying their Lordships "to take such measures as to them may seem most likely to secure and maintain the supreme authority, honour, and dignity of Great Britain, enforce a due obedience to her laws, and restore subordination, order, and good government in America."

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table.

THURSDAY, March 9, 1775.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Mr. Cooper, and others;

With a Bill, entituled, "An Act to restrain the Trade "and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay "and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and "Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the "banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

the said Bill was read the first time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

FRIDAY, March 10, 1775.

Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time on Wednesday next, and the Lords be summoned.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1775.

Mr. Rowe, from the Commissioners of the Customs in Scotland, delivered at the Bar,

An Account of what number of Ships from Scotland have been employed in the Whale Fishery to Davis's Straits and the Greenland Seas, with the irrespctive names and burthens, from whence they were fitted out, and at what Port they were discharged; also, what quantity of Oil and Whale Fins each Ship has imported, from the 10th of October, 1773, to the 10th of October, 1774.

Ordered, That the said Account do lie on the table.

Upon reading the Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, taking notice of a Bill depending in this House, entituled, "An Act to restrain the Trade and "Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and "New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, "to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the "West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations;" and praying, "for the "reasons therein mentioned, that the said Bill may not pass "into a law;"

It is Ordered. That the said Petition do lie upon the table.

The Marquis of Rockingham presented the following Petition against the Bill:

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of LONDON, interested in the AMERICAN Commerce, humbly Sheweth

That your Petitioners are deeply concerned to find that there is now depending before this right honourable House, a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain restrictions, and for a time to be limited.

Your Petitioners beg leave to represent, that the said Bill, should it pass into a law, will, in its operation, deprive thousands of his Majesty's loyal subjects of their actual subsistence, and reduce them to extreme distress, even that of famine, the said Provinces not generally raising Corn sufficient for their own support; and by this Bill, they will be prevented from receiving any Supplies from their sister Colonies, and precluded from their natural resource - the Sea,

Your Petitioners have reason to believe, that very great numbers of men, bred and employed in the Fisheries, who in hardiness and intrepidity are not exceeded by any in this extensive Empire, will be impelled, by the pressing calls of hunger and want, and a just feeling of their violated rights, to such a conduct as may be productive of devastation and bloodshed, which may endanger the peace and welfare of his Majesty's American Dominions; or be induced to employ themselves in fishing for the French, and thereby give our rivals the means of supplying the markets in Europe, which will render it difficult for us ever to regain that valuable branch of commerce.

Your Petitioners beg leave further to represent, that there is now due from the said Provinces and Colonies, to the City of London only, one million sterling, and upwards; that their remittances are almost entirely made by means of the Fisheries, and consequently, the ruin brought on those Colonies will deeply injure the commercial interest of Great Britain, and ultimately fall on the landed property of these Kingdoms.

That among the other grievances of which our fellow-subjects in America so generally complain, is their being deprived of Trial by Jury in particular cases, and the extension of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Courts; which grievances your Petitioners, with much concern, find are not only continued, but extended by the present Bill; and they think it their duty to represent it as their firm opinion to this right honourable House, that the disquietudes which universally prevail in the minds of their fellow-subjects in America, will be increased and confirmed by this Bill, which is unjust, as they conceive, because it involves the punishment of those who are allowed to be innocent, with those who are supposed to be guilty, and that these disquietudes will never be removed, unless lenient measures are pursued, and their grievances redressed.

Your Petitioners therefore most humbly pray, that the said Bill may not pass into a law.

The Petition was read.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table.

The Marquis of Rockingham observed, with regard to the City Petition, that it originated from a body, the members of which demanded every attention, on account of their official respectability. The Petition of the Merchants and Traders, his Lordship did not conceive stood in need of the collateral aid of oral evidence, which, however, was ready to be produced at the bar, if the House deemed such evidence necessary. the general principles of the Bill he inveighed against, as so many glaring infringements on the Constitution, and consequently fraught with every political evil to be apprehended from despotism in the extreme.

The Earl of Sandwich entirely dissented in opinion from the illustrious Marquis; he wished that evidence might be called in support of the allegations contained in each Petition; for as he was confident that most of the noble Lords present were either partially mistaken in, or wholly misunderstood the nature of, the American Fishery, his Lordship proposed on the part of the Bill, to have such evidences called as in his opinion would elucidate the several facts, and communicate that species of information necessary for the House to be possessed of, previous to the commencement of debates on the merits of the Bill.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, to desire, "That they will give leave to Sir Hugh Palliser and "Molyneux Shuldham, Esquire, Members of that House,

"to attend this House this day, in order to their being examined upon the second reading of the Bill," entitled "An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and "to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations."

The House was adjourned during pleasure.

The House was resumed.

The Order of the Day being read for the second reading of the Bill;

Lord Camden delivered it as his opinion, that to save the House trouble, and afford every possible information to the Members, each witness in support of the allegations contained in the Petition of the North American Merchants, should have such questions propounded to him by Mr. Barclay, who had signed the Petitions, as he might think tended to throw light on the subject. Lord Camden observed, that the House of Commons had adopted this method, and as for his part, he professed himself entirely unacquainted with the subject; he should be happy in having a sensible man propose such trading questions as might be most likely to obtain from the several evidences the information required.

The Earl of Suffolk declared, that what had fallen from the noble Lord who spoke last, contributed more than any thing to confirm him in the vote he should give; for that the other House had permitted Mr. Barclay to question the evidence, was the very reason why he would wish to reprobate the adoption of a practice which stood unsupported by a single instance recorded in the Journals of the House. His Lordship therefore was for having the questions proposed in the usual mode by the House.

Lord Camden retorted, that as precedents, if good, merited every respectful attention, he sincerely hoped the House would not reject the adoption of a particular mode, merely because the Commons had thought fit to accept it in the examination of witnesses at their bar.

The Duke of Richmond was strenuous for finishing the altercation, by observing, that if the House really wished for information, the most likely method to obtain it, deserved the preference; and, in the noble Duke's opinion, it would much better answer the proposed end, to have Mr. Barclay primarily propound the questions, than that that House should propose them at second hand. If, however, the latter method was agreed on, the noble Duke was ready to acquiesce, although it would detain the Members longer from that dinner, to which their hunger, betrayed in their petulance, stimulated them to repair.

The House rejecting the idea of Mr. Barclay propounding any questions to the witnesses, it was agreed that the usual forms of the House should be observed.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons, to desire "That they will give leave to Sir Hugh Palliser and Molyneux Shuldham, Esquire, Members of that House, to attend their Lordships, in order to their being "examined upon the second reading of the Bill," return answer, "That the Commons give leave for them to attend, if they think fit."

Then Seth Jenkins, a Quaker, was called in, and, upon his affirmation, acquainted the House "That he was a Mariner, and is well acquainted with the Island of Nantucket:

Lord Rockingham moved that Mr. Barclay might be called and examined first; but on Mr. Barclay's declining to give evidence, (not having personal knowledge of the facts) Mr. Jenkins was called.

Duke of Richmond. What is your profession?

Jenkins. A Mariner, in the Newfoundland Fishery; a Master of a Vessel.

Duke of Richmond. Do you know the Island of Nantucket?

Jenkins. Yes I do.

Duke of Richmond. How many inhabitants has it?

Jenkins. Six or seven thousand.

Duke of Richmond. By what do they exist?

Jenkins. The Fishery of Cod, and of Whale, &c.

Duke of Richmond. What is the size of that Island?

Jenkins. Fifteen miles long, and three broad.

Lord Camden. From whence are the inhabitants fed?

Jenkins. From the Main, from Jersey, New-York, &c.

that the number of inhabitants upon the said Island is between five and six thousand, who are almost all employed in the Fisheries; that the number of Vessels belonging to the said Island is one hundred and forty sail, eight of which are employed in the Coasting Trade, and the rest in the Fisheries; that the said Island is about fifteen miles long, and three miles broad - distant from the Main seven leagues; that it has but one Harbour; that the produce of the said Island will not maintain above twenty families; that nine-tenths of the inhabitants are Quakers; that the Vessels employed in the Whale Fishery sail at all seasons; that the limits of the Whale Fishery extend to Falkland Islands, and the Coast of Africa; that their Fishing Vessels are generally twelve months on their voyage, sometimes fourteen months; that this Island is supplied with Corn from the Provinces of Carolina, New-York, Virginia and Rhode-Island; that it is supplied with Manufactures from London; that all their Oil comes to Great Britain, except a little which is consumed in the Colonies; that if the inhabitants of this Island are restrained from Fishing, they would wait quietly till the Act was repealed, but that they could not subsist above a month; that the inhabitants might be under the necessity of removing from the Island, but would not go to Halifax, it being a Military Government; that the Vessels from England employed in the Whale Fishery, have little or no success in it, owing to their not understanding it; that this Island formerly belonged to the Province of New-York at present it belongs to Massachusetts Bay; that no other men would, if trade is stopped, carry on the Whale Fishery, as they don't understand the nature of it; that the people of Nantucket, if their Fishery is stopped, would not get employment from others; that their Craft would be entirely lost, as they could not get purchasers for them; that the lands in Nova Scotia are in general very barren, except some in the Bay of Fundy, and some German settlements: that the lands in the Bay of Fundy are fertilized by being often overflowed; that the inhabitants of Nantucket are supplied with their materials for the Fishery from London; that they have no Stores laid in; that the Non-Importation Agreement in America would stop the Fishery in time; that the only materials for building their Fishing Vessels, got from London, were Sails and Rigging, that there is an Act which prevents the pressing of the men employed in the New England Fishery; that the money arising from this Fishery amounts to about £333,000; that the Quakers are of a peaceable disposition, and did not send any Delegates to the Congress; that they chose but one Representative; that they drink Tea; that they were no ways concerned in the destruction of the Tea; that they reside chiefly upon the Island, and are no great politicians; that he never heard of any persecution at Halifax on account of religion, but has heard formerly of persecution on account of religion at Massachusetts Bay; that though the people of Nantucket would not, by choice, go to another part of America, where the trade was restrained, yet they would prefer going there rather than to Halifax; that these people have not entered into any combination not to import Goods from Great Britain, and that they think this Bill will restrain them from Fishing after the first of June next."

Whereupon the clause in the Bill relating to the Island of Nantucket was read in the engrossed Bill, whereby it appeared that some words having, by mistake, been omitted in the printed Bill, was the reason of the witness's being of opinion, that this Bill would restrain them from any Fishery after the first of June next.

The witness being further examined, acquainted the House "That there are very few others than the Islanders Lord Camden. Do they not grow Corn and Provisions to feed themselves?

Jenkins. Not enough to feed twenty families.

Lord Shelburne. If this Bill passes will it not injure them greatly?

Jenkins. Certainly.

Lord Shelburne. How?

Jenkins. They must migrate or starve.

Lord Shelburne. Where will they migrate?

Jenkins. To the other Colonies in New England.

Lord Townshend. Will they not settle in Nova Scotia?

Jenkins. No.

Lord Townshend. Why not?

Jenkins. It is a barren country, and the Government, they think, is Military.

Lord Townshend. Did you never hear of the tract of land on the Bay of Fundy, which belonged to the neutrals - cleared, but not settled?

who have any shares in their Fishery; that if the Bill passes they will not be able to get any Provisions, without which they cannot carry on their Fish cries; that the Prov-races of New England and Massachusetts Bay have no superfluity of Provision to supply them with; that New England is supplied with Provisions from Baltimore, Pennsylvania, and Carolina; that Provisions were sent to the Jenkins. I have, but the quantity is so small that it is no object.

Lord Townshend. Nor of another tract called Lunenburg, settled by Germans, "so fertile by the overflowings of the tide that they take crops from it every year without diminishing its richness?"

Jenkins. Small spots

Duke of Richmond. If this Bill takes place, from whence is the Island to have its Provisions?

Jenkins. I understand they are to have none at all.

Duke of Richmond. Cannot they be supplied from New England?

Jenkins. Impossible.

Duke of Richmond. Why?

Jenkins. Because New England has not enough for herself.

Lord Sandwich. Does not New England export Provisions to the West Indies?

Jenkins. No Corn.

Lord Sandwich. Nor live Stock?

Jenkins. Some.

Lord Sandwich. Are there not many Sheep in the Island?

Jenkins. A considerable number.

Duke of Richmond. If this Bill passes, can the Islanders build Ships for their Fishery and trade?

Jenkins. No.

Lord Sandwich. From whence comes the materials for their Ship-building?

Jenkins. From London.

Lord Sandwich. Their Timber?

Jenkins. They grow it, and have it from the Main.

Lord Sandwich. Their Iron?

Jenkins. From the Colonies.

Lord Sandwich. Their Masts?

Jenkins. From New England?

Lord Sandwich. Their Rigging?

Jenkins. All from London.

Lord Sandwich. So then the Timber, Iron, and Masts of the Americans; these, I think, are a pretty considerable part of the Ship, and only a part of the Sails and Cordage from Britain.

The next witness that was called was Mr. Brook Watson, who introduced his examination with the following words: If this noble House will allow me, I will lay before them such a state of the Fishery as may be found to give more satisfaction than answering single questions. I will, therefore, first read an account of the North Americas Export, as it was in the year 1764.

Lord Gower. Is that account taken from Custom House Books, or is it an account from private information.

Watson. My Lords, the way this account was made is this: upon the question of the repeal of the Stamp Act being agitated, the Merchants had a meeting to procure an account of their Exports to North America. A box was provided, and in it every Merchant put a paper, on which was written the account of his Exports to each Colony. The total is upwards of £2,700,000.

Lord Gower. Has this account been compared with that of the Custom House?

Watson. It has not; the Merchants never thought of comparing an account which they know to be true, with another which they were sure must be false.

Lord Sandwich. I should wish Mr. Watson would give his reasons for saying the Custom House accounts are false.

Watson. It is impossible they should be otherwise; Merchants, when they make their entries, always enter more than they ship, in order that fresh Goods being sent on board may not want fresh cockets and other expenses, so that the Custom House entries will always be beyond the truth.

He then read an account of the British Fishery; distinguished under many heads of Ships, Schooners, Shallops, &c., the Tonnage, Men, Fish, Value, Returns, &c. This is a part of the evidence in which accuracy must be the greatest merit; and therefore to trust one's memory, would be an impertinence to the reader.

Duke of Richmond. Does Mr. Watson think the Fishery is increased since 1764?

Watson. Very considerably.

Duke of Richmond. What may be the value of the New England Fishery?

Watson. Three thousand Pounds a year.

Duke of Richmond. If by this Bill they are deprived of it, can they make it up by turning to any thing else?

Watson. Nost certainly not.

Duke of Richmond. Will they be able then to make returns to this country?

Watson. No.

Lord Shelburne. Do the New England Provinces abound in Provisions?

Watson. They abound in live Stock, but not in Corn.

Lord Shelburne. Have they superfluity enough to supply Nantucket?

Watson. They have not Bread enough for themselves; and therefore certainly can spare none?

Withdrew.

Lord Sandwich. I desire that Mr. Lyster may be called to the bar.

What is your profession?

Lyster. A Merchant Adventurer from Poole, in the Newfoundland Fishery.

Lord Sandwich. How long have you been in the trade?

Lyster. Thirty-eight years.

Lord Sandwich. Were you ever in Newfoundland?

Lyster. I am there every season.

Lord Sandwich. What share of the trade have the Towns of Dartmouth and Poole?

Army, in the last war, from Connecticut; that there is not a sufficiency raised in New England for their own consumption; that they supply the West Indies with live Cattle, and can supply Nantucket with Beef and Pork, but not Bread, not having sufficient for themselves; that Newfoundland is supplied with Provisions from New-York, Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland; that one reason of Lyster. About two-thirds; Bristol, Weymouth, and other places, have the rest. The two Towns have four hundred Vessels employed.

Lord Sandwich. How many Seamen does the British Fishery employ?

Lyster. In all about twenty thousand.

Lord Sandwich. What new men does it breed?

Lyster. Three thousand annually.

Lord Sandwich. Could the British Fishery increase sufficiently to supply those markets now supplied by New England?

Lyster. Certainly.

Duke of Richmond. As cheap and as good?

Lyster. Yes; at Bilboa the New England Fish has a preference, but it is trifling.

Duke of Richmond. Do they not build their Ships and navigate them cheaper?

Lyster. They may.

Lord Sandwich. Does the Navy ever get any Seamen from the New England ships?

Lyster. I never knew them in my life.

Davis, a Mariner was then called, whose evidence was a confirmation of the preceding, and he asserted that a Ship of two hundred tons from our Ports for the Fishery, carried out one hundred Men; but a New England one only twelve or fifteen.

Lord Sandwich; upon this, remarked in the House what a great difference there was between our own Fishery and that of Boston, &c., in breeding Seamen, and that the New England Men were of no use to the Navy, as, by Act of Parliament, they could not be pressed.

Duke of Richmond. Could our own Fishery be ready for the next season to employ twenty thousand tons additional, in lieu of the Provinces of New England?

Lyster. It would be necessary; more than half of the New England Fishery will be over before the Act takes place, and a good year's fishery may make up the rest.

Duke of Richmond. You acknowledged that the New Englanders could build and navigate cheaper than you, and that their Fish had the preference at Bilboa; will not the French then run away with a considerable share of it?

Lyster. I think not; since the last peace the French has not more than supplied their home consumption.

Duke of Richmond. Perhaps, then, you think it would be advantageous to this country to have the New Englanders cut off forever from this Fishery?

Lyster. I do.

Duke of Richmond. Will you enlarge your trade upon account of the change?

Lyster. I and many more shall and have done it in expectation.

Duke of Richmond. Your profit then will be greater if it passes?

[Lyster hesitated a little.]

Lord Camden. You expect a profit from this Bill individually to yourself?

Lyster. I must run the hazard; if the Bill is passed and then repealed, I shall be a sufferer.

Commodore Shuldham.

Lord Sandwich. You have been for some time Governour of Newfoundland?

Shuldham. For three years.

Lord Sandwich. How many Men does the British Fishery employ?

Shuldham. Seven thousand Seamen.

Lord Sandwich. How many fresh Men does it form annually?

Shuldham. About two thousand two hundred.

Lord Sandwich. But what is the total of all Ports.

Shuldham. It will amount to twelve thousand.

Lord Sandwich. Passengers and all, and those left in Newfoundland?

Shuldham. Including them the total will be twenty-three thousand.

Lord Sandwich. Does the New England Fishery supply the Navy with any Seamen?

Shuldham. None; or at least a very trivial number, perhaps half a dozen in four or five hundred.

Lord Sandwich. Do they get Seamen from us?

Shuldham. They do sometimes.

Lord Sandwich. Did you ever know any outrages practised by the New England Fishers upon the British ones?

Shuldham. I have; they have burnt and destroyed the stages, and done them other mischief.

Lord Sandwich. Are they not assistant to the French Fishery and Settlements at Pierre and Miquelon?

Shuldham. They supply them with Provisions; almost support them.

Lord Sandwich. Then the New England Provinces have Provisions to spare?

Shuldham. I suppose so, by their supplying the French.

Duke of Richmond. Are those Provisions of their own growth, or do they import them?

Shuldham. I do not know.

Lord Sandwich. Do not the New England Fishing Ships carry on an illicit trade with the French?

Shuldham. Considerably; their Ships meet at Sea, and they supply them with Provisions, Rum, Stores, and the Ships themselves, and return loaded in part with French Manufactures.

Lord Sandwich. Do you not, upon the whole, think that cutting off the New England Fishery forever, would be an advantage to Britain, relative to the Navy?

Shuldham. Indeed I think so; I apprehend there would be more Seamen for us;

Sir Hugh Palliser was then called and questioned to the same points as Mr. Shuldham. He confirmed the whole of his evidence, and was of the same opinion as to Lord Sandwich's last question.

their wanting Provisions, is the great quantity consumed in the Fishery - and that so many men are employed in the Fisheries that there are not enough left at home to cultivate the land, but if not employed in the Fishery, might, in time, be able to raise more Provisions; that if the people of the Continent would or could send them Provisions they would have no money to pay for them if the Fishery was stopped, but if it is not stopped they could pay for them; that there are many Sheep raised on the Island of Nantucket; that considerable quantities of Oats and Indian Corn are sent from Massachusetts Bay to the West Indies."

He was¹ directed to withdraw.

Then Mr. Brook Watson was called in, and, being sworn, acquainted the House "That he was an American Merchant, and well acquainted with the Fisheries in North America; that he had been examined at the bar of the House of Commons on that subject; that in his passage to North America in 1766, he made out a state of the American Fishery in 1764; which state he carefully corrected. from the best information on his arrival in North America;" and then produced the said state, being the same he had produced at the bar of the House of Commons. He then read the said state at the bar, and afterwards delivered the same in to the House.

"State of the Exports from Great Britain to, and Fisheries of, North America, in 1764."

He then acquainted the House "That the American Fisheries were much increased since the year 1764; that remittances were received for American Fish, from Spain, Portugal, and Russia; that large quantities of New England Rum are sent to Quebec, for which they return Money, Bills of Exchange on Merchants in London, and some Wheat; that it was too copious a subject for him to enter into a detail of the general state of trade between Great Britain and America; that his account of the Exports from Great Britain to America was made up about the time of passing the Stamp Act; that a Committee of Merchants being appointed to draw up a state of the then trade between Great Britain and America, each Merchant wrote the amount of his exportation from Great Britain upon a piece of paper, but did not sign his name to it, and put it into a box, and the whole amount is specified in the paper he had delivered in, or as near as could be; that the Merchants here generally deliver in at the Custom House an invoice of one third more than is really shipped, and that no Officer of the Customs can make an exact estimate of what is exported to America; that the people of North Carolina cannot afford to clothe themselves so well as those of the other Provinces; that he never was at the Island of Nantucket, but that he knows there is a trade carried on from there in Fish; that four of the Provinces in New England do not raise Bread sufficient for their own consumption, and that he has known great quantities of Bread sent to Boston from London and New-York; that he does not know of any immediate substitute for Bread the people of Nantucket could eat; that if the Fishery is stopped, the men employed in it cannot turn their hands to any other business; that the restraint upon the Nantucket Whale Fishery is taken off by a clause in the Bill; that he don't know if any other persons are concerned with them in their Fishing Ships; that they have all the materials for building their Ships from England, except Timber; that the indulgence given by the Bill to the people of Nantucket, he fears, will be of little consequence to them; that the Americans pay for the Goods from Great Britain by the profits of their Fisheries, and by the money they get for the Ships which they build in America, and load with Goods for the West Indies, where they receive Sugars for their Goods, which they bring to Great Britain, where they and the Ships are sold; that if the Bill passes the Americans cannot make any returns to Great Britain for Goods, nor pay the debts they now owe; that the Merchants in London are not concerned in the property of the American Fisheries; that the people of Nantucket cannot be supplied with Flour from Quebec, because at Quebec they have only a number of Mills sufficient to grind Corn for themselves, but that they may have a supply from other Provinces; that the weather is so severe at Quebec that the Mills cannot work above seven months in the year; that he can't tell, if the other Provinces in America should return to their allegiance, whether this Bill would affect Nantucket; that, by this Bill, the people of one Province being made answerable for another, Nantucket will not receive her usual supply of sustenance; that though the inhabitants of Nantucket are the obedient subjects to the laws of this country, and are, and have been, acting with all possible precaution, yet they must suffer on the account of others who may be refractory."

He was directed to withdraw.

Then Mr. Benjamin Lyster was called in, and, being sworn, acquainted the House "That he was a Merchant Adventurer in the Newfoundland Fishery for thirty-eight years; that he goes to Newfoundland every Summer, and is a large dealer in that trade; that he thinks, that if the American Fishery was stopped, the foreign markets might be supplied with Fish from Great Britain alone in future, and in part this year; that the principal Ports in England from whence the Newfoundland Fisheries are carried on, are Poole and Dorset *; that four hundred sail are sent from Great Britain, the tonnage of which amounts to thirty-six thousand tons, and two thousand Sballops, making twenty thousand tons more; that twenty thousand men are employed, twelve thousand of which return to Great Britain and Ireland; that they are obliged to carry out every year one man in every five, who is what they call a green man, or one who has never been at Sea before, by which means the British Fishery raises three thousand fresh Seamen every year; that they catch about six hundred thousand quintals of Cod Fish, which, for about seven years, has sold at fourteen Shillings the quintal; that the quantity of Salmon caught amounts to about three thousand tierces, at six Shillings and five Pence the tierce - quantity of Cod Oil, three thousand tons, at twenty-three Pounds per ton - Seal Oil, eight hundred tons, at twenty-five Pounds per ton; that they get few Seal Skins, the duty upon them here being so high as to be almost a prohibition of the importation of them, but the New England people are exempted from the payment of any duty upon them; that the returns from abroad for the produce of the British Fishery is made in raw materials, Barills, † Oil, and some Specie; that the nett produce of the British Fishery amounts to about five hundred thousand Pounds, all which centres in Great Britain; that all the materials of the Ships employed in this Fishery are bought in Great Britain; that the greatest part of the profits arising from the American Fishery, centres in America; that in war-time the British Fishery is not carried on with the same advantage as the New England Fishery, as the New England Fishermen are exempted, by Act of Parliament; from being pressed, which the British Fishermen are not; that the Act of King William does not prevent the Americans from fishing on the banks of Newfoundland, but only from drying their Fish on shore; that he does not know if the whole Fishery, including the Whale Fishery, could be carried on by Great Britain only; that the Newfoundland Fishery carried on from Great Britain is the beneficial nursery for Seamen; that he would not have the Fishery confined only to the Ports of Poole and Dartmouth, but would have it confined to Great Britain only; that if the American Fishery was stopped, other places in Great Britain besides Poole and Dorset ‡ would engage in it; that the French would gain no share in it more than they have, as their Fisheries are bounded; that it would increase the number of British and Irish Fishing Vessels, and consequently increase the number of British Seamen; that the best dried Fish are best for the markets, and there are different markets for all the different sorts of Fish the Italian market is for small Fish; that, in time, the British Fishermen would be able to equal the New England Fishermen in curing Fish for the Bilboa market; that in 1773 there was more Fish caught than was wanted, and that the markets were glutted; that England can supply half of the Fish for the American markets this year; that the French can only supply themselves; that he cannot tell whether New England can sell Fish cheaper than Great Britain, but that they can afford to sell it cheaper; whoever comes first to the banks has the right of drying; that if New England was restrained forever from this Fishery it would be a benefit to Great Britain; that he buys three hundred hogsheads from New England every year; that he thinks if. New England was deprived of their Fishery, they would not be able to import Goods from Great Britain; the Ships from Great Britain to Newfoundland, now employed, make but one trip in a year, but may make two in future; the British Fish sell for one Pound a ton, the American Fish from fourteen Shillings to twenty Shillings per ton."

* Sic; it should be Dartmouth. † Sic; it should probably be Barilla.

‡ Sic; it should be Dartmouth.

He was directed to withdraw.

Then Mr. George Davis was called in, and, being sworn, acquainted the House "That he was a Newfoundland Merchant, and had been in that trade for twenty-four years; that if the New England Fishery was stopped, the foreign markets might partly be supplied this year from Great Britain; that the French cannot increase their Fishery on the Coast, and that their Fish are not approved of at market, not being so well cured as ours; that of late years the New England Fishery is much increased, and the British Fishery very much decreased; that the British Ships employed in the Newfoundland Fishery are generally about two hundred tons burthen, and their number of hands is one man to two tons; that the Ships employed in the New England Fishery carry but twelve hands each; that the New England Fish are as good as ours, but not fit for the Italian market; that the greatest part of the profits of the New England Fishery centres there, but a small part is returned here for the Manufactures of this country; that the New England Fish sometimes bears a better price than ours; that the foreign markets might be supplied entirely from Great Britain, if the New England Fishery was stopped; that it is not more expensive to send Ships from Great Britain than New England; that the New England men have more wages than ours; that they begin to fish sooner than we, but it is very little advantage to them; that our men entering on board their Fishing Ships is a great hurt to the British Fishery; that the witness's trade is from London; that if this Act should pass, he will reap benefit from it; that he has already enlarged his capital, and shall enlarge it more if the Act passes; that the time of the New England Ships getting to market depends upon the seasons; that they get something sooner to the markets, except the Spanish markets, than the British Ships; that he knows no other reason for the Italians preferring the small Fish than their pride, which makes them prefer the having one whole Fish at table rather than a piece of a large Fish; that though all the men carried out in the British Ships are not employed in navigation, the greatest part of them going out to be employed in the Fishery - yet all that are carried out return Seamen; that a New England Ship of two hundred tons carries about fourteen or sixteen men, and has no Boats; that a British Ship has but one Boat, the men being distributed in the Shallops for fishing."

He was directed to withdraw.

Then Molyneux Shuldham, Esquire, was called in, and, being sworn, acquainted the House, "That he has been Governour of Newfoundland for three years; that the quantity of Cod caught last year amounted to seven hundred and fifty-nine thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven quintals, at nine Shillings a quintal; that the number of men employed in this Fishery amounts to twenty-three thousand six hundred and fifty-two men, all of whom became Sailors; that he has had great complaints of the outrages committed by the New England Crews employed in the Fisheries; that they cannot take any Seamen out of the New England Ships, but that a great many are got out of the British Fishing Ships; that the New England Ships carry on an illicit trade with the French; that they load with Provisions and Lumber, and go to meet the French Ships at Sea; that they sell them Ship and Cargo, and take French Manufactures and India Goods in exchange; that the New England Ships carry Provisions to the French at Miquelon and St. Pierre, and he supposes they must have a superfluity of Provisions; that they supply the French Fishermen with Flour from Indian Corn; that numbers of our Seamen desert the New England Ships; that the New England Seamen are not so good Seamen as ours; that in the last war very few of them were employed on board of our Men-of-War, perhaps there might be six or ten of thereon board a Man-of-War of sixty guns; that if this temporary restraint on the New England Fishery was, made perpetual, at would be a benefit to Great Britain.

He was directed to withdraw.

Then Sir Hugh Palliser, Baronet, was called in, and, being sworn, acquainted the House "That in the year 1768 he was Governour of Newfoundland; that the number of Ships then employed in that Fishery was three hundred and eighty-nine - Shallops two thousand one hundred and nine, the tonnage of which amounted to ; the number of men nineteen thousand one hundred and ninety-eight; that this Fishery is the best nursery; that the men are better for the Men-of-War than those taken out of the Colliers; that it would be impossible to man a Fleet, but in a great while, if it was not for the men they get from the Newfoundland Fishery; that few or no Seamen are got from the New England Fishery; that if the New England Fishery was entirely stopped, the French would not be benefited, as the English are in possession of the markets; that he does not know any thing about the Island of Nantucket; that whether the restraining of the New England Fishery is temporary or perpetual, it will be an advantage to Great Britain; that the Fishery might be carried on from Great Britain, Ireland, Jersey, and Guernsey, which would greatly increase the nursery for Seamen; that the New England Ships carry Provisions to St. Pierre and Miquelon; that the New England Fishery would be an advantage to Great Britain, if there was a power given to press their men."

He was directed to withdraw.

Ordered, That the further consideration of the said Bill be put off till to-morrow, and the Lords summoned.

THURSDAY March 16, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the further consideration of the Bill;

The Earl of Dartmouth observed, that as the witnesses deemed necessary on the occasion, had been thoroughly, examined, their Lordships now possessed the fullest information; he therefore moved "To commit the Bill."

The Marquis of Rockingham opposed the motion. His Lordship asserted that the Bill was oppressive and tyrannical throughout; that the principle which pervaded it, and the means of putting it in execution, had one merit - that of consistency; and that, from the same motive, he should heartily dissent from every syllable of its contents. He meant not to trouble their Lordships in any future-stage of the Bill, or perhaps at all on the same subject, during the Continuance of the session, for which reason he hoped for their indulgence on the present occasion. He desired to repeat, that the present Bill, and every other framed on the same principle and directed to the same object, to be attained only by the most flagrant acts of cruelty and oppression, must forever continue to meet with his strongest disapprobation; that as he had uniformly dissented from every American measure lately adopted, he now felt the double impulse of principle and of humanity both strongly urging him to express the utmost abhorrence of the Bill before the House. The evidence in support of the Petitions had clearly demonstrated the several evils that would result from the Bill, should it pass into a law. Had the counter evidences invalidated these facts? So far from it, that the whole of their testimony tended to prove a matter foreign to the point; for, when it was urged on the one hand, "that the Mercantile interest of this country would sustain a material injury, and that some thousands of innocent people would be reduced to famine, should the Bill pass into a law," evidences had been contrasted, not "to disprove these allegations, but merely to evince "that "the British Newfoundland Fishery was an excellent "nursery for Seamen!" Was this an answer to the objections urged against the Bill? Did it obviate all, or any of the obnoxious clauses? Rather, by not so much as touching the facts alleged by the evidences in support of the Petition, did it not shew that those facts were incontrovertible; and that all the miseries as set forth by the Petitioners to be expected from the Bill, were founded on just apprehensions? That the noble Lord who resided at the head of the Admiralty, should eagerly catch at any project which carried but the least appearance of increasing the maritime power of this country, was perfectly natural; it fell in with the duties of his department. But the question before the House was not whether the British Newfoundland Fishery afforded an excellent nursery for Seamen? but whether an innocent people should be reduced to every extreme of poignant misery? Whether they should be cut off by any inhuman act, the very means of subsistence? Whether the trade of Great Britain should ultimately sustain a shock, and the whole body of the North American Merchants be reduced to suffer hardships, from Which their importance to the state entitles them to be wholly exempt? These were the questions before the House for discussion; because, on the determination of these points, depended the final acceptance or total rejection of the Bill. If the trade of England should be at stake, it could not be admitted as a plea of justification for the loss of that trade, to say, "that an additional number of Seamen were raised," nor, if a people were to experience the horrors of famine, would it be the smallest alleviation of their sufferings to allege, "that the measures, although harsh, yet occasioned the fitting out a greater number of Shallops, and thus afforded employment for a greater number of Sailors." Yet this was tantamount to the whole of the evidence delivered in favour of the Bill; and that this did not operate as exculpatory of the evils flowing from this iniquitous source, was extremely certain; it left no favourable impression on the mind; humanity and sound policy still refused their concurrence with the measures; justice revolted at it, as in every respect repugnant to her righteous decrees; and thus, unsupported by every human virtue, the Bill should be rejected through every principle of human wisdom.

His Lordship then entered into a comparative view of the trade of America at different periods, and that of New England in particular. He quoted from the Papers lying on the table, that the Exports in 1704, amounted to no more than £70,000 per annum: in half a century in 1754 it was £180,000; about the time of the repeal of the Stamp Act, in 1766, it was nearly £400,000; and within the last ten years it had so prodigiously increased, as to amount to 7 or £800,000. This increase had extended itself, he was well assured, in pretty much the same proportion to all the other Colonies; and it appeared by a gentleman who gave evidence at the bar, (Mr. Watson) that the amount of total Exports in the last mentioned period, was above £2,600,000. His Lordship said he could not help remarking the agreement there was between that gentleman's account and the one on the table, which made the Exports to all America, in 1764, about £2,700,000.

The vast increase and consequent importance of the North American trade being thus clearly demonstrated, the illustrious Marquis censured the impolicy of measures which struck at the existence of a branch of commerce of such extreme magnitude; but the House, in the discussion of American affairs, has hitherto proceeded in the gross, without ever considering the detail of things; yet this default was to be ascribed to the Ministry, who seemed studiously to withhold the necessary information; and in matters fraught even with national ruin, such intelligence was kept back as might throw light on affairs proper for investigation. Thus, with respect to American Papers, they were laid before the House in a most mangled state, such only being submitted to the inspection of the noble Lords as answered a temporary purpose, or served to corroborate the assertions of those in office. As an exemplification of this truth, a letter from Lord Dunmore, giving an account of the then state of things in Virginia, dated in December, had been laid before the House, because that letter treats the Americans as an "infatuated people," and encourages Administration to hope for a speedy accomplishment of their purposes; yet not the least notice is taken in that letter of the following Association, into which the Officers of Lord Dunmore's Army had entered, early in the preceding November:

"At a Meeting of the Officers under the command of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Earl of Dunmore, convened at Fort Gower, November 5, 1774, for the purpose of considering the Grievances of British America,

"Resolved, That we will bear the most faithful allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third, whilst his Majesty delights to reign over a brave and free people; that we will, at the expense of life, and every thing dear and valuable, exert ourselves in support of the honour of his Crown and the dignity of the British Empire. But, as the love of liberty, and attachment to the real interests and just rights of America, outweigh every other consideration, we resolve that we will exert every power within us for the defence of American Liberty, and for the support of her just rights and privileges, not in any precipitate, riotous, or tumultuous manner, but when regularly called forth by the unanimous voice of our countrymen.

"Signed by order, and in behalf of the whole Corps.

"BENJAMIN ASHBY, Clerk."

Could Lord Dunmore be supposed ignorant of this Association? It was impossible that his Lordship could be ignorant of so important a fact, a fact of such notoriety, a fact so truly alarming. But were that even so, a paper which he held in his hand, made it clear that his Lordship could be at least no stranger to its being published at Williamsburg, in Virginia, the seat of his Government, two days preceding the date of his celebrated despatch. Perhaps it might have been a spurious account, and as such his Lordship could not have taken notice of it; but if that were the case, he should be obliged to some noble Lord in Administration, to rise and tell him so; otherwise he must continue to think that the proceeding of the noble Governor was not to be accounted for, consistent with his duty, or at least with the duty of those, who, having better information, thought proper to hold it back. To treat the associations of the people with superciliousness, and affect to consider them of little moment, at the same instant that a military league was entered into by the Officers of Lord Dunmore's own Army, whereby they pledge themselves to defend American Liberty with the sword, what was this but to talk at random without adverting to the true state of things? But Administration were accustomed to deal in generals themselves, and hence they might encourage general assertions unsupported by facts in others; thus, general hints had been thrown out respecting the New-York defection; yet, when the fact was examined into, to what did it amount? Why, the very persons on whom Ministry placed the firmest reliance, though they may disclaim the authority of the Congress, yet have they virtually denied the Legislative authority of Great Britain, and voted, in consequence, a Petition to the King, a Memorial to the House of Lords, and a Remonstrance to the Commons! Did not these things plainly indicate that even the friends of Government in America are averse to the measures of Administration? And, if those on whom the noble personages in office rely the most, cannot yet be brought to approve their deeds, from avowed enemies nothing but an opposition, constantly and extremely rigorous, was to be expected.

The illustrious Marquis next avowed it by no means his intention to combat this or that particular clause of the Bill, he directed his enmity to the whole; he disliked the starving principle on which the Bill was framed; which, he said, exactly resembled the mode adopted by Marshal Rosen, King James the Second's French General in Ireland, in order to reduce the rebellious citizens and other defenders of Londonderry. They, brave men, as the Americans are now, were styled Traitors and Rebels; and they, as well as our rebellious subjects in America, were to be starved into compliance; that is, the means employed were to be justified by the goodness of the cause. The Marquis wished his noble auditors to bear in mind the situation of the New Englanders, to be deprived of sustenance, if the Fishery Bill took place; as thus alone could the House determine as to the similarity of measures. He then read an order from Rosen,* for obliging the garrison of Derry to submit, which was, to collect the wives, children, and aged parents of the garrison, to drive them under the walls of the Town, there to perish, in the presence of their parents, husbands, and other relations; and if they offered to return, to fire on and massacre them. But as weak, infatuated, and bigoted, as that Prince was, his heart revolted at such a horrid expedient of subduing his enemies; for as soon as it reached his knowledge, he immediately countermanded the barbarous order, and left the innocent and unoffending to their liberty. the principle, he contended, was the same; the Irish Rebels might have avoided the barbarous purpose, by submitting; so, we should be told, in the course of this day's debate, may the Rebels of America.

* "Conrade de Rosen, Marshal General of all his Majesty's Forces, declares by these presents to the Commanders, Officers, Soldiers, and Inhabitants of the City of Londonderry: That in case they do not, betwixt this and Monday next, at six o'clock in the afternoon, being the 1st of July, 1689, agree to surrender the said place of Londonderry unto the King, upon such conditions as may be granted them, according to the instructions and power Lieutenant-General Hamilton formerly received from the King, he will forthwith issue out his orders from the Barony of Inishone, and the Sea-Coasts round about, as far as Charlemont, for the gathering together of those of their faction, whether protected or not, and cause them immediately to be brought to the walls of Londonderry, where it shall be lawful for those that are in the Town, (in case they have any pity for them,) to open the gates and receive them into the Town; otherwise, they will be forced to see their friends and nearest relations all starved for want of food, he having resolved not to leave one of them at home, nor any thing to maintain them. And that all hope of succour may be taken away, by the landing of any Troops in these parts from England; he further declares, that in case they refuse to submit, he will forthwith cause all the said country to be immediately destroyed; that if any succour should be hereafter sent from England, they may perish with them for want of food. Besides which, he has a very considerable Army, as well for the opposing of them in all places that shall be judged neces-

The noble Marquis concluded with a general disapprobation of all the measures pursued relative to America, since the repeal of the Stamp Act; and predicted that an useful and constitutional agreement in sentiments, and a cordial reciprocity of interests, would never take place between them and the mother country, till the same principles were once more recurred to.

The Earl of Carlisle was surprised that the noble Marquis could possibly conceive the Bill was either intended, or could be supposed to operate in the manner he affected to think it would; no such thing being meant, no such thing could take place. The present was not a question about taxation; it was not involved in difficulty, but simply, whether we were: justified in employing the most lenient methods of bringing America back to obedience and a proper sense of her duty. The Bill was not formed on the narrow views of loading her with taxes, or for the sake of a paltry revenue. He believed the Ministry had no design of forcing her into any such concession; if they had, he was certain that neither he, nor any of the other Lords who intended to vote for the measure, had any such desire.

The Duke of Manchester censured the Bill generally, as indiscriminately cruel; for it involved the guilty and the innocent in one common punishment. A clause, however, there was, which precluded every hope that the Fishery, of which the New Englanders were thus to be deprived, would ever be restored to them; for, the re-surrender of the Fishery into the hands of the Americans, depended on the restoration of the trade and commerce with Great Britain, and on the re-establishment of peace throughout the Massachusetts. The trade with Great Britain is to be carried on without the smallest interruption, for one calendar month. This fact is to be certified to the Governours and Council of the Provinces of New-Hampshire and the Massachusetts, by the Custom House Officers of the respective Provinces; considering, therefore, that the minds of such men are generally actuated by the meanest passions, could it be presumed that they would be in haste to certify what, if true, would contribute to the welfare of those against whom, for some petty injuries received, they may have entertained the most violent prejudices; and who, in their several stations besides, are to share among them the forfeitures to be received under this Act.

With respect to the famine threatened by the Bill, the noble Duke could not perceive the evil in any degree remedied, because some scores of Sheep were scattered on the Island of Nantucket. Were those the property of the Fishermen, whose occupations were to be obstructed by the Bill? If they did not belong to Fishermen, saying sary, as for the protecting all the rest of his Majesty's dutiful subjects, whose goods and chattels he promises to secure, destroying all the rest that cannot be brought conveniently into such places as he shall judge necessary to be preserved, and burning the Houses and Mills, not only of those who are in actual rebellion, but also of their friends and adherents, that no hopes of escaping may be left for any man; beginning this very day to send his necessary orders to all Governours, and other commanders of his Majesty's Forces, and to Colonel Sarsfield, commanding a flying Army beyond Ballyshanny; Colonel Sutherland, commanding another towards Inniskillen, and the Duke of Berwick, another on the Fin Water, to cause all the men, women, and children, who are any ways related to those in Londonderry, or any where else in open rebellion, to be forthwith brought to this place, without hopes of withdrawing further into the Kingdom; that, in case, before this said Monday, the 1st of July, in the year of our Lord 1689, be expired, they do not send us hostages and other deputies, with a full sufficient power to treat with us for the surrender of the said City of Londonderry, on reasonable conditions, that they shall not after this time be admitted to any treaty whatsoever; and the Army which shall continue the siege, and which, with the assistance of God, will soon reduce them, shall have orders to give no quarter; or spare either age or sex, on case they are taken by force.

LE MARECHAL ROSEN."

they were on the Island, was saying nothing to the purpose. Could the noble Lord who urged this fact, mean that if the Fishermen stood in need of food, they might seize what Sheep they found on the Island, and kill them for their sustenance? This could never be meant; for this would be to authorize injustice, and countenance plunder. What availed it then to allege that Sheep were on the Island? The Fish caught by the industry of the inhabitants, had hitherto afforded them subsistence; to this they had an unquestionable right; but of this they were to be deprived by the Bill, and it was miserable consolation to tell them there were Sheep on the Island, to which they had no right. Equally absurd was the allegation, "that the Americans only would feel the effects of the Bill." The noble Duke had every reason to believe the property of many English Merchants was embarked in the Vessels which carried on the New England Fishery; why was that property to be injured? Why were English adventurers to be punished for crimes, in the commission of which they participated not? Was this justice, or was it tyranny? Was it not like the "tender mercies of the wicked," cruelty in the extreme? On the whole, to whatever part of the Bill the noble Duke turned his eyes, he could descry nothing but what bore the complexion of despotism; and, whether owing to the love of liberty, with which his mind had been early tinctured to a peculiar turn of thought, or to whatever other cause, yet he could not help presaging future evils from measures which carried so arbitrary, so tyrannical an appearance. Admitting the Americans enslaved, yoked, and in every thing obedient to our wishes, extreme dangers were to be apprehended; the Army employed to subjugate the Colonists, might prove instrumental in the destruction of our liberties; it was possible an arbitrary Minister might select that Army for the very purpose; and in the noble Duke's opinion, it was not improbable, but that there were some distinguished personages connected with Administration, who, far from rejecting the idea, would adopt the plan with alacrity.

The Earl of Denbigh rose to correct a mistake which the noble Duke fell into, relative to the inhabitants of Nantucket, by informing him, that the Bill was not correctly printed from the copy; for that in the engrossed Bill every thing which had the least appearance of severity was provided against. As to the certificate required from the Custom House Officers, he said, that proceeded from a misapprehension of the noble Duke, for the application was to be made to the Governour of the Massachusetts Bay, not to the Custom House Officers. His Lordship then disclaimed the imputation thrown out by the noble Duke on Administration, so far as it might be supposed to affect himself, and was certain, that no one member of it ever harboured such a thought.

The Duke of Manchester answered, that the clause respecting Nantucket, however construed, could extend no further than to the Whale Fishery; for it still left all, but those employed in that Fishery, to starve without employment or bread. He still maintained what he asserted, respecting the mode of application to the Custom House Officers, so far as it related to the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation. His Grace then read the clause out of the Bill, "If it shall be proved "to the said Governour and Commander-in-Chief, and "Council of Massachusetts Bay, by the testimony of the "Officers of his Majesty's Customs," &c. the noble Duke then exculpated his Lordship from the most distant suspicion that he would concur in any design to enslave his country, were he first Minister.

The Earl of Denbigh thanked his Grace for the good opinion he entertained of him; but if his insinuations were directed at a noble Lord who presided at the head of the finances, he begged leave to assure him he was mistaken; for he had known that noble Lord (North) from his early youth; they had been bred up together; he was perfectly acquainted with his disposition and sentiment; and by a knowledge thus founded and acquired, he could venture to affirm, with the fullest confidence, that there was not a noble Lord in that House, however zealous, would be further from co-operating in any design for overturning the liberties of his country, than he would. He therefore wished that the noble Duke would explain himself; for however flattering his Grace's sentiments might be respecting himself, it took off entirely from the pleasure it would otherwise cause, while it was founded in an insinuation against another, and given at his expense.

The Duke of Manchester assured his Lordship, that he has no intention of directly alluding to the noble Lord mentioned.

Viscount Dudley observed, that the whole state of the evidence given at their Lordships' bar, had a direct contrary effect upon him from that proposed by those who combated the Bill; for when the interests of this country, the manning of our Navy, the increase of our Seamen, and the employment of our own people, came in competition with the pretended hardships and severities of the Bill, he not only thought that it should receive the approbation of the House on the ground it was taken up on, but that it ought to be made perpetual, in order to secure forever to this country so important a branch of commerce. The Colonies were at present spared, by the lenity and mildness of Administration, who might carry fire and sword throughout the whole Continent of America. He totally differed from the noble Marquis, as to the conclusions he drew from the comparative state of the evidence of Mr. Watson, and its supposed agreement with that now on your Lordships' table, relative to the Exports to America in 1764, as he thought them both equally erroneous. The witness said, that the entries at the Custom House are generally more by one third than the Goods really shipped; and that he and the rest of his brethren, put into a box unsigned papers, containing an account of what each of them exported. Will any noble Lord in this House affirm that there could be an accuracy in such a mode, whereby every man was at liberty to set down any quantity he thought proper, without a possibility of detection. If such be the information this House is to be guided by, I am certain that no reliance ought to be had on it; and that it proves only, that both accounts ought equally to be rejected. He said, two of the noble Lords who spoke on the other side, seemed to feel greatly for the distresses of the Americans; but said not a syllable of the present miseries of our own Manufacturers, who were daily dismissed for want of employment; and whose sufferings would, he feared, if not prevented by this Bill, or some other of the same nature, become intolerable. For his part, he lived in the neighbourhood of one of the greatest manufacturing Towns in the Kingdom, (Birmingham;) and there the state of trade and the want of work was such, that should it continue much longer, the most dreadful consequences were justly to be dreaded.

Lord Camden, rose and said: My Lords, I have so often troubled your Lordships on the subject of America, that on every new occasion of speaking to it, I rise with great unwillingness and reluctance to encroach on your Lordships' attention; and indeed, I feel myself not a little wearied with the fruitless efforts I have uniformly made since this business has been in agitation. My opinion, on the rights of England and the rights of America, is well known. I first formed it on the clearest conviction, and it continues the same to this day. This opinion I have uniformly maintained; but the great and certain majorities in both Houses of Parliament, and the great numbers, for I admit there are such, perhaps the majority without doors, differing from those opinions, and overbearing with a high and powerful hand our feeble efforts, have almost wearied me into despair of obtaining any thing in this question, or on this subject, by argument or debate; and I would not now give your Lordships this trouble, but from a consideration of the duty in which I stand, as a member of this House, to interpose my endeavours towards the vindication of justice, and the service of my country. For this purpose, and in this debate, it will not be necessary to go into the several clauses of the Bill with a minute exactness. It will be sufficient for your Lordships to consider the general nature and character of the Bill, to advert to its operation and tendency, and to estimate its fitness and its wisdom, by the qualities that shall be discovered in its nature and character, and by the consequences that are to result from it.

This Bill, my Lords, is held out to us in various lights, and under various characters. It is sometimes described to us as a bill of trade and commercial regulation, to regulate and restrain North American Commerce, and in so doing to strengthen and increase the commercial interest of this country, At other times we are told it is a bill of political operation; that it is to increase our maritime power, by augmenting the British Fishery at Newfoundland; and it is most industriously inculcated by official authority, that the Fishery of Great Britain and Ireland there, is the great, and perhaps the only source of our marine. We are told by some, that this is a bill of firmness and of vigour, to fill up the measure of justice, and to inflict condign punishment on the obstinate and rebellious Colonists; but other of your Lordships informs us, that it is a bill of mercy and clemency, kind and indulgent to the Americans, calculated to soothe their minds, and to favour and assist their interest. But my Lords, the true character of the Bill is violent and hostile. My Lords, it is a bill of war; it draws the sword, and in its necessary consequences plunges the Empire into civil and unnatural war. This, my Lords, is the true description of the Bill; and the various contradictory opinions on it, which I have already stated, will be found by your Lordships, when you consider this subject with due attention, not only contradicted by themselves, but by the truth and reason of things. The evidence yesterday produced, at your bar was anxiously examined, to prove the beneficial effects of the Bill to this country, both in its commercial and political character; but when your Lordships recollect the persons who appeared at your bar, to decide points of such importance and such magnitude, you will reject, with due contempt, their petty and interested testimony. A Mr. Lyster, of Poole, and a Captain Davis; were to instruct your Lordships in the political system of Great Britain and America. Mr. Lyster, of Poole, was to convince your Lordships, that the profits of the commerce of America did not enrich this country; and Mr. Lyster, of Poole, and his brother-politician, were to satisfy the Legislature of this country that the utter destruction of American trade would strengthen the Navy, and invigorate the marine of England: and from their redoubtable testimony we were to believe, that the Fishery at present carried on by New England, might be supplied and continued by a sufficient number of Men and Strips from Great Britain and Ireland! that foreign markets should still be amply furnished; and that five or six hundred thousand Pounds, the value of the North American Fishery, should be continued, if not increased, to this country, by your own efforts, independently of them! Why, my Lords, or how? Because Mr. Lyster, of Peele, and his friend Captain Davis, were to gain two or three hundred Pounds a year by the operation of this Bill. Your Lordships see the frivolous and contemptible nature of such evidence. The narrow and interested minds of such men are totally unfit for such mighty discussions. Their little distorted scale of understanding cannot comprise, nor comprehend the policy of Nations; but a noble Lord, at the head of a Naval Department, warmly supports this Bill, because, in his opinion also, it is to derive prodigious advantages to our Navy. I do not wonder at the noble Lord's embracing every idea which seems to have that tendency; but I cannot agree that these advantages to our Navy, so contended and hoped for, even if they were proved, are to be decisive arguments to your Lordships to commit this Bill. Though our Navy were to receive the addition of five hundred Seamen, or five thousand, I cannot think with the noble Lord, that we are therefore merely to give effect to a measure which involves the ruinous consequences that I shall have the honour of submitting to your Lordships.

But, my Lords, it is much relied on, that our general trade will not suffer, nor diminish, by the particular restrictions imposed on our American Fishery by this Bill. My Lords, this is a question of the most doubtful and dangerous nature, and requires the most circumspect attention from your Lordships. The benefits of trade we know are infinite, and the danger of tampering with it, is in proportion. When we consider its circuitry, the various lines it forms, and the many channels through which its several streams flow to a common centre, we shall find it is easy to disturb, but most difficult to restore, the complicated arrangement. The sources are so subtle, and the complication so intricate, that these golden streams, if once disturbed, may be irrecoverably lost, and may imperceptibly glide into channels the most hostile and pernicious. But, it has been observed and argued, that in this great question, trade is a secondary consideration; that it is subordinate, to the great discussions of polity involved in fills argument. We are then to understand that this is the state of the question: that to maintain a Legislative power over America, is the primary, the sole, and the necessary object; for the attainment of which, and for the reduction of the Colonies to an unlimited obedience, all considerations of the benefits of trade; be they what they may, and of the ruinous mischiefs of its loss, be they however certain and fatal, are to be suspended; that we are to contend through every hazard, and in neglect of every other, for this grand object, the establishment of supreme Dominion voluntas pro imperio. I wish, my Lords, to place the question on its proper basis; and then to submit to your Lordships whether, on the real state of it, your wisdom and equity will, for such an object and in exclusion of all other, entail on your country the calamities that I maintain must result from this Bill, the calamities of civil war. Before wise and good men draw the sword, they consider whether the war in which they are going to engage be just, practicable and necessary. Unless the war, which this measure must produce, be found to have these qualities, it cannot be imagined that your Lordships will give your sanction to it. The consideration of the justice of the measure contended for, will bring your Lordships to the original cause of contention, Taxation, As to the right of taxing America, my ideas on that subject must ever continue the same; though [am not now to give them to your Lordships. I am tongue-tied on that question. It is now enacted to be law, and is not on this occasion, to be brought into debate. But the exercise of that right, we may always fully examine into. Now, my Lords, I must humbly submit, that we have attempted the exercise of this right of taxation, as some of your Lordships are pleased to call it, most unwarrantably, and pursued it most unwisely, as the events have proved. An East India Ship, freighted with Tea, goes to Boston: a mob, and a very inconsiderable mob, destroy it; no requisition is made for satisfaction, which would have been given: no step is taken towards accommodation, which would have been effected; no inquiry is instituted into the transaction; but you proceed, without hearing the parties, without distinguishing the innocent from the guilty, or examining whether any were guilty at all, you proceed to block up their Harbour, destroy their Trade, and reduce the whole country to the deepest distress. And for what, my Lords? For a transaction which every American disclaimed, and none have attempted to justify. Pursuing the same spirit, you arbitrarily introduce a total change into their Constitution. You violate their charter-rights of choosing their own Council, their own Assembly, and their Magistrates; and invest the Governour with these privileges. You rivet the dependence of their Judges, by making them removable at pleasure. You pack their Juries, by a bene placito Sheriff. And thus, my Lords, are annihilated all the securities of their freedom and happiness. In criminal matters, the tyrannical statute of Henry the Eighth is revived, and the most oppressive partiality is established, If an American kills an Englishman, he is dragged hither, far from his neighbours, his friends, his witnesses; from all possibility of vindicating his innocence. If an Englishman kills an American, he is brought home to his own country, to be tried with all advantages, and without testimony or circumstances to prove his guilt. These are part of the oppressions you have accumulated on America; and to repel them, the Americans have united their counsels: and their valour; and my Lords, I must maintain that they are justified in their union. But, my Lords, some ideas are most industriously circulated, extolling the irresistible omnipotence of Parliament; that the decrees of the Legislature must be obeyed, be they what they may; without doubt, and without appeal. A reverend Dean [Dr. Tucker, Dean of Gloucester] preaches these unlimited doctrines, in his book on the subject of America; and a pamphlet published a few days ago, called "Taxation no Tyranny," I know not the author, [Dr. Johnson,] speaks the same language: the press indeed abounds with politicks and pamphlets, studiously endeavouring to enforce the same principles. But, my Lords, I have learned other principles and other doctrines, and I learned them from a writer in support of the Court and the politicks of William the Third. Mr. Locke wrote his book on Government in defence of King William's title in the Crown; and he proves, in that inestimable treatise, that the people are justified in resistance to tyranny; whether it be tyranny assumed by a Monarch, or power arbitrarily unjust, attempted by a Legislature. My Lords, the bodies which compose the Legislature, are invested with that power for the good of the whole. We are trustees, and can exercise our powers, only in execution of the great trust reposed in us. What, my Lords, if both Houses of Parliament, with the concurrence of the King, if you will, should propose to surrender the dearest rights and privileges of the people: and the case lately happened in Denmark, almost before our eyes, and formerly in our own history, in the time of Henry the Eighth, when Parliament voted that his proclamation should be equivalent to law; in such cases, are not the people justified in resisting? These, my Lords, are the constitutional doctrines of resistance to arbitrary power in all shapes whatever. And let me observe that these are the doctrines which establish the present family on the Throne. Their title stands on this solid rock, the principles of Mr. Locke. I trust then, my Lords, those slavish tenets will never gain ground in this country, and that it will never be understood, that the Constitution gives you more power than that of doing right. And when I am asked whether the Legislature cannot retract Charters, and annul rights, if it thinks proper; and merely at its own will, I say, my Lords, it cannot; I say, it cannot. They may be lost, they may be forfeited; but they are not to be arbitrarily sported with, and wantonly violated. And when such is the conduct held against America, when the severest and most comprehensive punishments are inflicted, without examining the offence; when their constitutional liberties are destroyed; when their Charters and their rights are sacrificed to the vindictive spirit of the moment; when you thus tear up all their privileges by the roots; is there a country under heaven, breathing the last gasp of freedom, that will not resist such oppressions; and vindicate, on the oppressors' heads, such violations of justice?

Now, my Lords, whether the proposed measure of severity be practicable or not, is also most seriously deserving of your Lordships' attention. To conquer a great Continent of eighteen hundred miles, containing three millions of people, all indissolubly united on the great Whig bottom of liberty and justice seems an undertakings not to be rashly engaged in. It is said by a noble Lord (Dudley) that only our mildness and lenity save them from utter desolation, and prevent our carrying fire and sword through their country. But I believe it is certain that we would have done so, if we could; and that nothing but inability has prevented our proceeding to the most hostile extremes of violence and devastation; if we may judge from what has been done in that line, in which alone any thing can hope to be effected. But, my Lords, where are you to get men and money adequate to the service and expense that the reduction of such a Continent must require? What are the ten thousand men you have just voted out to Boston? merely to save General Gage from the disgrace and destruction of being sacked in his intrenchments. It is obvious; my Lords, that you cannot furnish Armies, or treasure, competent to the mighty purpose of subduing America. It is obvious that your only effort can be by your Naval power; and, as far as those efforts can have effect, you may certainly expect success: at least when we consider America alone: but whether France and Spain will be tame, inactive, spectators of your efforts and distractions, is well worthy the considerations of your Lordships. But admitting full success to your Naval efforts, what can they effect; the blocking up their Ports, and the suppression of their trade. But will this procure the conquest of America? No, my Lords; they are prepared to meet these severities, and to surmount them. They are applying themselves most diligently to agriculture, that great source of strength and independence. Foreseeing the important crisis, they have provided against its wants; and have imported into their country stores of industry, implements of husbandry and manufacture. They have united in the rejection of luxury and superfluous enjoyment. They have suppressed their publick diversions; formerly common enough in their great and wealthy towns; and every man attaches himself wholly to the great business of his country. Such is the state of America. She has curtailed her expenses, she has reduced her table;

she has clothed herself in mean and coarse stuffs; she has adopted the wise system of frugal industry. Her wants can be only ideal, imaginary, nothing.

But, my Lords, what will be the state of this civilized, enlightened, dissipated and debauched country? How shall the want of American Commerce be supplied, of that commerce which contributes the means of your luxury, of your enjoyments, of the imaginary happiness of this country? We may feel the loss of American connection, a loss which nothing can compensate; but America will have little reason to regret her disconnection from England; and, my Lords, it is evident that England must one day lose the dominion of America. It is impossible that this petty Island can continue in dependence that mighty Continent, increasing daily in numbers and in strength. To protract the time of separation to a distant day is all that can be hoped; and this hope might be obtained by wise and temperate counsels; not by precipitation and violence, uniting America against you: for so it is, my Lords; there is not a man in America, who can endure the idea of being taxed, perhaps to the amount of his whole property, at pleasure by a Legislature three thousand miles distant; or who can separate the idea of taxation from representation. The groundless and interested rumours that are spread, of discord among the Americans, can only impose on the grossest ignorance. They are considered as the cry of the Court, the talk of the day, and meet with the contempt they deserve. But, my Lords, when Administration attempt to join in the imposture, I cannot but think it most humiliating and disgraceful: and such is the attempt made in the exception in favour of New-York. The world is to be deceived into an opinion that New-York is detached from the general cause, and this dirty, humiliating contrivance is to create distrust and disunion in America: and this, when the directly contrary state of the Province is well known. Did not they send Delegates to the Congress: to that Congress, which I shall ever maintain to have been strictly justifiable? And, my Lords, the Committee is now in the Town, most heartily and unanimously co-operating and enforcing the general cause. Such mean, insidious attempts to undermine the American union, only prove its solidity and firmness, which are otherwise not to be attacked or shaken, and against which, all your efforts of war must be vain and impracticable.

But, my Lords, an objection may be made to this account of the powerful and invincible state of America. It will be said, that if England cannot enforce obedience, and curb any refractory disposition that may arise in the Colonies, America might at any time revolt, and shake off the authority of the mother country. But the answer is this: that America derives the invincible strength I have described, from her union, which can only be produced by the oppressions from this country; for, my Lords, the state of America is such, that union can never originate in herself. And this was wisely consulted in the original settlement of that Continent, by the different Constitutions given to the different Provinces, forming them of such diverse textures and dispositions, as not easily to unite or assimilate. Some received Royal Charter Governments; some Provincial; and some Proprietary. Some were shaped in the mould of Monarchy; others received the form of pure Democracy; and even these last were granted in a reign in which the most arbitrary counsels disgraced the Throne. But the Ministers of the Prince (Charles the Second) wisely detached them from each other, knowing that different forms of Government would give them different directions. And so it was. They could never, for themselves merely coincide or co-operate. You might as easily have reconciled fire and water, as have brought Virginia to shake hands with Pennsylvania, or associated New-York to the Massachusetts Bay. And if any one Colony could have ever been infatuated into an attempt entirely to throw off the dependence on this country, she would have had few or none to join her. The contest would then be speedily decided, and very different would be the efforts or divided America against united England, from the force which now resists you, the collected force of united America against England, weakened and divided. For such, my Lords, is the state to which the present measures have brought both countries. At home, discontent and division prevail; and in America it was reserved for the wisdom of these times to produce such an union as renders her invincible. The Americans are now united and cemented by the strongest ties. They are allied in the common defence of every thing dear to them. They are struggling pro aris et focis, in support of their liberties and properties, and the most sacred rights of mankind. Thus associated by the strongest mutual engagements, and aided by their mutual strength, grounded on the justice of their cause, I must assert and repeat, my Lords, that your efforts against them must be unsuccessful, and your war impracticable.

And now, my Lords, it remains to be considered, whether the war which this Bill must produce, be necessary; for without necessity, it will not be contended that any war should be undertaken; much less a civil war, which in the first instance proscribes, and drives to famine, such multitudes of your fellow subjects: whole Towns and Provinces: for it is well known, that the Fishery is not only the Trade, but in a great measure, the food of New England. Now, it cannot appear that this ruinous measure, fraught with all fatal consequences, both to them and ourselves; is necessary; unless it appears that every prudent and proper endeavour has been made to accommodate, to conciliate, to pacify. If such endeavours have been used, and used in vain; then, my Lords, there might be some colour for the present violence. But it is notorious, that not the temper of moderation and humanity, but the spirit of violence and proscription, has uniformly actuated your counsels. In the first instance, without the forms of justice, for a particular fault, you inflicted general punishment. You proceeded from their Trade, to their Municipal rights, to their Constitutions, their Charters, their liberties; and now, this bill of famine and of war finishes the climax of severity. Such have been the counsels and the measures of Administration. Other counsels have been given, and different measures have been proposed; but they have not been even considered; they were rejected with disdain; though they came from a personage whose character gave them authority; and ought to have procured them respect; a great man, (the Earl of Chatham) the greatest perhaps that this age or this country has produced; to whom this country owes her present prosperity, and, I am sorry to say it, her pride, her pride of conquest, which has infatuated her, even in this impracticable war, with the ideas of victory, and certain success; that great man, from whose opinions, though some of your Lordships may sometimes differ, yet there is not one of your Lordships who does not pay homage to his consummate capacity, his extensive talents, his great services, and his age, when he delivers those opinions from his place. I lament that I do not see him there. That great man did propose to you a plan of conciliation between this country and her Colonies. How was it received? It was treated with the most scornful contempt; rejected without being looked into; spurned, trampled upon! I protest, my Lords, I am afflicted with grief, when I reflect on the proceedings of that day, in such an arduous moment, that such a plan, the labour of such talents and such experience, should be rejected, even from your consideration, unlooked into, with such indecent indignity. Erase it from your books; obliterate the transaction from your records; let not posterity be contradicted by history, that such could have been your conduct towards such a man!

So much, my Lords, for conciliatory plans in this House. In another House of Parliament, when a noble Lord, (North) whose character I by no means intend to reflect on, or to mention with disrespect; when he proposed what was conceived in some degree to tend towards conciliation, there was immediately a general alarm: it created almost civil war amongst his troops, and the confusion was universal, till some of the veteran and principal officers brought back their general, and fixed and ascertained him on the old ground of severity. Nothing conciliatory, therefore, has been proposed from Administration, or received from any other quarter; but an uniform system of maxims, doctrines, and measures of violence, has been maintained. And surely, before you resolved on measures of such magnitude, where the event is at least hazardous, of the extremest importance, it was your duty to have tried all possible means of lenity, accommodation, and or prevention, and not have rushed into such fatal calamities, till impelled by the last necessity. As it appears to me, therefore, my Lords, that the war in which this Bill must involve this country, is neither just, practicable, nor necessary, I must give my vote against committing the Bill.

The Earl of Sandwich. The noble Lord mentions the impracticability of conquering America; I cannot think the noble Lord can be serious on this matter. Suppose the Colonies do abound in men, what does that signify? They are raw, undisciplined, cowardly men. I wish instead of forty or fifty thousand of these brave fellows, they would produce in the field at least two hundred thousand, the more the better, the easier would be the conquest; if they did not run away, they would starve themselves into compliance with our measures. I will tell your Lordships an anecdote that happened at the siege of Louisbourg: Sir Peter Warren told me, that in order to try the courage of the Americans, he ordered a great number of them to be placed in the front of the Army; the Americans pretended at first to be very much elated at this mark of distinction, and boasted what mighty feats they would do upon the scene of action; however, when the moment came to put

* Letter to the Earl of SANDWICH, upon the Expedition to LOUISBOURG
LONDON, April 22, 1775.

MY LORD: I have waited a considerable time, in expectation either that some abler advocate for the living and the dead, would have exposed the fallacy of your late extraordinary harangue in the House of Lords, as it was printed in the publick Newspapers; or that a positive contradiction would have appeared from authority; I mean a solemn asseveration that you never made use of such absurd terms, or related such an improbable particular instance, attended with such ludicrous circumstances concerning the brave Sir Peter Warren, and the equally brave North Americans. This latter expectation was rather reasonable in me, because, though I was admitted to the honour of being present at the memorable siege of Louisbourg, in 1745, I cannot, in these times of inquisitorial secrecy, be admitted to the like honour at the assemblies of the British sages; I mean in the House of Lords or Commons, and of course cannot depend upon what may be said to have passed there. The constituents of the Commons are rudely thrust out of the gallery of their own House; and as that celebrated botanist, philosopher, favourite, and Knight of Polar Star, Sir John Hill, says in the preface to his Animadversions upon the Royal Society, I have the honour not to be a member of either. But, my Lord, I was an eye witness to the siege in question, was much nearer than Sir Peter at the time of, and assisted to cover the landing, which was heroically affected; and I do most absolutely deny your second-hand character and account given of the Americans, if it is yours, to be true. I was also frequently an ear witness to the declarations of Sir Peter, which were always directly contrary to what he hath been lately made to relate; I therefore also sincerely believe that part of the harangue in question not to be true. You know, my good Lord, dead men tell no tales; it is well for some they cannot, or perhaps if they could, in this refined and free thinking age, they would not be believed, no, not even Moses and the Prophets, were they to arise. Your Lordship will excuse the quotation; you was always extravagantly fond of the Scrip- tures, at least I have been told so; and one tale, my good Lord, may be as true as another, you know; and yet, after all, your Lordship, far from declaiming so fallaciously, may never have even seen the ludicrous tale you are represented to have so ludicrously embellished. You may, my Lord, be infinitely above reading of Newspapers; nevertheless, in justice to your Lordship, as well as the rest of the concerned, it once more makes its appearance, with a few remarks; and would your Lordship condescend so far, you might learn how injuriously to your honour you have been libelled in the publick prints.

"As to their prowess, I remember very well when I had the honour to be at the Board at which I now preside, I had the curiosity to inquire about the surprising feats said to be performed by those people, [the Americans] at the siege of Louisbourg, of the great Naval officer who commanded on that expedition, as able and honest a seaman as ever lived, (Sir Peter Warren) who told me very frankly they were the greatest set of cowards and poltrons he ever knew; they were all bluster, noise, and conquest, before they got in the presence of their enemies, but then they were good for nothing. I remember a particular instance he told me, which, from the ludicrous circumstances attending it, made a very deep impression on my mind. Soon after their landing, there was a battery, called the Island Battery, which commanded the entrance of the Harbour. Sir Peter having ordered them to attack it; they engaged to perform it; but what was the consequence? They ran away on the first fire. And how did you manage? Did you employ them afterwards, or upbraid them with their cowardice? says I; No, answered Sir Peter, neither would it have been prudent; I formed the Marines and part of the Ships' crews into a body, to act on shore; and instead of upbraiding them, I told them they had behaved like heroes; for, if I had acted otherwise, I should have never taken the Town, as their presence and numbers were necessary to intimidate the besieged.

"Their numbers, [meaning the Americans at large] and extent of country both, will unite with their cowardice to render their conquest the more easy; for, in the first place, it will be more difficult to assemble them, and when they are assembled, the more easy to defeat them. I would be better pleased that the Standing Army should meet two hundred thousand of such a rabble, armed with old rusty firelocks, pistols, staves, clubs, and broomsticks, than twenty thousand, as the war would be at an end, and instead of five victories, one on our part would be equally decisive."

Sir Peter Warren, then a Commodore only, was as able and honest a seaman as ever stept between the stem and stern of a Ship; he might have been advised with; nay, he certainly was, because the most perfect harmony subsisted between the Land and Sea Officers; but he never ordered the Land Forces to attack any part of the For-in execution this boasted courage, behold every one of them ran from the front to the rear of the Army, with as much expedition as their feet could carry them, and threatened to go off entirely, if the Commander offered to make them a shield to protect the British soldiers at the expense of their blood; they did not understand such usage. Sir Peter, finding what egregious cowards they were, and knowing of what importance such numbers must be to intimidate the French by their appearance, told these American heroes that his orders had been misunderstood, that he always intended to keep them in the rear of the Army to make the great push; that it was the custom of Generals to preserve the best Troops to the last; that this was always the Roman custom; and as the Americans resembled the Romans in every particular, especially in courage and love of their country, he should make no scruple of following the Roman custom, and made no doubt but the modern Romans would show acts of bravery equal to any in ancient Rome. By such discourses as these, said Sir Peter Warren, I made a shift to keep them with us, though I took care they should be pushed forward in no dangertifications, nor would they have engaged to perform such orders, if he had; the chief Naval Officer understood discipline much better than to trench upon the Province of General Pepperell; such orders must have bred ill-blood. Can any man be brought to believe, that the General, or his brave volunteer irregulars, about three thousand eight hundred in number, every one of whom belonged to America; nay, almost to a man New Englanders*, would have suffered such treatment? Besides, would any mere Naval officer in his senses, have made himself unnecessarily responsible for consequences so hazardous? Lastly, and beyond all, who could have imagined that an English First Lord of the Admiralty would have espoused such a doctrine, and approved of such conduct?

The Island Battery stood upon a small rock, almost inaccessible, about twenty yards broad, and two hundred long, with a circular Battery of forty-two pounders towards the neck of the Harbour, in front, with a guard-house and barracks behind. How could they, the Americans, run away, then, on the first fire? Or where to? unless into the Ocean; for the Whaling and Ships' boats were sunk, or obliged to draw off; as it was they made a noble stand. One Brooks, an American officer, had nearly struck the flag of the Fort; it was actually half down, when a French Swiss Trooper clove his scull. Their courageous landing; their dragging of eighteen pounders several miles over rocks, and through morasses; their drilling of forty-two pounders left in the deserted grand Battery, which had been spiked up by the French, and then conveying them round the Northeast Harbour to the Light-house; the speedy and close approach of the fascine Batteries to the ramparts, end the general alertness of the successful besiegers, entitles them, surely, to more than a sneer; it justly entitles them to the real appellation of heroes. Could men so circumstanced exert themselves more? Do such an handful of undisciplined soldiers deserve the opprobrious epithets of cowards or poltrons?

The Admiral, it is true, blocked up the Harhour effectually, and neglected nothing in the power of an experienced and valiant Naval officer, on Sea or Shore, to assist the Land Forces; but did any one besides your Lordship ever hear him boast, that if he had acted otherwise, than by crouching and lying to cowards and poltrons, HE should have taken the Town? Modesty is a constant attendant upon real merit; the Admiral would have modestly insisted, that the Fleet blocked up the Port and did its duty, but that the Army took the Town.

You have been libelled, my Lord, or you have paid a poor compliment to the memory of Sir Peter Warren, and much poorer to the manes of the brave North Americans who perished before the walls; neither have you done justice to the survivors upon that expedition; I bled in this business, my Lord; and though an Old Englishman, feel for the honour of the British Empire in every quarter of the globe. I feel also my proportionate part of the ungenerous and degrading insult; but every defamation that gross falsehood and sheer ignorance can suggest against our truly meritorious and much injured brethren of America, is now courtly, and of course fashionable.

How would your Lordship approve of it, to have the ashes of your departed, your broken-hearted brother, Captain Montagu, commonly called Mad Montogu, raked up? Would you like to be reminded of his drunken skirmishes, his nightly window-breakings, and his amorous rencounters at Boston? I have been an eye witness to several such particular instances, attended with ludicrous circumstances likewise; and cannot but remember when one of those brave fellows whom you are said to have stigmatized with the base character of cowards, poltrons, and rabble, (Joe Pierrepont) a small sized man of Roxbury, near Boston, nicknamed the Duke of Kingston, fairly fought with, and drubbed him within an inch of his life. I will go further, my Lord, than you perhaps have chosen to do; to your brother's credit, it shall be recorded that he regarded the man for the residue of his days.

I have done with your Lordship for the present, but not with the publick. As the best refutation to such illiberal malice, I lately caused even Doctor Smollet to give testimony against it, and will, in a few days, make other apt quotations from other historical writers, written at a period when some late pernicious Tory doctrines had not been broached; or if they had, would not have been countenanced, much less encouraged; I mean in the reign of King George the Second, under whom, as Sterne makes uncle Toby declare of King William the Third, I had the honour to serve, though now I am no more than

AN OLD ENGLISH MERCHANT.

* "Inhabitants of Massachusetts Bay, New-Hampshire, Connecticut, and Rhode-Island; 3,850 voluntary soldiers, principally substantial persons, and men of beneficial occupations; this brave, determined, though undisciplined band of soldiers, embarked "from Boston on the 20th of March for Canso, and pray for us, while we fight for you, was "the valient and endearing language wherewith they animated their desponding countymen, on their departure from their families, their fortunes, and their occupations."

--- Foitt's Impartial Representation, &c. Volume 4, Fol. 13.

ous conflict. Now, I can tell the noble Lord that this is exactly the situation of all the heroes in North-America, they are all Romans. And are these the men to fright us from the post of honour? Believe me, my Lords, the very sound of a cannon would carry them off, in Sir Peter's words, as fast as their feet could carry them. This is too trifling a part of the argument, to detain your Lordships any longer. The noble Earl then went on to abuse the Americans for not paying their debts; he made no doubt that the real motive of their Associations, was to defraud their creditors; that the Congress, on which the noble Lord has passed high encomiums, was a seditious and treasonable meeting of persons assembled to resist the legal and just authority of the supreme Legislative power; and however dignified by his Lordship, or any other noble Lord, he should always continue to describe it by the latter appellation, as its only true and proper name. His Lordship entered into a long examination of the purport of the evidence given at the bar by Messrs. Lyster, Davis, Shulldham, and Paliser; and laboured to prove that the present Bill, whatever other objects it might take in, was not, nor ought to be, a bill of intimidation or experiment, but a perpetual law of commercial regulation, operating to extend our trade, to increase our seamen, and strengthen our Naval power.

The Earl of Shelburne, after stating at large the nature of the Newfoundland Fishery, and its great importance to this country, observed, that unless the present Bill was taken up as a permanent commercial regulation, however great an object it might be, it was by no means at present before the House. You are told it is in proof before you, that the people of Nantucket, the unoffending, peaceable inhabitants of that Island, will be deprived of every means of sustenance and support, should this Bill pass into a law. It remains yet uncontradicted, that the people of New-England have not Corn nearly sufficient for their own consumption; and this Bill says they shall not be supplied elsewhere. How nugatory and ridiculous it is, then, to talk of commercial regulation, which is supposed to include improvement and protection, when that regulation is immediately directed to starve and oppress one part of your subjects, to whom there is not so much as any crime or offence imputed, in order to give commercial advantages to another. But if the several laws in being, for the improvement of the Newfoundland Fishery, are not sufficient, or that the Admiralty, in whose department it is, satisfy Parliament that those powers have been properly exerted, and are found to be inadequate, let a Bill be brought in for that purpose. I am convinced of the very great importance of the Fishery and no man in this House will be more zealous to give it his most warm support, than I shall be. His Lordship next adverted to the sedentary Fishery, given up to Canada by the Quebec Bill, and fully explained the great pains taken by the two very-able men who preceded him at the Board of Trade, Charles Townshend and a certain noble Lord and himself, to annex the Fishery of Labrador, &c., to that of Newfoundland. He gave the most flattering testimony to the attention and great abilities of Sir Hugh Palliser, to whom he entrusted the entire negotiation of that difficult affair with the Count De Guerchy, the French Minister. He entirely coincided in sentiments with the noble Lord (Camden) who called this a Bill of Pains, Penalties, and Coercion, not of Commercial Regulation. He agreed with him likewise, that the popular tide was against him; but he was certain it would not be long before it took a different turn, as the people would find they were deceived, and Parliament would at length discover they were misinformed and misled. He therefore, as a member of that body, put in his early claim of objecting to the current Ministerial language, that Parliament did this, and Parliament did that, for he insisted that Parliament had done nothing; it was the Ministry had done all. Attend only a minute to their conduct, said his Lordship, and you will see that what I have now advanced is strictly true. They have laid before us a mutilated correspondence, precisely calculated to answer certain purposes. On one hand they have suppressed whole letters, and of such as they have laid before us, they have only given partial extracts; on the other, they have held back the whole of the official letters on this side of the water, one or two of no consequence only excepted. Will any noble Lord seriously affirm, that whatever proceedings have been taken on such information, can be deemed the proceedings of Parliament? Or that any set of Ministers will be permitted to screen themselves under the protection of Parliament, when it shall be discovered that the measures recommended and adopted, were framed on facts misstated, or for want of material ones designedly suppressed? His Lordship concluded, with observing the strange diversity of sentiment which prevailed among the several leading members in Administration. He alluded to the plan of conciliation proposed by Lord North, which was instantly reprobated. He then observed, that of several of the noble Lords, no two of them scarcely thought alike; some were for commercial regulation, others for asserting the right, without wishing for a paltry revenue, and a very considerable body for the right and revenue both. This state of things put him in mind of a General whom he served under in Germany, a native of that country, who first desired the Regiments at the right to form to the left, then again to the right, then to the rear, again to the right-about; that the Troops, after being harassed for two days by these absurd, contradictory manoeuvres, at last found themselves in the place they set out from, without making the least way, on which the General desired every Corps to march as they liked, so as to make their way in the most speedy manner to the place of their destination. He hoped, however, that Englishmen would never copy the slavish obedience of Germans, but would learn to act for themselves, and spurn the direction of those who knew neither to lead them to victory, nor protect them from ruin.

The Earl of Suffolk totally disapproved of some of the reasoning employed, and facts alluded to, by Lord Sandwich. He said, that noble Lord's insinuations and assertions, that the Americans would not fight, were what he could not approve of. He believed, there were as brave men in that country as in any other; and though the fact were otherwise, he could never hear it asserted, with any degree of satisfaction, that there was any part of the King's subjects deficient in that degree of personal courage for which the whole were so justly renowned. There was another point much laboured by the same noble Lord, to which he could never give his assent; and he was sorry to hear it relied on, and so much adverted to in the course of the debate; that was, that the present Bill was meant to be a measure of permanent commercial regulation, distinct from its main object. This, he said, was by no means the intention of its original framers; it was intended as a bill of coercion, to oblige the people of New England to submit to the legal and just power of the mother country, and that the faith of Parliament would be pledged to them to restore the Fishery as soon as it should appear that they had returned to their former obedience. His Lordship then proceeded to defend the Bill on that idea; and, in answer to what had been said relative to the diversity of opinions which prevailed among the King's servants, he was certain there was not a second among them as to the material question of the right, and the means of exerting it. As to the conciliatory motion in the other House, he owned that many of the Members of it were much staggered, and very justly so, till it came to be explained; and, for his part, he should be much grieved if there was not as great a majority against it as there appeared for it, if the motion had not admitted of the obvious sense it did when it came to be examined. He repeated how happy he was in being one of the persons who advised the dissolution of Parliament, as the designs and expectations of America were at once frustrated and broken by that measure; and concluded in replying to what the noble Marquis dropped early in the debate, that the repeal of the Stamp Act was the source from which all our present confusions had totally originated.

The Earl of Radnor said, he was at the throne, going out, not intending to vote on either side, when he heard the last noble Earl pledge the faith of Parliament that so valuable a branch of our commerce was intended to be given up to the New Englanders, as a sacrifice for their returning to their duty. It was an improper language to be held in that House, nor was the policy in every respect less exceptionable; for both which reasons he had returned to give his voice against the Bill.

The Earl of Suffolk said, he did not mean, as a Minister, to pledge the faith of Parliament, nor did he promise the people of New England that the Fishery should be given up; the intentions he wished to impress being only, that the present Bill was not a bill of commercial regulation, but of coercion; which, as soon as the ends proposed were retained, would certainly be repealed, leaving Parliament, nevertheless, to take the matter up on motives of policy.

The Earl of Radnor, not at all satisfied with this explanation, adhered to his former opinion, and declared that he could not, in conscience, give his vote in favour of a Bill, obedience to which was to be purchased on the implied conditions of sacrificing the most important branch of commerce belonging to the British Empire.

The Duke of Grafton said, he had not the least difficulty in giving his vote on the present occasion, as it did not, in his opinion, rest on the question so much agitated on both sides of the House; the question of taxation so improperly introduced into the debate. The present Bill, he insisted, was founded on the principle of retaliation and punishment, for an outrage as daring as it was unprovoked, still further heightened and aggravated by a resistance to all lawful authority, and almost a positive avowal of a total independence on the mother country. On those grounds the propriety of the present Bill could only be fairly argued; and the motives of retaliation in one instance, and a withholding the benefits only due to a dutiful and obedient conduct in the other, were what had determined him to give his vote that the Bill should be committed. His Grace next disclaimed all ideas of taxation and commercial regulation, as being clearly out of the question. He observed, that a noble Lord in Administration (the Earl of Suffolk) had very improperly imputed all the present confusions to the repeal of the Stamp Act. I was the person, said his Grace, who framed those Resolutions, and had the honour to propose them to a Committee of this House, on which the Bill for that repeal was afterwards formed, brought in, and passed. I was then the advocate, and still take a particular pride in being the steady friend of America. The delicacy of my situation then, as well as now, will not permit me satisfactorily to explain the motives which led to that repeal, nor the consequent very disagreeable circumstances which succeeded it, and perhaps now regulate my conduct; but this, however, I am at liberty to declare, that the argument so confidently urged, that America contributes nothing towards the common support, however plausibly maintained, or forcibly expressed, is a fallacious one. I affirm, she does contribute largely to the public burthens, in the great consumption of our Manufactures; and I should be very sorry to see, that what appears now a speculative composition, liable to be controverted, should ever come to be demonstrably, nay actually, proved. Will any noble Lord, at all conversant with the trade and commerce of this country, contend that we are not enabled to pay the great load of taxes we labour under, by the vast increase of our Exports to that Continent; or that the various articles of Leather, &c., and in short all exciseable commodities exported to that country, as well as the innumerable benefits derived to every part of the three Kingdoms, by the circuitous commerce carried on with it, is not, in reality, a very great augmentation to our revenue, and to every substantial purpose, answers the end of an actual tax, unaccompanied by any of the disagreeable consequences that never fail to attend laying burthens on the people, and collecting it? A noble and learned Lord, (Camden) seemed to take it for granted that all thoughts of conciliation are laid aside; and that this Bill is no less than a positive declaration of war on our part. I beg leave to differ from the learned Lord. I rejoice, said the Duke, that, in speaking before so numerous an audience, I can describe the true state of this transaction, and prevent its crossing the Atlantic in improper colours. When the noble Earl (Chatham) proposed his Bill, could such a Bill be expected? Could any man imagine a person of his wisdom and experience, (and I have all respect for his abilities, but would speak even if he were present with the same freedom I now do) of his Parliamentary experience, would propose a Bill which must involve us in fatal disputes with the Commons; a Bill which was to repeal nine Acts of Parliament, and many of them revenue Acts? But let his plan have been what it would, it was not spurned from this House; it is yet in this House; it now lies on your table. I believe that America will trust to the parental disposition of this country, where she has many strenuous friends, among whom I number myself one of the warmest. I trust, therefore, that she will not blindly rush on her own destruction, and thereby prevent them from serving her, but return to her obedience, as the surest means of obtaining a reparation for any injuries she may have sustained. On the whole, therefore, I sincerely hope that the present Bill will have the desired effect; that our fellow-subjects in America will wisely and dutifully return to their obedience; and, that as in the present year 1775, we are prosecuting just measures to bring about so desirable an end, so in the year 1776, we may be employed in manifesting the most ample proofs of our removing all cause, or almost possibility of the return of the same evils, by ascertaining their rights and the constitutional power of this country, on the most fair, equitable, and permanent foundations. It was my task on a former occasion; and I shall, with pleasure, in the year 1776, as a strenuous friend to the just claims of America, unremittingly labour in the same cause.

The Marquis of Rockingham observed that a noble Lord (Dudley) had objected to the accounts of the American Exports of 1764, now lying on the table, as well as that given by a witness at their Lordships' bar, (Mr. Watson) and drew a conclusion from the method of obtaining them, one being made up from unsigned papers, and the other from false entries; that they were both erroneous, and consequently that every deduction drawn from such premises must be equally fallacious and undeserving of the least degree of credit or attention. To this his Lordship answered, that for the purpose he employed those supposed facts, it was totally immaterial whether they were correct or not; the Exports, for instance, might be £2,700,000, or only £2,000,000; the argument either way was equally good. All he meant to prove by stating them was to show the vast increase of our trade to America, from a comparative state of it at different periods. The error, his Lordship said, was uniform; it existed at all times, or not at all. Thus the Custom House entries, said the annual Exports in 1704, were of foreign Goods £17,000, and of home £54,000, in all £,71,000; in 1754, £180,000; in 1764, in ten years, more than double; and in the last nine years again, nearly in the same proportion, the Exports being between seven and eight hundred thousand Pounds to New-England alone. His Lordship concluded with observing, that some noble Lords, who formerly entertained an opinion of the propriety of the Stamp Act, seemed to have since altered their sentiments. He, therefore, called upon them to declare their minds freely, and not to act under any restraint: for he was ready and willing to unload them of such a burthen, and bear the whole of the blame on his own shoulders; trusting, on the other hand, if it proved a wise measure, that he might be entitled to claim the merit thus abandoned.

Lord Camden rose to explain, in reply to what had fallen from the last noble Duke who spoke in the debate. He begged leave to correct a mistake of his Grace's, relative to the reception Lord Chatham's conciliatory Bill met with, and to recall to the memory of the House the manner of its total rejection. When the noble Lord who brought it in had explained the purposes of the Bill, and delineated its great outlines, he apologized for the matter it contained, and the awkward dress it appeared in; beseeching, at the same time, the attention, indulgence, and assistance of the House, to amend it in matter and form, so as to suit it to the magnitude and importance of the objects to which it was meant to be directed. What was the immediate consequence? said his Lordship. A noble Lord in Administration, (Lord Dartmouth) remarkable for his candour, consented that the Bill should lie on the table, to be taken up on some future day, in order to consider it maturely, as it contained such an infinity of matter; but on a sudden another noble Lord, high in office, (Lord Sandwich) strenuously opposed it, and moved for a total rejection, refusing it even the cold compliment or ceremonial, of letting it lie on the table for twenty-four hours. His Grace has a kind of answer to this; he says, "though the Bill was not permitted to go to a second reading, it was never totally rejected, it is still before the House, and may be still brought under its cognizance." This I absolutely deny. The Bill, though on your Lordships' table, is now no more than waste paper; it may be there, or any where else, as to any substantial purpose. Look into the Clerk's minutes; suppose the Journals made up, and in either event you will find the Bill absolutely, to all intents and purposes, rejected; and as much out of this House, in point of order and Parliamentary proceedings, as if it had never been brought into it. His Grace's reason for objecting to the Bill, however new, for I am certain nothing like it was suggested in the debate, is equally curious. The noble Duke says, it was highly improper and unparliamentary to bring a Bill into this House, which, by repealing several Revenue Acts, was a direct infringement of the right of the Commons, who claim it as an inalienable privilege to originate all Bills for raising and repealing taxes. Is the noble Duke to be informed, that when the Bill got into the Committee was the time to state that objection, where he or any noble Lord would be at liberty to put a question separately upon every word, sentence, and clause, by which means not only three or four Revenue Acts might be left out, but three or four hundred, if the Bill contained so many? On the whole, my Lords, whatever his Grace's sentiments may be, it was to the principle, not the clauses of the Bill, the real objection lay, therefore those who were against the principle acted very properly not to trouble themselves with the clauses, but to reject the whole at once.

The Earl of Abingdon said, that reason, justice, conscience, principle, and instinct, all prompted him to pronounce the Bill a most diabolick measure. How the right reverend Bench reconciled it to their consciences, he was unable to conceive: for his part he put his trust in the Almighty; and though he knew all he could say would avail nothing against a Ministerial majority, yet he cautioned the Lords against injustice, as in the judicial visitation of Providence it generally fell heavy on the heads of those who planned iniquity.

The question was then put; - for committing the Bill, 104; against it, 29.

Ordered, That the said Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House;

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill to-morrow.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to be put in a Committee upon the Bill;

The House was adjourned during pleasure, and put into a Committee upon the said Bill.

After some time the House was resumed;

And the Lord Scarsdale reported from the Committee, "That they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereto, which he was ready to report when the House will please to receive the same."

Ordered, That the said Report be received on Monday next.

MONDAY, March 20, 1775.

The Lord Scarsdale, according to order, reported the amendments made by the Committee of the House to the Bill.

[The following was one of the amendments: Insert clause A. "Provided also, and be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That nothing in this Act contained respecting the Fisheries carried on by his Majesty's subjects in North America, shall extend, or be construed to extend to any Ship or Vessel, being the property of any of the inhabitants of the Townships of Marshfield and Scituate, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, employed in or carrying on the Mackerel, Shad, and Alewife Fisheries only; if the master or other person having the charge of any such Ship or Vessel as aforesaid, shall produce a Certificate under the hand and seal of the Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, setting forth, that such Ship or Vessel (expressing her name, and the name of her Master, and describing her built and burthen,) is the whole and entire property of his Majesty's subjects of the said Townships of Marshfield and Scituate, and was the property of one or more of them on or before the twenty-fifth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, which Certificate or Certificates

"such Governour or Commander-in-Chief is hereby authorized and required to grant."]

And the said amendments being read a second time, were severally agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a third time to-morrow, and the Lords summoned.

TUESDAY, March 21, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the third reading of the Bill;

The said Bill was accordingly read the third time; which done,

The Earl of Buckinghamshire offered an amendment. The clause, as it stood in the engrossed Bill, which his Lordship wished to alter, was part of the prohibitory clause relative to the Fishery, where it was enacted, "That if any Ship or Vessel, being the property of the subjects of Great Britain, not belonging to, and fitted out from, Great Britain, Ireland, or the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey, shall be found, after the 20th of July, 1775, carrying on any Fishery, of what nature or kind soever, upon the banks of Newfoundland, the Coast of Labrador, or within the River or Gulf of St. Lawrence, or upon the Coast of Cape Breton, or Nova Scotia, or any other part of the Coast of North America, or having on board materials for carrying on any such Fishery, every such Ship or Vessel, with her Guns, Ammunition, Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, together with the Fish, if any shall be found, shall be forfeited, unless the Master, or person having the charge of such Ship or Vessel, do produce to the Commander of any of his Majesty's Ships-of-War, stationed for the protection and superintendence of the British Fisheries in America, a Certificate under the hand and seal of the Governour or Commander-in-Chief of any of the Colonies or Plantations of Quebec, Newfoundland, St. Johns, Nova Scotia, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, East or West Florida, setting forth, that such Ship or Vessel, expressing her name, burthen, &c., and describing her, hath been fitted out from some one of the said Colonies or Plantations;" his Lordship moved, that the words "New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina," be omitted.

The Duke of Manchester opposed the amendment. He said, that one half of the Continent of North America was at once punished by the proposed alteration, without any trial, proof, or inquiry whatever; that such a mode of proceeding was totally repugnant to the established rules of equity, which always supposed the party accused had been heard before judgment was pronounced.

The Lord Chancellor said, the House was in possession of evidence, fully sufficient to authorize their Lordships in agreeing to the proposed amendment; that at the time the Bill originated in the other House, the information alluded to was not known; that it appeared by the several accounts received from the Provinces of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, &c., that they were equally culpable with those of New England; and that of course they ought to suffer under one common punishment.

The Duke of Manchester acceded to the general premises laid down by the learned Lord; but totally denied the propriety of the inferences and conclusions drawn from them. He observed, that although the letters stated what his Lordship was pleased to call the disobedient and undutiful disposition of the Southern Colonies, but what he should always esteem as a meritorious perseverance in the cause of freedom, and a constitutional assertion of their rights, those letters were no more in the contemplation of the House, in its legislative or deliberate capacity, than if they had never existed. Have they, said his Grace, been even so much as read? Have they been considered? Have the parties accused been heard in their own defence? Away, then, with such pretences! Has not the Minister in the other House, and the House itself, been in possession of the same information? Why then have not they proceeded in the same manner? No; however willing they might be to do it, they plainly saw the insurmountable difficulties which lay in their way, and wisely declined it. The Province of New-York was permitted to stand in the Bill with the other favoured Provinces, though it was well known that they had, in their legislative capacity, denied the right of taxation; and had conformably to those sentiments, transmitted a Petition to the King, a Memorial to this House, and a Remonstrance to the other. His Grace, therefore, desired to know the reason why they were singled out from the rest, when the offence was the same. He had no objection to the indulgence; but he could not perceive how their Lordships could reconcile their conduct on this occasion with any rule of consistency whatever.

The Earl of Effingham. I have been well informed that a Ship has arrived at New-York, and that the people of that Colony absolutely and peremptorily refused to permit any part of the cargo to be landed. I therefore call on some of the noble Lords in Administration, to contradict this account if false, or confirm it if it be true. Should the latter be the case, I cannot for my part conceive, on what ground the present exemption in favour of New-York can be defended.

The Earl of Dartmouth. It is not in my power directly to contradict, or affirm, the intelligence of the noble Lord. All I can say on the subject is, that the last account I received was from a gentleman of veracity on the spot, who, writing on the Saturday, and informing me of the arrival of the Vessel, assures me, that the Goods would be landed on the Monday following.

The question was then put, "Whether these words shall stand part of the Bill?"

It was resolved in the Negative.

Other amendments were offered and agreed to.

Then it was moved, "That this Bill, with the amendments, do Pass?"

Which being objected to;

The question was put, "Whether this Bill, with the amendments, shall Pass?"

The House divided - for the Bill, 73, against it, 21, viz: Camden, Richmond, Devonshire, Portland, Rockingham, Ponsonby, Abingdan, Manchester, Courtenay, Tankerville, Scarborough, Cholmondeley, Abergavenny, Wycombe, Torrington, Effingham, Fitzwilliam, Craven, Leinster, Stanhope, Archer.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

The following Protest was entered:

Dissentient.

1st. Because the attempt to coerce by famine, the whole body of the inhabitants of great and populous Provinces, is without example in the history of this, or perhaps of any civilized nation; and is one of those unhappy inventions, to which Parliament is driven by the difficulties which daily multiply upon us, from an obstinate adherence to an unwise plan of government. We do not know exactly the extent of the combination against our commerce in New England, and the other Colonies; but we do know the extent of the punishment we inflict upon it, which is universal, and includes all the inhabitants; amongst these, many are admitted to be innocent; and several are alleged by Ministers to be, in their sense, even meritorious. That Government which attempts to preserve its authority by destroying the trade of its subjects, and by involving the innocent and guilty in a common ruin, if it acts from a choice of such means, confesses itself unworthy; if from inability to find any other, admits itself wholly incompetent to the ends of its institution.

2dly. Because the English Merchants are punished without any guilt, real or pretended, on their part. The people of the proscribed Provinces, though failing in their duty to Government, ought to be permitted to discharge their obligations to Commerce. Without their Fishery, this is impossible. The Merchants of England entertain no fears for their debts, except from the steps which are said to be taken in their favour. Eight hundred thousand Pounds of English property, belonging to London alone, is not to be trifled with, or sacrificed to the projects of those who have constantly failed in every expectation which they have held out to the publick, and who are become more bigotted to methods of violence, in proportion to the experience of their inefficacy, and the mischievous consequences which attend them.

3dly. Because the people of New England, besides the natural claim of mankind to the gifts of Providence on their own Coast, are specially entitled to the Fishery by their Charters, which have never been declared forfeited. These Charters, we think, (notwithstanding the contempt with which the idea of publick faith has been treated,) to be of material consideration. The Bill, therefore, not growing out of any judicial process, seems equally a violation of all natural and all civil right.

4thly. Because we conceive that the attempt which has been made to bribe the Nation into an acquiescence in this arbitrary Act, by holding out to them (by evidence at the bar) the spoils of the New England Fishery, worth upwards of £300,000 a year, to be a scheme full of weakness and indecency; of indecency, because it may be suspected that the desire of the confiscation has created the guilt; weak, because it supposes that whatever is taken from the Colonies, is of course to be transferred to ourselves. We may trample on the rules of justice; but we cannot alter the nature of things. We cannot convey to Great Britain the advantages of situation which New England possesses for the Fishery. If the value of the commodity should be enhanced at the foreign market by the exclusion of so large a part of the supply, it may either greatly injure the sale of the commodity itself, or put the consumers on new articles of consumption, or new methods of supply, to the just ruin of those who, deluded by avarice, have chosen, from the vain hope of an enhanced market, to disturb the natural, settled, and beneficial course of traffick.

5thly. Because we do not apprehend that the topick so much insisted upon by a Lord high in office, in favour of this project, namely, the cowardice of his Majesty's American subjects, to have any weight in itself, or to be at all agreeable to the dignity of sentiment which ought to characterize this House. We do not think it true, that any part of the subjects of this Empire are defective in bravery. It is to the last degree improper to act upon such a supposition; as it must highly disgrace our arms in case of misfortune, and must take away all honour from them in case of success. Nothing can tend more effectually to defeat the purposes of all our coercive measures, than to let the people against whom they are intended know, that we think our authority founded in their baseness; that their resistance will give them some credit, even in our own eyes; and that we attribute their obedience only to their want of courage. This is to call for resistance, and to provoke rebellion by the most powerful of all motives which can act upon men of any degree of spirit and sensibility.

6thly. Because the interdict from Fishing and Commerce, is not to be terminated by any certain and definite act to be done by the party interdicted, but its duration depends solely on the will of the Governours and majority of the Council in some of the Provinces; upon their mere arbitrary opinion of the state of commerce. In two of the proscribed Provinces, the interdict is made to depend on the same arbitrary will in much worse hands, those of mere Custom House Officers. A power of such magnitude is not fit to be delegated to any man, however wise or however exalted.

But to deliver over several hundred thousands of our fellow-creatures to be starved at the mere pleasure of persons in certain subordinate situations, and some of them in an office always more or less suspicious and obnoxious, and necessary to be watched and guarded, rather than vested with absolute power over all; and this without any rule to guide their discretion, without any penalty to deter from an abuse of it, is a strain of such tyranny, oppression, and absurdity, as we believe never was deliberately entertained by any grave assembly.

Lastly. Because the Bill, though in appearance a measure of retaliation only, upon a supposition that the Colonies have been the first aggressors, by their Association not to import Goods from Great Britain, yet is in truth a most cruel enforcement of former oppressions; and that Association is no more than a natural consequence of antecedent and repeated injuries. And since the restraint of this Bill is not to be taken off till the several Colonies shall agree to receive again all Goods whatsoever from Great Britain, and to pay all the Duties imposed by Parliament, not excepting those upon Tea; and since three of them must apply through the medium of the new Council of Massachusetts Bay, and the last mentioned Province is obliged not only to acknowledge the new Charter, but submit in all respects to the severe conditions of the Port Bill, before they can be released from their hardships; since these are the terms, and the only terms, upon which this proscription is to cease, and the Colonies must therefore submit to be the slaves instead of the subjects of Great Britain; this Bill, in its principle, is both arbitrary and unjust. And as we do not conceive any ground of expectation that the Provinces will yield to such hard conditions, a civil war, which may probably end in the total separation of the Colonies from the mother country, will too naturally be the consequence of this Bill; in respect of which, as well as for the other reasons hereby assigned, we do most solemnly and heartily protest against the same.

ABINGDON,	TORRINGTON,
CRAVEN,	ROCKINGHAM,
ABERGAVENNY,	CAMDEN,
STANHOPE,	EFFINGHAM,
LEINSTER,	PONSONBY,
WYCOMBE,	CHOLMONDELEY,
RICHMOND,	FITZWILLIAM,
DEVONSHIRE,	MANCHESTER.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, to return the said Bill, and acquaint them, that the Lords have agreed to the same, with some amendments, to which their Lordships desire their concurrence.

An Act to Restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of MASSACHUSETTS BAY and NEW-HAMPSHIRE, and Colonies of CONNECTICUT and RHODE-ISLAND, and PROVIDENCE PLANTATION, in NORTH AMERICA, to GREAT BRITAIN, IRELAND, and the BRITISH Islands in the WEST INDIES; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of NEWFOUNDLAND, or other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations.

Whereas, by an Act, made in the twelfth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, entituled "An Act for the Encouraging and Increasing of Shipping and Navigation;" and by several subsequent Acts of Parliament which are now in force, it is, amongst other things, enacted, that for every Ship or Vessel that shall load any commodities in those Acts particularly enumerated, at any British Plantation, being the Growth, Product, or Manufacture thereof, Bonds shall be given, with one surety, to the value of one thousand Pounds, if the Ship be of less burthen than one hundred tons, and of the sum of two thousand Pounds, if the Ship be of greater burthen, that the same commodities shall be brought by such Ship or Vessel to some other British Plantation, or to some Port in Great Britain: And whereas, by several other Acts of Parliament which are now in force, no commodities of the Growth, Product, or Manufacture of Europe, (except Salt for the Fisheries, Wines the Madeiras and Azores, and Western Islands, and Victual and Linen Cloth from Ireland, under the restrictions in such Acts particularly mentioned) can be imported into any Plantation, Colony, Territory, or place belonging to his Majesty in Asia, Africa, or America, but what shall be bona fide, and without fraud, laden and shipped in Great Britain, and carried directly from thence: And whereas, during the continuance of the Combinations and Disorders which at this time prevail within the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, to the obstruction of the Commerce of these Kingdoms and other his Majesty's Dominions, and in breach and violation of the laws of this Realm, it is highly unfit that the inhabitants of the said Provinces and Colonies should enjoy the same privileges of Trade, and the same benefits and advantages to which his Majesty's faithful and obedient subjects are entitled; Be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and during the continuance of this Act, no Goods, Wares, or Merchandises, which are particularly enumerated in, and by the said Act made in the twelfth year of King Charles the Second, or any other Act, being the Growth, Product or Manufacture of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay, or New-Hampshlre, or Colonies of Connecticut, Rhode-Island, or Providence Plantation, in North America, or any or either of them, are to be brought to some other British Colony, or to Great Britain; or any such enumerated Goods, Wares, or Merchandise, which shall at any time or times have been imported or brought into the said Provinces or Colonies, or any or either of them, shall be shipped, carried, conveyed, or transported from any of the said Provinces or Colonies, respectively, to any Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port, or Place whatsoever, other than to Great Britain, or some of the British Islands in the West Indies, to be laid on shore there; and that no other Goods, Wares, or Merchandise, whatsoever, of the Growth, Product, or Manufacture of the Provinces or Colonies hereinbefore mentioned, or which shall at any time or times have been imported or brought into the same, shall, from and after the said first day of July, and during the continuance of this Act, be shipped, carried, conveyed, or transported from any of the said Provinces or Colonies, respectively, to any other Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port, or place whatsoever, except to the Kingdoms of Great Britain, or Ireland, or to some of the British Islands in the West Indies, to be laid on shore there; any law, custom, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding.

II. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the said first day of July, before any Ship or Vessel shall lade, or take on board any Goods as aforesaid, in any or either of the Provinces or Colonies before mentioned, sufficient Bond, with one surety, besides the Master of such Ship or Vessel, shall be given to the Collector, or other principal Officer of the Customs at the Port or place where such Goods are intended to be laden, or taken on board, in the penalty of one thousand Pounds, if the Ship be of less burthen than one hundred tons; and of the sum of two thousand Pounds if the Ship shall be of that or any greater burthen, with condition that such enumerated Goods shall not be landed, or put on shore, at or upon any other Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port, or place whatsoever, except some Port or place within the Kingdom of Great Britain, or some of the British Islands in the West Indies; and that all other Goods, Wares, or Merchandise, so intended to be laden as aforesaid, shall not be landed or put on shore at or upon any Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port, or place whatsoever, other than, and except, some Port or place within the Kingdoms of Great Britain, or Ireland, or some of the British Islands in the West Indies; and with further condition to bring a Certificate in discharge thereof, within eighteen months from the date of such Bond, for such of the said Goods as shall be entered for, or landed in, Great Britain or Ireland., respectively, and within six months for such of the said Goods as shall be entered for, or landed in, any of the British Islands in the West Indies; which respective Certificates shall be under the hands and seals of office of the Collector and Comptroller, or other principal Officer of the Customs, resident at the Port or place where such Goods shall be landed, testifying the landing thereof; or such Bond or Bonds shall and may be discharged by proof, upon oath made by credible persons, that the said Goods were taken by enemies, or perished in the Seas.

III. And it is hereby farther enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where any such Bond or Bonds shall be given as aforesaid, in pursuance of this Act, the Collector, or other principal Officer of the Customs, to whom such Bond or Bonds shall have been given, shall deliver, under his hand and seal of office, without fee or reward, to the Master of the Ship or Vessel taking in such Goods, for the security of her Navigation, a Certificate that such Bond or Bonds bath or have been given, expressing therein the quantity and species of the Goods, with the marks and numbers of the Packages, and the Port or place for which they were entered; and if any such Goods shall be laden on board any such Ship or Vessel in any of the Provinces or Colonies in this Act before mentioned, before such Bond or Bonds shall be given, or shall he found on board any Ship or Vessel, without the Certificate hereinbefore directed, that such Bond or Bonds hath or have been given, the Goods so laden, together with the Ship or Vessel, with her Guns, Ammunition, Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, shall be forfeited; and if any Goods, so laden as aforesaid, shall be landed or discharged at any Port or place, contrary to the intent and meaning of this Act, over and above the penalty of the Bond or Bonds, the Shipper and Owner of such Goods, and the Master or person taking charge of the Vessel on board which they were laden, shall respectively forfeit the full value of the Goods so landed or discharged, to be estimated according to the highest price or value which such sort of Goods bear in the Province or Colony where and at the time when they were shipped and laden; which Ship and Goods may be seized and prosecuted, or the value of such Goods prosecuted for by any Admiral, Chief Commander, or Commissioned Officer of his Majesty's Fleet or Ships-of-War, or by any Officer of his Majesty's Customs, in the manner hereinafter directed.

IV. And it is hereby farther enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the first day of September, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and during the continuance of this Act, no sort of Wines, Salt, or any Goods or commodities whatsoever, (except Horses, Victual, and Linen Cloth, the Produce and Manufacture of Ireland, imported directly from thence) shall be imported into any of the said Colonies or Provinces hereinbefore respectively mentioned, upon any pretence whatsoever, unless such Goods shall be bona fide, and without fraud, laden and shipped in Great Britain, and carried directly from thence, upon forfeiture thereof, and of the Ship or Vessel on board which such Goods shall be laden; and it shall be lawful for any Admiral, Chief Commander, or Commissioned Officer of his Majesty's Fleet or Ships-of-War, or any Officer of his Majesty's Customs, to seize any Ship or Vessel arriving at any of the said Provinces or Colonies before mentioned, or which shall be discovered within two leagues of any shore thereat, having such Goods on board, and the Goods laden thereon, (except as before excepted) for which the Master, or other person taking charge of such Ship or Vessel, shall not produce a Cocket or Clearance from the Collector, or proper Officer of his Majesty's Customs, certifying that the said Goods were laden on board the said Ship or Vessel in some Port of Great Britain; any law, custom, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding.

V. Provided always, and it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That this Act, or any thing herein contained, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to prohibit the exportation or carrying out from any of the Provinces or Colonies before mentioned, or the importation into the same, of any Goods or Commodities whatsoever, for the victualling or providing any of his Majesty's Ships-of-War, or other Ships or Vessels in his Majesty's service, or for his Majesty's Forces, Forts, or Garrisons; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

VI. And provided, also, That nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to hinder or restrain the lawful importation into any or either of the said Provinces or Colonies hereinbefore mentioned, from any of the British Islands in the West Indies, of any such Goods or Commodities, being the Growth or Produce thereof, as may now by law be imported from thence into the said Provinces or Colonies, or any or either of them.

VII. And it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any Ship or Vessel, being the property of the subjects of Great Britain, not belonging to, and fitted out from Great Britain or Ireland, or the Islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Sark, Alderney, or Man, shall be found, after the twentieth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, carrying on any Fishery, of what nature or kind soever, upon the banks of Newfoundland, the Coast of Labrador, or within the River or Gulf of St. Lawrence, or upon the Coast of Cape Breton, or Nova Scotia, or any other part of the Coast of North America, or having on board materials for carrying on any such Fishery, every such Ship or Vessel, with her Guns, Ammunition, Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, together with the Fish, if any shall be found on board, shall be forfeited, unless the Master, or other person having the charge of such Ship or Vessel, do produce to the Commander of any of his Majesty's Ships-of-War, stationed for the protection and superintendence of the British Fisheries in America, a Certificate, under the hand and seal of the Governour or Commander-in-Chief, of any of the Colonies or Plantations of Quebec, Newfoundland, St. John, Nova Scotia, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, East Florida, West Florida, Bahamas, and Bermudas, setting forth that such Ship or Vessel, expressing her name, and the name of her Master, and describing her build and burthen, hath fitted and cleared out from some one of the said Colonies or Plantations, in order to proceed upon the said Fishery, and that she actually and bona fide belongs to, and is the whole and entire property of his Majesty's subjects, inhabitants of the said Colony or Plantation; which Certificates such Governours or Commanders-in-Chief, respectively, are hereby authorized and required to grant.

VIII. And to the end that the foregoing Prohibitions, Restrictions, and Regulations may be more effectually carried into execution, it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful to and for all or any of the Commanders of his Majesty's Ships or Vessels of War, stationed and appointed for the regulation and protection of the British Fishery upon the Coasts of North America, or to and for the Commanders of any other of his Majesty's Ships or Vessels employed at Sea, and they, and every of them, are hereby required and enjoined to examine, search, and visit all Ships and Vessels suspected to be carrying on the said Fisheries, and to seize, arrest, and prosecute, in manner hereinafter directed, all and every such Ships and Vessels as shall be found to be carrying on the said Fisheries, not belonging to and fitted out from Great Britain, or Ireland, or the Islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, or Man, which shall not have on board the Certificate hereinbefore required.

IX. Provided always, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to empower any Officer of his Majesty's Ships-of-War, or of his Majesty's Customs, to seize any Ship or Vessel which shall be fitted and cleared out from any of the said Colonies and Provinces before the first day of June, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, for the Whale Fishery only, and which shall be found carrying on such Fishery within the limits aforesaid, between the said first day of June and the first day of November, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and not carrying on, nor having on board any materials for carrying on any other Fishery.

X. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That nothing in this Act contained, respecting the Fisheries carried on by his Majesty's subjects in North America, shall affect, or be construed to affect, any Ship or Vessel, her Guns, Ammunition, Tackle, Apparel, Furniture or Fish, on board, being the property of any of the inhabitants of the Island of Nantucket, employed in the Whale Fishery only, if it shall appear, by the papers on board, that such Ship or Vessel was fitted and cleared out from thence before the first day of June, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, or if the Master, or other person having the charge of any such Ship or Vessel as aforesaid, shall produce a Certificate, under the hand and seal of the Governour or Commander-in-Chief of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, setting forth that such Ship or Vessel, (expressing her name, and the name of her Master, and describing her build and burthen) is the whole and entire property of his Majesty's subjects of the said Island of Nantucket, and was the property of one or more of them on or before the twenty-fifth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and that she was cleared out with materials on board in order to proceed upon the Whale Fishery only; any thing in this Act to the contrary thereof, in any wise notwithstanding.

XI. Provided also, and be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That nothing in this Act contained respecting the Fisheries carried on by his Majesty's subjects in North America, shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any Ship or Vessel being the property of any of the inhabitants of the Townships of Marsh field and Scituate, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, employed in or carrying on the Mackerel, Shad, and Alewife Fisheries only, if the Master or other person having the charge of any such Ship or Vessel as aforesaid, shall produce a Certificate, under the hand and seal of the Governour or Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, setting forth that such Ship or Vessel, (expressing her name and the name of her Master, and describing her build and burthen) is the whole and entire property of his Majesty's subjects of the said Townships of Marshfield and Scituate, and was the property of one or more of them, on or before the twenty-fifth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, which Certificate or Certificates such Governour or Commander-in-Chief is hereby authorized and required to grant.

XII. Provided always, and be it enacted, That the River which emptieth itself into Passamacadie or Passamaquadi Bay, on the Western side, and is commonly called and known by the name of Saint Croix River, be held and deemed for all the purposes in this Act contained, to be the boundary between the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and Nova Scotia.

XIII. And whereas, it is the intent and meaning of this Act, that the several prohibitions and restraints herein imposed upon the Trade and Commerce and Fisheries of the said Provinces and Colonies, should be discontinued and cease, so soon as the Trade and Commerce of his Majesty's subjects may be carried on without interruption, Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, That whenever it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of his Majesty's Governour or Commander-in-Chief, and the majority of the Council, in the Provinces of New-Hampshire and Massachusetts Bay, respectively, that peace and obedience to the laws shall be so far restored within the said Provinces, or either of them, that the Trade and Commerce of his Majesty's subjects may be carried on without interruption within the same, and that Goods, Wares, and Merchandise have been freely imported into the said Provinces, or either of them, from Great Britain, and exposed to sale without any let, hindrance, or molestation, from or by reason of any unlawful combinations to prevent or obstruct the same; and that Goods, Wares, and Merchandise have in like manner been exported from the said Provinces, or either of them, respectively, to Great Britain, for and during the term of one calendar month preceding, that then, and in such case, it shall and may be lawful for the Governour or Commander-in-Chief, with the advice of the Council of such Provinces, respectively, by Proclamation, under the seal of such respective Province, to notify the same to the several Officers of the Customs, and all others; and after such Proclamation, this Act with respect to such Province, within which such Proclamation or Proclamations have been issued as aforesaid, shall be discontinued and cease (except as hereinafter provided;) and all Officers of his Majesty's Customs, and all other persons having charge of the execution of this Act, having received due notice of such Proclamation, are hereby directed and required to yield and pay obedience to such Proclamation, and to proceed in the discharge of their respective duties, in admitting to entry, clearing, and discharging all Ships and Vessels, and all Goods, Wares, and Merchandises, into and out of such respective Province; and to permit and suffer any Ships or Vessels to carry on the Fisheries within the limits hereinbefore mentioned, in like manner as if this Act had never been made; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

XIV. And be it further enacted, That the Governour or Commander-in-Chief, with the advice of the Council of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, shall and may, and he is hereby authorized and empowered, upon application for and on behalf of the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, or either of them, by the Governour or Commander-in-Chief of the said Colonies, respectively, to issue the like publick notice or notices, by Proclamation within the said Colonies, or either of them, if it shall be proved to the said Governour or Commander-in-Chief, and Council of Massachusetts Bay, by the testimony of the Officers of his Majesty's Customs in each of the said Colonies respectively, and the said Governour or Commander-in-Chief, and Council, shall be satisfied of the truth thereof, that the lawful Trade between the said Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, and Great Britain, is and hath been carried on in manner hereinbefore mentioned within the said Colonies, or either of them, for the space of one calendar month preceding the date of such application; and from and after such Proclamation, this Act shall, with respect to such Colonies, or either of them, be discontinued and cease (except as hereinafter provided;) and all Officers of the Customs in the said Colonies, and all others, are hereby required to pay obedience to such publick notice of the said Governour or Commander-in-Chief as aforesaid, and to proceed in the discharge of their respective duties in admitting to entry, clearing, and discharging, all Ships and Vessels, and all Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, into and out of such Colony or Colonies, in like manner as if this Act had never been made; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

XV. Provided nevertheless, and it is hereby further enacted and declared by the authority aforesaid, That such Proclamation or Proclamations shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to discharge or suspend any proceedings upon any seizure which shall have been made, or any prosecution which shall have been commenced for any penalty or forfeiture inflicted by this Act before the issuing of such Proclamation or Proclamations.

XVI. And it is hereby farther enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons shall give or grant any false Certificates, Cocket, or Clearance, for any of the purposes required or directed by this Act, such person or persons shall forfeit the sum of five hundred Pounds, and be rendered incapable of serving his Majesty, his heirs and successors, in any office whatsoever; and if any person or persons shall counterfeit, erase, alter, or falsify, any Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, required or directed by this Act, or shall knowingly or willingly make use of any false Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, or of any Certificate, Cocker, or Clearance, so counterfeited, erased, altered, or falsified, such person or persons shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of five hundred Pounds, and such Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, shall be invalid and of no effect.

XVII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the several forfeitures and penalties inflicted by this Act, shall and may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, and be divided, paid, and applied, in like manner as other penalties and forfeitures inflicted by any Act or Acts of Parliament relating to the Trade or Revenues of the British Colonies or Plantations in America, are directed to be prosecuted, sued for, or recovered, divided, paid, and applied, by two several Acts of Parliament, the one passed in the fourth year of his present Majesty, entituled "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for continuing, amending, and making perpetual, an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, entituled 'An Act for the better securing and encouraging the Trade of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies in America; for applying the produce of such Duties, and of the Duties to arise by virtue of the said Act, towards defraying the expenses of defending, protecting, and securing, the said Colonies and Plantations; for explaining an Act made in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, entituled 'An Act for the encouragement of the Greenland and Eastland Trades, and for the better securing the Plantation Trade; and for altering and allowing several Drawbacks on Exports from this Kingdom, and more effectually preventing the clandestine conveyance of Goods to and from the said Colonies and Plantations, and improving and scenting the Trade between the same and Great Britain;' and the other passed in the eighth year of his present Majesty's reign, entituled "An Act for the more easy and effectual recovery of the penalties and forfeitures inflicted by the Acts of Parliament relating to the Trade or Revenues of the British Colonies and Plantations in America."

XVIII. And be it farther enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any action or suit shall be commenced against any person or persons, for any thing done in pursuance of this Act of Parliament, the defendant or defendants in such action or suit may plead the general issue, and give the said Act and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon, and that the same was done in pursuance of and by the authority of this Act; and if it shall appear so to have been done, the Jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff shall be nonsuited, or discontinue his action after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared, or if judgment shall be given upon any verdict or demurrer, against the plaintiff, the defendant or defendants shall recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the same, as defendants have in other cases by law.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 27, 1775.

The Orders of the Day being read;

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of this instant, February, by his Majesty's command.

WEDNESDAY, March 1, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of February last, by his Majesty's command;

Resolved, That this House will, upon Friday morning next, resolve itself into the said Committee.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1775.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command,

No. 1. Copy of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 1st February, 1775, enclosing,

No. 2. Copy of the Lieutenant Governour's Speech to the General Assembly.

No. 3. Copy of Address of the Council.

No. 4. Copy of Address of the Assembly.

No. 5. Extract of a Letter from Governour Franklin to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-Jersey, 1st February, 1775, enclosing,

No. 6. Copy of the Governor's Speech to the General Assembly.

No. 7. Copy of Address of the Council, and of the Governour's Answer.

No. 8. Copy of the Resolves of the Assembly, and of their Address;

No. 9. Extract of a Letter from Deputy Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, 30th January, 1775, enclosing,

No. 10. Copy of Proceedings of a Provincial Convention held at Philadelphia.

No. 11. Copy of the Testimony of the people called Quakers.

Together with a List of the said Papers.

And the said List was read.

Ordered, That the said Papers be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of February last, by his Majesty's command.

Copy of the extract of a Letter from Governour Franklin to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Perth Amboy, February, 1, 1775.

The General Assembly of this Province are now sitting, being convened on the 11th of last month, in order to transact the publick business.

At the opening of the session, I had some hopes of prevailing on the House Representatives not to approve of the proceedings of the General Congress held at Philadelphia, for which purpose a paragraph of my Speech was particularly calculated; but the Delegates from this Province took the alarm, and used their utmost endeavours with the members to persuade them to give their approbation to those proceedings, as otherwise, one grand end the Congress had in view would be entirely frustrated, namely the preserving an appearance of unanimity throughout the Colonies, without which, they said, their measures could not have that weight and efficacy with the Government and people of Great Britain, as was intended.

"The scheme, however, met with some opposition in the House, every member proposing to defer the consideration of it to a future time, or to give their approbation to only some parts of the proceedings of the Congress; but by the artful management of those who espoused the measure, it was carried through precipitately the very morning it was proposed, as your Lordship will see by a copy of their Resolutions now enclosed, [See Folio 1124] which were all previously prepared for the purpose."

Copy of the extract of a Letter from Deputy Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Philadelphia, January 30, 1775.

"No publick occurrences of any consequence have lately happened within this Government, except that a Convention of Deputies from most of the Counties of this Province, was held in this City last week, in order to consult on the most effectual measures for carrying into execution the Association of the Continental Congress. They have just published an account of their proceedings, and I beg leave to enclose a copy of them for your Lordship's particular information." - [See Folio 1169.]

A Petition of the Merchants, Linen Drapers, and principal Inhabitants of the City of Waterford, in the Kingdom Ireland, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners, with the deepest concern for the unhappy differences which at present subsist between Great Britain and her American Colonies, and from an apprehension of the fatal consequences which may arise from thence, beg leave to set forth, that, as their export trade with the American Colonies consists chiefly in the exportation of the Linen Manufacture, and that of white and brown Linens only, by the Non-Importation Agreement they are deprived of this the only valuable branch of export they are permitted to carry on with the Colonies, and of which they already begin to feel the unhappy effects; and that if the Linen Manufacture decays, this Kingdom must be reduced to such a state as, from want of employment at home, to increase emigrations, reduce the value of lands, and diminish every branch of the poor remains of the trade they enjoy; and that the chief commodities which they have liberty to import from America into this Kingdom, being Flaxseed, Lumber, Wheat, and Flour, should the Non-Importation take place, they must necessarily be deprived of Flaxseed to raise Flax to carry on their Linen Manufacture; of Staves for Casks to contain their Beef, Pork, and Butter, for the supply of Great Britain, his Majesty's Navy, and the West India Islands; and this train of consequences, so destructive to the landed property, manufactures, and commerce of this Kingdom, and which of course must occasion a very sensible diminution of his Majesty's Revenues, from the then absolute inability of the inhabitants, forces them to pray the House would take the premises into their consideration, hoping that some expedient maybe found out, whereby these consequences may be prevented, and harmony restored and established upon a solid and permanent foundation.

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, is referred.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read,

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of February last, and this day, by his Majesty's command.

WEDNESDAY, March 8, 1775

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command, the following

Copy of a Letter from the Honourable Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 27th January, 1775.

"MY LORD: We have information often from the country, that the Towns in this Province become more divided. notwithstanding the endeavours used to keep up their enthusiasm, and the tyranny and oppressive acts exercised against persons deemed friends of Government, has driven them in several places to combine together for their mutual defence. Where the majority in a Township has been averse to their measures, the faction has employed their adherents in neighbouring Towns to join and form bodies sufficient to force them, by numbers, to sign recantations, which has been attended generally with violence and ill usage. The Town of Marshfield, with part of that of Scituate, having been lately under terours of that kind from the threats of their neighbours, for having formed some Associations amongst themselves, applied to me for protection; and I have sent a detachment of one hundred men to their relief. It is the first instance of an application to Government for assistance, which the faction has ever tried to persuade the people they would never obtain, but be left to themselves.

"Governour Wentworth has acquainted me of a quantity of Tea burnt by the populace at Portsmouth, and that the Magistrates have not support sufficient to enable them to apprehend any of the people concerned in the attack of Fort William and Mary, or keep them safe in jail after commitment, and desires that two Regiments may be stationed at Portsmouth. No quarters are yet prepared for them, nor am I informed how they are to be quartered, and I must send an officer to the Governour to settle those matters with him, previous to the moving any Troops.

"People are waiting determinations from home, which will probably make great alterations in proceedings here.

"I have the honour to be, my Lord, &c.,

"THO. GAGE."

This Letter enclosed the copy of a Petition of the Magistrates and sundry Inhabitants of Scituate and Marshfield.

Ordered, That the said Papers be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, and the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of February last, and the 3d day of this instant, March, by his Majesty's command.

Mr. Hartley moved, that an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House a copy of a Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour Colden, of the 10th December, 1774. - [See Folio 1035.]

Mr. Hartley said, as this Letter contained matter well worthy the consideration and attention of the House, he should be glad to have it laid before the House.

Mr. Rigby opposed this. He said Administration must always be understood to be the sole judges of what is and what is not proper to be laid before the House.

Mr. T. Townshend observed, it was a very novel and extraordinary doctrine to affirm, that when a paper was called for, and particularly described, it was in the option of the Minister to produce or withhold it at his pleasure.

Lord North contended there were many papers which a mere spirit of curiosity might prompt men to call for; but that bare curiosity, in his opinion, should not be gratified, when it might be productive of evil; that he believed it was neither novel nor extraordinary to keep many matters secret.

Mr. Fox said, the noble Lord from the beginning had taken care to lead the House blindfold, and would, he was certain, continue to do so, till he found some personal convenience in acting otherwise. He pronounced confidently, that the Bill just passed could not succeed, and desired the noble Lord to recollect his words, and at the same time not to come to Parliament telling them, though the measure miscarried, it was their measure, for if they had not framed, they had, after the fullest deliberation, approved of it. The fact was the very reverse, as his Lordship had been both the framer and approver; and by the arts of misinformation on one hand, and want of any material information on the other, Parliament were persuaded into an approbation of his measures.

The question being put on Mr. Hartley's motion,
It passed in the Negative.

The House, according to order, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of February last, the 3d of this instant, March, and this day, by his Majesty's command.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee,
Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair;

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee that they had made a further progress in the matters to them referred, and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow, at twelve of the clock, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Papers.

THURSDAY, March 9, 1775.

Mr. Royer, from the Commissioners of the Customs in Scotland, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders,

An Account of the quantity of Corn and Flour exported from Scotland to the Sugar Colonies, for ten years, preceding Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing each year; and also,

An Account of the value of Goods exported from Scotland to Ireland, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; and also,

An Account of the quantity of Train Oil and Blubber imported into Scotland, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing the countries from which the same have been imported; and also,

An Account of the quantity of Rape Seed and Rape Oil imported into Scotland, from Christmas, 1772, to Christmas, 1773, being as far as the same can be made up; distinguishing the countries from which the same have been imported.

Ordered, That the said Accounts do lie upon the table, to be perused by the Members of the House.

A Petition of Gentlemen, Merchants, and Traders, in the Woollen Manufactory at or near Huddersfield, in the West Riding of the County of York, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth -

That the Petitioners are very essentially interested in the Woollen Trade of the Northern parts of this Kingdom, and particularly in the narrow Cloths, and that the trade there has been good the last year, and is so at the present, notwithstanding the difficulties that it necessarily meets with from the conduct of the Americans, in presuming to obstruct the trade from thence to many of the Colonies in America; and that the Petitioners apprehend, that any submission to their unjust and unlawful demands, would be most prejudicial to the Petitioners, as well as to the Kingdom in general, as it would tend to make them more insolent, and totally to overthrow the lawful authority which the King and Parliament must have over all its Dominions; but, should the Petitioners suffer a present loss, they are willing to do so, rather than a certain future one, which must involve themselves and their posterity, and consequently the whole Kingdom, in perpetual distress; and therefore praying the House will take all such measures as shall be thought advisable, to support the lawful authority of this Kingdom, and maintain the just rights and privileges thereof, in opposition to all its enemies whatsoever.

A motion was made, and the question being proposed, that the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America is referred;

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "whom" to the end of the question, and inserting the words "it is referred to" consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of February last, and the 3d and 8th days of this instant, March, by his Majesty's command," instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question being put,

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Manufacturing Hosiers of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham, was presented to the House, and read, renewing their application to the House, from a deep sense of the importance of the facts contained in their former Petition, from a perfect knowledge of their truth; and apprehensive of the unhappy influence which an intervening Petition from the other inhabitants of the said Town, entitled "A Petition of the Aldermen, Sheriff, principal Manufacturers, and Inhabitants thereof," may have upon the deliberations of Parliament at this important juncture; and knowing of no greater crime to their country, than to approach their Representatives with falsehood, and thereby mislead the great Council of the Nation, the Petitioners beg leave to express their abhorrence of the unjust representation of the Manufacturers of this Town and neighbourhood, which men, styling themselves its Aldermen, principal Manufacturers, &c., have not been afraid to present to the House; and that the former Petitioners do constitute very great majority of the real Manufacturers of this Town, and the present Petitioners are the Committee appointed by them to transact this business; the distress they represented in their former Petition as real, has already in some measure taken place, and they are persuaded must increase upon them every day, beyond their abilities to support, should the present cessation of the North American Trade continue; and the contrary representations of men ill capable of judging of their trade or its dependencies, has no foundation in truth, not one fifth of the signers of that Petition being Manufacturers, or any way concerned in the North American Trade; and it is to obviate the impression which such misrepresentations may have to second that relief which the House may be now meditating for their distress, and to contribute by their particular experience to that perfect knowledge of the real state of the manufactory of this Town and neighbourhood, that the Petitioners earnestly entreat that they may be heard, in proof of the several allegations in this their present and former Petitions.

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, is referred; and that these Petitioners be heard before the said Committee, upon their said Petitions, if they think fit.

Ordered, That Mr. Unwise, Junior, do attend the said Committee upon Wednesday morning next.

The Order of the Day being read;

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 19th and 31st days of January last, the 1st, 15th, and 24th days of February last, and the 3d and 8th days of this instant, March, by his Majesty's command.

Lord North moved that the Chairman (Sir Charles Whitworth) be directed to move the House, "That leave be given to bring in a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations." He said, as the Southern Provinces had acceded to the Non-Importation and Exportation Agreement, it would be manifest partiality not to make their punishment the same as the Northern Provinces.

Lord John Cavendish little expected to see another Bill of the same tendency with the last so soon make its appearance; but he should endeavour to frame his mind so as that nothing should surprise him.

Sir W. Mayne was no less astonished, as he understood from the noble Lord, that he meant to proceed no further, till it should be known what effect the former Bill would have. He thought the present an irritating measure, from which no salutary consequence could be expected.

Mr. Hartley, after lamenting the fluctuating state of our publick Councils, observed, that a few days ago, nothing was echoed from the other side of the House but plans of conciliation, of moderation, and concession. In all probability, said those gentlemen, though all the Colonies should not consent to tax themselves, or break the Non-Importation and Non-Exportation Agreement, some of them certainly will, and destroy the confederacy, the refractory with very little struggle must submit. Now, what is the language Drive the whole Continent of America into despair; hold out no temptation to the moderate and less offending, and that is the sure way to restore peace and harmony, to recover our commerce, just on the verge of destruction, and to reconcile them cordially to our Government. He said, he had been informed that lands on the confines of Virginia had been ceded at the conclusion of the late Indian war, which cession had been divided into twenty-two shares; and that those shares had been sold. Not intending to reflect upon the noble Lord (Dunmore) who must have had the principal hand in that business, or upon any other person in particular, he wished for information whether the facts thus confidently reported, were true.

Lord North gave no answer, but defended the propriety of the Bill now moved for. The former Bill was only against a part of America; this against the remainder. He did not recollect that he had ever said he would wait to know the event of the first Bill, before he proposed another. As the Colonies had come to an agreement to carry on no trade whatever with Great Britain, Ireland, or the West Indies, he was clearly of opinion, that it became indispensably necessary to restrain their commerce, and prevent them from trading with any other country.

The question then being put, the Committee agreed to the motion offered by Lord North.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that he was directed by the Committee to make a motion, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be now received.

Sir Charles Whitworth accordingly reported from the said Committee, that he was directed by the Committee to move the House, that leave be given to bring in a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations.

And Sir Charles Whitworth moved the House accordingly

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations; and that the Lord North, the Lord Beauchamp, Mr. Charles Townshend, Mr. Cornwall, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General, Sir Charles Whitworth, and Mr. Cooper, do prepare and bring in the same.

MONDAY, March 13, 1775.

Mr. Cooper presented to the House, according to order, a Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland; and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations; and the same was received, and read the first time.

Resolved, That the Bill be read a second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time upon Thursday morning next.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1775.

Mr. Tomkyns, from the Commissioners of the Customs, presented to the House, pursuant to their orders,

An Account of the amount of the Duties paid on Coffee, Sugar, and Rum, imported into England from the West Indies, for the last three years that can be made up, viz: from Christmas, 1770, to Christmas, 1773 distinguishing the several articles; and also,

An Account of the amount of the Drawbacks paid on Coffee, Sugar, and Rum, exported from England, with the amount of the Bounty paid on British Refined Sugar exported for the three last years, that can be made up, viz: from Christmas, 1770, to Christmas 1773; distinguishing The several articles; and also,

An Account of Imports to the British Sugar Colonies, from North America, for three years last past; distinguishing each year

And then he withdrew.

And the Titles of the said Accounts were read.

Ordered, That the said Accounts be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London concerned in the Commerce of North America, is referred.

A Petition of the Clothiers, and other principal Inhabitants, of Trowbridge, in the County of Wilts. was presented to the House and read; setting forth -

That the Petitioners observe certain persons styling themselves Representatives of the People of sundry Provinces in America, assembled in General Congress, have presented a Petition to his Majesty, in which they question the authority of the supreme British Legislature, to enact laws for raising a Revenue in those parts of his Majesty's Dominions; and that the Petitioners conceive the openly or tacitly giving up in this instance, the authority of the Legislature of Great Britain over the American Colonies, would be not only highly derogatory to the honour and dignity of the Crown and Parliament, but greatly injurious to the welfare and trade of Great Britain; and that the Petitioners cannot be insensible that, if their fellow-subjects in America are exempted from contributing in such way as the British Legislature shall judge best, and in some equitable proportion with the inhabitants of Great Britain, to the Revenues necessary for supporting the dignity of the Crown; the administration of Government and justice in, and the protection of the whole Empire, such exemption to them must occasion the people here being unequitably and too heavily burdened; and, as the Petitioners apprehend the disproportioned and heavy share of the publick burthens, which the inhabitants of this Kingdom have been hitherto called to bear, has been one occasion of numbers from different branches of the Woollen Manufacture already emigrating to America, so they are persuaded the continuance of such disproportion would be a means of drawing from hence to America, yet more and more of our most useful and industrious Manufacturers and Mechanicks, to a degree, which in the end, must be pernicious both to the landed and commercial interest of Great Britain; and, therefore; praying that the House will ever assert and maintain entire, the supremacy of the British Legislature over his Majesty's Dominions in America, and provide by such laws and measures as to the House shall appear best, that whilst the inhabitants of those Dominions claim and expect countenance and protection from the influence of the British Government, and the united strength of the British Empire, they be obliged to contribute an equitable share towards the honourable support of that Government, and the means of providing for the common defence and security of that Empire.

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, is referred.

THURSDAY, March 16, 1775

The Order of the Day being read, for the second reading of the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitation;

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time tomorrow morning.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the second reading of the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, be now read.

And the said Order being read accordingly;

The said Bill was read a second time.

Mr. Sawbridge said the Minister was consistent; no charge could be brought against him for partiality, since he was now laying an equal measure of punishment on the whole Continental Empire. These restraining Bills tied the bands of union and good fellowship between all the Provinces, and united them in a common cause.

Mr. Temple Luttrell condemned, in strong terms, the principle of the Bill; said, that this and the other restraining Bill ought to be burnt by the common hangman; he treated the present Bill as treasonable against the community, and said, it must eventually be the cause of a civil war.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, upon the said Bill.

MONDAY, March 20, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, upon the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, be now read.

And the said Order being read accordingly;

The House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered: That the Report be received upon Thursday morning next.

THURSDAY, March 23, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read;

Ordered, That the Report from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, was committed, be received upon Monday morning next.

MONDAY, March 27, 1775.

Ordered, That the Report from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, was committed, be received upon Wednesday morning next.

WEDNESDAY, March 29, 1775.

Ordered, That the Report from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, was committed, be received to-morrow at twelve of the clock.

THURSDAY, March 30, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, was committed, the amendments which the Committee had made to the Bill; and which they had directed him to report to the House; and he read the Report in his place, and afterwards delivered the Bill, with the amendments, in at the Clerk's table, where the amendments were once read throughout; and then a second time, one by one; and upon the question severally put thereupon, were agreed to by the House.

Mr. John Luttrell said: Sir, I am induced to offer a few observations upon the imperfections of the Bill before you, that we may not too hastily adopt an opinion which has been frequently held forth by the friends of Administration, that, provided our trade from Great Britain and Ireland should increase, though that of America do suffer, you will have a greater number of Seamen. Sir, it has been said, in support of the assertion I have alluded to, that very few American Seamen return in English vessels from that Coast. I think it a very fortunate circumstance that they do not, because we have no employment for them, and they therefore must become a burthen to this country. But I will appeal to my Naval friends on the other side of the House, whose knowledge of maritime concerns is very extensive, if American Seamen are not always impressed in every part of the world to man the King's Ships whenever the service requires men? I am sure the books of the Northumberland, Sterling, Castle, Southerland, Success, Lizard, and many other Ships stationed upon the Coasts of either America, in the course of the last war, will furnish us with very long lists of them; but they have hitherto been so intermixed with the Seamen of this country, and always considered (as I hope they ever will be) equally valuable, and as one and the same people, that I believe it never yet occurred to the Commanding Officer of any Squadron employed in times of war, either in the West Indies, America, or elsewhere, to make a particular inquiry into their numbers; the idea would have been accounted as unnecessary and strange as the distinction is new, ridiculous, and dangerous. But, sir, I have ever considered America to be a great nursery, where Seamen are raised, trained, and maintained in times of peace to serve this country in times of war, and though I shall readily admit, from the distance of their shores, that you cannot lay hands upon them the first half hour of an Armament, yet am I persuaded that you may be possessed of some thousands within the time usually prescribed for the return of English Seamen from foreign services. As I am up, sir, I would wish to say a word or two upon that part of the Bill which principally relates to the Commanders of his Majesty's Ships-of-War, employed for what the Bill styles the protection, but would be much more properly termed the destruction of the trade, and it may possibly not be found quite so easy in practice as to some people it appears in theory, either to seize these Vessels, or to discover false clearances or certificates. There are those that hear me, who perfectly well remember the variety of dexterous tricks practised in the course of the late war, by almost every Nation, with respect to false clearances and certificates: the difficulties attending the detection, and the uncertainty of the event. There are those in America who bear in memory the shameful decisions respecting Monte Christo men. They will be aware that though the Vessels be condemned, and shared in America, they must be liable to appeals at home, and perhaps be obliged to refund, when the Seamen have spent the money, and the Captain (as has been the case) is made answerable for the whole. I have no doubt but the Americans, by being put into the calamitous situation they are, and feeling the tyranny of the mother country, will endeavour to carry on a trade at the risk of the fine imposed under this Act of Parliament; but there are few Sea Officers who, after a long peace, will find money to throw away upon such ungracious prosecutions; nor do I believe that they will wish to prosecute their fellow-subjects in a manner which may appear to them to be arbitrary and unconstitutional; besides we have been too roughly handled by the civil law courts, to wish to have many dealings with them. Sir, on the score of seizure, I shall revert to my former arguments, that the King's Ships cannot keep the Seas in safety, in the Northern parts of the Coasts of America, for more than half the year. Whenever they can cruise, the Americans will have the advantages, that a perfect knowledge of the shoals, soundings, rocks, creeks, and places of shelter can afford them; by which means they must frequently escape your most vigilant researches: besides it is not a very pleasant service for an Officer to risk the King's Ships upon a lee-shore, with which he is totally unacquainted, not in pursuit of an enemy, but to destroy a friend. Upon the whole, sir, I consider this Bill to be somewhat less cruel than that which is meant to demolish the New England Provinces by famine; in every other respect I hold it to be equally mischievous. It is with real concern I see humanity and sound policy giving way to that bated revenge which involves indiscriminately the innocent with the guilty. By this oppressive Act you will certainly extend the unhappy differences which already but too generally prevail in America, to every Province; nay, I fear I may say, to almost every individual upon that vast Continent: therefore, I protest against the measure.

Mr. Temple Luttrdl. Sir: it is but too visible, from the rash measures pursued by the Ministers of your Government here in England, and from the temper and situation of your American Colonies, that a civil war will be inevitable. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have always held as a favourite proposition, that protection and obedience are reciprocal duties; and of course, that the withdrawing of the one discharges the other. Now, sir, by these Bills you are withdrawing your protection to some purpose; I therefore presume your Colonies are no longer to be treated as Rebels, but, whatever may be the hazard of battle, will be entitled to the same military honours, to the same acts of clemency and of grace, that are usually practised, according to the modern system of war, by every civilized Nation in the world. You have a striking example of such rule of conduct from ancient time, in the most flagrant and sanguinary of all the wars the Romans ever waged: I mean the war against their own countrymen, commonly called the Social War; a war that in many of its circumstances, bears so close a resemblance to the present unhappy era in our history, that I cannot help asking leave of the House to say a few words upon it. The passions of mankind, in the aggregate, are, throughout all ages, nearly alike; and the same probable events may, in future, be looked for from those causes to which they have heretofore been found incidental.

Several confederate Italian Provinces, to whose courage and industry the Roman Republick, in a great measure, owed her meridian splendour, despairing to obtain, by fair means, those privileges to which they had every reasonable claim, took up arms: they founded a new capital; they constituted a Senate to themselves, and they choose Consuls. The mass of the people of Rome; who stedfastly maintained those principles, which are the genuine principles of British Whiggism - a devotion to rational liberty, and a spirit of resistance to all exorbitant power wheresoever lodged - called aloud for vengeance on their Ministers and patricians, to whose iniquity they ascribed every impending evil. Sir, a resolute Tribune (and I hope a worthy Chief Magistrate of this metropolis will now take the hint) did impeach the ostensible contrivers and managers of so unnatural a war. And recollect, sir, how it ended: the Roman Senate, though aided by their old enemies the Gauls, and by some scattered factions in the heart of the revolted country, whose patriotism, like that of certain New-Yorkists, was not quite proof against state artifices and venality: - I say, sir, the Roman Senate was at length compelled to cede, with a very bad grace, those terms which ought at first, in justice, to have been accorded by amicable compact. During this civil conflict was spilt the best blood of Rome: in less than three years, near three hundred thousand persons fell in the field of combat. But there was a still more fatal consequence; for it was in this school that Marius, Sylla, and other aspiring leaders, learned their first rudiments of despotism, and familiarized themselves to the massacre of their fellow-subjects. That sword which was unsheathed by order of the Roman Senate; and under the authority of the Roman people, to deprive of the dearest rights of human nature, their allies, their associates, and brethren, was not returned into its scabbard till Rome herself had, at her inmost vitals, felt the sharpness of its edge. The Generals employed on that occasion were many of them men of heroick sentiments, of huge dispositions; they might have sat for the amiable portraits which a very skilful Colonist here drew of the three Officers chosen to undertake a similar task on the American Continent; they, too, talked of reluctance, they talked of compassion and universal philanthropy; at the very hour of encounter they announced themselves, necessitate hostes, voluntate hospites. Yet, sir, these very men, once familiarized to domestick slaughter, and to military sway, could not prevail upon themselves to stop, till they had subverted the Constitution, and totally annihilated the liberties of the whole Commonwealth. In short, by this war the Romans were irrecoverably undone. Hence the perpetual Dictatorship; hence the succeeding Triumvirs; and, at length, the throne and tyranny of Cæsar. Sir, I contend, that this our social war, like the war I have been speaking of, is founded on a laudable resistance to the despotism of Administration, sustained by a Parliamentary majority, rather than any defection in the Americans at heart from the mother country. The generous natives of England thirst not after an unjust dominion, neither can they look with an eye of malignant jealousy on their kindred Colonists, who, scarce a century ago, drew, in common with them, one parental breath. Jealousy is too mean a vice to grow in a soil with such exalted virtues as distinguish a Briton: he seeks not the palm of victory earned at so dear a cost as by the destruction or abject servitude of millions of his fellow-subjects - that too for upholding principles which he himself sanctimoniously reveres.

The first duty of a good citizen is to the publick; and to assert, that the supreme sovereignty, as to the fundamentals of our Constitution, be vested in any form of Government whatever, or elsewhere, than with the society at large, is a traitorous doctrine, not merely against the Americans, but against our own immediate constituents here at home. The same allegiance that every private individual owes to the estates of the British monarchy, legally established, do those very estates owe to the community in general, which hath always reserved to itself, and asserted, certain original rights of mankind, that it would be rebellion, it would be sacrilege in us to violate. One of these rights is, that every, the minutest of the component parts of this great Empire, shall be free from disseizin of property, unless under a direct or effective representation in Parliament.

To force a tax upon your Colonists, unrepresented, and universally dissentient, is acting in no better capacity than that of a banditti of robbers. Can our folly and our vanity lead us to flatter ourselves, that they will be taught by our armaments or commercial interdicts, to own for their liege lord and tax-master, the possessor of a poor solitary sheepcote on Salisbury plain? Or that (eccentric as they are with respect to this our distant and circumscribed sphere of the British Isles) they will still continue to be cajoled by the absurd, empty plea of virtual representation? Sir, that word 'virtual' must contain in it more mystick power than the sacred archetype on Aaron's breastplate, before it can be made to work an effect so contradictory to reason and common sense. The advocates for the coercion of America, who have frequent recourse to your written Statutes, and who support their arguments as to the letter of law, from Selden, Lord Coke, and other high prerogative authorities, would do well calmly and seriously to consider of a passage in Montesquieu's divine Spirit of Laws. I allude, sir, to a part of his comment on the triumph of the people of Old Spain over the idolatrous Mexicans; neither will it be necessary for me to point out to the House where the precise analogy lies between the first invaders of that Southern Continent, and our modern law-makers of the North. "Free men" says he, "they made slaves, when they made slaves free: instead of giving them the religion of peace, they inculcated on their minds a more outrageous superstition: it were impossible for me to enumerate all the good things they might have done; it were impossible for me to enumerate all the bad things which they actually did. The end of conquest is this: it leaves upon their victors (though marshalled in the best licensed cause) an immense arrear of debt to be paid off to human nature." Impious as it may seem to arraign the dispensations of Providence, I can but lament that destiny had placed this 'fanciful' Montesquieu (as he is called by our celebrated pensioned essayist Dr Johnson) in the presidency of a foreign Parliament; the individual members of which, ever occupied in sacrificing to the graces, imperceptibly and totally lost their publick constitution and liberty. Had, sir, his lot been cast in this assembly to day, what might not so good a man, with his capacity and powers of inspiration, have effected? He might have staid the uplifted hand of ravage and oppression; and, though given us too late to prevent Great Britain from madly opening her own veins, he might perhaps have been the means of administering some timely remedy that should save her from bleeding to death. But, indeed, after the reception which a very respectable Member (Mr. Burke) here met with some evenings ago, who pleaded the cause of justice and humanity, with an almost supernatural force of reasoning and with every charm of eloquence, we might even despair of working the necessary reform in this House, though an angel from Heaven, with the full attributes of his beatitude, should descend among us.

There was a Parliament in the reign of Henry the Sixth, which, on account of the severity of its judgments and proscriptions against certain partisans of the York family, has gained in our annals the honourable distinction of Parliamentum Diabolicum. Now, sir, by passing such Acts as these are, shall not we lay in a just claim to be transmitted down to posterity, if possible, under a still more infernal appellation? I am for rejecting the Bill with the deepest marks of penitence in us, for having proceeded in it thus far, and with every term of ignominy and abhorrence with respect to the wicked principle on which this, and its fellow edict for butchery and famine, the Fishery Bill, are grounded.

Lord North defended the Bill on the former ground of necessity. He offered a clause to be added to the Bill - "To prevent frauds arising in the exportation of Goods of the produce of the Counties of Kent, Sussex, and New-Castle."

A few observations were made on this extraordinary motion; which it was said was unprecedented in the annals of Parliament, that of condemning people unheard, nay, even without inquiry.

It was answered generally, that the House was in possession of information sufficient to warrant the insertion of the clause; that the Papers laying on the table contained that information; and that any gentleman who doubted that the inhabitants of those Counties deserved no exclusive favour or particular indulgence, had need only to peruse the Papers laid before the House, to be convinced.

The question then being put, it was agreed to by the House, that the clause be made part of the Bill.

Then several amendments were made by the House to the Bill.

Ordered, That the Bill, with the amendments, be engrossed.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read the third time upon Monday mottling next, if the said Bill shall be then engrossed.

THURSDAY, March 30, 1775.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command,

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governor Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 17th February, 1775; received 27th March, enclosing,

No. 2. Extracts from the Records of the late Provincial Congress held at Cambridge, in the months of October, November, and December, 1774; also, Extracts from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Congress held at Cambridge, in February, 1775.

No. 3. Proceedings of the Provincial Congress at Cambridge, on the 7th, 15th, and 16th February, 1775.

No. 4. Extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governor Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 20th February, 1775; received 27th March.

Copy of the extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governor GAGE to the Earl of DARTMOUTH, dated BOSTON, 17th February, 1775.

"I am honoured with your Lordship's Despatch, of the 10th of December, No. 13; as also of your Lordship's Circular Letter of same date, enclosing copies of his Me-jesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, with the Addresses of the Lords and Commons thereupon.

"The firm resolution expressed in his Majesty's Speech, to maintain the authority of the supreme Legislature over all parts of the Empire, and the assurances given by the new Parliament to support his Majesty's measures, in which the demagogues here flattered themselves to find abettors and defenders of their conduct, has cast a damp on the faction; but they still entertain hopes that the Resolves of their Continental Congress will work in their favour.

"Your Lordship will be told of the late instance of loyalty in the New-York Assembly, which has had very good effects; and we are told that they are changing their sentiments at Philadelphia the fury into which people were thrown, and which spread like an infection from Town to Town, and from Province to Province, is hardly to be paralleled, where no oppression was actually felt; but they were stirred up by every means that art could invent. They were made to believe that their religion was in danger, their lands to be taxed, and that the Troops were sent to enforce the measures, and wantonly to massacre the inhabitants. People well disposed caught the popular fever; and when it raged at the highest, the Delegates were chosen for the Continental Congress; So that, as we are told, the greatest incendiaries in most Provinces were elected. It required temperate management and much pains to undeceive the people, who are more moderate in general, though numbers still hold their first prejudices.

"If this Provincial Congress is not to be deemed a rebellious meeting, surely some of their Resolves are rebellious, though they affect not to order, but only to recommend measures to the people; which measures, I have learnt from the emissaries I have sent through the country, have not been regarded as to the raising of money, though they have been training men in several Townships, as they could get them in the humour to assemble. This new elected Congress met on the first instant, and I transmit your Lordship some of the Resolves. I am just informed that they have adjourned themselves.

"Nothing can be attempted here till the reception that the proceedings of their great Congress meets with in England, is known. The sending a detachment to Marshfield has had a good effect in that quarter of the country, and I hope will encourage other places where oppression is felt, to make applications of the same nature."

Copy of the extract of a Letter from the Honourable Governour GAGE to the Earl of DARTMOUTH, dated BOSTON, 20th February, 1775.

"I have tried to get intelligence if they had presumed to usurp the Government entirely, and choose a Governour, and am informed that the measure was talked of, hut could not be carried. Some people from Connecticut, termed a Committee, and amongst them the Governour's son, came to the Congress just after adjournment, which caused much speculation, and of course many reports. Some say their business was to offer an aid of men; others, to inform them of the contents of a letter the Governour of that Colony had received from your Lordship; but I can only yet discover that it was a visit of curiosity."

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie upon the table to he perused by the Members of the House.

MONDAY, April 3, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the third reading of the Bill (now engrossed) to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, be now read.

And the said Order being read accordingly;

Ordered, That the said Bill be read the third time tomorrow morning.

Mr. Gascoyne, from the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, presented to the House, by his Majesty's command -

No. 1. Estimate of the charge of maintaining and supporting the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Colony of Nova Scotia, for the year 1775; and also,

No. 2. Estimate of the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Colony of Georgia; and other incidental expenses attending the same, from the 24th of June, 1774, to the 24th of June, 1775; and also,

No. 3. Estimate of the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Province of East Florida, and other incidental expenses attending the same, from the 24th of June, 1774, to the 24th of June, 1775; and also,

No. 4. Estimate of the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Province of West Florida, and other incidental expenses attending the same, from the 24th of June, 1774, to the 24th of June, 1775; and also,

No. 5. Estimate of the expense attending general Surveys of his Majesty's Dominions in North America, for the year 1775.

Together with a List of the said Estimates.

And the said List was read."

The said Estimates are as followeth, viz:

Estimate of the Charge of Maintaining and Supporting the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Colony of NOVA SCOTIA, for the year 1775.

To an additional salary to the Governour,	£500	00	00
To a salary to the Chief Justice,	-	-	500.00 00
To a salary to the Attorney General,	-	-	182 10 00
To an allowance to the Secretary for himself and Clerks,	-	-	262 10 00
To an allowance to the Naval Officer,	-	-	182 10 00
To an allowance to the Register,	-	-	182 10 00
To an allowance to the Surveyor of Lands, and for other contingent expenses attending that establishment,	-	-	321 15 00
To the salaries of a Secretary and Messenger to the Council,	-	-	96 12 00
To the hire of a house and other contingent expenses attending the Secretary's office,	-	-	52 06 00
To sundry stipends and allowances for house rent to the Ministers and Schoolmasters in the different Districts of the Province,	-	-	440 00 00
To an allowance for fire-wood for the use of the Governour's house and publick offices	288	15	00
To the expenses of a Pilot-boat,	-	-	203 01 00
To the salary of the Agent,	-	-	200 00 00
To the salary of the Treasurer,	-	-	50 00 00
To the expense of the Orphan House,	384	01	05
To an allowance to Mrs. Howe , who, after long and meritorious services of her late husband, is left destitute under an age of infirmity,	-	-	100 00 00
To an allowance for a Magistrate in the Island of Breton ,	-	-	100 00 00
To an allowance for a Priest to the Micmack Indians , pursuant to a treaty in 1761, being an allowance heretofore paid out of the contingencies, for which no provision is made in this Estimate,	-	-	100 00 00
To an allowance in aid of the Duties granted by the Legislature of Nova Scotia , for the maintenance and support of a Light House near the entrance of the Harbour of Halifax ,	-	-	100 00 00
To an allowance upon account for fees to be paid upon orders for the receipt, and upon the issues of the moneys granted upon this Estimate,	-	-	100 00 00

£4,346 10 05

Estimate of the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Colony of GEORGIA, and other Incidental Expenses attending the same, from the 24th June, 1774, to the 24th of June, 1775.

To the salary of the Governour,	-	£1,000	00	00
To the salary of the Chief Justice,	-	500	00	00
To the salary of the Secretary,	-	100	00	00
To the salary of the Clerk of the Assembly,	-	20	00	00
To the salary of the Surveyor of Lands,	-	150	00	00
To the salary of the Receiver General of the Quit-rents,	-	100	00	00
To the salary of the Attorney General,	-	150	00	00
To the Salary of the Provost Marshal,	-	100	00	00
To an allowance for a Minister of the Church of England , and two Schoolmasters,	-	116	00	00

To the salary of the Agent for the affairs of the Colony,	200 00 00
To an allowance to the Pilot stationed at the --mouth of Savannah River, with a boat and sufficient hands,	50 00 00
To an allowance for contingent expenses, -	500 00 00
To an allowance to Mr. Ottolenghe , Superintendent of the late Filature at Savannah , in consideration of his long and faithful services in that office, which is now discontinued,	100 00 00
	£3,086 00 00

Estimate of the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Province of EAST FLORIDA, and other Incidental Expenses attending the same, from the 24th of June, 1774, to the 24th of June, 1775.

To the salary of the Governour-in-Chief	£1,200 00 00
To the salary of the Chief Justice,	500 00 00
To the salary of the Attorney General,	150 00 00
To the salary of the Secretary and Clerk of the Council, -	150 00 00
To the salary of the Register,	100 00 00
To the salary of the Receiver General of the quit-rents,	100 00 00
To the salary of the Surveyor of Lands,	120 00 00
To an allowance for an Assistant,	30 00 00
To the salary of the Agent,	200 00 00
To a Minister at St. Augustine	100 00 00
To a Minister at St. Marks ,	100 00 00
To a Schoolmaster at each of the above places, at £25 each,	50 00 00
To the salary of the Provost Marshal,	100 00 00
To an allowance for a Pilot established at St. Augustine ,	50 00 00
To an allowance for unforeseen contingent expenses,	1,000 00 00
To an allowance for the purchase of a proper assortment of Goods for presents to the Indian's , and other contingent expenses relative to that service,	1,000 00 00

£4,950 00 00

Estimate of the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Province of WEST FLORIDA, and other incidental expenses attending the same, from the 24th of June, 1774, to the 24th of June, 1775.

To the salary of the Governour-in-Chief,	£1,200 00 00
To the salary of the Chief Justice,	500 00 00
To the salary of the Attorney General,	150 00 00
To the salary of the Secretary and Clerk of the Council,	150 00 00
To the salary of a Register,	100 00 00
To the Surveyor of Lands,	120 00 00
To an allowance to an Assistant,	30 00 00
To the salary of the Agent,	200 00 00
To the salary of a Minister at Pensacola ,	100 00 00
To the salary of a Minister at Mobile ,	100 00 00
To a Schoolmaster at each of the above places, at £25 each,	50 00 00
To the salary of the Provost Marshal,	100 00 00
To an allowance for unforeseen contingent expenses,	1,000 00 00
To an allowance for a purchase of a proper assortment of Goods, for presents to the Indians ,	1,000 00 00
To an allowance to Mr. Romans , for his care and Skill in the collection of rare and useful productions in Physick and Botany,	50 00 00
To an allowance to Engineer Durnford , in consideration of his labour and expenses in making Surveys of several parts of West Florida , between the years 1765 and 1774, by order of the Governours of that Province,	600 00 00

£5,450 00 00

Estimate of the Expense attending General Surveys of his Majesty's Dominions in NORTH AMERICA, for the year 1775.

To an allowance to a Deputy Surveyor of Lands at Quebec , during the time the Chief Surveyor is employed in making surveys in other parts of the Northern District	£100 00 00
To a Deputy Surveyor, at ten Shillings per day, and two Assistant Surveyors, at seven Shillings per day each,	438 00 00
To one Draughtsman at five Shillings per day,	91 05 00
To an additional pay of one Shilling and eight Pence per day to one Sergeant, one Shilling per day to one Corporal, and six Pence. per day to twelve private men, to assist in such Survey, and to serve as Camp, Colour, and Chain men, and to make signals along shore, and on the tops of mountains,	155 02 00
To extraordinary expenses for horses, guides, &c., -	100 00 00
To expenses and allowances for the Survey of the Southern District,	700 17 00
To an allowance upon account of Fees to be paid upon orders for the receipt, and upon the issue of moneys granted upon the estimate,	200 00 00
To an allowance for defraying the expense of making Copies for the use of the Public Offices, of the Maps and Plans returned by the Surveyors, and for preparing them for publication,	100 00 00

£1,885 04 00

Ordered, That the said Estimate do lie upon the table, to be perused by the Members of the House.

WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1775.

An engrossed Bill, to restrain the Trade and Commerce of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations, was read the third time.

And a motion being made that the Bill do Pass;

Mr. Hartley spoke against it, as beyond measure cruel and oppressive. He observed, with great concern, that no power was vested any where to suspend the operations of the Bill, or to abate its rigour, in ease America was willing to agree to certain temporary stipulations, till the claims of one country and the rights of the other, could be fully ascertained.

Lord North said, that it did not seem to him necessary that such a power should be vested in the King and Council; that the operations of the Bill would cease, nay, indeed, the Bill itself, exist or not exist, at the option of the Americans; for if they had a mind to seek the friendship and protection of Great Britain, which was a reconciliation he sincerely wished, they would comply with the conditions of the Bill, which were a free importation and exportation to and from the mother country as usual.

Sir William Mayne declared he did not mean to debate the principle of the Bill, and only differed as to the timing of it; that he was not in any respect altered in his sentiments as to what ought to be the conduct of this country towards America, but only wished that whatever measures were pursued, might be conducted in so temperate and moderate a manner as to induce the Americans to change their conduct towards Great Britain. He lamented that though the Boston Port Bill was well intended, yet ever since the carrying of it into execution things had gone from bad to worse in America; to the degree, that at this moment the Constitution of this country seemed to totter on its very basis; that, amidst the greatest provocation this country ever received, he wished to suspend the uplifted arm of power, and give the infatuated Americans time to reflect what they had been doing, and whither their phrenzy, if persisted in, must carry them; that, entertaining these sentiments, he could not give his affirmative to the Bill, especially as he thought it would rather tend to irritate than reconcile; to unite in one common leaguer than to disunite the people of America.

Mr. Rigby pronounced the Americans to be in rebellion, and thought every Englishman ought to support the present measures; but be the event of our present disputes what it might, he never entertained a second opinion on the subject: and should never give up his sentiments upon any motive of a remote view of the consequences; for as the principles on which the present measure was taken up, appeared to him to be right, so upon a secondary consideration, he was resolved never to depart from it. He then entered into a history of the Stamp Act; said it was the work of a great Minister, and attributed all our present confusions to its repeal.

The Marquis of Granby. I rise to trouble the House with a few words on the Bill now before it. I have sat, sir, during the course of two divisions, without taking any part; even so much as giving a silent vote on any American question; because, sir, as I will fairly confess to you, I entered these walls with prejudices against the system Administration was pursuing; I thought it was but justice to hear the arguments that might be urged on both sides; to compare those arguments, and draw my opinion from that comparison. As to the Bill, immediately the object of our consideration, I think it, in every respect, so arbitrary, so oppressive, and so totally founded on principles of resentment, that I am exceedingly happy at having this publick opportunity of bearing my testimony against it in the strongest manner I am able. In God's name, what language are you now holding out to America? Resign your property, divest yourselves of your privileges and freedom, renounce every thing that can make life comfortable, or we will destroy your commerce, we will involve your country in all the miseries of famine; and if you express the sensations of men at such harsh treatment, we will then declare you in a state of rebellion, and put yourselves and your families to fire and sword. And yet, sir, the noble Lord on the floor, has just told this House that a reconciliation is the sole object of his wishes. I hope the noble Lord will pardon me if I doubt the perfect sincerity of those wishes: at least, sir, his actions justify my doubts; for every circumstance in his whole conduct, with regard to America, has directly militated against his present professions: and what, sir, must the Americans conclude? Whilst you are ravaging their Coasts, and extirpating their Commerce, and are withheld only by your impotence from spreading fresh ruin, by the sword, can they, sir, suppose such chastisement is intended to promote a reconciliation, and that you mean to restore to their forlorn country those liberties you deny to their present possession; and in the insolence of persecution, are compassing Earth and Seas to destroy? You can with no more justice compel the Americans to your obedience, by the operation of the present measures, by making use of their necessities, and withholding from them that commerce on which their existence depends, than a ruffian can found an equitable claim to my possessions, when he forcibly enters my house, and with a dagger at my throat, or a pistol at my breast, makes me seal deeds which will convey to him my estate and property. [Mr. Rigby having declared the Americans to be in rebellion, Lord Granby, in answer, said his ideas of rebellion were totally different from Mr. Rigby's. If, according to his ideas of rebellion, the Americans were in that state, he should be as warmly their opponent as he was now their friend; and then went on.]

I have a very clear, a very adequate idea of rebellion, at least according to my own principles; and those are the principles on which the Revolution was founded. It is not against whom a war is directed, but it is the justice of that war, that does or does not constitute rebellion. If the innocent part of mankind must tamely relinquish their freedom, their property, and every thing they hold dear, merely to avoid the imputation of rebellion, I beg, sir, it may be considered what kind of peace and loyalty there will then exist in the world, which consists only in violence and rapine, and is merely to be maintained for the benefit of robbers and oppressors. I hope, sir, I shall be believed when I assure you that I am as warm a friend to the interests of my country as any man in this House; but then it must be understood when those interests are founded in justice. I am not attached to any particular acre of land; the farmer in Cumberland or Durham is as little connected with me as the peasant in America: it is not the ground a man stands on that attaches me to him; it is not the air he breathes that connects me with him, but it is the principles of that man, those independent, those generous principles of liberty which he professes, co-operating with my own, which call me forth as his advocate, and make me glory in being considered his friend. As for myself, sir, I am not in the least ashamed to avow that my attachment is to a noble Lord who has been, in my opinion, very unjustly reflected on in the course of this debate, (I mean Lord Chatham;) I am not even personally acquainted with the noble Lord; I do not know the inconsistencies of which he stands accused; but this, sir, I know, I shall not support his inconsistencies, I shall only support him in those principles which have raised his name to the elevation on which it is now placed in this country, and have so deservedly procured him the love and admiration of his fellow citizens.

Sir, I shall not trouble this House any longer, as this matter has been so fully discussed, though I must confess I am not sorry a debate has taken place, because I was rather desirous of making a kind of political creed, some professions of my sentiments on this very important, this very serious national question. From the fullest conviction of my soul, I disclaim every idea, both of policy and right, internally to tax America. I disavow the whole system. It is commenced in iniquity; it is pursued with resentment; and it can terminate in nothing but blood. Under whatsoever shape in futurity it may be revived, by whomsoever produced and supported, it shall, from me, meet the most constant, determined, and invariable opposition.

Lord North said, that something having fallen from a noble Marquis which he thought a charge directly against his honour, he would vindicate himself from that charge. He insisted that the Resolution of the 20th February, and the present Bill, were by no means contradictory to each other; for the noble Marquis could not possibly believe that the Americans would comply with the terms of the Resolution, while they resisted the conditions of this Bill, which were no more than that the trade between both countries should be carried on in its usual manner.

Mr. Alderman Sawbridge spoke strongly against the Bill, observing, as it originated in manifest injustice, so it inflicted a punishment to the last degree cruel and oppressive. He hoped America would never tamely acquiesce to be dragooned and compelled to submit to terms as unjust as the power which dictated them was obnoxious to the natural rights of mankind.

Mr. Alderman Bull. I shall only mention some facts relating to one very important article, because it has been the occasion of the unhappy disputes with, and the violent prosecution of, the Americans. I mean the article of Tea. At the time the East India Company had in contemplation the sending a quantity of Tea to different parts of Europe, as well as to America, and to apply to Parliament for an Act for that purpose, I had the honour to be called upon for my opinion of the measure by a very respectable person in the direction of the Company, whose name I am ready to mention, if called upon by the House. My opinion then was, and I still think it not ill-founded, that the scheme was so extravagantly wild that it was impossible it should ever be carried into execution; but: if it could, it would injure, not benefit the Company, as they could not send their Tea to any market where it would bring so good a price as at home. Besides, it would be an act of great injustice to the Merchants here, who have always been used to buy for exportation at their sales. As to sending Tea to America, from a knowledge of their disposition, the gentleman was informed they would not receive it; they would look upon it as sent there, not to serve them, but to ensnare them; they would be exceedingly irritated; they would most certainly destroy it. An objection was, however, raised. What must the Company do with their great load of Tea, and how were they to raise the money they were so much distressed for? It was recommended to him to propose to the Court of Directors immediately to give out their declaration for two sales, the one in March, the other in September, and to put up their whole stock in hand; each sale, on a moderate computation, would produce about one million two hundred thousand Pounds; and as they would be in cash for the first of them in about five months, they, the Company, perhaps might not be under the necessity of borrowing the one million four hundred thousand Pounds they then wanted. The quantity of Tea at that time in the Company's hands was said to be sufficient for six years consumption, and that great part of it was rotting in their warehouses. The real fact, however, was this: the Company then had sixteen and a half millions Pounds weight, not any of which had been in their warehouse more than a year and a half, and the greater part was of the last year's importation; none of it had suffered by keeping. The consumption, on the average, of the preceding five years, was eight millions per annum; so that the Company had in their Warehouses a quantity sufficient only for two years, and not six years consumption.

If these sales had taken place, the price of Bohea Tea, the principal sort in demand for exportation, would have been reduced four or five Pence per pound, which probably might have increased the demand for exportation and home consumption together, even to twelve millions per annum. I am of this opinion, sir, because the four foreign East India Companies, viz: the Dutch, Danes, French, and Swedes, annually import more than eight millions, although it is well known they do not themselves consume near half that quantity; the remaining four or five millions they constantly import, for the sole purpose of smuggling it into England, Scotland, Ireland, and America. The quantity that we have exported on the average of the before mentioned five years, has been about one million four hundred thousand Pounds; but this would be greatly increased, the price being only twenty Pence, from which is to be deducted for the drawback, five per cent., which reduces it to fifteen Pence on board; and if we add to this even the fatal American three Pence, it will be only eighteen Pence. This price might, perhaps, have induced the Americans, as before, to receive the Tea from the Merchants, though not from the Company, and it would at once have put an end to all smuggling; for neither the Dutch or any other Company would think it worth their while to send Tea to America, to be sold under eighteen Pence per pound. I will not trouble the House with any observations on these facts; but I own I cannot be brought to believe that the Tea was sent to Boston to raise money for the Company, to get rid of their load of Tea, or to prevent smuggling, because each of those salutary ends might have been answered without injustice or offence to any individual. The purpose for which the Tea was sent to America, and the consequence, are evident now to every man's understanding. For these reasons amongst others, I hitherto have, and shall continue, to the utmost of my power, to support the Americans, thus injured and oppressed by the cruel and vindictive measures of an Administration, whose whole conduct breathes the spirit of persecution and Popery.

Sir John Duntze said, that the Americans had, by their open violence and repeated acts of disobedience, forfeited the good will and protection of this country, and that it therefore became necessary for us to retaliate, in order to bring them back to a proper sense of their duty.

General Conway condemned the Bill in very explicit terms. He said, to be consistent, the House should either rescind the Resolution of the 20th February, or suspend any farther proceedings on the present Bill, till the effect and event of that proposition were known, otherwise we might possibly be inflicting the most severe punishment on people who were at the same instant acting in the strictest conformity to what was solemnly laid down by this House as the great rule by which their duty and obedience were to be regulated. He concluded with lamenting the unhappy divided state of both countries, and expressing his fears of the dreadful consequences which must follow, should the sword be once drawn, and the whole Empire convulsed with all the horrors of a civil war.

Mr. Rigby said the Americans would not fight; they would never oppose General Gage with force of arms. Sir Richard Sutton was strongly for passing the Bill.

Mr. T. Townshend observed, that the noble Lord (North) and his friends first created the necessity, and then defended the measure upon that very ground; that is, said he, we do a thing we should not have done, our first essay being imperfect, and not to be executed upon the plan we first formed, it then becomes necessary we should do something else, if possible, more unjust than the former; so that, on the whole, we endeavour to carry into execution one act of injustice, by exercising another, thus become necessary to give it effect.

The question then being put, the House divided: Yeas, 192; Noes, 46.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

And that the Title be "An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations."

Ordered, That Mr. Cooper do carry the Bill to the Lords, and desire their concurrence.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, April 6, 1775.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Mr. Cooper and others,

With a Bill entitled "An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain and Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The said Bill was read the first time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

FRIDAY, April 7, 1775.

The Bill entitled "An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain and Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations;" was read the second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill on Monday next.

MONDAY, April 10, 1775.

The House, according to order, was adjourned during pleasure, and put into Committee upon the Bill entitled "An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations."

After some time the House was resumed;

And the Earl of Galloway reported from the Committee, "That they had gone through the Bill, and directed him to report the same to the House without any amendment."

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a third time on Wednesday next, and the Lords summoned.

WEDNESDAY, April 12, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read, for the third reading of the Bill entitled "An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations;" and for the Lords to be summoned,

The said Bill was accordingly read the third time.

And the question being put, "That the said Bill do Pass?"

It was (without debate) resolved in the Affirmative.

DISSENTIENT. - Richmond, Craven, Cholmondely, Stanhope, Fitzwilliam, Abingdon, Effingham, Camden, Wycombe, Fred. Exon, Spencer, J. St. Asaph, Rockingham, Abergavenny, Tankerville.

An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of NEW-JERSEY, PENNSYLVANIA, MARYLAND, VIRGINIA, and SOUTH CAROLINA, to GREAT BRITAIN, IRELAND, and the BRITISH Islands in the WEST INDIES, under certain conditions and limitations.

Whereas, by an Act made in the twelfth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, entitled An Act for

"the encouraging and increasing of Shipping and Navigation," and by several subsequent Acts of Parliament which are now in force, it is, amongst other things, enacted, that for every Ship or Vessel which shall load any commodities, in those Acts particularly enumerated, at any British Plantation, being the Growth, Product, or Manufacture thereof, Bonds shall be given, with one surety, to the value of one thousand Pounds, if the Ship be of less burthen than one hundred tons, and of the sum of two thousand Pounds, if the Ship be of greater burthen, that the same commodities shall be brought by such Ship or Vessel to some other British Plantation, or to some Port in Great Britain: And whereas, by several other Acts of Parliament, which are now in force, no Commodities of the Growth, Product, or Manufacture of Europe, (except Salt for the Fisheries, Wines, of the Madeiras and Azores, and Western Islands, and Victual and Linen Cloth from Ireland, under the restrictions in such Acts particularly mentioned,) can be imported into any Plantation, Colony, Territory, or place belonging to his Majesty, in Asia, Africa, or America, but what shall be bona fide and without fraud, laden and shipped in Great Britain, and carried directly from thence: And whereas, during the continuance of the Combinations and Disorders which at this time prevail within the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, to the obstruction of the Commerce of these Kingdoms, and other his Majesty's Dominions, and in breach and violation of the laws of this Realm, it is highly unfit that the inhabitants of the said Colonies should enjoy the same privileges of Trade, and the same benefits and advantages to which his Majesty's faithful and obedient subjects are entitled; Be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the twentieth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and during the continuance of this Act, no Goods, Wares, or Merchandises, which are particularly enumerated in, and by the said Act made in the twelfth year of King Charles the Second, or any other Act, being the Growth, Product, or Manufacture of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, in North America, or any or either of them, are to be brought to some other British Colony, or to Great Britain; or any such enumerated Goods, Wares, or Merchandises, which shall at any time or times have been imported or brought into the said Colonies, or any or either of them, shall be shipped, carried, conveyed, or transported, from any of the said Colonies respectively, to any Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port, or place whatsoever, other than to Great Britain, or some of the British Islands in the West Indies, to be laid on shore there; and that no other Goods, Wares, or Merchandises whatsoever, of the Growth, Product, or Manufacture of the Colonies hereinbefore mentioned, or which shall at any time or times have been imported or brought into the same, shall, from and after the said twentieth day of July, and during the continuance of this Act, be shipped, carried, conveyed, or transported, from any of the said Colonies respectively, to any other Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port, or place whatsoever, except to the Kingdoms of Great Britain or Ireland, or to some of the British Islands in the West Indies, to be laid on shore there; any law, custom, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding.

II. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and alter the said twentieth day of July, before any Ship or Vessel shall lade or take on board any Goods as aforesaid, in any or either of the Colonies before mentioned, sufficient Bond, with one surety, besides the Master of such Ship or Vessel, shall be given to the Collector or other principal Officer of the Customs at the Port or place where such Goods are intended to be laden or taken on board, in the penalty of one thousand Pounds, if the Ship be of less burthen than one hundred tons, and of the sum of two thousand Pounds, if the Ship shall be of that or any greater burthen; with condition that such enumerated Goods shall not be landed or put on shore at or upon any other Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port or place whatsoever, except some Port or place within the Kingdom of Great Britain, or some of the British Islands in the West Indies; and that all other Goods, Wares, or Merchandises so intended to be laden as aforesaid, shall not be landed or put on shore at or upon any Land, Island, Territory, Dominion, Port or place whatsoever, other than and except some Port or place within the Kingdoms. of Greet Britain or Ireland, or some of the British islands in the West Indies; and with further condition to bring a Certificate in discharge thereof, within eighteen months from the date of such bond, for such of the said Goods as shall be entered for or landed in Great Britain or Ireland, respectively; and within six months for such of the said Goods as shall be entered for or landed in any of the British Islands in the West Indies; which respective Certificates shall be under the hands and seals of office of the Collector and Comptroller, or other principal Officer of the Customs, resident at the Port or place where such Goods shall be landed, testifying the landing thereof; or such Bond or Bonds shall and may be discharged by proof upon oath, made by credible persons, that the said Goods were taken by enemies, or perished in the Seas.

III. And it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where any such Bond or Bonds shall be given as aforesaid, in pursuance of this Act, the Collector or other principal Officer of the Customs, to whom such Bond or Bonds shall have been given, shall deliver, under his hand and seal of office, without fee or reward, to the Master of the Ship or Vessel taking in such Goods, for the security of her navigation, a Certificate that such Bond or Bonds hath or have been given, expressing therein the quantity and species of the Goods, with the marks and numbers of the packages, and the Port or place for which they were entered; and if any such Goods shall be laden on board any such Ship or Vessel, in any of the Colonies in this Act before mentioned, before such Bond or Bonds shall be given, or shall be found on board any Ship or Vessel without the Certificate hereinbefore directed, that such Bond or Bonds hath or have been given, the Goods so laden, together with the Ship or Vessel, with her Guns, Ammunition, Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, shall be forfeited; and if any Goods so laden as aforesaid, shall be landed or discharged at any Port or place contrary to the intent and meaning of this Act, over and above the penalty of the Bond or Bonds, the Shipper and Owner of such Goods, and the Master or person taking charge of the Vessel on board which they were laden, shall respectively forfeit the full value of the Goods so landed or discharged, to be estimated according to the highest price or value which such sort of Goods bear in the Colony where, and at the time when they were shipped and laden; which Ship and Goods may be seized and prosecuted, or the value of such Goods prosecuted for, by any Admiral, Chief Commander, or Commissioned Officer of his Majesty's Fleet or Ships-of-War, or by any Officer of his Majesty's Customs, in the manner hereinafter directed.

IV. And it is here further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the first day of September, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and during the continuance of this Act, no sort of Wines. Salt, or any Goods or Commodities whatsoever, (except Horses, Victual, and Linen Cloth, the Produce and Manufacture of Ireland, imported directly from thence) shall be imported into any of the said Colonies hereinbefore respectively mentioned, upon any pretence whatsoever, unless such Goods shall be bona fide, and without fraud, laden and shipped in Great Britain, and carried directly from thence, upon forfeiture thereof, and of the Ship or Vessel on board which such Goods shall be laden; and it shall be lawful for any Admiral, Chief Commander, or Commissioned Officer of his Majesty's Fleet or Ships-of-War, or any Officer of his Majesty's Customs, to seize any Ship or Vessel arriving- at any of the said Colonies before mentioned, or which shall be discovered within two leagues of any shore thereof, having such Goods on board, and the Goods laden thereon, (except as before mentioned) for which the Master or other person taking charge of such Ship or Vessel, shall not produce a Cocket or Clearance from the Collector, or proper Officer of his Majesty's Customs, certifying that the said Goods were laden on board the said Ship or Vessel in some Port of Great Britain, any law, custom, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding.

V. Provided always, and it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That this Act, or any thing herein contained, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to prohibit the exportation or carrying out from any of the Colonies before mentioned, or the importation into the same, of any Goods or Commodities whatsoever, for the victualling or providing any of his Majesty's Ships-of-War, or other Ships or Vessels in his Majesty's service, or his Majesty's Forces, Forts, or Garrisons; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

VI. And provided also, That nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to hinder or restrain the lawful importation into any or either of the said Colonies hereinbefore mentioned, from any of the British Islands in the West Indies, of any such Goods or Commodities, being the Growth or Produce thereof, as may now by law be imported from thence into the said Colonies, or any or either of them.

VII. And, in order to prevent frauds and abuses which may be committed contrary to the intention and against the provisions of this Act, by the exportation of any Goods, of the Growth, Product, or Manufacture of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, from any of the Ports within the government of the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, in North America, it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That during the continuance of this Act, no Goods or Commodities whatsoever shall be shipped, to be earned from any Port or place within the said Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, or either of them, to any other Land, Fort, or place whatsoever, except to the Kingdoms of Great Britain, or Ireland, or to some of the British Islands in the West Indies, until the owner or exporter of such Goods shall have made oath, or being one of the people called Quakers, shall have affirmed, before the Collector, or other proper Officer of the Customs at the Port or place where the same shall be shipped, (which oath or affirmation such Collector or other Officer is hereby authorized to administer,) that such Goods are really and bona fide of the Growth, Product, or Manufacture of one or other of the said Counties, of which fact the Collector, or other proper Officer of the Customs, shall, and is hereby required to give a Certificate under his hand, to the Master of the Ship or Vessel on board which such Goods are laden, for the security of her navigation; and in failure of producing such Certificate, such Ship or Vessel, and the Goods thereon laden, shall be forfeited, and shall and may be seized and prosecuted as hereinafter directed.

VIII. And whereas, it is the intent and meaning of this Act, that the several prohibitions and restraints hereinbefore enacted, should be discontinued and cease, so soon as the Trade and Commerce of his Majesty's subjects may be carried on without interruption within the said Colonies; be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, That whenever it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of his Majesty's Governour or Commander-in-Chief, and the majority of the Council of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, that peace and obedience to the laws shall be so far restored within the said Colonies, or either of them, that the Trade and Commerce of his Majesty's subjects may be carried on without interruption within the same, and that Goods, Wares, and Merchandises, have been freely imported into the said Colonies, or either of them, from Great Britain, and to expose to sale, without any let, hindrance, or molestation, from or by reason of any unlawful combinations to prevent or obstruct the same; and that Goods, Wares, and Merchandises, have in like manner been exported from the said Colonies, or either of them respectively, to Great Britain, for and during the term of one calendar month preceding; that then, and in such case, it shall and may be lawful for the Governour or Commander-in-Chief, with the advice of the Council of such Colonies respectively, by Proclamation, under the seal of such respectively, to notify the same to the several Officers of the Customs, and all others; and alter such Proclamation, this Act, with respect to such Colony, within which Proclamation or Proclamations, have been issued as aforesaid, shall be discontinued and cease, (except such as hereinafter provided;) and all Officers of his Majesty's Customs, and all other persons having charge of the execution of this Act, having received due notice of such Proclamation, are hereby directed and required to yield and pay obedience to such Proclamation, and to proceed in the discharge of their respective duties, in admitting to entry, clearing, and discharging, all Ships and Vessels, and Goods, Wares, and Merchandises, into and out of such respective Colony, in like manner as if this Act had never been made; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

IX. Provided, nevertheless, and it is hereby further enacted and declared by the authority aforesaid, That such Proclamation or Proclamations shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to discharge or suspend any proceedings upon any seizure which shall have been made, or any prosecution which shall have been commenced, for any penalty or forfeiture inflicted by this Act before the issuing of such Proclamation or Proclamations.

X. And it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons shall give or grant any false Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, for any of the purposes required or directed by this Act, such person or persons shall forfeit the sum of five hundred Pounds, and be rendered incapable of serving his Majesty, his heirs and successors, in any office whatsoever; and if any person or persons shall counterfeit, erase, alter, or falsify any Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, required or directed by this Act, or shall knowingly or willingly make use of any false Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, or of any Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, so counterfeited, erased, altered, or falsified, such person or persons shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of five hundred Pounds; and such Certificate, Cocket, or Clearance, shall be invalid, and of no effect.

XI. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the several forfeitures and penalties inflicted by this Act, shall and may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, and be divided, paid, and applied, in like manner as other penalties and forfeitures, inflicted by any Act or Acts of Parliament relating to the Trade or Revenues of the British Colonies or Plantations in America, are directed to be prosecuted, sued for, or recovered, divided, paid, and applied, by two several Acts of Parliament, the one passed in the fourth year of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for continuing, amending, and making perpetual an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, entitled 'An Act for the better securing and encouraging the Trade of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies in America;' for applying the produce of such Duties, and of the Duties to arise by virtue of said Act, towards defraying the expenses of defending, protecting, and securing the said Colonies and Plantations; for explaining an Act, made in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, entitled 'An Act for the encouragement of the Greenland and Eastland Trades; and for the better securing the Plantation Trade;' and for altering and disallowing the several drawbacks on Exports from this Kingdom, and more effectually preventing the clandestine conveyance of Goods to and from the said Colonies and Plantations, and improving and securing the Trade between the same and Great Britain;" and the other passed in the eighth year of his present Majesty's reign, entitled "An Act for the more easy and effectual recovery of the Penalties and Forfeitures inflicted by the Acts of Parliament, relating to the Trade or Revenues of the British Colonies and Plantations in America."

XII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any action or suit shall be commenced against any person or persons, for any thing done in pursuance of this Act of Parliament, the defendant or defendants in such action or suit may plead the general issue, and give the said fact, and the special matter, in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon; and that the same was done in pursuance of and by the authority of this Act; and if it shall appear so to have been done, the Jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff shall be nonsuited, or discontinue his action, after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared, or if judgment shall be given upon any verdict or demurrer against the plaintiff, the defendant or defendants shall recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the same, as defendants have in other cases by law.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 8, 1775.

The Order of the Day (passed on the 15th of February) being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee;

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into the said Committee.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1775.

Ordered, That Mr. John Morris do this day attend the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, is referred.

Ordered, That Mr. Samuel Need do attend the said Committee at the same time.

Ordered, That Mr. Heneage Parker do attend the said Committee at the same time.

Ordered, That Mr. William Stanford do attend the said Committee at the same time.

Ordered, That Mr. John Topott do attend the said Committee at the same time.

Ordered, That Mr. Thomas Rawson do attend the said Committee at the same time.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee;

Ordered, That the several Accounts which have been presented to the House in this session of Parliament from the Commissioners of Excise and Customs, be referred to the said Committee.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Alderman Oliver took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Mr. Alderman Oliver reported from the Committee, that they had made a further progress; and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow, at twelve of the clock, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the said Petitions.

Ordered, That the several persons who were ordered to attend the said Committee this day, do attend the said Committee to-morrow, at twelve of the clock.

THURSDAY, March 16, 1775.

The House, according to order, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of said Committee.

Mr. Alderman Oliver took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Glover appeared as Agent of the West India Planters, and Manager of the evidence in support of their Petitions, which was presented on the 2d of February. - [See Folio 1540.]

Mr. Glover. Sir, I appear in the behalf, and by the appointment of the Planters and Merchants concerned in the West Indies, who have presented to this honourable House an humble Petition, setting forth the great danger to themselves, to the Navigation, Revenue, and Commerce of these Kingdoms, in consequence of an Agreement and Association entered into by a meeting, held at Philadelphia, on the 5th day of September, 1774.

I bend under the weight of a subject so awful; a weight increased by my own thoughts anticipating calamities, in which every inhabitant throughout this extensive Empire, more or less, may have a share; at the same time, conscious as I am, that a Nation is behind me, generally unfavourable to my undertaking. But above all, I am fearful of a wide difference in sentiments between this great auditory, and the inconsiderable individual at their bar.

I rest, however, upon one consolation, that whatever may be the state of your minds, and of all besides, in every state, whether of dejection or elevation, in every conjuncture, whether adverse or prosperous; let me say, in all time of tribulation, in all time of our wealth, information hath its use, knowledge is salutary; and when presented in their genuine simplicity, untainted by prejudice, passion, or party, not looking towards any one quarter in preference to another, without courting any - meaning to offend none - but soliciting the attention of all, information and knowledge in such a shape cannot be unacceptable to any assembly, and I am confident will be acceptable here.

To throw lights into the Committee is the sole object of your Petitioners, limiting themselves to the line of facts, which, from their peculiar situation, none can fully explain, but such as themselves. I shall ask no opinion from witnesses; and if asked from any other quarter, the answer will be, that to establish facts is their part, to judge and decide is yours: opinion, therefore, might be constructive presumption in them, like an interference with the Counsels and measures of the state; whereas, they entertain but one expectation, that the information delivered this day, if not in the present juncture, may be found of some utility at some future period during a portentous series of events, whose final issue is known only to Him who alone knows all things.

I proceed, sir, upon another consolation, in thinking myself secure of one merit with the Committee; that upon the present subject, the variety of matter already lying before you, might by a variety and multitude of witnesses be prolonged, perhaps for twenty days; and that I can pledge myself, so far as rests upon me, to despatch the whole in less than half that number of hours. I shall call but two witnesses, from whose evidence, and from a very few papers respecting the Colonies, out of the large quantity transmitted by Office to the House, it shall be endeavoured to give you a dear insight into the two capital branches of Colony Trade, the West Indies, the North American, and the immediate dependant upon both, the African, with the relations and proportions of each towards the other, and towards the several great interests, the Manufacture, Commerce, Navigation, Revenue, and Land, of Great Britain.

George Walker, Esq., called in.

Question. What is your situation?

Answer. I am of Barbadoes; resided there a great many years, and have been their Agent ever since I left the country.

Q. Please to inform the Committee what you know in relation to the state of Barbadoes, the Leeward Islands, and the rest of the Sugar Colonies?

A. My situation having been such as to afford me the means, I may be presumed to know something of the state of Barbadoes, of the Islands in its neighbourhood, and of the Sugar Colonies in general. Barbadoes, and all the Sugar Islands are to be considered as countries in which a great Manufacture is established. It is a manufacture of Sugar and Rum. Instead of being able to purchase at market, the raw materials for the manufacture, they are obliged to produce the raw materials from their own soil. They Engraft the Farmer upon the Manufacturer; not (in the intention of furnishing the workmen with food, but,) but from the necessity of growing the raw material. Thus the land and labour of the country being devoted to the cultivation of the Sugar-cane; the Corn and Provisions they raise are merely accidental; they are no more than can be raised without prejudice to the Sugar Cane. To the Sugar-cane every thing is sacrificed as a trifle to the principal object. In Barbadoes, I doubt whether the Corn, (it is Indian Corn, not Wheat) and the ground Provisions (I mean Yams and other Roots,) raised in the Island, are sufficient to maintain the inhabitants for three months; I am certain they will not maintain them for four months, unless the four months be those in the beginning of the year, in the season for ground Provisions. The Indian Corn and ground Provisions cannot, by common means, be preserved for any length of time. I ought to add the uncertainty of the native products, especially of Indian Corn and ground Provisions: dry weather, or excess of wet weather, hurricanes, blast, vermine, frequently diminish or destroy the hopes of the Planter: The last year exhibited a melancholy example in Barbadoes, many families having been supported by publick contributions, nor is the soil in every plantation capable of producing Corn, although very proper for the Sugar-cane. As to the Leeward Islands, they produce neither Corn nor ground Provisions worth mentioning, except Tortola. Tortola was a Cotton Colony; Cotton and Corn are not inconsistent. Tortola began to make Sugar within my remembrance; and there is reason to believe the whole country is not yet engrossed by Sugar-cane. From this view of the Sugar Colony, in the light of a manufacture, where the soil, as well as the labour is employed in the manufacture, it follows, that such Colonies must depend, in proportion to the extensiveness of the manufacture, upon other places for necessary food, for actual subsistence. The observation applies to Jamaica, and to the Islands under the Granada Government.

Q. From what places do the Sugar Colonies draw food for subsistence?

A. They are not many; Great Britain, Ireland, North America. From Great Britain, the Sugar Colonies receive a little salted Fish, Pilchards from the West, Herrings from the North. As to Corn, they receive no Wheat in Grain, and a mere trifle in Flour. The Flour during the three years, from 1771 to 1773, may be shown to have been under four quarters, upon the whole to all the West Indies. It may be shown that the Beans and Peas together do not exceed thirteen thousand quarters, nor the Oats nineteen thousand; and even this importation, small as it is, is owing to a particular circumstance: it is, that the Indian Corn of North America, the great supply of the West Indies, soon perishes in a hot and moist climate; and as the trade is carried on from different Provinces, it is unconnected, unconcerted, dependent upon the opportunities, upon the caprices of individuals; dependent upon accident of winds and weather; it is therefore, in its nature irregular. A fortuitous combination sometimes increases the irregularity to such a degree, as to reduce a particular Colony to a real, though temporary distress. Beans, Peas, and Oats, being capable of a longer resistance against putrefaction than the Indian Corn from North America, the Sugar Colonies, especially the Leeward Islands, who have the fewest internal resources, do therefore make some provision in these articles against that temporary distress; so delicately strained already is the string, which is now threatened with a rough and unrelenting violence. I purposely forbear other articles of food from Great Britain, intended for the use of people of some condition, Hams, Cheese, and the like; they belong properly to the general commerce of Great Britain with the West Indies. I confine myself at present to necessary food. Ireland furnishes a large quantity of salted Beef, Pork, Butter, and Herrings, but no Grain. North America supplies all the rest, both Corn and Provisions. North America is truly the granary of the West Indies; from thence they draw the great quantities of Flour and Biscuit for the use of one class of people, and of Indian Corn for the support of all the others; for the support not of Man only, but of every animal; for the use of Man, Horses, Swine, Sheep, Poultry. North America also furnishes the West Indies with Rice. Rice, a more expensive diet, and less capable of sustaining the body under hard labour, is of a more limited consumption, but is a necessary indulgence for the young, the sick, the weakly, amongst the common people and the Negroes. North America not only furnishes the West Indies with Bread, but with Meat, with Sheep, with Poultry, and some live Cattle; but the demand for these is infinitely short of the demand for the salted Beef, Pork, and Fish, Salted Fish, (if the expression may be permitted in contrast with Bread) is the meat of all the lower ranks of people in Barbadoes, and the Leeward Islands. It is the meat of all the Slaves in all the West Indies. Nor is it disdained by persons of better condition. The North American navigation also furnishes the Sugar Colonies with Salt from Turk's Island, Sal Tortuga and Anguilla; although these Islands are themselves a part of the West Indies. The testimony which some experience has enabled me to bear, you will find confirmed, sir, by official accounts. The same accounts will distinguish the source of the principal, the great supply of Corn and Provisions. They will fix it precisely in the Middle Colonies of North America; in those Colonies, who have made a publick Agreement in their Congress, to withhold all their supplies after the tenth of next September. How far that Agreement may be precipitated in its execution, may be retarded or frustrated, it is for the wisdom of Parliament to consider: but if it is persisted in, I am well founded to say, that nothing will save Barbadoes and the Leeward Islands from the dreadful consequences of absolute famine. I repeat the famine will not be prevented. The distress will fall upon them suddenly; they will be overwhelmed with it, before they can turn themselves about to look out for relief. What a scene! when rapine, stimulated by hunger, has broken down all scenes, confounded the rich with the poor, and levelled the free man with his slave! The distress will be sudden. The body of the people do not look forward to distant events; if they should do this, they will put their trust in the wisdom of Parliament. Suppose them to be less confident in the wisdom of Parliament, they are destitute of the means of purchasing an extraordinary stock. Suppose them possessed of the means; a very extraordinary stock is not to be found at market. There is a plain reason in the nature of the thing, which prevents any extraordinary stock at market, and which would forbid the Planter from laying it in, if there was: it is, that the objects of it are perishable. In those climates the Flour will not keep above six or eight weeks; the Indian Corn decays in three months; and all the North American Provisions fit only for present use.

Q. If the West Indies are deprived of their usual supplies of Corn and Provisions from the Middle Colonies of North America, are there no resources by which the deficiency may be made good?

A. I will examine the resources I have heard mentioned.

Great Britain cannot increase her exportation of Corn and Provisions to the West Indies; for she would increase a scarcity at home already complained of: notwithstanding the assistance she largely receives herself, particularly in Wheat and Flour from North America. Ireland has other markets to furnish besides the West Indies; these markets will not suffer themselves to be deprived of their usual share, beyond a certain limited degree; a degree too limited to supply the whole West India consumption. The Colonies at the Southern extremity of America, the two Floridas, are not able to feed themselves; and Georgia, a small country, is said to have acceded to the Congress. At the Northern extremity, St. John's is in its infancy. From Nova Scotia, the West Indies receive some small supplies. As to the salted Fish from Newfoundland, it is Fish from New England; it is taken upon the banks by the New England people chiefly; who are to have none to send us, unless the Fishery Bill should operate a submission, or have no operation at all. Canada, sir, produces not Indian Corn. In the hands of Great Britain, and under English laws, it has exported Wheat; * but the quantity is neither equal to the demand of the West Indies, nor is it prepared for the West India market; but all these are expedients for a distant day. In future times from all these countries, according to their several natures, a constant and regular demand will create a constant and regular supply. It is impossible; it is inconsistent with the nature of commerce to furnish an adequate supply to a vast, an immediate, and an unexpected demand; the demand and the supply must grow up together, mutually supporting and supported by each other. One more expedient remains; it is distant like the rest: it will be effectual, but it will be ruinous; it is to change our system. We must abandon the manufacture, and apply the land and labour now appropriated to the manufacture to the purposes of raising food. The undone remnant of the people who shall not have fallen victims to the intermediate famine, may thus provide against it for the time to come. I flatter myself, sir, I have shown from a deduction of facts the dependence of Barbadoes and the Leeward Islands upon North America for subsistence. I leave it to gentlemen of more intimate knowledge of the state of Jamaica than I can pretend to, to show that a relation of the same kind, and if not to the same extent, yet far beyond the common opinion, subsist between that great

* Eighty thousand quarters, This sentence is not in the evidence.

Island and the Northern Continent. As to Granada and its dependencies, sir, let me only observe, that the manufacture of Sugar and Rum, and the cultivation of Coffee, in those Islands having been prosecuted with unremitting ardour, little of their labour can have been diverted to the raising of Corn and Provisions. Their dependence upon North America was reasonable; and I may venture to conclude it to be similar to that of their neighbours. I have been the more explicit upon this subject, the dependence of the West Indies upon North America for subsistence, as it is the calamity which presses immediately, affecting life as well as fortune; it is a distress which your humanity will conspire with your interest to prevent; and I trust that the wisdom of Parliament will find the means.

Q. What is the commodity called Lumber? For what purpose used, and whence procured?

A. In the West Indies, they understood, by the term Lumber, every species of North American wood, when prepared for the use of buildings or the cooperage. It includes the Deal, the Pine, the Cypress, the Cedar, the White Oak, the Red Oak, and others; and comes in the shape of Beams, Joists, Planks, Boards, Shingles, Staves, and in Logs. Buildings where great strength is required, and which are exposed to wind and weather, demand timber of a texture more solid, and of a quality less subject to decay in those climates; it is distinguished by the name of hard wood; Mahogany is of that tribe. Such, as far as my experience extends, grow only between the Tropicks; the price is high three and four Shillings sterling the cubick foot; employed from the call of necessity, the consumption is limited. For every other purpose of the Carpenter and of the Cooper, it is the Lumber of North America that is used. It is a pleasure to me, sir, to spare the patience of the Committee a detail of conjectural calculations. I understand that there is some official paper which will inform you precisely. The part which is furnished by the Middle Colonies of North America is out of all proportion to the others. Without Lumber to repair the buildings they run immediately to decay. And without Lumber for the proper packages for Sugar, and to contain Rum, they cannot be sold at market, they cannot even be kept at home.

Q. Are there not places besides the Middle Colonies of North America, from whence may be drawn a supply of Lumber in some degree proportionate to the wants of the West Indies?

A. I will examine. The first resource may be in the Colony itself; but Barbadoes and the Leeward Islands are altogether destitute of wood. The gentlemen of Jamaica will inform you how unequal their country is to its own demands. Remains the Government of Granada. And here I beg leave to state a fact. Ready-made Houses of North American Lumber have been exported from Barbadoes to the Islands under the Government of Granada. These Islands have plenty of wood; and this wood is of a more durable nature than Lumber; but an anxiety for the staple manufacture superseded this consideration; and the labour of the Slaves, instead of being turned to the providing of materials for the Carpenter, was reserved for the cultivation of the Sugar-cane.

Although the Sugar Colonies may find no resources from their soil, they may find it in their market at home. Lumber is a commodity not so perishable as Corn and Provisions. A stock of it might be laid in. This certainly is an expedient. It will be attempted by the provident and the wealthy; the combined description includes not a multitude in any country, and the attempt will greatly enhance the price. But it is practicable only to a certain point. It must be confined to the quantity at market. If an unusual quantity should be imported, as is probable, supposing no sinister events to prohibit, the Planter has no fund to pay for it. I speak of the great body of Planters in general. They are not able to provide for the expenses of two or more crops out of the profits of one crop. It is well if every crop can bear up against its own particular load. Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof. Before I proceed to external resources, I beg leave, sir, to repeat what I have said before upon the subject of a new channel for the supply of Corn and Provisions. I said it was inconsistent with the nature of commerce to furnish an adequate supply to a vast, an unexpected, an immediate demand; that the demand and the supply must grow up together, mutually supporting and supported by each other. This principle destroys the prospect of a timely and effectual assistance from any quarter whatsoever. Not content with the operation of the general principle, I will examine the particular resources. I will only say of the two Floridas, that the population is feeble in the extreme. Georgia sends some Lumber; but Georgia is said to have acceded to the Congress. What has been said of the Floridas with respect to population, is applicable to St. John's, and in some measure to Nova Scotia. Nor does Nova Scotia export any materials proper for Casks to contain Rum. In Canada the population is not adequate to the new enterprise, without neglecting points of greater importance in their system. I say of greater importance; because the West India market is now open to them; an exchange of West India commodities is desirable; and notwithstanding Canada exports Lumber to the West Indies. In truth, there is a mass of objections which nothing but a length of time can overcome. Supported by large capitals, or long credit, Canada must first combine several commercial objects, so as to furnish an assortment of cargoes. They must have proper Artificers, as well as people. They must provide a navigation equal to the bulky commodity - equal to it under the accumulated difficulties of a great distance, and the dangers and delays of a River covered or choaked with ice for more than half the year. If there is little or no resource to be found in America, let the West Indies, in search of Lumber, turn their eyes to Europe. I pass over Great Britain and Ireland, because they both import vast quantities of Lumber. No inconsiderable part of it is drawn from the Middle Colonies of North America. But it is to be found in Europe, of every sort, and in every shape. The demand of the West Indies has been shown to be vast. It will be immediate. The tenth of September is advancing very fast, and the demand will be unexpected; unexpected, in the opinion of every person who hopes that lenient measures may be adopted; unexpected, in the opinion of every person who, without reasoning farther, depends upon the wisdom of Parliament to extricate the West Indies, and in them the whole Empire, from danger. A domestick event, unexpected in Great Britain, will not be presumed in foreign countries. Nor Germany, nor Norway, nor the Baltick, will risk an extensive operation in commerce upon the speculative idea of a continuance of a most unnatural quarrel. I will, however, suppose for a moment that Germany provides a more plentiful stock of Staves; that Norway and the Baltick pay the like attention to their Deals. I pray it may be understood that the freight of bulky Goods trenches deeply into their value.

The freight of Lumber from North America to the West Indies, a short, safe passage, is a moiety of the Goods shipped. The double voyage, first to Great Britain, and then to the West Indies, takes away at the same rate for distant and hazardous voyages, an half of that moiety, leaving only a quarter part to the original shipper. At what an enormous price then must this Lumber come to the hands of the consumer? By a suspension of the Acts of Navigation, it may indeed be carried to the West Indies, disencumbered of the intolerable burden of a double voyage; yet add the original price much higher than in America; add the increase in this price from the increase in the demand from Great Britain, Ireland, and the West Indies; the remedy itself is only the lesser evil.

Q. What other species of commodities, from the Middle Colonies, are interchanged with the West Indies?

A. Besides the absolute dependence of the West Indies upon North America for Subsistence and for Lumber, there are supplies less consequential, but very useful, and even necessary, in some respect, to the West Indies; which are all furnished by the confederating Colonies. The articles are, Train Oil, for the many lamps in the Sugar Works, Horses, for the saddle and for draught, Tallow, Leather, Tobacco, Pitch, Tar, Turpentine, Iron, Sloop and Boat Timbers, and some others. As to Ships, I refer them to the head of Navigation, created by the commerce of the West Indies.

Q. What commodities do the Sugar Colonies give in exchange to North America?

A. They did give a part of all their products in exchange: but the Middle Colonies have refused to take

Molasses, Syrups, Paneles, Coffee, and Pimento, since the first of last December. The principal exchange is of Sugar and Rum. The Sugar is generally supposed to amount to twenty-five thousand hogsheads directly, besides fifteen thousand hogsheads in the shape of Refined Sugar from England. As to Rum, the dependence of all the Islands, except Jamaica, is as great upon the Middle Colonies of North America for the consumption of their Rum, as it is for Subsistence and Lumber. Jamaica sends about eleven thousand puncheons to London, which stocks the market at the present price. Lower the price, the method is plain and easy, the consumption increases in proportion. Nor will the revenue suffer. How far the expedient may save Jamaica, in this momentous article of their manufacture, I leave to be explained by gentlemen more intimately acquainted with that Island. The Rum of Barbadoes, the Leeward Islands, and the Government of Granada, does not come to England, except in small portions. It goes in part to Ireland; and all the rest, the great quantity, is distributed chiefly amongst the Middle Colonies of North America, agreeable to the law of reciprocal exchange. The Agreement of those Colonies, which is to take place the tenth of next September, extends, in words, only to the withholding of all supplies; but it must effect a total suspension of commerce. They will not send their Vessels in ballast, to purchase with gold and silver the Goods they have been accustomed to receive in exchange for the products of their own soil and industry. It is an idea repugnant to every principle of commerce - it is more; it is repugnant to the spirit which now inflames those Colonies. Sir, I have shown, I trust, the absolute dependence of the Sugar Colonies upon the Middle Colonies of America, in three essential points, viz: for Corn and Provisions for subsistence; for Lumber and other necessities for the maintenance of their Plantations; and lastly, for the consumption of their produce of all kinds greatly of Sugar, but principally of Rum. This doctrine of the dependence of Sugar Colonies upon North America is confirmed by an authority which will not be disputed. The Act of Parliament of the sixth Of George the Second, chapter thirteenth, was made upon this occasion. The British Sugar Colonies complained of the great increase of the French Sugar Colonies, and demonstrated the increase to have been owing principally to the support which the French Sugar Colonies received from the Middle Provinces of North America, in exchange for Sugar and Molasses. Perhaps it is beside my present purpose to remark the manner in which the Administration of those days adjusted the great dispute. Sir, they contrived to please both sides. To the Islands they gave the letter of the law; and the Continent they indulged in the breach of it. The fact is all I want. It shows that even the French Sugar Colonies do depend, in no small degree, upon North America. Nor are the Danes in the islands, nor the Dutch in the Southern Continent, an exception. Such is the force of that principle, which considers a Sugar Plantation as a manufactory obliged to raise its own materials. If, in the course of events during this unhappy dispute, the foreign Volumes should be deprived of their resources from America, it is not my province to examine whether the distress will be looked upon with indifference: but it becomes me to hope that Great Britain; will never suffer her own to be ruined for want of the accustomed and necessary supplies from North America,

Q. What is the kind of Property in the West India Islands? And can you estimate the value thereof?

A. The nature of the property vested in the West Indies will appear by the estimate of its value. I shall calculate in sterling money of Great Britain. To begin with Barbadoes. It stands first on the map. This Island contains one hundred and eight or six thousand acres. The Land is almost entirely under cultivation; but I will reckon only upon the hundred thousand. From a knowledge of a multitude of appraisements made upon oath, by freeholders of the vicinity, upon occasions of deaths, or of extents for the payment of debts; from many actual sales; I state that thirty Pounds an acre is a reasonable valuation. I include with the Land all the dwelling-houses in the country, the Sugar Works, and the young Crops. I throw in the Cattle, the Plantation, and household Furniture. This article, the Land, amounts to three millions. The Negroes, by a poll tax, in which the whole number is certainly not included, are seventy-five thousand; cheap at forty Pounds each, they make a second sum of three millions. I throw in the two Towns, whose rents amount to forty thousand Pounds a year, as a casting weight to make good the aggregate sum of six millions. Taking Barbadoes as a standard by which to measure all the rest of the Sugar Colonies, I observe that the Sugar exported from Barbadoes to all parts, at a medium of many years, (it is a calculation formed upon the receipts of the Duty of four and an half per cent.) is about fifteen thousand common hogsheads a year. Now the Sugar imported into Great Britain alone, from all the Sugar Colonies, amounted, in the year seventy-three, to one hundred and seventy thousand hogsheads, allowing ten hundred weight of Sugar to a hogshead. The import of seventy-four is more. I will suppose the produce of Barbadoes to be as one in ten. If a part of the Barbadoes Sugar is clayed, if its muscovado is properest for common use, yet there are clayed Sugars from other Islands; the muscovado of several, especially of St. Kitt's, is fitter for the refiner. Besides, twenty thousand such hogsheads are deducted, and a great number of common hogsheads, I mean the exports to North America, are omitted before the proportion of one in ten is stated. If Barbadoes yields Ginger, Cotton, and Aloes, the other Colonies add to the same products Coffee, Pimento, and other articles. The capital of Barbadoes then being six millions, and its produce as one in ten of the produce of all the West Indies, it is fair to conclude, at the same proportion, the capital of the whole to be sixty millions: a conclusion which amply warrants the Petition in declaring it to be upwards of thirty millions. I take nothing in the estimate for the value of the future increase of Jamaica and the new settled Islands.

Q. Can you make any estimate of the value of West India Property owned by persons who live in England; and of the amount of the debt due to this Kingdom from the West Indies?

A. Of the millions vested in the West Indies, many are the property of persons residing in England, and not a few are united and consolidated with the landed property of this Kingdom. It is difficult to ascertain the total. I have endeavoured at a calculation for Barbadoes, and am below the mark in stating it at one million four hundred thousand Pounds. In the other Islands, for obvious reasons, the proportion is greater than in Barbadoes. The most eminent Merchants will tell you that they have hardly any body to correspond with in St. Christopher's, except the overseers of plantations. Resuming Barbadoes as a rule to measure with, the proportion is fourteen millions. It is a more difficult and less pleasing task to investigate the millions due to the Merchants and others in this Kingdom, upon the security of West India Plantations. I can form no particular estimate. The sum, in general, is immense. The Sugar trade, from its infancy, by reason of the small capitals of the first Planters, and the great cost of a Sugar Manufacture, must have been the creatures of credit. It was raised to the present pitch by the wealth of the Merchant supporting the industry of the Planter. Neither is it necessary to be exact in the value of the property of the English residents, nor of the debt to the English Merchants and others. For the Sugar Colonies are really no other than a British Manufacture, established at the distance of three and four thousand miles, for reasons of convenience. And the dependence of this Manufacture is the same as if it was situated in the heart of the Kingdom. I do not retract the idea of its dependence upon North America. In such a case it can be suggested only in theory; Great Britain must draw from North America the supplies, without which her Manufacture, wheresoever it is situated, is incapable of subsisting.

Q. What are the advantages of the Sugar Colonies to Great Britain? And what to the Revenue thereof?

A. I desire, sir, I may consider them as a British Manufacture, whose capital is sixty millions. The advantage is not that the profits all centre here; it is, that it creates, in the course of attaining those profits, a commerce and a navigation in which multitudes of your people, and millions of your money are employed; it is, that the support which the Sugar Colonies received in one shape, they give in another. In proportion to their dependence upon North America, and upon Ireland, they enable North America and Ireland to trade with Great Britain. By their dependence upon Great Britain for hands to push the cultivation of the Sugar-cane, they uphold the trade of Great Britain to Africa.^{*} A trade which in the pursuit of Negroes, as the principal, if not the sole intention of the adventurer, brings home Ivory and Gold as secondary objects. In proportion as the Sugar Colonies consume, or cause to be consumed amongst their neighbours, Asiatick commodities, they increase the trade of the English East India Company. In this light I see the India Goods which are carried to the Coast of Guinea. In proportion as the West Indies use the Wines of the African Islands, and as they use the products of Europe, so far they add to the trade of Great Britain with the African Islands, and with the rest of Europe. Without taking in any of these circuitous channels, the direct exports to the West Indies will appear, by official accounts, to be of immense value; † will show the wealth gradually earned by the hands of labour and of skill, which the Sugar Colonies are daily adding to the national stock. I hardly dare venture to place in this light the salaries and profits of the Officers appointed by Government for the superintendence of the West Indies. As to revenue, the nett receipt, I understand, to exceed seven hundred thousand Pounds.

Q. In case the usual intercourse between North America and the Sugar Colonies should be interrupted, what would be the prejudice to Great Britain, and to the revenue thereof?

A. The advantages arising from, and dependent upon the usual intercourse, must cease with the interruption. I will not add that the Nation is to pay in money to the foreigners the large sum for West India commodities, for which the British Manufactures, and the profits of a circuitous commerce, are now given in exchange. The observation would be fallacious. The decrease in the consumption of West India commodities will surely keep pace with the decay of the Manufactures and Commerce the West Indies supported. The revenue will lessen in proportion to the diminished consumption, nor will the loss stop at the West India commodities. the revenue from Tea, without the accustomed plenty of Sugar, without the profits of the Sugar trade, and of the commerce created by the Sugar trade, will sink into insignificance; the interruption will be felt severely in every branch of revenue; for it will be felt severely in every branch of trade which contributes, by consumption, to the revenue; and in trade, as in the human body, nothing suffers singly by itself; there is a consent of parts in the system of both, and the partial evil grows into universal mischief. Of all the branches of commerce which will suffer immediately, or indirectly, from the interruption of the usual intercourse, the most important is the navigation. By investigating its value, we estimate the loss. It is equal to the bulky products, and still more bulky supplies of a stock in trade of sixty millions; it is co-extensive with the commerce created by that trade, comprehending the navigation to Africa, and making no inconsiderable part of that of England to the East Indies, and to the rest of Europe. It establishes, as is asserted in the Petition, a strength which wealth can neither purchase nor balance. Sir, I will add, it is a strength which is so justly a favourite with the Nation, that nothing but some unhappy mistake can deprive it of the national protection and support.

Mr. Innes asked, how many White People are there in Barbadoes?

Question objected to.

Withdrew.

Called in.

Q. What is the common food of the Negroes in the Leeward Islands?

A. In all the Islands it is salt Fish (as I said before) and Indian Corn. I entered into those points particularly before.

Q. Whether the Islands will not be supplied equally well, notwithstanding the Newfoundland Fishery from New England should be stopped?

A. That is a matter of opinion. I came here as an evidence of facts, which I hope will influence the opinions of the House, but not to obtrude my own. My opinion is, that they will not have the usual supply, because there will not be the usual quantity taken, and fewer people to carry it to them.

* The medium of fourteen years, from 1756 to 1773, is £469,237. Imports from Africa £49,858.

† Medium of exports for fourteen years, from Christmas 1756 to Christmas 1773, is £1,145,735.

Q. What proportion of Land in the Leeward Islands, being applied to the raising Provisions, would supply the Negroes with Provisions, on an estate of two hundred hog-heads, for instance?

A. The native products of the Islands are very uncertain; all so, but Guinea Corn; therefore much more land must be applied to this purpose than would be necessary to raise the supply for the regular constant consumption. They must provide against accidents; such as hurricanes, excess of wet weather, or of dry weather, the climate being very uncertain; it is, therefore, impossible to answer this question precisely; but this I can say, that if they were obliged to raise their own food, that their food must be then their principal object, and Sugar only a secondary object; it would be but the trifle, which Provisions are now.

Q. If the Planters could not be supplied from North America, would they not have a share of fresh Provisions from Great Britain and Ireland, to answer their wants?

A. They must have more than a share; they must have a full proportion for their whole subsistence, and England cannot afford it; it would occasion a scarcity at home.

Q. Would not the Merchants here send out cargoes of Provisions to the West Indies?

A. I answered that question, and most of the others, before, by obviating them in my evidence. I have said, and repeat, that Great Britain cannot increase her exports of Provisions to the West Indies, without increasing a scarcity already complained of at home.

Q. What quantity of Flour is allowed to the White People, on an estimate of two hundred hogsheads?

A. No regular allowance. They have Rice, Biscuit, as they may want, in proportion as a variety of things which are provided for them by the plantation, falls short, or abounds.

Q. Whether Deal Boards would not do in the room of Staves, for packing Sugar?

A. The Portuguese pack in Chests; but they are not made of Deal Boards, but of strong Plank. We must make a total alteration in our Shipping, our Tradesmen, and many circumstances, if we were to pack our Sugar in Chests.

Q. Whether there are not many packs of Staves shipped to the West Indies from London, both for Rum and Sugar?

A. I have known some for Sugar; but it has been found necessary to mix them with many new Staves from North America. Our Staves, like our Cloths, wear out by use; many of them are broken in the voyage, and the rest are seldom fit for much.

Q. I mean new Staves?

A. I never knew any sent [supposing the words to have been new Casks,] but as packages for Goods exported to the West Indies; this is sometimes done, and the Casks so made as to be used afterwards for Sugar and Rum; but this is done merely to save particular packages for the Goods; nor even in that case is it always thought an advantage.

Q. I mean Staves sent on purpose?

A. I cannot answer that but by saying, I never knew an instance of it. I know Staves are brought from the West Indies to London upon a prospect of advantage; but I never knew them sent from hence to the West Indies.

Q. How are the French Islands supplied with Lumber, Bread, Flour, &c.?

A. I cannot give a precise answer to that question. I have said they receive great supplies from North America, I have mentioned before, that the French, Dutch, and Danes, in their Sugar Colonies, depend in a great measure on North America; but I do not know the particulars precisely.

Q. Whether he does not know that the French carry on ten times the trade with North America that the English do?

A. I do not know the extent of the French trade; I am not well enough acquainted with it, so as at this time to be able to state propositions. I have said there is a certain degree of dependence of the French Islands on North America.

Q. Whether, if the Americans were prevented from trading with the French Islands, it would be advantageous to Great Britain?

A. A speculative opinion is asked; I speak only to facts.

Withdrew.

John Ellis, Esq. called in.

Q. What is your situation?

A. I am a Planter of Jamaica; have resided in that Island at different periods, from 1754 to 1773.

Q. Inform the Committee what you know of the present state of Jamaica in general, and of her dependence in particular on North America, in regard to the reciprocal exchange of commodities between them.

A. The Island of Jamaica being of great extent, the several parts of which differ from each other, from a variety of circumstances attending their respective situations, it is impossible to give any one general answer, that is not liable to many exceptions. The Island contains nearly four millions of acres, of which I compute one hundred and sixty thousand acres to be planted in Sugar-canes, and I suppose a little above double that quantity of land is kept as a necessary appendage to the Sugar estates, and employed in pasturage and grounds allotted to the Negroes for Provisions, and in furnishing Timbers, Fire-wood, Lime, &c., the whole of which makes five hundred thousand acres. In other settlements, such as Pimento, Cotton, Coffee, Ginger, and Pen-land, for breeding Cattle, and in Provision plantations in the neighbourhood of the Towns, I reckon as much more. The remaining three millions consist of a great wilderness, chiefly mountainous, in which it may be presumed there are many intermediate tracts capable of cultivation, but which, from difficulty of access, and the little prospect of profit adequate to the stock requisite for their settlement, continue in their present state; for however rich any lands may be in themselves, yet, if the circumstances attending their cultivation are such as to render it probable that the capital to be employed will not produce an adequate return, it cannot be supposed that any prudent person will adventure therein. In so large a tract the soil is various, and adapted to the production of different commodities; the climate and seasons also differ greatly. On the South side, at the extremities of the Island, the Parishes of Westmoreland and St. Thomas, are seasonable, or supplied with refreshing showers, and the manurable lands are chiefly employed in the growth of the Cane. The intermediate Parishes near the Sea, being St. David, Port Royal, St. Andrew, St. Catharine, St. Dorothy, Fare, and St. Elizabeth, are subject to dry weather, inso-much that particular spots only are employed in the cultivation of Sugar. The flat lands are chiefly appropriated to the purposes of raising Cattle, and the mountainous lands in the vicinity of Spanishtown and Kingston, besides producing Coffee, Ginger, and a little Pimento, afford a partial supply of Provisions, such as Plantains, Roots, and Indian Corn. The inland Parishes of the South side, St. John's, St. Thomas, in the vale, and some part of Clarendon, being more seasonable, raise, I believe, in plentiful years, a sufficiency of the above Provisions for their own support, and sometimes furnish relief to the neighbouring Parishes. The several Parishes on the North side, are fertile, and in general seasonable, excepting on some parts of the Sea-coast, where I have known the drought so excessive, as it was particularly in the year 1770, and the calls of distress so loud, that neither the back lands nor the neighbouring Parishes could afford sufficient relief; and had it not been for supplies from North America, many thousand Negroes must have perished for want. On the whole, though the Island of Jamaica has, in respect of internal supplies, greatly the advantage over Barbadoes and the other British Sugar Islands, yet from the circumstances of drought and gusts of wind which happen frequently, and are particularly destructive to the Plantain Trees, which yield the chief support of the Negroes, her dependence on North America in point of Provisions, is very great, and cannot, I think, be lessened in any considerable degree, without diminishing the growth of the staple commodities of Sugar and Rum; for besides those articles which chiefly constitute or supply the place of Bread, such as Flour, Rice, Corn, and Peas, she receives from America great quantities of salted Fish; which, with Herrings from Europe, serve the Negroes as Meat. I confine myself in this state to matters of mere subsistence for our Negro Slaves, without taking into the estimate the great quantities of Pork and other salted Provisions imported from America for the use of the White inhabitants. In regard to Lumber, for that species which is called Staves and Heading, and of which we make the Packages for our Sugar and Rum, the dependence which Jamaica has on North America, may be judged of from this circumstance. The Island at present yields about eighty thousand hogsheads of Sugar, and about thirty thousand puncheons of Rum, for exportation. Now I am positive that not three thousand of the Casks necessary to contain this great quantity of produce, are made from Jamaica Wood; a few Puncheons indeed are imported from England, and also some few Hambro Staves, the Puncheons being packages of Goods sent out; but all the rest we receive from the Middle Colonies of North America and from Georgia. With regard to the other species of Lumber, such as Scantling, Boards, and Shingles for Houses, the different Towns are chiefly built with these articles from North America; as are also the buildings of most of the settlements on the Sea-coast. The interior parts of the country being in the neighbourhood of large woods, supply themselves from the growth of the country, or at least I think ought so to do.

To conclude, the supplies annually imported into Jamaica, chiefly from the associated Provinces of North America, consisting of Pitch, Tar, Turpentine, Lamp Oil, Boards, Joists, Plank, Hogshhead and Puncheon Staves, Shingles, &c., Horses, and a great variety of Provisions, such as Flour, Indian Corn, Biscuit, Beef, Pork, salted Fish of different kinds, and Rice, amount by the most exact calculation I am able to make, to upwards of one hundred and fifty thousand Pounds sterling, in payment of which the Americans receive Sugar, Rum, Coffee, Ginger, and other articles of Jamaica produce. The North Americans have of late years imported also considerable quantities of Cash, which, with their cargoes, they lay out in the purchase of the above articles.

Q. In so vast a space as three millions of acres of unsettled Land, do you not apprehend there are a great many tracts capable of cultivation, and of producing Provisions, and many other articles of those supplies, which at present are furnished from North America?

A. Doubtless there are; but the Planter must necessarily, and will irremediably suffer before those lands can be prepared for cultivation, and yield them a sufficient supply. He will even suffer by his dependence on the wisdom and interposition of Parliament; not perceiving, till it is too late, the absolute necessity of converting his distant lands, if he has any, into Provision settlements, before the calamities attending distress and want will overtake him. I speak now in regard to Provisions only; a failure in which may be attended with the most alarming consequences, from rebellions of the Slaves. As to Lumber, those plantations which are situated near considerable tracts of Wood-land, may doubtless, at all times, obtain a partial supply, though very few species of Wood are fit for the purpose of making Staves for Sugar Casks; as to Casks for Rum, the Island affords no proper Wood; but I know not how the other estates are to be furnished, except from America. And after all, supposing the Island had resources within herself, and could, in time, actually supply both Lumber and Provision in sufficient quantity, it must be remembered that seven-eighths of the Planters are already deeply in debt to Great Britain, and cannot support the expense of great land carriage, which must unavoidably attend the Putting their own Wood, and bringing it to their estates; neither can they obtain credit to make new settlements for the purpose of raising Provisions. It follows, therefore, and the fact really is, however fortunate a few individuals may be in respect to the situation of their estates, that the Planters in general cannot submit to the necessity of cutting their own Lumber, and of raising greater quantities of Provisions than the Island at present affords, without neglecting, in a proportionate degree, the staple articles of Sugar and Rum; and I need not point out to the Committee how greatly the Trade, Revenues, and Navigation of this country will suffer, by a diminution in the growth and manufacture of these commodities.

Q. What do you apprehend will be the consequence to Jamaica, in case the supply of Provisions from North America is interrupted?

A. I have partly answered that question before. Those plantations which have not good Provision-grounds for their Negroes, will soon be in a starving condition; and even those which have must suffer greatly; for the Negroes are a very thoughtless, improvident people; they do not look forward to provide against those evils which too frequently happen; such as droughts, which destroy their ground Provisions, and gusts of wind which throw down their plantation trees. Those who are in want, will steal; when they can no longer steal, and hunger presses, they will take by force. What further consequence may arise, I dread to think of.

Are there not places, besides the Middle Colonies of North America, from whence may be drawn a supply of Lumber?

A. I apprehend not. Georgia, indeed, furnishes at present, in small quantities, Scantling and Boards for building, and some few Staves. How far that Province is capable of increasing the export of these articles, I cannot say; but it must surely be many years before it equals that of all the confederated Colonies together. As to Canada, and the two Floridas, the population at the extremities of the Continent is too feeble to promise any great supply from thence. The navigation from Canada is obstructed many months in the year by the ice; but however this may be, these countries do not afford any supply at present; and I believe it is contrary to the known principles of commerce, to expect that any country can yield an adequate supply to a great, an immediate and unexpected demand.

Q. What do you compute the value of the Property in that island?

A. Twenty-four millions sterling. I shall not take up the time of the Committee by a long tedious calculation. In every well-appointed property, the value of Negroes constitute a third of the capital. By a well-appointed property, I mean a property where the Master is competent to the furnishing it with a sufficient stock of Negroes and Cattle, and every necessary appendage. In such properties, the value of Negroes constitute a third of the capital; but the greater part of the properties in the Island, from the inability of the Planters, have not a due proportion of Negroes, and in such the value of the Negroes does not exceed one-fourth of the capital. I shall, however, make my calculation upon a supposition, that all the properties in the Island are sufficiently stocked with Negroes, and that the value of Negroes, therefore, constitute one-third part of the general capital of the Island. Now the number of Negroes in the Island of Jamaica, exceed two hundred thousand; however, I shall estimate them only at two hundred thousand; and I shall value them only at the same rate with the African cargoes; of them I have lately seen several sales, and they average for each Negro from forty Pounds to forty-five Pounds; but I will put them only at forty Pounds, and I shall rate the Negroes of the Island who are seasoned to the country, are civilized, and have acquired arts, at the same value with the Savages newly imported from Africa; two hundred thousand Negroes, therefore, at the rate of forty Pounds each, amount to eight millions, and the Negroes constituting one third of the general capital, the whole capital of the Island amounts to twenty-four millions.

Mr. Glover having finished with this evidence, some questions were asked by Mr. Innes, relative to particular articles of Provision, and in what quantities they were furnished to the Negroes by their Masters; in answer to which Mr. Ellis asserted, that the dependence of the Island upon foreign Provisions was so very great, that if the Masters did not attend to, and supply the wants of their Slaves, many thousands of them must perish.

Withdrew.

After the examination of Mr. Walker and Mr. Ellis, the whole was summed up, as follows:

Sir: Having closed the examination of witnesses, I must recur to my introductory proposition; that from the evidence at your bar, and official papers upon your table, it shall be endeavoured to give the Committee a clear insight into the two capital branches of Colony Trade, the West Indian, the North American, and the immediate dependent upon both, the African, with the relations and proportions of each towards the other, and towards the several great interests, the Manufacture, Commerce, Navigation, Revenue, and Land of Great Britain.

Finding my authority so much diminished in number, I must supply the void by imagination, presenting, to my view, the genius of the place, the majestic genius of Parliament holding a balance to weigh the future fortunes of King, doms, with an impartial hand, ready to receive the weights peculiar to each scale; and conscious that the welfare, perhaps the being, of a whole Empire depend on the turn.

I begin with investigating the general system of the British Empire, not only in description, but illustration by comparison. Ancient Nations were possessed of the widest dominion, not with commercial helps. To be brief, I shall confine the inquiry to one - to the Romans, in their ages of purity. Cultivation of their soil, rude manufacture, just adequate to their necessities, severity of manners, superiority in martial discipline, enthusiasm for the very name of Rome, and the dulce et decorum pro patria mori, made them masters of the world. War was conducted with little expense, and the weightiest arms in the most skilful hands prevailed. Commerce flourished among others, whose affluence submitted to the steel of Rome.

What is the system now? All over Europe the same weapons, the same discipline, the same military arts are in practice; war is attended with a profusion of expense; and the deepest purse is the best assurance of success. Hence the encouragement of manufacture and trade is the pursuit of every Nation in this quarter of the globe, except two, who derive the treasure which Europe wants, from distant mines, with a facility enervating their own industry, while the rest are exerting theirs, each for a share in that wealth which the other two introduce, and can only be obtained through the commercial channel. By this, Holland, with a territory insufficient to nourish her inhabitants, hath in her day stood forth a bulwark against tyranny and superstition. An artificial strength, created by commerce, enabled her to make head, with numerous Fleets and Armies, against Powers immensely her superiours in natural force. Above all, in commercial arts and advantages, is Great Britain. Her purse, kept full by her Credit, the resource of a trading Nation, an annual expenditure at least of sixteen to eighteen millions recently supported so long, so extensive, and so vigorous a war. Had her purse been scanty, she never would have seen a Navy which bore little short of ninety thousand men, could never have engaged a potent ally, nor furnished such Troops as acted so efficiently, and at the same time in such different parts of the globe. Hence it is evident her system is commercial; her strength and resources are wholly derived from trade. I allow the first interest in rank among us is the landed, but interwoven altogether with trade. Pay no regard to a doctrine from me, but pay all to the supreme authority of the clearest luminary this country ever produced, the great Mr. Locke. His words are these: "The decays that come upon and "bring to ruin any country, do constantly first fall upon "the land; and though the country gentleman is not very "forward to think so, yet this nevertheless is an undoubted "truth, that he is more concerned in trade, and ought to "take a greater care that it be well managed and pre-"served, than even the Merchant himself."

On the firm ground of such authority, let inquiry be made, whether we should not remain content with the lot assigned us, which hath raised us so high among the modern Nations, where all are in rivalry for manufacture and trade; whether we should degrade our refinements by a parallel with an unpolished and rugged race of old, and contaminate the delicacy of modern sensations, with those primitive and stern principles which imposed such a yoke on mankind, as the 'Majestas populi Romani;' or whether, confining our speculations to the placid sphere of enjoyments, with more quiet and less hazard, than the restless pursuits of their ambition, we should not have in contemplation, upon all extraordinary convulsions, how far the means of those enjoyments may be affected, that influx of wealth, the creature of commerce, which solely constitutes our envied power and rank in the present world.

To elucidate by facts a system so essential to our being, your Petitioners have appeared at this tremendous crisis, when Great Britain and America, the parent and the child with equal irritation, are menacing at least, what barely in words, what barely in thought, is horror - to unsheath the sword of parricide, and sever the dearest ties of consanguinity, of mutual aids, and general prosperity.

Your Petitioners preferred but one supplication to the all-merciful Being; their own reason suggested no other than to be heard by you. He hath inclined you to hear, truth enables us to speak. Truth in its nature is healing, and productive of reflection; reflection leads to composure of mind, and strengthens in our breasts a hope that an hour may come, when this humble application may not be found altogether ineffectual; if too, for that auspicious purpose, it may prove my good fortune so to collect and combine the various evidence from your bar, and from the copied records of office upon your table, as to establish a system of the whole, and found that whole upon truth; whose efficacy upon the mind I have described before, and with some fervour of hope anticipate now.

Here, sir, I entreat your acceptance of a clue through the seeming labyrinth of accounts. The ways, indeed, are all unadorned, but the least perplexed of any to a little attention; and to make them short shall be mine.

You have before you official Accounts of the Exports from England to the West Indies, from Christmas, 1739, to Christmas, 1773. Of these thirty-four years, the first seventeen, ending at Christmas, 1756, forms a period which closes in the first year of the last war; the whole value exceeds £12,000,000, and gives an annual medium of more than £700,000. The last period of seventeen years end at Christmas, 1773, and renders a total of more than £19,000,000, and more than £1,100,000 at the annual medium I only observe in this place, that the increase of the latter upon the former is in the proportion of eleven to seven; and of the value in both, two-thirds are British Goods, and one-third only Foreign.

A second set of Accounts contain the Exports to North America. The first seventeen years yield more than £17,000,000 in the whole, and than £1,000,000 at the annual medium. The last period renders more than £40,000,000 in the whole, and largely more than £2,300,000, at the annual medium, an increase upon the former in a proportion of twenty-three to ten, with a value in both of three-fourths British Goods to one-fourth Foreign.

The third Account relates to Africa, whose commerce with England owes its existence to her Colonies. The first seventeen years reach nearly to £3,000,000, and to an annual medium something short of £180,000; the last seventeen years nearly to £8,000,000, and an annual medium of £470,000, an increase upon the first in a proportion of forty-seven to eighteen, with a value in each of two-thirds British Goods to one-third Foreign.

On this augmentation of Exports to your Colonies, irrefragable proof is founded, that through whatever channels riches have flowed among them, that influx hath made a passage from them to the mother country, and in the most wholesome mode, not like the dash of an oriental torrent, but in salubrious, various, placid, and copious streams, refreshing and augmenting sober industry by additional employment to thousands and ten thousands of families, and lightening the burthen upon rents, by reducing the contributions of Parishes to poverty unemployed.

But this requires a further explanation. The date of the last period is the commencement of the last war. The expenditure of publick money was one source of wealth to the West Indies. That temporary acquisition being soon exhausted, by its return to England, sufficient sums were procured upon credit after the peace, to cultivate new land and improve the old, still further enlarging the consumption of our commodities there and in Africa, that from the year of the peace to Christmas, 1773, the import of Sugar only to England, who, without her West Indies, must purchase that immense article from foreigners, hath risen from one hundred and thirty thousand to one hundred and seventy thousand hogsheads, an augmentation in value of £800,000.

The publick expenditure being much larger in North America, produced a proportionate effect on the consumption of our Manufactures through that Continent. This money returned from its peregrination to the mother country, by 1764, or 1765 at the furthest. But, as the West Indies had a succedaneum, so had North America through a new opening of trade, which converted the misfortune of England into a blessing. Though I am convinced that the same number of hands at least is devoted to Agriculture here, and that the earth at a medium of years hath yielded the same increase. As we have been disposed to consume it all among ourselves, or as our presumption may impute the scarcity to Providence restraining the fertility Of our soil for ten years past, in either case we could not spare, as heretofore, our grain to the foreigner; a reduction in our exports one year with another, of more than £600,000. The American subject took place of the British in markets we could no longer supply, extended their vent from season to season, and from Port to Port, and by a circuit of fresh money thus acquired by themselves, added fresh numbers to your manufactures, the rents of land increasing at the same time, till the amount of Exports to North America, for the last three years, ending at Christmas, 1773, stand upon your papers at £10,500,000, or £3,500,000 at the annual medium; add £1,300,000, the medium of the same three years, for the West Indies, and £700,000 for Africa, and the total value of Exports to the Colonies, nearly in a proportion of three-fourths British to one-fourth Foreign Goods, is £5,500,000, at the medium of these three years, ending at Christmas, 1773. A slight matter this to the great question before you, says the general voice without doors, and readily admitted without the ceremony of proof. This I mention by way of preparation to introduce the most material account of all, which will demonstrate, that the magnitude of £5,500,000, exported in the Colony branches, the West Indian, North American, and African, is not to be considered as an object so striking in itself, as in comparison with the whole export of England to all countries whatsoever. The annual medium for twelve years back stands on these papers at less than £15,000,000; but as I have limited the Colony branch to 1771, '2, and '3, I shall take the general Exports during that period, which renders a medium of £16,000,000. What part is the Colony branch? Five and a half is rather more than a third. Does the magnitude appear in a stronger light by the comparison? Or hath it been admitted in this view, before it was stated? Be it so. I have something behind, perhaps enough for the keenest appetite of admission to digest.

Sir, one part of our Exports to foreigners is supplied by Colony Produce, Tobacco, Rice, Sugar, &c., through Great Britain, for £1,000,000 sterling, at a low estimation. Add £2,000,000 more, exported of all kinds from England to her principal Colony, Ireland, and both to the former £5,500,000; your whole Colony branch will then exceed the half of your whole Export in the proportion of eight and a half to sixteen.

Thanks to the care and forecast of our forefathers one hundred and twenty years since, in the circle of ancient trade, narrow in comparison with the modern, the great trading states, Carthage, pre-eminent to all, suffered but little from rivalry. All in Europe are our rivals, all devoted to manufacture and traffick, as capital pursuits of policy; while we, struggling with such competition, have in some instances already experienced its hurtful effects, and must prepare for more; we had always one consolation left, that our Colony trade, kept to ourselves by old and salutary regulations, hath been augmented from period to period, till at present it constitutes more than half of the whole, with a prospect of further growth, rather than diminution, unless we create our own rivals.

One more observation remains, of all the most important, so far as safety to a state is a consideration above all others. Of this trade, the part which depends on the associated Provinces, contributes in Naval Stores, in other low priced and bulky commodities, more to the British Marine, than triple the present exports in commodities of such higher value, and if shipped so largely in foreign bottoms to the foreign market. Such was your situation.

Upon the present question I will not take that larger half before mentioned for my ground. I will deduct the £2,000,000 to Ireland, and the odd £500,000 furnished to Provinces not of the combination, though they did not receive more than £400,000 in value, at the medium of these three last years; when there will remain £6,000,000 out of the £8,500,000; nay, I will further reduce the six by nearly £700,000, to remove all suspicion of exaggeration, and to make an exact third of the sixteen, and which is the part immediately affected by the Association in North America.

From this ground see what is put in hazard; not merely a moneyed profit, but our bulwark of defence, our power in offence - the arts and industry of our Nation. Instead of thousands and ten thousands of families in comfort, a navigation extensive and enlarging, the value and rents of land yearly rising, wealth abounding, and at hand for further improvements, see or foresee, that this third of our whole commerce, that sole basis of our Empire, and this third in itself the best, once lost, carries with it a proportion of our national faculties, our treasure, our publick revenue, and the value of land, succeeded in its fall by a multiplication of taxes to reinstate that revenue, an increasing burden on every decreasing estate, decreasing by the reduced demand of its produce for the support of Manufactures and Manufacturers, and menaced with a heavier calamity still - the diminution of our Marine, of our Seamen, of our general population, by the emigration of useful subjects, strengthening that very country you wish to humble, and weakening this in the sight of rival Powers, who wish to humble us.

Having been hitherto merely general, I must now descend to a detail, but of parts so large, that each is separately big with sufficient evils to draw the utmost stretch of your attention. I begin with those which threaten the West Indies.

To recapitulate the heads of that material evidence delivered by Mr. Walker and Mr. Ellis, would be tedious in me, unnecessary in itself. Leaving it, therefore, to its own powerful impression, I here add only, in a general mode of my own, that of the inhabitants of those Islands, above four hundred thousand are Blacks, from whose labour the immense riches there, so distinctly proved at your bar, are derived, with such immense advantage to these Kingdoms. How far these multitudes, if their intercourse with North America is stopped, may be exposed to famine, you have heard. One half in Barbadoes and the Leeward Islands, say one hundred thousand Negroes, in value at least four millions sterling, possibly, it grieves me to say probably, may perish. The remainder must divert to Provisions the culture of the produce so valuable to Great Britain. The same must be the practice in great part throughout Jamaica and the new settled acquisitions. They may feel a distress just short of destruction, but must divert for subsistence so much labour as, in proportion, will shorten their rich product. In fact, why should they raise the latter, if Lumber should be wanting for its package to Great Britain? How vague, how uncertain, how nearly impracticable, would be a supply of these necessities through any new channel, I need not repeat; but shall close this head with another short general state, in confirmation of Mr. Walker's most accurate detail. The gross amount of Imports, at an annual medium, from these now unfortunate Islands, exceed £4,000,000; one hundred and ninety thousand casks of Sugar and Rum, besides many other articles, the bulky loading for such a multitude of Vessels, more than authorize my assertion. Of these annual four millions, the Exchequer receives its proportion, the Navigator and Merchant theirs, the rest centres with the Planter; and how distributed by him? In the purchase of £1,300,000 in our Exports direct, and the largest part of £700,000 more in circulation through Africa, for a constant supply of Negroes: What is left, considerable as it may be among residents here, is applied to home consumption; not with a sparing hand, and to investments, upholding the price of land and the credit of publick funds. At the same time they are furnishing commodities to us of such necessary use, which else must be paid for to foreigners, and with a superfluity for foreign consumption likewise; I avoid comparison, but judge from this state how valuable a subject is the Planter. All these benefits, the healthy progeny of active trade, all or part must sleep as in a grave, during a total or partial stagnation.

Upon the North American Imports I shall only remark, that the most considerable part of their bulky productions is bought by the foreigner, and of the amount consumed in Great Britain, the Exchequer hath a capital share. Nor will I take North America for a companion in my present melancholy walk, because she may prove the only gainer, and as the community become more sound and healthy, while every other member of the Empire lies bleeding. But my heart bleeds, when, renewing my gloomy progress, I turn a view towards one Kingdom, a great member, which may unhappily be distinguished above all sufferers in the present conjuncture; I mean the Kingdom of Scotland; and among my honourable hearers, they whose particular attention I may now engage, have no cause to doubt the sincerity of my feelings. I have taken equal pains with the accounts of Exports from that Kingdom as from this. The Papers I could collect began at Christmas, 1748, and end at Christmas, 1772, with two years wanting; a circumstance, however, which will not in the least impede me in illustrating the progress and improvement of the North British trade. A first period shews an annual medium of about £500,000. In a second it rises to £860,000. In a third to £1,150,000. And in the last, for 1770, 1771, and 1772, to £1,700,000, of which about £400,000 is Colony export, exclusive of Ireland, and the far greater part to the Tobacco Provinces, where many of my most worthy friends have a property lying, much larger than I choose to conjecture. To this I add a known export of Linen, exceeding £200,000, supplied to England for American use. The whole may be little short of £700,000; but calling it six, I ask if Scotland can well endure a stagnation of such a value for twelve months to come? Whether their export to Ireland of 3 to £400,000, will be affected; and how far emigration, of late so prevalent, may be extended by the pressure of a new calamity, I will not forbade. Sir, I feel - sir, those feelings forbid me to expatiate farther; I choose to drop the subject, observing only, that the Colony Export from Scotland is to their whole much in the same proportion with ours. I will now pass over to Ireland.

That Kingdom takes from England and Scotland little short of £2,400,000 annually in Goods. How doth she pay for them? A large part in Linen and Yarn, the remainder in cash, acquired by her foreign traffick. In the printed report to this House, from their Linen Committee, it appears that, in 1771, the Linen made and brought to market for sale in that Kingdom, for its own use and ours, amounted to £2,150,000, and the Yarn exported, to about £200,000. This immense value, the employment of such numbers, hath its source in North America. The Flaxseed from thence, not worth £40,000, a trifle to that Continent, forms the basis of Ireland, and reverts largely in Manufacture from her to the original seat of growth. In reply, what is the cry of my magnanimous countrymen without doors? Dignity! Supremacy! The evil hour is advancing, not yet come; no sooner come than felt: it may produce a discovery too late, that high-sounding words imply no food to the hungry, no raiment to the naked; and these, throughout our Empire, may amount to millions in number. But new channels of supply shall be found; our potency can surmount all difficulties. It is full time to begin the essay in Ireland, lest, during the experiment, emigration so constant there, should change to depopulation in the Protestant quarters.

I now return to England, not a member, but the head. Her sorrows I will leave to the contemplation of that superior class which must be the ultimate and permanent sufferer. The sage Mr. Locke would tell the country gentleman, that his visible property must replace the loss of publick revenue; that he must provide for a Nation of hungry and naked, or sink into utter debility and despondency; when the Sun rises no more on this once flourishing Island, but to see the desertion of inhabitants, and a wretched remnant wandering, unclad and unfed, in lamentation over a wilderness.

I have mentioned the Revenne, and shall now be very concise upon that head deducting Bounties and Drawbacks, the nett receipts at the Exchequer, from Duties and Excise on West India productions, I venture to set at more than £700,000, and another receipt in the North American branch, at just so much as with the former, may render a total of one million. To that amount the publick Revehue is immediately concerned. Consequential loss, for instance, in the great article of Tea, for want of the usual supply of Sugar, or in any other articles, I do not dwell upon here, but leave to reflection.

Thus far, sir, I hope that I have proved what was your situation, happy in receiving from your Colonies all the possible advantage attainable in the nature of things. Could our forefathers, the authors of such a system, which, exclusive of foreign profit, could bring the numerous subjects of the same state in such dispersed habitations over the earth, thousands and thousands of miles asunder, to a concurrence in the extirpation of idleness, in promoting the comfort, and calling forth the faculties of each other: - could those venerable founders of a structure so stupendously great arise, and seeing it brought to such perfection by time and experience, yet find it within the last ten years so roughly handled in a conflict with finance, what looks would they cast on their blinded posterity - almost the whole British people, who, on every start of pecuniary contribution from America, have, under three Administrations, been open-mouthed, and are still for American taxation? Let the three Administrations have all the justification of "defendit numerus, junctæque umbone phalagens." But I, an unconnected man, firmly pronounce, that the consenting voice of all mankind cannot make two and two, more or less than four; that the Vox Populi is not always the Vox Dei, and among us, upon the present subject, resembles the popular cry in old Jerusalem of, Crucify! Crucify!

Yet, sir, I likewise sincerely wish that the gloomy aspect I have given to our future situation may be all nugatory, all misrepresentation unintended; but not, therefore, less the result of error and blindness. Hitherto I have looked on one side of the question only: permit me now to contemplate the other.

It is the general acceptance, that the associated Provinces submit in consequence of the measures taken. The measures I allude to are publick facts; and, with some relief to my own dejection, I apply them to introduce another fact, incontestible and brilliant, whereon I gladly dwell for a while: it is a subject of praise, requiring but few words, because it is true. I have named the Romans; we have among us a select body, whom I compare with them, as their equals at any the most distinguished epoch of their martial science and prowess. I will not hazard a panegyrick. The grateful sensations of all our memories retain the illustrious and recent achievements of the British military, by Land and Sea, with a warmth which would render the most elaborate encomium spiritless and cold. But themselves, lettered gentlemen of England, and versed in history, will allow, that the peculiar superiority derived from discipline, possessed by them in its highest excellence, is but the effect of human art; that there are left at large in human nature certain sparks, whose occasional concurrence produces operations not to be circumscribed or controlled by art or power, and hath caused such wonderful vicissitudes, recorded in times past, but I hope will make no part of our future annals: I allude to that violent agitation of the soul, enthusiasm. Such vicissitudes, not to be shunned by art or power, merit the most attention when most is set upon a cast.

Many without doors have treated the existence of this uncontrollable spirit as imaginary. I did not reason with those who rather feel no enthusiasm for any thing serious, or retain just so much as may be requisite in the eager pursuit of diversions, pleasures, or profit. I would have accompanied others more speculative through their several gradations of hope, still disappointed, and still reviving, but for one observation, which I have generally kept concealed, but will soon reveal to you. But for this observation I might have concurred with the publick belief, that the capital of a Province, now declared in rebellion, would have submitted on the landing of a few Regiments; this failing, that other Provinces, from ancient jealousy and disgust, would not have interfered, rather sought their own advantage out of that Town's distress; this failing, that they never would have proceeded to the length of constituting a certain inauspicious Assembly among themselves; this failing, that the Members of such Assembly would have disagreed, and not framed a single Resolution. This last hope having proved abortive, a new one is popularly adopted, that the first intelligence of enforcing measures, at least the bare commencement of their execution, will tame the most refractory spirits. I will here state the grounds of this, and all the preceding hopes; afterwards, with your indulgence, the ground of my original and continued doubts.

Our trading Nation naturally assumed, that the present contention would be with the traders in America. the stock of a trader, whether his own, or in part, and often the greatest part a property of others, confided in him, is personal, lodged in a magazine, and exposed in seasons of commotion to instantaneous devastation. The circumstance of such property, the considerations suggested by common prudence, by the sense of common justice to those who have given a generous credit, rarely make room for that intrepidity which meets force with force. Hence I admit, that the mere traffickers would have submitted at first, and will now, whenever they dare. The reason why they have not dared, is the foundation of my doubts.

I am speaking to an enlightened assembly, and conversant with their own annals. In those ages, the reverse of commercial, when your ancestors filled the ranks of men at arms, and composed the Cavalry of England, of whom did the Infantry consist? A race unknown to other Kingdoms, and, in the present opulence of traffick, almost extinct in this, the yeomanry of England; an order of men possessing paternal inheritance, cultivated under their own care enough to preserve independence, and cherish the generous sentiments attendant on that condition, without superfluity for idleness or effeminate indulgence. Of such doth North America consist. The race is revived there in greater numbers, and in a greater proportion to the rest of the inhabitants; and in such the power of that Continent resides. These keep the traffickers in awe. These, many hundred thousands in multitude, with enthusiasm in their hearts, with the Petition, the Bill of Rights, and the Acts of Settlement, silent and obsolete in some places, but vociferous and fresh, as newly born among them; these, hot with the blood of their progenitors, the enthusiastick scourges at one period, and the revolutional expellers of tyranny at another; these, unpractised in frivolous dissipation and ruinous profusion, standing armed on the spot, delivered down from their fathers, a property not moveable, nor exposed to total destruction, therefore maintainable, and exciting all the spirit and vigour of defence; these, under such circumstances of number, animation, and manners, their Lawyers and Clergy blowing the trumpet, are we to encounter with a handful of men, sent three thousand miles over the Ocean to seek such adversaries on their own paternal ground.* But these will not fight, says the general voice of Great Britain. Agreed. I desire to meet my antagonists in argument upon no better ground.

That Exports to the associated Provinces have ceased for months, is a fact. May not their Non-Importation Agreement singly be a weapon sufficiently effectual in their hands, without striking a blow? Why strike without occasion?

To overset this suggestion, an assertion is brought, that necessity will break the combination. I take this fresh ground to shew that necessity, in conjunction with enthusiasm, may produce a directly opposite effect. I throw but a transient glance on the extraordinary stock of Goods laid in by the Colonists last year, though said to be sufficient for the consumption of two. The arguments I shall use carry their own evidence with them. Let the population in the associated Provinces be three millions, as delivered into the Congress, or be reduced to two and a half, white and black. At a moderate computation per head, the quantity of Goods, including all uses besides apparel, is not adequate to half their consumption, which I stated before to the amount of three millions sterling, without separating some considerable articles for the month. This annual supply they never did annually pay for, but always remained under a heavy debt to the mother country; a capital advantage to her, as shall be explained in its place. How is the other half of their consumption, unsupplied from hence, provided with the several articles for clothing and other necessities? What is introduced through illicit trade with the foreigner must be paid for in ready money, and is chiefly

* The following remark might have been trite to the honourable hearer, but may not occur to every common reader: That if there are any seeds of talents and genius in a country, they are drawn into action and vigour by publick ferments and troubles; but might have remained in times of tranquillity for ever useless and unknown, perhaps at the plough, under a shed, or amongst the lowest class of mechanics.

for the rich and the few. How is the multitude supplied, dispersed over that vast Continent, and at considerable distances from the Sea? Sir, by the same means, and necessarily so, as are practised in most countries of these Kingdoms. There are two kinds of manufacture; one active and systematick, collected under a superintendence, and brought to the markets of sale. The other is sedantry and domestick, obscure, but large; could the small and scattered parcels be gathered up for computation, as may be made of the former, from the records of publick marts. The latter lies among the wives and children of rural, of rustick families; is applied to domestick use, and rarely sees a market for sale. In the same mode the American yeomanry are furnished among themselves. The domestick manufacture must, in course, be large for the use of such numbers; the active for sale is far from maturity among them; but necessity, urged against them, may extend the arts and materials, already indubitably possessed; and enthusiasm may stamp on their home-spun all the value, all the pride of ornament.

Sir, I foresee these differences with America will be composed, and how? Their silence becomes me best. It will be so late, that Great Britain must receive a wound, which no time can heal. A philosophical sense of dignity must step in under the shape of consolation.

This reflection I wish to obviate, and will state a strong question from the other side. Admitting, if I please, the practicability of the Colonist supplying his wants with his own homely manufacture, improvable too by time and experience; yet will not an interruption to the vent of his own produce, and to the profits of his trade, be a loss of such magnitude, as may quickly, and with an intermediate stagnation, too short for us sensibly to feel, reduce his mind to a state of humiliation? The interruption, I allow, will be a loss to individuals; large to some, and small to many, and operate in degrees proportionate to situations and tempers. The trading class foresee it already, and are humbled enough to submit if they could. Those who keep them in awe, the multitude of small, but independent proprietors of land, may feel their part of the loss so light, as not to relax the restiff spirit which they have manifested down to this day; and may be strengthened by a truth too obvious, that America, as a publick, must be a gainer by such interruption.

She always hath been, and is now, largely indebted to the British Merchants; a proof that the nett value of her annual produce and remittances, through the circutions of her trade, hath ever been short of her purchases here. So far as this difference reaches, whether small or large; so far as she substitutes more of her own labour in the stead of ours, for her own wants, just so much will be, on a general balance, a clear profit to her community, while the intercourse with ours is stopped, and a loss to Great Britain irrecoverable, so far as, during the melancholy interval, the arts of manufacture may be better established, and more extended in that Continent; but if extended beyond frugal uses, the yeomanry there will sink into futile and enervating enjoyments, the source of venality and discord; and in their turn verify a celebrated axiom in politicks, that discontents, murmurs, profusion, and outward shew, are the sure signs of a state in decay.

Sir, you have repeatedly heard before this day of the large debt from the Colonists to our Merchants; an uncontrovertible truth, to the permanent amount of millions. Grieved as humanity must be at any occurrence which puts such a property and so many meritorious subjects in peril, or even under a temporary anxiety, yet such being the course of that trade, the effect of a voluntary conduct, publick policy hath cause to rejoice, at the same time to acknowledge a high, though unsought obligation to the Merchant, who, by this practice, holds in his hand the principal bond of Colony dependence, enforces the Act of Navigation, and becomes, in the publick behalf, the true guardian of that half divine law, the work of penetration and wisdom, equal to the great man who framed it. Illicit traffick is common to all regions and Governments; nor to be avoided in any, but by a strict care not to lead into temptation. Upon the whole, no commercial regulation hath been more accurately observed than the Act of Navigation, to which the American Congress most intelligibly submits, and which, in their deprivation of capital privileges and liberties, enjoyed by their fellow-subjects here, comprehends their contribution for protection; an Act which hath generally been well obeyed by them, and the Merchant at home hath made it their interest. A foreign correspondent might account most justly for the nett proceeds of Tobacco, Rice, Sugar, &c., but will not give credit for a sliver more; and for that reason doth not receive such consignments even from the less scrupulous observers of the law. The British Merchant, on a hundred Pounds, netted for a consignment, readily supplies the American's wants for a hundred and twenty, thirty, how far is immater]ail Thisaccommodation he hath not, and through long habit doth not try to have from any quarter out of Great Britain, and therefore chooses to send his produce through her channel; nor will a few exceptions invalidate the argument: and till the awful volume of earthly vicissitudes shall disclose the fatal page, where that Omnipotent Hand, which hath lifted up and cast down the proudest Dominion of old, may have written the designation of Empire to the child; till then the Merchant of Great Britain will keep the child in all possible dependence on the parent.

Sis after all, though my fellow-subjects rise more and more in the flattering confidence, that the Colonies will not adhere to their Agreements, I do not commit myself in asserting the contrary; I do not pronounce, that they will; I only suggest, that they may; and on that supposition have attempted to shew, what England, Scotland, and Ireland stake on the contest; nothing less than a long-approved and successful system, embracing every circumstance of national stability, prosperity, and lustre. For what this is put in hazard, I humbly hope is a question too serious for casuistry; and, I humbly believe, solely to be measured by expediency and practicability, under the direction of that great Council, which holds the guardianship of three Kingdoms, and their boundless dependencies.

Right, authority, sovereignty, dignity, supremacy, are admitted to the utmost extent of their ground. Is there not another ground antecedent and original, that from the nature of mankind, there never was, nor is, and never will be a community who, after the possession of benefits, delivered down from father to son for more than a century, will be persuaded to relinquish such possession by any plea of law and right, urged with all the eloquence of advocates? A force superiour to argument is requisite, which brings the question back to expediency and practicability.

Conceive not, sir, that our very thoughts have presumed to interfere with the counsels or determinations of the state; but as the present subject of deliberation and measures is too pregnant with events not to run far into the future, we submissively hope, that the facts we have produced, and the deductions from them, if not in the present hour, may prove of some utility hereafter.

You, in your future deliberations, will separate the frivolous from the important, the specious and the plausible from the sound and the true. You, searching the depths of human nature, will not be misled by trite and popular opinion; and, when the force of self-interest is alleged at this momentous crisis, you will discover that interest is not the predominant ruler of mankind - I repeat, that interest is not the predominant ruler of mankind. The few, indeed, are under that frigid influence; but the many are governed by passion, whose train I need not arrange. Perseverance in acts of violence from one quarter, and perseverance in another to suffer, may be in both the result of passion. Passion can misinterpret words, give solidity to empty sounds, and convert shadow to substance. Passion could give weight to the cry of the Church, when Sacheverell infatuated a Nation, renowned above all others for solid sense and depth of thought.

To conclude: if, sir, in any future operation, this honourable House may condescend to a moment's remembrance of us, our appearance may prove not altogether in vain. Although there is still much remaining to offer, permit us now to withdraw, unreprieved, we hope, by you; but surely so by our own conscientious feelings in thus attempting our discharge of a duty to the publick; over the Acts already passed and passing; I do not breathe out a word - only a parting sigh.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Mr. Alderman Oliver reported from the Committee, that they had heard the Planters of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies, residing in Great Britain, and the Merchants of London trading to the said Colonies, by their Agent; and had examined several witnesses, and made a further progress; and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee.

Ordered, That the several persons who were ordered to attend the said Committee this day, do attend the said Committee upon Monday morning next.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command,

A Paper, entituled "Copy of the Petition and Memorial of the Assembly of Jamaica, to the King in Council."

And the title of the said Paper was read.

Ordered, That the said Paper do lie upon the table, to be perused by the Members of the House.

Ordered, That Mr. Cooper have leave to make a motion, it being half an hour after seven of the clock.

And he moved the House accordingly.

Ordered, That Mr. George Robinson do, upon Monday morning next, attend the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it is referred to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee.

Ordered, That Mr. William Illingworth do attend the said Committee at the same time.

MONDAY, March 20, 1775.

The House, according to Order, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider farther of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

General Howe took the Chair of the Committee.

Some persons were examined in proof of the allegations contained in the Petitions presented from the Stocking Manufacturers, and other Inhabitants of the Town of Nottingham, presented on the 8th of February and the 9th of March.

Mr. Nead was called in to prove the allegations contained in the Counter Petition presented on the 22d of February, two of his partners having signed the former Petition.

Mr. Burke questioned him as to the character of those Petitioners. This was objected to by Mr. Van, and a debate ensued.

Mr. Van said, it was a rule in judicial proceedings, and adopted very properly by that House, never to put any question to a man, the giving a true answer to which might tend to injure him or affect his interest. It was plain, he said, that the question asked was in effect the same as if put to the persons alluded to, their credit and reputation as partners being the same.

Mr. Burke replied, that the reasoning was very just if it applied; but insisted that the question proposed by him involved no such consequence, it being only to their moral character, their reputation as men of veracity, not to their responsibility to pay their debts, or their situation as Traders.

Mr. Solicitor General directed his arguments to show the consequences that may happen, and in some instances which have happened, from leading persons at the bar to disclose the nature of their trade and the state of their affairs.

Mr. Burke reminded the gentlemen of the Treasury Bench of their conduct on the 16th: when questions of a much more delicate nature and direct tendency to create the inconvenience and evils now dreaded, were put and insisted on, though strongly objected to.

Mr. Fox and two or three others spoke, but the point was carried against answering the question, and the witness was called in and desired to proceed.

He was cross-examined by Mr. Burke, when it appeared that he was not concerned in the American trade, and that he knew little of it.

In the course of the examination, Lord North having asked several questions in order to establish proof that there was no foundation for the complaints in the other Petitions, Mr. Bailey got up and told General Howe, that as he was going to America, where he would find many rational and sensible men who would be asking him questions concerning the business the Committee were then sitting upon, he therefore begged the General would not forget to render all due justice to the noble Lord on the Treasury Bench, (Lord North) who was now uncommonly active in the examination of this evidence, and in forming questions to draw such sort of answers as might gain, if possible, from the person at the bar something like a proof, that these Counter Petitions came unsolicited by Government, (though all the world knew well enough to the contrary,) and that the grievances and loss of mule complained of in the other Petitions were merely fictitious; all which, Mr. Bailey said, might appear very natural to the noble Lord; for that he had observed, and the whole House had remarked it, that whenever the noble Lord attended the examination of the evidences who came to prove any of the injuries that this country, would suffer by the loss of her American Commerce, he was either fast asleep and did not hear it; or, if awake, he was talking so loud as even to prevent others from hearing it; that this was so shamefully the case the other day, when the great man Mr. Glover was summoning up an evidence to the Committee that would have awakened any other Minister in the world to a sense of his duty, yet, to the inexpressible astonishment of every one, the present Minister' showed a determined resolution not to listen to any thing that might tend in the least to convince him of the ruin he was drawing down upon this country and America.

Another witness was examined in support of the allegations in the Counter-Petition. He had formerly been concerned in the American trade, but was not at present. He was asked by Mr. Burke, how he could know, being now unconnected with that business, that the Non-Importation Agreement would not affect the trade? He replied, because he had been in several Warehouses, where he saw great quantities of Goods made up to be sent to Holland. Being asked if that was usual? He replied, he never remembered it before; and that he supposed they were intended for the American market, to be smuggled by the way of Holland.

It was a continual scene of altercation, from nine o'clock till one in the morning, when the Committee rose.

Lord North observed at the conclusion, that he was glad to find the Manufacturers of Nottingham were not likely to be starved for want of employment, as they had happily got one of the best marts in Europe for their Goods.

Mr. Burke replied, that if his Lordship reflected properly, he did not think he had any great reason to exult in measures which threw the business formerly transacted by our own Merchants, into the hands of the Dutch, and at the same time enriched his professed foes, the Smugglers, on the other side of the Atlantic, at the expense and ruin of his seemingly professed friends, the fair Traders, and to the total ruin besides of the Revenue.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

General Howe reported from the Committee, that they had heard the Manufacturing Hosiers of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham, by their Agent, upon their Petitions, and had examined several witnesses; and had also examined several witnesses in support of the Petition of the Aldermen, Sheriff, principal Manufacturers, and Inhabitants of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham, whose names are thereunto subscribed, and had made a further progress; and that he was directed by the Committee to move that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the consideration of the said Committee.

Ordered, That Mr. Burke have leave to make a motion, it being one of the clock on Tuesday morning.

And he moved the House accordingly.

Ordered, That there be laid before this House an Account of the quantity and value of the Silk, Cotton, Worsted, Linen, and Mixed Hose, of English Manufacture, exported to North America and the West Indies, since Christmas, 1772; distinguishing each year, as far as the same can be made up.

MONDAY, March 27, 1775.

The Order of the Day being read;

Resolved, That this House will, upon this day seven-night, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, and of the several other Petitions referred to the said Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 22, 1775.

Mr. Burke arose, and addressed the House as follows:

I hope, sir, that notwithstanding the austerity of the Chair, your good nature will incline you to some degree of indulgence towards human frailty. You will not think it unnatural, that those who have an object depending, which strongly engages their hopes and fears, should be somewhat inclined to superstition. As I came into the House full of anxiety about the event of my motion, I found to my infinite surprise, that the grand Penal Bill, by which we had passed sentence on the trade and sustenance of America, is to be returned to us from the other House.* I do confess I could not help looking on this event as a fortunate omen. I look upon it as a sort of Providential favour by which we are put once more in possession of our deliberative capacity, upon a business so very questionable in its nature, so very uncertain in its issue. By the return of this Bill, which seemed to have taken its flight forever, we are at this very instant nearly as free to choose a plan for our American Government, as we were on the first day of the session. If, sir, we incline to the side of conciliation, we are not at all embarrassed (unless we please to make ourselves so) by any incongruous mixture of coercion and restraint. We are, therefore, called upon, as it were by a superiour warning voice, again to attend to America; to attend to the whole of it together, and to review the subject with an unusual degree of care and calmness.

Surely it is an awful subject, or there is none so on this side of the grave. When I first had the honour of a seat in this House, the affairs of that Continent pressed themselves upon us, as the most important and most delicate object of Parliamentary attention. My little share in this great deliberation oppressed me. I found myself a partaker in a very high trust; and, having no sort of reason to rely on the strength of my natural abilities for the proper execution of that trust, I was obliged to take more than common pains to instruct myself in every thing which relates to our Colonies. I was not less under the necessity of forming some fixed ideas concerning the general policy of the British Empire. Something of this sort seemed to be indispensable, in order, amidst so vast a fluctuation of passions and opinions, to concentrate my thoughts; to ballast my conduct; to preserve me from being blown about by every wind of fashionable doctrine. I really did not think it safe or manly to have fresh principles to seek upon every fresh mail which should arrive from America.

At that period I had the fortune to find myself in perfect concurrence with a large majority in this House. Bowing under that high authority and penetrated with the sharpness and strength of that early impression, I have continued ever since, without the least deviation in my original sentiments. Whether this be owing to an obstinate perseverance in error, or to a religious adherence to what appears to me truth and reason, it is in your equity to judge.

Sir, Parliament having an enlarged view of objects, made, during this interval, more frequent changes in their sentiments and their conduct, than could be justified in a particular person, upon the contracted scale of private information. But, though I do not hazard any thing approaching to a censure, on the motives of former Parliaments to all those alterations, one fact is undoubted, that under them the state of America has been kept in continual agitation. Every thing administered as remedy to the public complaint, if it did not produce, was at least followed by an heightening of the distemper, until, by a variety of experiments, that important country has been brought into her present situation - a situation which I will not miscall, which I dare not name, which I scarcely know how to comprehend in the terms of any description.

In this posture, sir, things stood at the beginning of the session. About that time, a worthy Member (Mr. Rose Fuller) of great Parliamentary experience, who, in the year 1766, filled the chair of the American Committee with much ability, took me aside, and, lamenting the present aspect of our politics, told me things were come to such a pass, that our former methods of proceeding in the House would be no longer tolerated; that the publick tribunal (never too indulgent to a long and unsuccessful opposition) would now scrutinize our conduct with unusual severity; that the very vicissitudes and shiftings of Ministerial measures, instead of convicting their authors of inconstancy and want of system, would be taken as an occasion of charging us with a predetermined discontent, which nothing could satisfy; whilst we accused every measure of vigour as cruel, and every proposal of lenity as weak and irresolute. The publick, he said, would not have patience to see us play the game out with our adversaries; we must produce our hand. It would be expected, that those who, for many years, had been active in such affairs, should shew that they had formed some clear and decided idea of the principles of Colony Government, and were capable of drawing out something like a platform of the ground, which might be laid for future and permanent tranquillity.

I felt the truth of what my honourable friend represented; but I felt my situation too. His application might have been made with far greater propriety to many other gentlemen. No man was, indeed, ever better disposed, or worse qualified for such an undertaking, than myself. Though I gave so far into his opinion, that I immediately threw my thoughts into a sort of Parliamentary form, I was by no means equally ready to produce them. It generally argues some degree of natural impotence of mind, or some want of knowledge of the world, to hazard plans of Government, except from a seat of authority. Propositions are made, not only ineffectually, but somewhat disreputably, when the minds of men are not properly disposed for their reception; and for my part I am not ambitious of ridicule; not absolutely a candidate for disgrace.

Besides, sir, to speak the plain truth, I have, in general, no very exalted opinion of the virtue of paper government; nor of any politics, in which the plan is to be wholly separated from the execution. But when I saw that anger and violence prevailed every day more and more; and that things were hastening towards an incurable alienation of our Colonies, I confess my caution gave way. I felt this as one of those few moments in which decorum yields to an higher duty. Publick calamity is a mighty leveller; and there are occasions when any, even the slightest, chance of doing good, must be laid hold on, even by the most inconsiderable person.

To restore order and repose to an Empire so great and so distracted as ours, is, merely in the attempt, an undertaking that would ennoble the flights of the highest genius, and obtain pardon for the efforts of the meanest understanding. Straggling a good while with these thoughts, by degrees I felt myself more firm. I derived, at length, some confidence from what, in other circumstances, usually produces timidity. I grew less anxious, even from the idea of my own insignificance; for, judging of what you are by what you ought to be, I persuaded myself that you would not reject a reasonable proposition because it had nothing but its reason to recommend it. On the other hand, being totally destitute of all shadow of influence, natural or adventitious, I was very sure, that if my proposition were futile or dangerous, if it were weakly conceived, or improperly timed, there was nothing exterior to it, of power to awe, dazzle, or delude you. You will see it just as it is, and you will treat it just as it deserves.

* The Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, and other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations.

The proposition is peace. Not peace through the medium of war; not peace to be hunted through the labyrinth of intricate and endless negotiations; not peace to arise out of universal discord, fomented from principle, in all parts of the Empire; not peace to depend on the juridical determination of perplexing questions; or the precise marking the shadowy boundaries of a complex Government. It is simple peace, sought in its natural course and in its ordinary haunts; it is peace sought in the spirit of peace, and laid in principles purely pacifick. I propose, by removing the ground of the difference, and by restoring the former unsuspecting confidence of the Colonies in the mother country, to give permanent satisfaction to your people, and (far from a scheme of ruling by discord) to reconcile them to each other in the same act, and by the bond of the very same interest which reconciles them to British government.

My idea is nothing more. Refined policy ever has been the parent of confusion, and ever will be so as long as the world endures. Plain good intention, which is as easily discovered at the first view, as fraud is surely detected at last, is, let me say, of no mean force in the government of mankind. Genuine simplicity of heart is an healing and cementing principle. My plan, therefore, being formed upon the most simple grounds imaginable, may disappoint some people when they bear it. It has nothing to recommend it to the pruriency of curious ears. There is nothing at all new and captivating in it. It has nothing of the splendour of the project which has been lately laid upon your table by the noble Lord in the blue riband. * It does not propose to fill your lobby with squabbling Colony Agents, who will require the interposition of your mace at every instant, to keep the peace amongst them. It does not institute a magnificent auction of finances, where captivated Provinces come to general ransom, by bidding against each other, until you knock down the hammer, and determine a proportion of payments beyond all the powers of algebra to equalize and settle.

The plan which I shall presume to suggest, derives, however, one great advantage from the proposition and registry of that noble Lord's project. The idea of conciliation is admissible. First, the House in accepting the Resolution moved by the noble Lord, has admitted, notwithstanding the menacing front of our Address, notwithstanding our heavy Bill of Pains and Penalties, that we do not think ourselves precluded from all ideas of free grace and bounty.

The House has gone farther; it has declared conciliation admissible, previous to any submission on the part of America. It has even shot a good deal beyond that mark, and has admitted that the complaints of our former mode of exerting the right of taxation, were not wholly unfounded. That right, thus exerted, is allowed to have had something reprehensible in it; something unwise, or something grievous, since, in the midst of our heat and resentment, we, of ourselves, have proposed a capital alteration; and, in order to get rid of what seemed so very exceptionable, have instituted a mode that is altogether new; one that is, indeed, wholly alien front all the ancient methods and forms of Parliament.

The principle of this proceeding is large enough for my purpose, The means proposed by the noble Lord for carrying his ideas into execution, I think, indeed, are very indifferently suited to the end; and this I shall endeavour to shew you before I sit down. But, for the present, I take my ground on the admitted principle. I mean to give peace. Peace implies reconciliation; and where there has been a material dispute, reconciliation does in a manner always imply concession on the one part or on the other. In this state of things I make no difficulty in affirming, that the proposal ought to originate from us. Great and acknowledged force is not impaired, either in effect or in opinion, by an unwillingness to exert itself, The superiour power may offer peace with honour and with safety. Such an offer from such a power, will be attributed to magnanimity. But the concessions of the weak are the concessions of fear. When such a one is disarmed, he is wholly at the mercy of his superiour, and he loses forever that time and those chances, which, as they happen to all men, are the strength and resources of all inferior power.

* Resolution moved by Lord North in the Committee, February 20, and agreed to by the House, February 27.

The capital leading questions on which you must this day decide, are these two: First. whether you ought to concede; and secondly, what your concession ought to be. On the first of these questions we have gained (as I have just taken the liberty of observing to you) some ground; but I am sensible that a good deal more is still to be done. Indeed, sir, to enable us to determine both on the one and the other of these great questions with a firm and precise judgment, I think it may be necessary to consider, distinctly, the true nature and the peculiar circumstances of the object which we have before us; because, after all our struggle, whether we will or not, we must govern America according to that nature and to those circumstances, and not according to our own imaginations; not according to abstract ideas of right; by no means according to mere general theories of Government, the resort to which appears to me, in our present situation, no better than arrant trifling. I shall, therefore, endeavour, with your leave, to lay before you some of the most material of these circumstances, in as full and as clear a manner as I am able to state them.

The first thing that we have to consider with regard to the nature of the object is, the number of people in the Colonies. I have taken for some years a good deal of pains on that point. I can by no calculation justify myself in placing the number below two millions of inhabitants, of our own European blood and colour, besides at least five hundred thousand others, who form no inconsiderable part of the strength and opulence of the whole. This, sir, is, I believe, about the true number. There is no occasion to exaggerate, where plain truth is of so much weight and importance. But whether I put the present numbers too high or too low, is a matter of little moment. Such is the strength with which population shoots in that part of the world, that state the numbers as high as we will, whilst the dispute continues, the exaggeration ends. Whilst we are discussing any given magnitude, they are grown to it. Whilst we spend our time in deliberating on the mode of governing two millions, we shall find we have millions more to manage. Your children do not grow faster from infancy to manhood, than they spread from families to communities, and from Villages to Nations.

I put this consideration of the present and the growing numbers in the front of our deliberation, because, sir, this consideration will make it evident to a blunter discernment than yours, that no partial, narrow, contracted, pinched, occasional system will be at all suitable to such an object. It will shew you that it is not to be considered as one of those minima which are out of the eye and consideration of the law; not a paltry excrescence of the state; not a mean dependent, who may be neglected with little damage, and provoked with little danger. It will prove that some degree of care and caution is required in the handling such an object; it will shew that you ought not, in reason, to trifle with so large a mass of the interests and feelings of the human race. You could at no time do so without guilt; and be assured you will not be able to do it long with impunity.

But the population of this country, the great and growing population, though a very important consideration, will lose much of its weight, if not combined with other circumstances. The commerce of your Colonies is out of all proportion beyond the numbers of the people. This ground of their commerce indeed has been trod some days ago, and with great ability, by a distinguished person, at your bar. * This gentleman, after thirty-five years - it is so long since he first appeared at the same place to plead for the

* Mr. Glover, see Folio 1733.

Commerce of Great Britain - has come again before you to plead the same cause, without any other effect of time, than that to the fire of imagination and extent of erudition, which even then marked him as one of the first literary characters of his age, he has added a consummate knowledge in the commercial interest of his country, formed by a long course of enlightened and discriminating experience.

Sir, I should be inexcusable in coming after such a person with any detail; if a great part of the Members who now fill the House had not the misfortune to be absent when he appeared at your bar. Besides, sir, I propose to take the matter at periods of time somewhat different from his. There is, if I mistake not, a point of view, from whence, if you will look at this subject, it is impossible that it should not make an impression upon you.

I have in my hand two accounts; one a comparative state of the export trade of England to its Colonies, as it stood in the year 1704, and as it stood in the year 1772. The other a state of the export trade of this country to its Colonies alone, as it stood in 1772, compared with the whole trade of England to all parts of the world, (the Colonies included,) in the year 1704. They are from good vouchers; the latter period from the accounts on your table, the earlier from an original manuscript of Davenant, who first established the Inspector General's Office, which has been ever since his time so abundant a source of Parliamentary information.

The export trade to the Colonies consists of three great branches. The African; which, terminating almost wholly in the Colonies, must be put to the account of their commerce; the West Indian and the North American. All these are so interwoven: that the attempt to separate them would tear to pieces the contexture of the whole; and if not entirely destroy, would very much depreciate the value of all the parts. I, therefore, consider these three denominations to be, what in effect they are, one trade.

The trade to the Colonies, taken on the export side, at the beginning of this century, that is, in the year 1704, stood thus:

Exports to North America and the West Indies ,	£483,265
To Africa ,	86,665
	£569,930

In the year 1772, which I take as a middle year between the highest and lowest of those lately laid on your table, the account was as follows:

To North America and the West Indies ,	£4,791,734
To Africa ,	866,398
To which, if you add the Export Trade from Scotland , which had, in 1704, no existence,	364,000
	£6,022,132

From five hundred and odd thousand, it has grown to six millions, It has increased no less than twelve-fold. This is the state of the Colony trade as compared with itself at these two periods, within this century; and this is matter for meditation. But this is not all. Examine my second account. See how the export trade to the Colonies alone, in 1772, stood in the other point of view, that is, as compared to the whole trade of England in 1704.

The whole Export Trade of England , including that to the Colonies, in 1704, -	£6,509,000
Export to the Colonies alone, in 1772,	6,024,000
Difference,	- £485,000

The trade with America alone is now within less than £500,000 of being equal to what this great commercial Nation, England, carried on at the beginning of this century with the whole world! If I had taken the largest year of those on your table, it would rather have exceeded. But, it will be said, is not this American trade an unnatural porotubérance, that has drawn the juices from the rest of the body? The reverse. It is the very food that has nourished every other part into its present magnitude. Our general trade has been greatly augmented; and augmented more or less in almost every part to which it ever extended; but with this material difference; that of the six rail-lions, which, in the beginning of the century, constituted the whole mass of our export commerce, the Colony trade was but one twelfth part; it is now (as a part of sixteen millions) considerably more than a third of the whole. This is the relative proportion of the importance of the Colonies at these two periods; and all reasoning concerning our mode of treating them, must have this proportion as its basis; or it is a reasoning weak, rotten, and sophistical.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot prevail on myself to hurry over this great consideration. It is good for us to be here. We stand where we have an immense view of what is, and what is past. Clouds, indeed, and darkness, rest upon the future. Let us, however, before we descend from this noble eminence, reflect that this growth of our national prosperity has happened within the short period of the life of man. It has happened within sixty-eight years. There are those alive whose memory might touch the two extremities. For instance, my Lord Bathurst might remember all the stages of the progress. He was in 1704, of an age at least to be made to comprehend such things. He was then old enough acta parentum jam legere, et quæ sit poterit cognoscere virtus. Suppose, sir, that the angel of this auspicious youth, foreseeing the many virtues, which made him one of the most amiable, as he is one of the most fortunate men of his age, had opened to him in vision, that, when in the fourth generation, the third Prince of the House of Brunswick had sat twelve years on the throne of that Nation, which (by the happy issue of moderate and healing councils) was to be made Great Britain, he should see his son Lord Chancellor of England, turn back the current of hereditary dignity to its fountain, and raise him to an higher rank of Peerage, whilst he enriched the family with a new one - if amidst these bright and happy scenes of domestic honour and prosperity, that angel should have drawn up the curtain, and unfolded the rising glories of his country, and whilst he was gazing with admiration on the then commercial grandeur of England, the genius should point out to him a little speck, scarce visible in the mass of the national interest, a small seminal principle, rather than a formed body, and should tell him - "Young man, there is America - which at this day serves for little more than "to amuse you with stories of savage men, and uncouth "manners; yet shall, before you taste of death, shew itself "equal to the whole of that commerce which now attracts "the envy of the world. Whatever England has been "growing to by a progressive increase of improvement, "brought in by varieties of people, by succession of civil- "izing conquests and civilizing settlements in a series of "one thousand seven hundred years, you shall see as much "added to her by America in the course of a single life!" If this state of his country had been foretold to him, would it not require all the sanguine credulity of youth, and all the fervid glow of enthusiasm, to make him believe it? Fortunate man, he has lived to see it! Fortunate, indeed, if he lives to see nothing that shall vary the prospect, and cloud the setting of his day!

Excuse me, sir, if, turning from such thoughts, I resume this comparative view once more. You have seen it on a large scale; look at it on a small one. I will point out to your attention a particular instance of it in the single Province of Pennsylvania. In the year 1704, that Province called for £11,459, in value of your commodities, native and foreign. This was the whole. What did it demand in 1772? Why nearly fifty times as much; for in that year the export to Pennsylvania was £507,909, nearly equal to the export of all the Colonies together in the first period.

I choose, sir, to enter into these minute and particular details, because generalities, which in all other cases are apt to heighten and raise the subject, have here a tendency to sink it. When we speak of the commerce with our Colonies, fiction lags after truth, invention is unfruitful, and imagination cold and barren.

So far, sir, as to the importance of the object in the view of its commerce, as concerned in the exports from England. If I were to detail the imports, I could shew how many enjoyments they procure, which deceive the burthen of life; how many materials which invigorate the springs of national industry, and extend and animate every part of our foreign and domestick commerce. This would be a curious subject indeed; but I must prescribe bounds to myself in a matter so vast and various.

I pass, therefore, to the Colonies in another point of view, their agriculture. This they have prosecuted with such a spirit, that, besides feeding plentifully their own growing multitude, their annual export of Grain, comprehending Rice, has some years ago exceeded a million in value. Of their last harvest, I am persuaded, they will export much more. At the beginning of the century, some of these Colonies imported Corn from the mother country. For some time past, the old world has been fed from the new. The scarcity which you have felt would have been a desolating famine, if this child of your old age, with a true filial piety, with a Roman charity, had not put the full breast of its youthful exuberance to the mouth of its exhausted parent.

As to the wealth which the Colonies have drawn from the Sea by their Fisheries, you had all that matter fully opened at your bar. You surely thought those acquisitions of value, for they seemed even to excite your envy; and yet, the spirit by which that enterprising employment has been exercised, ought rather, in my opinion, to have raised your esteem and admiration. And pray, sir, what in the world is equal to it? Pass by the other parts, and look at the manner in which the people of New England have of late carried on the Whale Fishery. Whilst we follow them among the tumbling mountains of ice, and behold them penetrating into the deepest frozen recesses of Hudson's Bay, and Davis's Straits, whilst we are looking for them beneath the arctic circle, we hear that they have pierced into the opposite region of polar cold, that they are at the antipodes, and engaged under the frozen serpent of the South. Falkland Island, which seemed too remote and romantick an object for the grasp of national ambition, is but a stage and resting-place in the progress of their victorious industry. Nor is the equinoctial heat more discouraging to them, than the accumulated winter of both the poles. We know that whilst some of them draw the line and strike the harpoon on the Coast of Africa, others run the longitude, and pursue their gigantick game along the Coast of Brazil. No Sea but what is vexed by their Fisheries. No climate that is not witness to their toils. Neither the perseverance of Holland, nor the activity of France, nor the dexterous and firm sagacity of English enterprise, ever carried this most perilous mode of hard industry to the extent to which it has been pushed by this recent people; a people who are still, as it were, but in the gristle, and not yet hardened into the bone of manhood. When I contemplate these things, when I know that the Colonies in general owe little or nothing to any care of ours, and that they are not squeezed into this happy form by the constraints of watchful and suspicious government, but that through a wise and salutary neglect, a generous nature has been suffered to take her own way to perfection; when I reflect upon these effects, when I see how profitable they have been to us, I feel all the pride of power sink, and all presumption in the wisdom of human contrivances melt, and die away within me. My rigour relents. I pardon something to the spirit of liberty.

I am sensible, sir; that all which I have asserted, in my detail, is admitted in the gross; but that quite a different conclusion is drawn from it. America, gentlemen say, is a noble object. It is an object well worth fighting for. Certainly it is, if fighting a people be the best way of gaining them. Gentlemen in this respect will be led to their choice of means by their complexions and their habits. Those who understand the military art, will of course have some predilection for it. Those who wield the thunder of the state, may have more confidence in the efficacy of Arms. But I confess, possibly for want of this knowledge, my opinion is much more in favour of prudent management, than of force; considering force not as an odious, but a feeble instrument, for preserving a people so numerous, so active, so growing, so spirited as this, in a profitable and subordinate connexion with us.

First, sir; permit me to observe, that the use of force alone is but temporary. It may subdue for a moment; but it does not remove the necessity of subduing again: and a Nation is not governed, which is perpetually to be conquered.

My next objection is uncertainty. Terrour is not always the effect of force; and an armament is not a victory. If you do not succeed, you are without resource; for, conciliation failing, force remains; but, force failing, no further hope of reconciliation is left. Power and authority are sometimes bought by kindness; but they can never be begged as alms, by an impoverished and defeated violence.

A further objection to force is, that you impair the object by your very endeavours to preserve it. The thing you fought for is not the thing which you recover; but depreciated, sunk, wasted, and consumed in the contest. Nothing less will content me, than whole America. I do not choose to consume its strength along with our own; because in all parts it is the British strength that I consume. I do not choose to be caught by a foreign enemy at the end of this exhausting conflict; and still less in the midst of it. I may escape; but I can make no insurance against such an event. Let me add, that I do not choose wholly to break the American spirit, because it is the spirit that has made the country.

Lastly. We have no sort of experience in favour of force as an instrument in the rule of our Colonies. Their growth and their utility has been owing to methods altogether different. Our ancient indulgence has been said to be pursued to a fault. It may be so. But we know, if feeling is evidence, that our fault was more tolerable than our attempt to mend it; and our sin far more salutary than our penitence. These, sir, are my reasons for not entertaining that high opinion of untried force, by which many gentlemen, for whose sentiments in other particulars I have great respect, seem to be so greatly captivated. But there is still behind a third consideration concerning this object, which serves to determine my opinion on the sort of policy which ought to be pursued in the management of America, even more than its population and its commerce, I mean its temper and character.

In this character of the Americans, a love of freedom is the predominating feature which marks and distinguishes the whole; and as an ardent is always a jealous affection, your Colonies become suspicious, restive, and untractable, whenever they see the least attempt to wrest from them by force, or shuffle from them by chicane, what they think the only advantage worth living for. This fierce spirit of liberty is stronger in the English Colonies, probably, than in any other people of the earth; and this from a great variety of powerful causes, which, to understand the true temper of their minds, and the direction which this spirit takes, it will not be amiss to lay open somewhat more largely.

First. The people of the Colonies are descendants of Englishmen. England, sir, is a Nation, which still, I hope, respects, and formerly adored her freedom. The Colonists emigrated from you, when this part of your character was most predominant; and they took this bias and direction the moment they parted from your hands. They are, therefore, not only devoted to liberty, but to liberty according to English ideas, and on English principles. Abstract liberty, like other mere abstractions, is not to be found. Liberty inheres in some sensible object; and every Nation has formed to itself some favourite point, which, by way of eminence, becomes the criterion of their happiness. It happened, you know, sir, that the great contests for freedom in this country were, from the earliest times, chiefly upon the question of taxing. Most of the contests in the ancient Commonwealths turned primarily on the right of election of Magistrates; or on the balance, among the several orders of the state. The question of money was not with them so immediate. But in England it was otherwise. On this point of taxes, the ablest pens, and most eloquent tongues, have been exercised; the greatest spirits have acted and suffered. In order to give the fullest satisfaction concerning the importance of this point, it was not only necessary for those who in argument defended the excellence of the English Constitution, to insist on this privilege of granting money as a dry point of fact, and to prove, that the right had been acknowledged in ancient parchments, and blind usages, to reside in a certain body called a House of Commons. They went much further; they attempted to prove, and they succeeded, that in theory it ought to be so, from the particular nature of a House of Commons, as an immediate representative of the people; whether the old records had delivered this oracle or not.

They took infinite pains to inculcate, as a fundamental principle, that, in all monarchies, the people must, in effect, themselves mediately or immediately possess the power of granting their own money, or no shadow of liberty could subsist. The Colonies draw from you, as with their life-blood, these ideas and principles. Their love of liberty, as with you, fixed and attached on this specifick point of taxing. Liberty might be safe, or might be endangered in twenty other particulars, without their being much pleased or alarmed. Here they felt its pulse; and as they found that beat, they thought themselves sick or sound. I do not say whether they were right or wrong in applying your general arguments to their own case. It is not easy, indeed, to make a monopoly of theorems and corollaries. the fact is, that they did thus apply those general arguments; and your mode of governing them, whether through lenity or indolence, through wisdom or mistake, confirmed them in the imagination, that they, as well as you, had an interest in these common principles.

They were further confirmed in this pleasing error, by the form of their Provincial Legislative Assemblies. Their Governments are popular in a high degree; some are merely popular; in all, the popular representative is the most weighty; and this share of the people, in their ordinary government, never fails to inspire them with lofty sentiments, and with a strong aversion from whatever tends to deprive them of their chief importance.

If any thing were wanting to this necessary operation of the form of Government, Religion would have given it a complete effect. Religion, always a principle of energy in this new people, is no way worn out or impaired; and their mode of professing it is also one main cause of this free spirit. The people are Protestants: and of that kind which is the most adverse to all implicit submission of mind and opinion. This is a persuasion not only favourable to liberty, but built upon it. I do not think, sir, that the reason of this averseness in the dissenting churches from all that looks like absolute Government is so much to be sought in their religious tenets, as in their history. Every One knows that the Roman Catholick Religion is, at least, coeval with most of the Governments where it prevails; that it has generally gone hand and hand with them; and received great favour and every kind of support from authority. The Church of England too was formed, from her cradle, under the nursing care of regular Government. But the dissenting interests have sprung up in direct opposition to all the ordinary powers of the world; and could justify that opposition only on a strong claim to natural liberty. Their very existence depended on the powerful and unremitted assertion of that claim. All Protestantism, even the most cold and passive, is a sort of dissent. But the religion most prevalent in our Northern Colonies is a refinement on the principle of resistance; it is the diffidence of dissent; and the Protestantism of the Protestant Religion. This religion, under a variety of denominations, agreeing in nothing but in the communion of the spirit of liberty, is predominant in most of the Northern Provinces; where the Church of England, notwithstanding its legal rights, is in reality no more than a sort of private sect, not composing, most probably, the tenth of the people. The Colonists left England when this spirit was high; and in the emigrants was the highest of all: and even that stream of foreigners, which has been constantly flowing into these Colonies, has, for the greatest part, been composed of dissenters from the establishments of their several countries, aid have brought with them a temper and character far from alien to that of the people with whom they mixed.

Sir, I can perceive, by their manner, that some gentlemen object to the latitude of this description, because in the Southern Colonies the Church of England forms a large body, and has a regular establishment. It is certainly true. There is, however, a circumstance attending these Colonies, which, in my opinion, fully counterbalances this difference, and makes the spirit of liberty still more high and haughty than in those to the Northward. It is that in Virginia and the Carolinas, they have a vast multitude of Slaves. Where this is the case, in any part of the world, those who are free, are by far the most proud and jealous of their freedom. Freedom is to them not only an enjoyment, but a kind of rank and privilege. Not seeing there that freedom, as in countries where it is a common blessing, and as broad and general as the air, may be united with much abject toil, with great misery, with all the exterior of servitude, liberty looks, amongst them, like something that is more noble and liberal. I do not mean, sir, to commend the superiour morality of this sentiment, which has at least as much pride as virtue in it; but I cannot alter the nature of man. The fact is so; and these people of the Southern Colonies are much more strongly, and with a higher and more stubborn spirit, attached to liberty, than those to the Northward. Such were all the ancient Commonwealths; such were our Gothick ancestors; such in our days were the Poles; and such will be all masters of Slaves, who are not slaves themselves. In such a people the haughtiness of domination combines with the spirit of freedom, fortifies it; and renders it invincible.

Permit me, sir, to add another circumstance in our Colonies, which contributes no mean part towards the growth and effect of this untractable spirit. I mean their education. In no country, perhaps, in the world is the law so general a study. The profession itself is numerous and powerful; and, in most Provinces, it takes the lead. The greater number of the Deputies sent to the Congress were Lawyers. But all who read, and most do read, endeavour to obtain some smattering in that science, I have been told by an eminent bookseller, that in no branch of his business, after tracts of popular devotion, were so many books as those on the law exported to the Plantations. The Colonists have now fallen into the way of printing them for their own use. I hear that they have sold nearly as many of Blackstone's Commentaries in America as in England. General Gage marks out this disposition very particularly in a letter on your table. He states, that all the people in his Government are Lawyers, or smatterers in law; and that in Boston they have been enabled, by successful chicanery, wholly to evade many parts of one of your capital penal Constitutions. The smartness of debate will say, that this knowledge ought to teach them more clearly the rights of Legislature, their obligations obedience, and the penalties of rebellion. All this is mighty well. But my honourable and learned friend on the floor, (the Attorney General,) who condescends to mark what I say for animadversion, will disdain that ground. He has heard, as well as I, that when great honours and great emoluments do not win over this knowledge to the service of the state, it is a formidable adversary to Government. If the spirit be not tamed and broken by these happy methods, it is stubborn and litigious. Abeunt studia in mores. This study renders men acute, inquisitive, dexterous, prompt in attack, ready in defence, full of resources. In other countries, the people, more simple, and of a less mercurial cast, judge of an ill principle in Government only by an actual grievance; here they anticipate the evil, and judge of the pressure of the grievance by the badness of the principle. They augur misgovernment at a distance; and snuff the approach of tyranny in every tainted breeze.

The last cause of this disobedient spirit in the Colonies is hardly less powerful than the rest, as it is not merely moral, but laid deep in the natural constitution of things. Three thousand miles of Ocean lie between you and them. No contrivance can prevent the effect of this distance in weakening Government. Seas roll, and months pass, between the order and the execution: and the want of a speedy explanation of a single point, is enough to defeat a whole system. You have, indeed, winged ministers of vengeance, who carry your bolts in their pounces to the remotest verge of the Sea. But there a power steps in, that limits the arrogance of raging passions and furious elements, and says, "So far shall thou go, and no farther." Who are you, that should fret and rage, and bite the chains of nature? Nothing worse happens to you, than does to all Nations who have extensive Empire; and it happens in all the forms into which Empire can be thrown. In large bodies, the circulation of power must be less vigorous at the extremities. Nature has said it. The Turk cannot govern Egypt, and Arabia, and Curdistan, as he governs Thrace; nor has he the same dominion in Crimea and Algiers, which he has at Brusa and Smyrna. Despotism itself is obliged to truck and huckster. the Sultan gets such obedience as he can. He governs with a loose reign, that he may govern at all; and the whole of the force and vigour of his authority in his centre is derived from a prudent relaxation in all his borders. Spain, in her Provinces, is, perhaps, not so well obeyed as you are in yours. She complies too; she submits; she watches times. This is the immutable condition, the eternal law of extensive and detached Empire.

Then, sir, from these six capital sources, of descent; of form of Government; of Religion in the Northern Provinces; of Manners in the Southern; of Education; of the remoteness of situation from the first mover of Government; from all these causes a fierce spirit of liberty has grown up. It has grown with the growth of the people of your Colonies, and increased with the increase of their wealth; a spirit, that unhappily meeting with an exercise of power in England, which, however lawful, is not reconcileable to any ideas of liberty, much less with theirs, has kindled this flame, that is ready to consume us.

I do not mean to commend either the spirit in this excess, or the moral causes which produce it. Perhaps a more smooth and accommodating spirit of freedom in them would be more acceptable to us. Perhaps ideas of liberty might be desired, more reconcileable with an arbitrary and boundless authority. Perhaps we might wish the Colonists to be persuaded, that their liberty is more secure when held in trust for them by us (as their guardians' during a perpetual minority) than with any part of it in their own hands. But the question is, not whether their spirit deserves praise or blame; - what, in the name of God, shall we do with it? You have before you the object; such as it is, with all its glories, with all its imperfections on its head. You see the magnitude; the importance; the temper; the habits; the disorders. By all these considerations, we are strongly urged to determine something concerning it. We are called upon to fix some rule and line for our future conduct, which may give a little stability to our politics, and prevent the return of such unhappy deliberations as the present. Every such return will bring the matter before us in a still more untractable form. For, what astonishing and incredible things have we not seen already? What monsters have not been generated from this unnatural contention? Whilst every principle of authority and resistance has been pushed, upon both sides, as far as it would go, there is nothing so solid and certain, either in reasoning or in practice, that has not been shaken. Until very lately, all authority in America seemed to be nothing but an emanation from yours. Even the popular part of the Colony Constitution derived all its activity, and its first vital movement, from the pleasure of the Crown. We thought, sir, that the utmost which the discontented Colonists could do, was to disturb authority; we never dreamed they could of themselves supply it; knowing in general what an operose business it is, to establish a Government absolutely new. But having, for our purposes in this contention, resolved, that none but an obedient Assembly should sit, the humours of the people there, finding all passage through the legal channel stopped, with great violence broke out another way. Some Provinces have tried their experiment, as we have tried ours; and theirs has succeeded! They have formed a Government sufficient for its purposes, without the bustle of a revolution, or the troublesome formality of an election. Evident necessity, and tacit consent, have done the business in an instant. So well they have done it, that Lord Dunmore (the account is among the fragments on your table) tells you, that the new institution is infinitely better obeyed than the ancient Government ever was in its most fortunate periods. Obedience is what makes Government, and not the names by which it is called; not the name of Governour, as formerly, or Committee, as at present. This new Government has originated directly from the people; and was not transmitted through any of the ordinary artificial media of a positive Constitution. It was not a manufacture ready formed, and transmitted to them in that condition from England. The evil arising from hence is this: that the Colonists having once found the possibility of enjoying the advantages of order, in the midst of a struggle for liberty, such struggles will not, henceforward, seem so terrible to the settled and sober part of mankind, as they had appeared before the trial.

Pursuing the same plan of punishing by the denial of the exercise of Government to still greater lengths, we wholly abrogated the ancient Government of Massachusetts.

We were confident, that the first feeling, if not the very prospect of anarchy, would instantly enforce a complete submission. The experiment was tried. A new, strange, unexpected face of things appeared. Anarchy is found tolerable. A vast Province has now subsisted, and subsisted in a considerable degree of health and vigour, for near a twelvemonth, without Governour, without Publick Council, without Judges, without Executive Magistrates. How long it will continue in this state, or what may arise out of this unheard-of situation, how can the wisest of us conjecture? Our late experience has taught us, that many of those fundamental principles, formerly believed infallible, are either not of the importance they were imagined to be; or, that we have not at all adverted to some other far more important, and far more powerful principles, which entirely overrule those we had considered as omnipotent. I am much against further experiments, which tend to put to the proof any more of these allowed opinions, which contribute so much to the publick tranquillity. In effect, we suffer as much at home, by this loosening of all ties, and this concussion of all established opinions, as we do abroad. For, in order to prove that the Americans have no fight to their liberties, we are every day endeavouring to subvert the maxims which preserve the whole spirit of our own. To prove that the Americans ought not to be free, we are obliged to depreciate the value of freedom itself; and we never seem to gain a paltry advantage over them in debate, without attacking some of those principles, or deriding some of those feelings, for which our ancestors have shed their blood.

But, sir, in wishing to put an end to pernicious experiments, I do not mean to preclude the tidiest inquiry. Far from it. Far from deciding on a sudden or partial view, I would patiently go round and round the subject, and survey it minutely in every possible aspect. Sir, if I were capable of engaging you to an equal attention, I would state, that, as far as I am capable of discerning, there are but three ways of proceeding relative to this stubborn spirit, which prevails in your Colonies and disturbs your Government. These are: - To change that spirit, as inconvenient, by removing the causes. To prosecute it as criminal. Or, to comply with it as necessary. I would not be guilty of an imperfect enumeration; I can think of but these three. Another has, indeed, been started, that of giving up the Colonies; but it met so slight a reception, that I do not think myself obliged to dwell a great while upon it. It is nothing but a little sally of anger, like the frowardness of peevish children, who, when they cannot get all they would have, are resolved to taking nothing.

The first of these plans, to change the spirit as inconvenient, by removing the causes, I think is the most like a systematick proceeding. It is radical in its principle; but it is attended with great difficulties, some of them little short, as I conceive, of impossibilities. This will appear by examining into the plans which have been proposed.

As the growing population of the Colonies is evidently one cause of their resistance, it was last session mentioned in both Houses, by men of weight, and received not without applause, that, in order to check this evil, it would be proper for the Crown to make no further grants of land. But to this scheme there are two objections. The first, that there is already so much unsettled land in private hands, as to afford room for an immense future population, although the Crown not only withheld its grants, but annihilated its soil. If this be the case, then the only effect of this avarice of desolation, this hoarding of a royal wilderness, Would be to raise the value of the possessions in the hands of the great private monopolists, without any adequate check to the growing and alarming mischief of population.

But if you stopped your grants, what would be the consequence? The people would occupy without grants. They have already so occupied in many places. You cannot station Garrisons in every part of these deserts. If you drive the people from one place, they will carry on their annual tillage, and remove with their flocks and herds to another. Many of the people in the back settlements are already little attached to particular situations. Already they have topped the Appalachian Mountains. From thence they behold before them an immense plain, one vast, rich, level meadow; a square of five hundred miles.

Over this they would wander, without a possibility of restraint; they would change their manners with the habits of their life; would soon forget a Government, by which they were disowned; would become hordes of English Tartars; and, pouring down upon your unfortified frontiers a fierce and irresistible cavalry, become masters of your Governours and your Counsellors, your Collectors and Comptrollers, and of all the slaves that adhered to them. Such would, and, in no long time, must be, the effect of attempting to forbid as a crime, and to suppress as an evil, the command and blessing of Providence, "Increase and multiply." Such would be the happy result of an endeavour to keep as a lair of wild beasts, that earth, which God, by an express charter, has given to the children of men. Far different, and surely much wiser, has been our policy hitherto. Hitherto we have invited our people by every kind of bounty, to fixed establishments. We have invited the husbandman to look to authority for his title. We have taught him piously to believe in the mysterious virtue of Wax and Parchment. We have thrown each tract of land, as it was peopled, into Districts; that the ruling power should never, be wholly out of sight. We have settled all we could; and we have carefully attended every settlement with government.

Adhering, sir, as I do, to this policy, as well as for the reasons I have just given, I think this new project of hedging in population to be neither prudent nor practicable.

To impoverish the Colonies in general, and in particular to arrest the noble course of their marine enterprises, would be a more easy task. I freely confess it. We have shown a disposition to a system of this kind; a disposition even to continue the restraint after the offence; looking on ourselves as rivals to our Colonies, and persuaded that of course we must gain all that they shall lose. Much mischief we may certainly do. The power inadequate to all other things, is often more than sufficient for this. I do not look on the direct and immediate power of the Colonies to resist our violence, as very formidable. In this, however, I may be mistaken. But when I consider that we have Colonies for no purpose but to be serviceable to us, it seems to my poor understanding a little preposterous to make them unserviceable in order to keep them obedient. It is, in truth, nothing more than the old, and, as I thought, exploded problem of tyranny, which proposes to beggar its subjects into submission. But remember, when you have completed your system of impoverishment, that nature still proceeds in her ordinary course; that discontent will increase with misery; and that there are critical moments in the fortune of all states, when they who are too weak to contribute to your prosperity, may be strong enough to complete your ruin. Spoliatis arma supersunt.

The temper and character which prevail in our Colonies, are, I am afraid, unalterable by any human art. We cannot, I fear, falsify the pedigree of this fierce people, and persuade them, that they are not sprung, from a Nation, in whose veins the blood of freedom circulates. The language in which they would hear you tell them this tale, would detect the imposition; your speech would betray you. An Englishman is the unfittest person on earth to argue another Englishman into slavery.

I think it nearly as little in our power to change their republican religion, as their free descent; or to substitute the Roman Catholicism as a penalty, or the Church of England as an improvement. The mode of inquisition and dragooning is going out of fashion in the old world; and I should not confide much to their efficacy in the new. The education of the Americans is also on the same unalterable bottom with their religion. You cannot persuade them to burn their hooks of curious science; to banish their Lawyers from the courts of law; or to quench the lights of their assemblies, by refusing to choose those persons who are best read in their privileges. It would be no less impracticable to think of wholly annihilating the popular assemblies in which these Lawyers sit. The Army, by which we must govern in their place, would be far more chargeable to us; not quite so effectual; and, perhaps, in the end, full as difficult to be kept in obedience.

With regard to the high aristocratic spirit of Virginia and the Southern Colonies, it has been proposed, I know, to reduce it, by declaring a general enfranchisement of their Slaves. This project has had its advocates and panegyrists; yet I never could argue myself into any opinion of it. Slaves are often much attached to their masters. A general wild offer of liberty would not always be accepted. History furnishes few instances of it. It is sometimes as hard to persuade slaves to be free, as it is to compel freemen to be slaves; and in this auspicious scheme, we should have both these pleasing tasks on our hands at once. But when we talk of enfranchisement, do we not perceive that the American master may enfranchise too; and arm servile hands in defence of freedom? A measure to which other people have had recourse more than once, and not without success, in a desperate situation of their affairs.

Slaves as these unfortunate black people are, and dull as all men are from slavery, must they not a little suspect the offer of freedom from that very Nation which has sold them to their present masters? From that Nation, one of whose causes of quarrel with those masters, is their refusal to deal any more in that inhuman traffick? An offer of freedom from England, would come rather oddly, shipped to them in an African Vessel, which is refused an entry into the Ports of Virginia or Carolina, with a cargo of three hundred Angola Negroes. It would be curious to see the Guinea Captain attempting at the same instant to publish his proclamation of Liberty, and to advertise his sale of Slaves.

But let us suppose all these moral difficulties got over. The Ocean remains. You cannot pump this dry; and as long as it continues in its present bed, so long all the causes which weaken authority by distance will continue. "Ye gods, annihilate but space and time, and make two lovers happy!"—was a pious and passionate prayer; but just as reasonable as many of the serious wishes of very grave and solemn politicians.

If then, sir, it seems almost desperate to think of any alterative course, for changing the moral causes (and not quite easy to remove the natural) which produce prejudices irreconcilable to the late exercise of our authority; but that the spirit infallibly will continue; and, continuing, will produce such effects as now embarrass us; the second mode under consideration is to prosecute that spirit in its overt acts as criminal.

At this proposition, I must pause a moment. The thing seems a great deal too big for my ideas of jurisprudence. It should seem, to my way of conceiving such matters, that there is a very wide difference in reason and policy, between the mode of proceeding on the irregular conduct of scattered individuals, or even of bands of men, who disturb order within the state, and the civil dissensions which may, from time to time, on great questions, agitate the several communities which compose a great Empire. It looks to me to be narrow and pedantick to apply the ordinary ideas of criminal justice to this great public contest. I do not know the method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people. I cannot insult and ridicule the feelings of millions of my fellow-creatures, as Sir Edward Coke insulted one excellent individual (Sir Walter Raleigh) at the bar.* I am not ripe to pass sentence on the gravest public bodies, entrusted with magistracies of great authority and dignity, and charged with the safety of their fellow-citizens, upon the very same title that I am. I really think, that for wise men, this is not judicious; for sober men, not decent; for minds tinctured with humanity, not mild and merciful.

Perhaps, sir, I am mistaken in my idea of an Empire, as distinguished from a single State or Kingdom. But my idea of it is this; that an Empire is the aggregate of many states under one common head; whether this head be a Monarch, or a presiding Republick. It does, in such Constitutions, frequently happen (and nothing but the dismal, cold, dead uniformity of servitude can prevent its happening) that the subordinate parts have many local privileges and immunities. Between these privileges and the supreme common authority, the line may be extremely nice. Of course disputes, often too, very bitter disputes, and much ill blood, will arise. But though every privilege is an exemption (in the case) from the ordinary exercise of the supreme authority, it is no denial of it. The claim of a privilege seems rather ex vi termini, to imply a superiour power. For to talk of the privileges of a state, or of a person; who has no superiour, is hardly any better than speaking nonsense. Now, in such unfortunate quarrels, among, the component parts of a great political union of communities, I can scarcely conceive any thing more completely imprudent, than for the head of the Empire to resist, that, if any privilege is pleaded against his will, or his acts, that his whole authority is denied; instantly to proclaim rebellion to beat to arms, and to put the offending Provinces under the ban. Will not this, sir, very soon teach the Provinces to make no distinctions on their part? Will it not teach them that the Government, against which a claim of liberty is tantamount to high treason, is a Government to which submission is equivalent to slavery? It may not always be quite convenient to impress dependent communities with such an idea.

* See Howell's State Trials, vol. 2, p. 7, et seq.

We are, indeed, in all disputes with the Colonies, by the necessity of things, the judge. It is true, sir. But I confess, that the character of judge in my own cause, is a thing that frightens me. Instead of filling me with pride, I am exceedingly humbled by it. I cannot proceed with a stern, assured, judicial confidence, until I find myself in something more like a judicial character. I must have these hesitations as long as I am compelled to recollect, that, in my little reading upon such contests as these, the sense of mankind has, at least, as often decided against the superiour as the subordinate power. Sir, let me add too, that the opinion of my lining some abstract right in my favour would not put me much at my ease in passing sentence; unless I could be sure, that there were no rights which, in their exercise under certain circumstances, were not the most odious of all wrongs, and the most vexatious of all injustice. Sir, these topside rations have great weight with me, when I find things so circumstanced, that I see the same party, at once a civil litigant against me in point of right, and a culprit before me; while I sit as criminal judge, on acts of his, whose moral quality is to be decided upon the merits of that very litigation. Men are every now and then put, by the complexity of human affairs, into strange situations; but justice is the same, let the judge be in what situation he will.

There is, sir, also a circumstance which convinces me that this mode of criminal proceeding is not (at least in the present stage of our contest) altogether expedient; which is nothing less than the conduct of those very persons who have seemed to adopt that mode, by lately declaring a rebellion in Massachusetts Bay, as they had formerly addressed to have traitors brought hither under an Act of Henry the Eighth, for trial. For though rebellion is declared, it is not proceeded against as such; nor have any steps been taken towards the apprehension or conviction of any individual offender, either on our late or our former Address; but modes of publick coercion have been adopted, and such as have much more resemblance to a sort of qualified hostility towards an independent Power, than the punishment of rebellious subjects. All this seems rather inconsistent, but it shews how difficult it is to apply these juridical ideas to our present case.

In this situation, let us seriously and coolly ponder. What is it we have got by all our menaces, which have been many and ferocious? What advantage have we derived from the penal laws we have passed, and which, for the time, have been severe and numerous? What advances have we made towards our object, by the sending of a force, which, by Land and Sea, is no contemptible strength? Has the disorder abated? Nothing less. When I see things in this situation alter such confident hopes, bold promises, and active exertions, I cannot, for my life, avoid a suspicion that the plan itself is not correctly right.

If, then, the removal of the causes of this spirit of American liberty be, for the greater part, or rather entirely, impracticable; if the ideas of criminal process be inapplicable, or, if applicable, are in the highest degree inexpedient, what way yet remains. No way is open, but the third and last - to comply with the American spirit as necessary; or, if you please to submit to it, as a necessary evil.

If we adopt this mode, if we mean to conciliate and concede, let us see of what nature the concession ought to be; to ascertain the nature of our concession, we must look at their complaint. The Colonies complain that they have not the characteristic mark and seal of British freedom. They complain that they are taxed in a Parliament in which they are not represented. If you mean to satisfy them at all, you must satisfy them with regard to this complaint. If you mean to please any people, you must give them the boon which they ask, not what you may think better for them, but of a kind totally different. Such an act may be a wise regulation, but it is no concession; whereas, our present theme is the mode of giving satisfaction.

Sir, I think you must perceive that I am resolved, this day, to have nothing at all to do with the question of the right of taxation. Some gentlemen startle but it is true; I put it totally out of the question; it is less than nothing in my consideration. I do not, indeed, wonder, nor will you, sir, that gentlemen of profound learning are fond of displaying it on this profound subject. But my consideration is narrow, confined, and wholly limited to the policy of the question. I do not examine whether the giving away a man's money be a power excepted and reserved out of the general trust of Government; and how far all mankind, in all forms of polity, are entitled to an exercise of that right by the charter of nature; or whether, on the contrary, a right of taxation is necessarily involved in the general principle of legislation, and inseparable from the ordinary supreme power. These are deep questions, where great names militate against each other; where reason is perplexed, and an appeal to authorities only thickens the confusion. For high and reverend authorities lift up their heads on both sides, and there is no sure footing in the middle. This point is the "great Serbonian Bog, betwixt Damiat and Mount Casius old, where Armies whole "have sunk." I do not intend to be overwhelmed in that bog, though in such respectable company. The question with me is, not whether you have a right to render your people miserable; but whether it is not your interest to make them happy? It is not what a Lawyer tells me I may do, but what humanity, reason, and justice, tell me I ought to do. Is a politick act the worse for being a generous one? Is no concession proper, but that which is made from your want of right to keep what you grant? Or does it lessen the grace or dignity of relaxing in the exercise of an odious claim, because you have your evidence-room full of titles, and your Magazine stuffed with arms to enforce them? What signify all those titles, and all those arms Of what avail are they, when the reason of the thing tells me that the assertion of my title is the loss of my suit, and that I could do nothing but wound myself by the use of my own weapons.

Such is, steadfastly, my opinion of the absolute necessity of keeping up the concord of this Empire by a unity of spirit, though in a diversity of operations, that, if I were sure the Colonists had, at their leaving this country, sealed a regular compact of servitude; that they had solemnly abjured all the rights of citizens; that they had made a vow to renounce all ideas of liberty for them and their posterity, to all generations, yet I should hold myself obliged to conform to the temper I found universally prevalent in my own day, and to govern two millions of men impatient of servitude, on the principles of freedom. I am not determining a point of law; I am restoring tranquillity; and the general character and situation of a people must determine what sort of Government is fitted for them. That point nothing else can or ought to determine.

My idea, therefore, without considering whether we we yield as matter of right, or grant as matter of favour, is to admit the people of our Colonies into an interest in the Constitution; and, by recording that admission in the Journals of Parliament, to give them as strong an assurance as the nature of the thing will admit, that we mean, forever, to adhere to that solemn declaration of systematick indulgence.

Some years ago, the repeal of a Revenue Act, upon its understood principle, might have served to shew that we intended an unconditional abatement of the exercise of a taxing power. Such a measure was then sufficient to remove all suspicion and to give perfect content. But unfortunate events since that time, may make something further necessary; and not more necessary for the satisfaction or the Colonies, than for the dignity and consistency of our own future proceedings.

I have taken a very incorrect measure of the disposition of the House, if this proposal in itself would be received with dislike. I think, sir, we have few American financiers. But our misfortune is, we are too acute; we are too exquisite in our conjectures of the future, for men oppressed with such great and present evils. The more moderate among the opposers of Parliamentary concession, freely confess that they hope no good from taxation; but they apprehend the Colonists have further views, and if this point were conceded, they would instantly attack the Trade laws. These gentlemen are convinced that this was the intention from the beginning; and the quarrel of the Americans with taxation was no more than a cloak and cover to this design. Such has been the language even of a gentleman (Mr. Rice) of real moderation, and of a natural temper so well adjusted to fair and equal Government. I am, however, sir, not a little surprised at this kind of discourse, whenever I hear it; and I am the more surprised, on account of the arguments which I constantly find in company with it, and which are often urged from the same mouths, and on the same day.

For instance, when we allege that it is against reason to tax a people under so many restraints in trade as the Americans, the noble Lord (North) in the blue riband shall tell you, that the restraints on trade are futile and useless, of no advantage to us, and of no burthen to those on whom they are imposed; that the trade to America is not secured by the Acts of Navigation, but by the natural and irresistible advantage of a commercial preference.

Such is the merit of the Trade laws in this posture of the debate. But when strong internal circumstances are urged against the taxes; when the scheme is dissected; when experience and the nature of things are brought to prove, and do prove, the utter impossibility of obtaining an effective revenue from the Colonies; when these things are pressed, or rather press themselves, so as to drive the advocates of Colony taxes to a clear admission of the futility of the scheme, then, sir, the sleeping Trade laws revive from their trance, and this useless taxation is to be kept sacred, not for its own sake, but as a counter-guard and security of the laws of Trade.

Then, sir, you keep up Revenue laws which are mischievous, in order to preserve Trade laws that are useless. Such is the wisdom of our plan in both its members. They are separately given up as of no value, and yet one is always to be defended for the sake of the other. But I cannot agree with the noble Lord, nor with the Pamphlet from whence he seems to have borrowed these ideas concerning the inutility of the Trade laws. For, without idolizing them, I am sure they are still, in many ways, of great use to us, and in former times they have been of the greatest. They do confine, and they do greatly narrow, the market for the Americans. But my perfect conviction of this does not help me, in the least, to discern how the Revenue laws form any security whatsoever to the Commercial Regulations; or that these Commercial Regulations are the true ground of the quarrel; or, that the giving way in any one instance of authority, is to lose all that may remain unconceded.

One fact is clear and indisputable, The publick and avowed origin of this quarrel was on taxation. This quarrel has, indeed, brought on new disputes on new questions; but certainly the least bitter, and the fewest of all, on Trade laws. To judge which of the two be the real radical cause of quarrel, we have to see whether the commercial dispute did, in order of time, precede the dispute on taxation? There is not a shadow of evidence for it. Next, to enable us to judge whether at this moment a dislike to the Trade laws be the real cause of quarrel, it is absolutely necessary to put the taxes out of the question by a repeal. See how the Americans act in this position, and then you will be able to discern, correctly, what is the true object of the controversy, or whether any controversy at all will remain? Unless you consent to remove this cause of difference, it is impossible, with decency, to assert that the dispute is not upon what it is avowed to be. And I would, sir, recommend to your serious consideration, whether it be prudent to form a rule for punishing people, not on their own acts, but on your conjectures? Surely it is preposterous at the very best. It is not justifying your anger, by their misconduct; but it is converting your ill will into their delinquency.

But the Colonies will go further. Alas! alas! when will this speculating against fact and reason end? What will quiet these panick fears which we entertain of the hostile effect of the conciliatory conduct? Is it true, that no case can exist, in which it is proper for the Sovereign to accede to the desires of his discontented subjects? Is there any thing peculiar in this case, to make a rule for itself? Is all authority of Course lost, when it is not pushed to the extreme? Is it a certain maxim, that, the fewer causes of dissatisfaction are left by Government, the more the subject will be inclined to resist and rebel?

All these objections being, in fact, no more than suspicions, conjectures, divinations, formed in defiance of fact and experience; they did not, sir, discourage me from entertaining the idea of a conciliatory concession, founded on the principles which I have just stated.

In forming a plan for this purpose, I endeavoured to put myself in that frame of mind, which was the most natural, and the most reasonable; and which was, certainly, the most probable means of securing me from all error. I set out with a perfect distrust of my own abilities; a total renunciation of every speculation of my own; and with a profound reverence for the wisdom of our ancestors, who have left us the inheritance of so happy a Constitution, and so flourishing an Empire, and what is a thousand times more valuable, the treasury of the maxims and principles which formed the one, and obtained the other.

During the reigns of the Kings of Spain, of the Austrian family, whenever they were at a loss in the Spanish Councils, it was common for their Statesmen to say, that they ought to consult the genius of Philip the Second. The genius of Philip the Second might mislead them; and the issue of their affairs shewed, that they had not chosen the most perfect standard. But, sir, I am sure that I shall not be misled, when, in a case of constitutional difficulty, I consult the genius of the English Constitution. Consulting at that oracle, (it was with all due humility and piety,) I found four capital examples in a similar case before me; those of Ireland, Wales, Chester, and Durham.

Ireland, before the English conquest, though never governed by a despotick power, had no Parliament. How far the English Parliament itself was, at that time, modelled according to the present form, is disputed among antiquaries. But we have all the reason in the world to be assured, that a form of Parliament, such as England then enjoyed, she instantly communicated to Ireland; and we are equally sure, that almost every successive improvement in constitutional liberty, as fast as it was made here, was transmitted thither. The feudal Baronage, and the feudal Knighthood, the roots of our primitive Constitution, were early transplanted into that soil, and grew and flourished there. Magna Charta, if it did not give us originally the House of Commons, gave us at least a House of Commons of weight and consequence. But your ancestors did not, churlishly, sit down alone to the feast of Magna Charta. Ireland was made immediately a partaker. This benefit of English laws and liberties, I confess, was not, at first, extended to all Ireland. Mark the consequence, English authority and English liberty had exactly the same boundaries. Your Standard could never be advanced an inch before your privileges. Sir John Davis shews, beyond a doubt, that the refusal of a general communication of these rights, was the true cause why Ireland was five hundred years in subduing; and after the vain projects of a Military Government, attempted in the reign of Queen Elizabeth it was soon discovered, that nothing could make that country English, in civility and allegiance, but your laws and your forms of Legislature. It was not English Arms, but the English Constitution, that conquered Ireland. From that time, Ireland has ever had a General Parliament, as she had before a Partial Parliament. You changed the people; you altered the religion; but you never touched the form or the vital substance of free government in that Kingdom. You deposed Kings; you restored them; you altered the succession to theirs, as well as to your own Crown; but you never altered their Constitution; the principle of which was respected by usurpation, restored with the restoration of monarchy, and established, I trust, forever, by the glorious Revolution. This has made Ireland the great and flourishing Kingdom that it is; and from a disgrace and a burthen, intolerable to this Nation, has rendered her a principal part of our strength and ornament.

This country cannot be said to have ever formally taxed her. The irregular things done in the confusion of mighty troubles, and on the hinge of great revolutions, even if all were done that is said to have been done, form no example. If they have any effect in argument, they make an exception to prove the rule. None of your own liberties could stand a moment, if the casual deviations from them, at such times, were suffered to be used as proofs of their nullity. By the lucrative amount of such casual breaches in the Constitution, judge what the stated and fixed rule of supply has been in that Kingdom. Your Irish Pensioners would starve, if they had no other fund to live on than taxes granted by English authority. Turn your eyes to those popular grants, from whence all your great supplies are come, and learn to respect that only source of publick wealth in the British Empire.

My next example is Wales. This country was said to be reduced by Henry the Third. It was said more truly, to be so by Edward the First. But though then conquered, it was not looked upon as any part of the Realm of England. Its old Constitution, whatever that might have been, was destroyed; and no good one was substituted in its place. The care of that tract was put into the hands of Lords' Marchers - a form of Government of a very singular kind a strange heterogeneous monster, something between hostility and government; perhaps it has a sort of resemblance, according to the modes of those times, to that of Commander-in-Chief at present, to whom all civil power is granted as secondary. The manners of the Welsh Nation followed the genius of the Government; the people were ferocious, restiff, savage, and uncultivated; sometimes composed, never pacified. Wales, within itself, was in perpetual disorder; and it kept the frontier of England in perpetual alarm. Benefits from it to the state, there were none. Wales was only known to England by incursion and invasion.

Sir, during that state of things, Parliament was not idle. They attempted to subdue the fierce spirit of the Welsh by all sorts of rigorous laws. They prohibited by statute the sending all sorts of Arms into Wales, as you prohibit by Proclamation (with something more of doubt on the legality,) the sending Arms to America. They disarmed the Welsh by Statute, as you attempted, (but still with more question on the legality,) to disarm New England by an instruction. They made an Act to drag offenders from Wales into England for trial, as you have done (but with more hardship) with regard to America. By another Act, where one of the parties was an Englishman, they ordained, that hsi trial should be always by English. They made Acts to restrain trade, as you do; and they prevented the Welsh from the use of Fairs and Markets, as you do the Americans from Fisheries and Foreign Ports. In short, when the Statute-Book was not quite so much swelled as it is now, you find no less than fifteen Acts of penal regulation on the subject of Wales.

Here we rub our hands - a fine body of precedents for the authority of Parliament and the use of it - I admit it fully; and, pray, add likewise to those precedents, that all the while, Wales rid this Kingdom like an incubus; that it was an unprofitable and oppressive burthen; and that an Englishman travelling in that country, could not go six yards from the high road, without being murdered.

The march of the human mind is slow. Sir, it was not, until after two hundred years, discovered, that, by an eternal law, Providence had decreed vexation to violence, and poverty to rapine. Your ancestors did, however, at length open their eyes to the ill husbandry of injustice. They found that the tyranny of a free people could, of all tyrannies, the least be endured, and that laws made against a whole nation were not the most effectual methods for securing its obedience. Accordingly, in the twenty-seventh year of Henry the Eighth, the course was entirely altered. With a preamble, stating the entire and perfect rights of the Crown of England, it gave to the Welsh all the rights and privileges of English subjects. A political order was established; the military power gave way to the civil; the Marches were turned into Counties. But, that a Nation should have a right to English liberties, and yet no share at all in the fundamental security of these liberties, the grant of their own property seemed a thing so incongruous, that eight years after, that is, in the thirty-fifth of that reign, a complete and not ill-proportioned representation by Counties and Boroughs, was bestowed upon Wales by Act of Parliament. From that moment, as by a charm, the tumult subsided; obedience was restored; peace, order, and civilization, followed in the train of liberty. When the day-star of the English Constitution had arisen in their hearts, all was harmony within and without -

"Simul alba nautis
"Stella refulsit,
"Defluit saxis agitatus humor:
"Concidunt venti, fugiuntque nubes:
"Et minax (quòd sic voluere) ponto
"Unda recumbit."

The very same year the County Palatine of Chester received the same relief from its oppressions, and the same remedy to its disorders. Before this time Chester was little less distempered than Wales. The inhabitants, without rights themselves, were the fittest to destroy the rights of others; and from thence Richard the Second drew the Standing Army of Archers, with which, for a time, he oppressed England. The people of Chester applied to Parliament in a Petition penned as I shall read to you:

"To the King our Sovereign Lord, in most humble wise
"shewn unto your excellent Majesty, the inhabitants of "your Grace's County Palatine of Chester; that where the "said County Palatine of Chester is and hath been always "hitherto exempt, excluded, and separated out and from "your high Court of Parliament, to have any Knights and "Burgesses within the said Court; by reason whereof the "said inhabitants have hitherto sustained manifold disheri-
"sons, losses, and damages, as well in their Lands, Goods,
"and Bodies, as in the good, civil, and politick governance "and maintenance of the commonwealth of their said coun"try: (2.) And for as much as the said inhabitants have "always hitherto been bound by the Acts and Statutes
"made and ordained by your said Highness, and your most "noble progenitors, by authority of the said Court, as far "forth as other Counties, Cities, and Boroughs have been,
"that have had their Knights and Burgesses within your "said Court of Parliament, and yet have had neither
"Knight nor Burgess there for the said County Palatine;
"the said inhabitants, for lack thereof, have been often"times touched and grieved with Acts and Statutes made "within the said Court, as well derogatory unto the most "ancient jurisdictions, liberties, and privileges of your said "County Palatine, as prejudicial unto the Commonwealth,
"quietness, rest, and peace of your Grace's most bounden
"subjects inhabiting within the same."

What did Parliament with this audacious Address? Reject it as a libel? Treat it as an affront to Government? Spurn it as a derogation from the rights of Legislature? Did they toss it over the table? Did they burn it by the hands of the common hangman? They took the Petition of grievance, all rugged as it was, without softening or temperament, unpurged of the original bitterness and indignation of complaint; they made it the very preamble to their act of redress, and consecrated its principle to all ages in the sanctuary of legislation.

Here is my third example. It was attended with the success of the two former. Chester, civilized as well as Wales, has demonstrated that freedom, and not servitude, is the cure of anarchy; as religion, and not atheism, is the true remedy for superstition. Sir, this pattern of Chester was followed in the reign of Charles the Second, with regard to the County Palatine of Durham, which is my fourth example. This County had long lain out of the pale of free legislation. So scrupulously was the example of Chester followed, that the style of the preamble is nearly the same with that of the Chester Act; and without affecting the abstract extent of the authority of Parliament, it recognizes the equity of not suffering any considerable district in which the British subjects may act as a body, to be taxed without their own voice in the grant.

Now, if the doctrines of policy contained in these preambles, and the force of these examples in the Acts of Parliaments, avail any thing, what can be said against applying them with regard to America? Are not the people of America as much Englishmen as the Welsh? The preamble of the Act of Henry the Eighth says, the Welsh speak a language no way resembling that of his Majesty's English subjects. Are the Americans not as numerous?

If we may trust the learned and accurate Judge Barrington's account of North Wales, and take that as a standard to measure the rest, there is no comparison. The people cannot amount to above two hundred thousand; not a tenth part of the number in the Colonies. Is America in rebellion? Wales was hardly ever free from it. Have you attempted to govern America by penal Statutes? You made fifteen for Wales. But your legislative authority is perfect with regard to America; was it less perfect in Wales, Chester, and Durham? But America is virtually represented. What! does the electric force of virtual representation more easily pass over the Atlantic, than pervade Wales, which lies in your neighbourhood; or than Chester and Durham, surrounded by abundance of representation that is actual and palpable? But, sir, your ancestors thought this sort of virtual representation, however ample, to be totally insufficient for the freedom of the inhabitants of Territories that are so near, and comparatively so inconsiderable. How then can I think it sufficient for those which are infinitely greater, and infinitely more remote?

You will now, sir, perhaps imagine, that I am on the point of proposing to you a scheme for a representation of the Colonies in Parliament. Perhaps I might be inclined to entertain some such thought; but a great flood stops me in my course. Opposuit natura - I cannot remove the eternal barriers of the creation. The thing, in that mode, I do not know to be possible. As I meddle with no theory, I do not absolutely assert the impracticability of such a representation. But I do not see my way to it; and those who have been more confident, have not been more successful. However, the arm of publick benevolence is not shortened; and there are often several means to the same end. What nature has disjoined in one way, wisdom may unite in another. When we cannot give the benefit as we would wish, let us not refuse it altogether. If we cannot give the principal, let us find a substitute. But how? Where? What substitute?

Fortunately, I am not obliged for the ways and means of riffs substitute to tax my own unproductive invention. I am not even obliged to go to the rich treasury of the fertile framers of imaginary Commonwealths: not to the Republic of Plato; not to the Utopia of More; not to the Oceana of Harrington. It is before me - it is at my feet, "and the rude swain treads daily on it with his clouted shoon." I only wish you to recognise, for the theory, the ancient constitutional policy of this Kingdom with regard to representation, as that policy has been declared in Acts of Parliament; and, as to the practice, to return to that mode which an uniform experience has marked out to you as best, and in which you walked with security, advantage, and honour, until the year 1763.

My Resolutions, therefore, mean to establish the equity and justice of a taxation of America, by grant and not by imposition. To mark the legal competency of the Colony Assemblies for the support of their Government in peace, and for publick aids in time of war. To acknowledge that this legal competency has had a dutiful and beneficial exercise; and that experience has shewn the benefit of their grants, and the futility of Parliamentary taxation as a method of supply.

These solid truths compose six fundamental Propositions. There are three more Resolutions corollary to these. If you admit the first set, you can hardly reject the others. But if you admit the first, I shall be far from solicitous whether you accept or refuse the last. I think these six massive pillars will be of strength sufficient to support the temple of British concord. I have no more doubt than I entertain of my existence, that, if you admitted these, you would command an immediate peace; and with but tolerable future management, a lasting obedience in America. I am not arrogant in this confident assurance. The propositions are all mere matters of fact; and if they are such facts as draw irresistible conclusions, even in the stating, this is the power of truth, and not any management of mine.

Sir, I shall open the whole plan to you together, with such observations on the motions as may tend to illustrate them where they may want explanation. The first is a Resolution--"That the Colonies and Plantations of Great Britain in North America, consisting of fourteen separate Governments, and containing two millions and upwards "of free inhabitants, have not had the liberty and privilege of electing and sending any Knights and Burgesses, or others, to represent them in the High Court of Parliament." This is a plain matter of fact, necessary to be laid down, and (excepting the description) it is laid down in the language of the Constitution; it is taken nearly verbatim from Acts of Parliament.

The second is like unto the first - "That the said Colonies and Plantations have been liable to, and bounden by, several Subsidies, Payments, Rates, and Taxes, given and granted by Parliament, though the said Colonies and Plantations have not their Knights and Burgesses, in the said High Court of Parliament, of their own election, to represent the condition of their Country; by lack whereof they have been oftentimes touched and grieved by Subsidies, given, granted, and assented to, in the said Court, in a manner prejudicial to the Commonwealth, quietness, rest, and peace of the subjects inhabiting within the same."

Is this description too hot, or too cold, too Strong, or too weak? Does it arrogate too much to the Supreme Legislature? Does it lean too much to the Claims of the people? If it runs into any of these errors, the fault is not mine. It is the language of your own ancient Acts of Parliament. "Non meus hic sermo, sed quæ præcepit Ofellus rusticus, abnormis sapiens." It is the genuine produce of the ancient, rustick, manly, home-bred sense of this country. I did not dare to rub off a particle of the venerable rust that rather adorns and preserves, than destroys the metal. It would be a profanation to touch with a tool the stones which construct the sacred Altar of Peace. I would not violate, with modern polish, the ingenuous and noble roughness of these truly constitutional materials. Above all things, I was resolved not to be guilty of tampering, the odious vice of restless and unstable minds. I put my foot in the tracks of our forefathers; where I can neither wander nor stumble. Determining to fix articles of peace, I was resolved not to be wise beyond what was written; I was resolved to use nothing else than the form of sound words; to let others abound in their own sense; and carefully to abstain from all expressions of my own. What the Law has said, I say. In all things else I am silent. I have no organ but for her words. This, if it be not ingenious, I am sure is safe.

There are, indeed, words expressive of grievance in this second Resolution, which those who are resolved always to be in the right, will deny to contain matter of fact, as applied to the present case; although Parliament thought them true, with regard to the Counties of Chester and Durham. They will deny that the Americans were ever "touched and grieved" with the taxes. If they consider nothing in taxes but their weight as pecuniary impositions, there might be some pretence for this denial. But men may be sorely touched and deeply grieved in their privileges, as well as in their purses. Men may lose little in property by the act which takes away all their freedom. When a man is robbed of a trifle on the highway, it is not the two pence lost that constitutes the capital outrage. This is not confined to privileges. Even ancient indulgences withdrawn, without offence on the part of those who enjoyed such favours, operate as grievances. But; were the Americans then not touched and grieved by the taxes, in some measure, merely as taxes? If so, why were they almost all, either wholly repealed or exceedingly reduced? Were they not touched and grieved, even by the Regulating Duties of the sixth of George the Second? Else why were the duties first reduced to one third in 1764, and afterwards to a third of that third in the year 1766? Were they not touched and grieved by the Stamp Act? I shall say they were, until that tax is revived. Were they not touched and grieved by the Duties of 1767, which were likewise repealed, and which, Lord Hillsborough tells you (for the Ministry) were laid contrary to the true principle of Commerce? Is not the assurance given by that noble person to the Colonies of a Resolution to lay no more taxes on them, an admission that taxes would touch and grieve them? Is not the Resolution of the noble Lord in the blue riband, now standing on your journals, the strongest of all proofs that Parliamentary subsidies really touched and grieved them? Else why all these changes, modifications, repeals, assurances, and resolutions?

The next proposition is - "That, from the distance of the said Colonies, and from other circumstances, no method hath hitherto been devised for procuring a representation in Parliament for the said Colonies." This is an assertion of a fact. I go no further on the paper; though, in my private judgement, an useful representation is impossible; I am sure it is not desired by them; nor ought it, perhaps, by us; but I abstain from opinions.

The fourth Resolution is - "That each of the said Colonies hath within itself a body, chosen, in part, or in the whole, by the freemen, freeholders, or other free inhabitants thereof, commonly called the General Assembly, or General Court, with powers legally to raise, levy, and assess, according to the several usage of such Colonies, Duties and Taxes towards defraying all sorts of publick services."

This competence in the Colony Assemblies is certain. It is proved by the whole tenour of their acts of supply in all the Assemblies, in which the constant style of granting is, "an aid to his Majesty;" and Acts granting to the Crown have regularly, for near a century, passed the publick offices without dispute. Those who have been pleased, paradoxically, to deny this right, holding that none but the British Parliament can grant to the Crown, are wished to look to what is done, not only in the Colonies, but in Ireland, in one uniform, unbroken tenour every session. Sir, I am surprised that this doctrine should come from some of the law servants of the Crown. I say, that if the Crown could be responsible, his Majesty - but certainly the Ministers, and even these law officers themselves, through whose hands the Acts pass biennially in Ireland, or annually in the Colonies, are in an habitual course of committing impeachable offences. What habitual offenders have been all Presidents of the Council, all Secretaries of State, all first Lords of Trade, all Attorneys and all Solicitors General? However, they are safe, as no one impeaches them; and there is no ground of charge against them, except in their own unfounded theories.

The fifth Resolution is also a resolution of fact - "That the said General Assemblies, General Courts, or other bodies legally qualified, as aforesaid, have, at sundry times, freely granted several large subsidies and publick aids, for his Majesty's service, according to their abilities, when required thereto by Letter from one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State; and that their right to grant the same, and their cheerfulness and sufficiency in the said grants, have been, at sundry times, acknowledged by Parliament." To say nothing of their great expenses in the Indian wars; and not to take their exertion in foreign ones, so high as the supplies in the year 1695; not to go back to their publick contributions in the year 1710; I shall begin to travel only where the Journals give me light; resolving to deal in nothing but fact, authenticated by Parliamentary record; and to build myself wholly on that solid basis.

On the 4th of April, 1748,* a Committee of this House came to the following Resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, That it is just and reasonable that the several Provinces and Colonies of Massachusetts Bay, New-Hampshire, Connecticut, and Rhode-Island, be reimbursed the expenses they have been at in taking and securing to the Crown of Great Britain, the Island of Cape Breton, and its dependencies."

These expenses were immense for such Colonies. They were above two hundred thousand Pounds sterling; money first raised and advanced on their publick credit.

On the 28th of January, 1756, † a Message from the King came to us to this effect: - "His Majesty, being sensible of the zeal and vigour with which his faithful subjects of certain Colonies in North America have exerted themselves in defence of his Majesty's just rights and possessions, recommends it to this House to take the same into their consideration, and to enable his Majesty to give them such assistance as may be a proper reward and encouragement."

On the 3d of February, 1756, ‡ the House came to a suitable Resolution, expressed in words nearly the same as those of the Message: but, with the further addition, that the money then voted was as an encouragement to the Colonies to exert themselves with vigour, it will not be necessary to go through all the testimonies which your own records have given to the truth of my Resolutions. I will only refer you to the places in the Journals: Vol. xxvii. - 16th and 19th May, 1757. Vol. xxviii. - June 1st, 1758; April 26th and 30th, 1759; March 26 and 31, and April 28, 1760; January 9 and 10, 1761. Vol. xxix. - January 22 and 26, 1762; March 14 and 17, 1763.

Sir, here is the repeated acknowledgement of Parliament, that the Colonies not only gave, but gave to satiety. This nation has formally acknowledged two things; first, that the Colonies had gone beyond their abilities, Parliament having thought it necessary to reimburse them; secondly, that they had acted legally and laudably in their grants of money, and their maintenance of troops, since the compensation is expressly given as reward and encouragement. Reward is not bestowed for acts that are unlawful; and encouragement is not held out to things that deserve reprehension. My Resolution, therefore, does nothing more than collect into one proposition what is scattered through your Journals. I give you nothing but your own; and you cannot refuse, in the gross, what you have so often acknowledged in detail. The admission of this, which will be so honourable to them and to you, will, indeed, be mortal to all the miserable stories by which the passions of the misguided people have been engaged in an unhappy system. The people heard, indeed, from the beginning of these disputes, one thing continually dinning in their ears, that reason and justice demanded, that the Americans, who paid no taxes, should be compelled to contribute. How did that fact of their paying nothing stand when the taxing system began? When Mr. Grenville began to form his system of American Revenue, he stated in this House, that the Colonies were then in debt £2,600,000 sterling money; and was of opinion they would discharge that debt in four years. On this state, those untaxed people were actually subject to the payment of taxes to the amount of £650,000 a year. In fact, however, Mr. Grenville was mistaken. The funds given for sinking the debt did not prove quite so ample as both the Colonies and he expected. The calculation was too sanguine: the reduction was not completed till some years after, and at different times in different Colonies. However, the taxes, after the war, continued too great to bear any addition, with prudence or propriety; and when the burthens imposed in consequence of former requisitions were discharged, our tone became too high to resort again to requisition. No Colony, since that time, ever has had any requisition, whatsoever, made to it.

We see the sense of the Crown and the sense of Parliament, on the productive nature of a revenue by grant. Now search the same Journals for the produce of the revenue by imposition. Where is it? - let us know the volume and the page - what is the gross, what is the nett produce? - to what service is it applied? - how have you appropriated its surplus? - What, can none of the many skillful index-makers, that we are now employing, find any trace of it? - Well, let them, and that, rest together. But are the Journals, which say nothing of the revenue, as silent on the discontent? Oh no! a child may find it. It is the melancholy burthen and blot of every page.

I think, then, I am, from those Journals, justified in the sixth and last Resolution, which is - "That it hath been found by experience, that the manner of granting the said Supplies and Aids, by the said General Assemblies, hath been more agreeable to the said Colonies, and more beneficial and conducive to the publick service, than the mode of giving and granting Aids in Parliament, to be raised and paid in the said Colonies." This makes the whole of the fundamental part of the plan. The conclusion is irresistible. You cannot say, that you were driven by any necessity to an exercise of the utmost rights of Legislature. You cannot assert that you took on yourselves the task of imposing Colony taxes, for the want of another legal body. that is competent to the purpose of supplying the exigencies of the state without wounding the prejudices of the people. Neither is it true that the body so qualified, and having that competence, had neglected the duty.

The question now, on all this accumulated matter, is - Whether you will choose to abide by a profitable experience, or a mischievous theory; whether you choose to build on imagination, or fact; whether you prefer enjoyment, or hope; satisfaction in your subjects, or discontent?

* Journals, Vol. XXV, page 614. † Ibid. Vol. XXVII, page 414.

‡ Ibid. Vol. XXVII, page 424.

If these propositions are accepted, every thing which has been made to enforce a contrary system, must, I take it for granted, fall along with it. On that ground, I have drawn the following Resolution, which, when it comes to be moved, will, naturally, be divided, in a proper manner: "That it may be proper to repeal an Act, made in the seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled, 'An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for allowing a drawback 'of the Duties of Customs upon the exportation from this Kingdom of Coffee and Cocoa Nuts, of the produce of the said Colonies or Plantations; for discontinuing the drawbacks payable on China Earthenware exported to America; and for more effectually preventing the clandestine running of Goods in the said Colonies and Plantations.' - And 'that it may be proper to repeal an Act, made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled, 'An Act to discontinue, in such manner, and for such time, as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping of Goods, Wares and Merchandise, at the Town and within the Harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America.' And that it may be proper to repeal an Act, made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled, 'An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England.' And, also, that it may be proper to explain and amend an Act, made in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, entitled, 'An Act for the trial of Treasons committed out of the King's Dominions.'"

I wish, sir, to repeal the Boston Port Bill, because (independently of the dangerous precedent of suspending the rights of the subject during the King's pleasure) it was passed, I apprehend, with less regularity, and on more partial principles, than it ought. The Corporation of Boston was not heard before it was condemned. Other Towns, full as guilty as she was, have not had their Ports blocked up. Even the Restraining Bill of the present session does not go the length of the Boston Port Act. The same ideas of prudence, which induced you not to extend equal punishment to equal guilt, even when you were punishing, induce me, who mean not to chastise, but to reconcile, to be satisfied with the punishment already partially inflicted.

Ideas of prudence and accommodation to circumstances, prevent you from taking away the Charters of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, as you have taken away that of Massachusetts Colony, though the Crown has far less power in the two former Provinces than it enjoyed in the latter; and though the abuses have been full as great and as flagrant in the exempted as in the punished. The same reasons of prudence and accommodation have weight with me in restoring the Charter of Massachusetts Bay. Besides, sir, the Act which changes the Charter of Massachusetts is, in many particulars, so exceptionable, that if I did not wish absolutely to repeal, I would by all means desire to alter it; as several of its provisions tend to the subversion of all publick and private justice. Such, among others, is the power in the Governour to change the Sheriff at his pleasure, and to make a new Returning Officer for every special cause. It is shameful to behold such a regulation standing among English laws.

The Act for bringing persons, accused of committing Murder, under the orders of Government to England for trial, is but temporary. That Act has calculated the probable duration of our quarrel with the Colonies, and is accommodated to that supposed duration. I would hasten the happy moment of reconciliation; and, therefore, must, on my principle, get rid of that most justly obnoxious Act.

The Act of Henry the Eighth for the trial of treasons, I do not mean to take away, but to confine it to its proper bounds and original intention; to make it expressly for trial of treasons (and the greatest treasons maybe committed) in places where the jurisdiction of the Crown does not extend.

Having guarded the privileges of local Legislature, I would next secure to the Colonies a fair and unbiased judicature: for which purpose, sir, I propose the following Resolution: "That, from the time when the General Assembly or General Court of any Colony or Plantation in North America, shall have appointed, by Act of Assembly, duly confirmed, a settled salary to the offices of the Chief Justice and other Judges of the Superiour Court, it may be proper, that the said Chief Justice and other Judges of the Superiour Courts of such Colony, shall hold his and their office and offices during their good behaviour; and shall not be removed therefrom, but when the said removal shall be adjudged by his Majesty in Council, upon a hearing on complaint from the General Assembly, or on a complaint from the Governour or Council, or the House of Representatives severally, of the Colony in which the said Chief Justice and other Judges have exercised the said offices,"

The next Resolution relates to the Courts of Admiralty. It is this: "That it may be proper to regulate the Courts of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty, authorized by the 15th chapter of the fourth of George the Third, in such manner as to make the same more commodious to those who sue or are sued, in the said Courts, and to provide for the more decent maintenance of the Judges in the same."

These Courts I do not wish to take away; they are, in themselves, proper establishments. This Court is one of the capital securities of the Act of Navigation. The extent of its jurisdiction, indeed, has been increased; but this is altogether as proper, and is, indeed, on many accounts, more eligible, where new powers were wanted, than a Court absolutely new. But Courts incommodiously situated, in effect, deny justice; and a Court, partaking in the fruits of its own condemnation, is a robber. The Congress complain, and complain justly of this grievance. *

These are the three consequential propositions. I have thought of two or three more; but they came rather too near detail, and to the province of Executive Government, which I wish Parliament always to superintend, never to assume. If the first six are granted, congruity will carry the latter three. If not, the things that remain unrepealed will be, I hope, rather unseemly encumbrances on the building, than very materially detrimental to its strength and stability.

Here, sir, I should close, but that I plainly perceive some objections remain which I ought, if possible, to remove. The first will be, that in resorting to the doctrine of our ancestors, as contained in the preamble to the Chester Act, I prove too much; that the grievance, from a want of representation stated in that preamble, goes to the whole of Legislation as well as to Taxation. And that the Colonies, grounding themselves upon that doctrine, will apply it to all parts of Legislative authority.

To this objection, with all possible deference and humility, and wishing as little as any man living to impair the smallest particle of our supreme authority, I answer that the words are the words of Parliament and not mine; and that all false and inconclusive inferences drawn from them are not mine, for I heartily disclaim any such inference. I have chosen the words of an Act of Parliament, which Mr. Grenville, surely a tolerably zealous and very judicious advocate for the sovereignty of Parliament, formerly moved to have read at your table, in confirmation of his tenets. It is true that Lord Chatham considered these preambles as declaring strongly in favour of his opinions, He was a no less powerful advocate for the privileges of the Americans. Ought I not from hence to presume that these preambles are as favourable as possible to both, when properly understood; favourable both to the rights of Parliament and to the privilege of the dependencies of this Crown? But, sir, the object of grievance in my Resolution I have not taken from the Chester but from the Durham Act, which confines the hardship of want of representation to the case of Subsidies, and which, therefore, falls in, exactly, with the case of the Colonies. But, whether the unrepresented Counties were de jure or de facto bound, the preambles do not accurately distinguish; nor, indeed, was it necessary; for whether de jure or de facto, the Legislature thought the exercise of the power of taxing, as of right, or, as of fact, without right, equally a grievance and equally oppressive.

* The Solicitor General informed Mr. Burke, when the Resolutions were separately moved, that the grievance of the Judges partaking of the profits of the seizure had been redressed by office; accordingly the Resolution was amended.

I do not know that the Colonies have, in any general way, or in any cool hour, gone much beyond the demand of immunity in relation to taxes. It is not fair to judge of the temper or dispositions of any man, or any set of men, when they are composed and at rest, from their conduct or their expressions in a state of disturbance and irritation. It is, besides, a very great mistake to imagine that mankind follow up practically any speculative principle, either of government or of freedom, as far as it will go in argument and logical illation. We Englishmen stop very short of the principles upon which we support any given part of our Constitution, or even the whole of it together. I could easily, if I had not already tired you, give you very striking and convincing instances of it. This is nothing but what is natural and proper. All government, indeed, every human benefit and enjoyment, every virtue, and every prudent act is founded on compromise and barter. We balance inconveniences; we give and take; we remit some rights that we may enjoy others; and we choose rather to be happy citizens than subtle disputants. As we must give away some natural liberty to enjoy civil advantages, so we must sacrifice some civil liberties for the advantages to be derived from the communion and fellowship of a great Empire. But in all fair dealings the thing bought must bear some proportion to the purchase paid. None will barter away the immediate jewel of his soul. Though a great house is apt to make slaves haughty, yet it is purchasing a part of the artificial importance of a great Empire too dear, to pay for it all essential rights, and all the intrinsic dignity of human nature. None of us who would not risk his life, rather than fall under a Government purely arbitrary. But, although there are some amongst us who think our Constitution wants many improvements to make it a complete system of liberty, perhaps none, who are of that opinion, would think it right to aim at such improvements, by disturbing his country, and risking every thing that is dear to him. In every arduous enterprise we consider what we are to lose, as well as what we are to gain; and the more and better stake of liberty every people possess, the less they will hazard in a vain attempt to make it more. These are the cords of man. Man acts from adequate motives relative to his interest, and not on metaphysical speculations. Aristotle, the great master of reasoning, cautions us, and with great weight and propriety, against this species of delusive geometrical accuracy in moral arguments, as the most fallacious of all sophistry.

The Americans will have no interest contrary to the grandeur and glory of England, when they are not oppressed by the weight of it; and they will rather be inclined to respect the acts of a superintending legislature, when they see them the acts of that power which is itself the security, not the rival, of their secondary importance. In this assurance my mind most perfectly acquiesces; and I confess I feel not the least alarm, from the discontents which are to arise, from putting people at their ease; nor do I apprehend the destruction of this Empire from giving, by an act of free grace and indulgence, to two millions of my fellow-citizens some share of those rights, upon which I have always been taught to value myself.

It is said, indeed, that this power of granting, vested in American Assemblies, would dissolve the unity of the Empire, which was preserved entire, although Wales, and Chester, and Durham, were added to it. Truly, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what this unity, means; nor has it ever been heard of, that I know, in the constitutional policy of this country. The very idea of subordination of parts excludes this notion of simple and undivided unity. England is the head; but she is not the head and the member too. Ireland has ever had, from the beginning; a separate but not an independent Legislature; which, far from distracting, promoted the union of the whole. Every thing was sweetly and harmoniously disposed through both Islands for the conservation of English dominion and the communication of English liberties. I do not see that the same principlea might not be carried into twenty Islands, and with the same good effect. This is my model with regard to America, as far as the internal circumstances of the two countries are the same. I know no other unity of this Empire than I can draw from its example during these periods, when it seemed to my poor understanding more united than it is now, or than it is likely to be by the present methods.

But since I speak of these methods I recollect, Mr. Speaker, almost too late, that I promised, before I finished, to say something of the proposition of the noble Lord (North) on the floor, which has been so lately received, and stands on your Journals. I must be deeply concerned whenever it is my misfortune to continue a difference with the majority of this House. But as the reasons for that difference are my apology for thus troubling you, suffer me to state them in a very few words. I shall compress them into as small a body as I possibly can, having already debated that matter at large, when the question was before the Committee.

First, then, I cannot admit that proposition of a ransom by auction, because it is a mere project. It is a thing new, unheard of; supported by no experience, justified by no analogy, without example of our ancestors, or root in the Constitution.

It is neither regular Parliamentary Taxation, nor Colony grant. Experimentum in corpore vili, is a good rule, which will ever make me adverse to any trial of experiments on what is certainly the most valuable of all subjects - the peace of this Empire.

Secondly, it is an experiment which must be fatal, in the end, to our Constitution. For what is it but a scheme for taxing the Colonies in the ante-chamber of the noble Lord and his successors? To settle the quotas and proportions in this House, is clearly impossible. You, sir, may flatter yourself, you shall sit a state Auctioneer, with your hammer in your hand, and knock down to each Colony, as it bids. But to settle (on the plan laid down by the noble Lord) the true proportional payment for four or five and twenty Governments, according to the absolute and the relative wealth of each, and according to the British proportion of wealth and burthen, is a wild and chimerical notion. This new taxation must, therefore, come in by the back-door of the Constitution. Each quota must be brought to this House ready formed; you can neither add nor alter. You must register it. You can do nothing further. For on what grounds can you deliberate either before or after the proposition? You cannot hear the counsel for all these Provinces, quarrelling each on its own quantity of payment, and its proportion to others. If you should attempt it, the Committee of Provincial Ways and Means, or by whatever other name it will delight to be called, must swallow up all the time of Parliament.

Thirdly, it does not give satisfaction to the complaint of the Colonies. They complain, that they are taxed without their consent, you answer, that you will fix the sum at which they shall be taxed. That is, you give them the very grievance for the remedy. You tell them, indeed, that you will leave the mode to themselves. I really beg pardon: it gives me pain to mention it; but you must be sensible that you will not perform this part of the compact. For, suppose the Colonies were to lay the duties which furnished their contingent, upon the importation of your Manufactures; you know you would never suffer such a tax to be laid. You know, too, that you would not suffer many other modes of taxation. So that, when you come to explain yourself, it will be found, that you will neither leave to themselves the quantum nor the mode; nor, indeed, any thing. The whole is delusion from one end to the other.

Fourthly, this method of ransom by auction, unless it be universally accepted, will plunge you into great and inextricable difficulties. In what year of our Lord are the proportions of payments to be settled? To say nothing of the impossibility that Colony Agents should have general powers of taxing the Colonies at their discretion; consider, I implore you, that the communication by special messages, and orders between these Agents and their constituents, on each variation of the case, when the parties come to contend together, and to dispute on their relative proportions, will be a matter of delay, perplexity, and confusion, that never can have an end.

If all the Colonies do not appear at the outcry, what is the condition of those Assemblies, who offer, by themselves, or their Agents, to tax themselves up to your ideas of their proportion? The refractory Colonies, who refuse all composition, will remain taxed only to your old impositions, which, however grievous in principle, are trifling as to production. The obedient Colonies in this scheme are heavily taxed; the refractory remain unburthened. What will you do? Will you lay new and heavier taxes by Parliament on the disobedient? Pray consider in what way you can do it. You are perfectly convinced that in the way of taxing, you can do nothing but at the Ports. Now suppose it is Virginia that refuses to appear at your auction, while Maryland and North Carolina bid handsomely for their ransom, and are taxed to your quota: how will you put these Colonies on a par? Will you tax the Tobacco of Virginia? If you do, you give its death wound to your English revenue at home, and to one of the very greatest articles of your own foreign trade. If you tax the import of that rebellious Colony, what do you tax but your own Manufactures, or the Goods of some other obedient, and already well taxed Colony? Who has said one word on this labyrinth of detail, which bewilders you more and more as you enter into it? Who has presented, who can present you, with a clue, to lead you out of it? I think, sir, it is impossible, that you should not recollect that the Colony bounds are so implicated in one another (you know it by your other experiments in the Bill for prohibiting the New England Fishery) that you can lay no possible restraints on almost any of them which may not be presently eluded, if you do not confound the innocent with the guilty, and burthen those whom upon every principle, you ought to exonerate. He must be grossly ignorant of America, who thinks, that, without falling into this confusion of all rules of equity and policy, you can restrain any single Colony, especially Virginia and Maryland, the central, and most important of them all.

Let it also be considered, that, either in the present confusion you settle a permanent contingent, which will and must be trifling; and then you have no effectual revenue; or you change the quota at every exigency; and then on every new repartition you will have a new quarrel.

Reflect, besides, that when you have fixed a quota for every Colony, you have not provided for prompt and punctual payment. Suppose one, two, five, ten years arrears. You cannot issue a Treasury extent against the failing Colony. You must make new Boston Port Bills, new Restraining laws, new Acts for dragging Men to England for trial. You must send out new Fleets, new Armies. All is to begin again. From this day forward the Empire is never to know an hour's tranquillity. An intestine fire will be kept alive in the bowels of the Colonies, which one time or other must consume this whole Empire. I allow, indeed, that the Empire of Germany raises her Revenue and her Troops by quotas and contingents; but the Revenue of the Empire, and the Army of the Empire, is the worst revenue, and the worst army, in the world.

Instead of a standing revenue, you will, therefore, have a perpetual quarrel. Indeed, the noble Lord, who proposed this project of a ransom by auction, seemed himself to be of that opinion. His project was rather designed for breaking the union of the Colonies, than for establishing a revenue. He confessed, he apprehended that his proposal would not be to their taste. I say, this scheme of disunion seems to be at the bottom of the project; for I will not suspect that the noble Lord meant nothing but merely to delude the Nation by an airy phantom which he never intended to realize. But, whatever his views may be, as I propose the peace and union of the Colonies as the very foundation of my plan, it cannot accord with one whose foundation is perpetual discord.

Compare the two. This I offer to give you is plain and simple. The other full of perplexed and intricate mazes. This is mild; that harsh. This is found, by experience, effectual for its purposes; the other is a new project. This is universal; the other calculated for certain Colonies only. This is immediate in its conciliation operation; the other remote, contingent, full of hazard. Mine is what becomes the dignity of a ruling people; gratuitous, unconditional, and not held out as matter of bargain and sale. I have done my duty in proposing it to you. I have, indeed, tired you by a long discourse; but this is the misfortune of those to whose influence nothing will be conceded, and who must win every inch of their ground by argument. You have heard me with goodness. May you decide with wisdom! For my part, I feel my mind greatly disburthened by what I have done to day. I have been the less fearful of trying your patience, because, on this subject I mean to spare it altogether in future. I have this comfort, that in every stage of the American affairs, I have steadily opposed the measures that have produced the confusion, and may bring on the destruction of this Empire. I now go so far as to risk a proposal of my own. If I cannot give peace to my country, I give it to my conscience.

But what (says the financier) is peace to us without money? Your plan gives us no revenue. No! But it does. For it secures to the subject the prover of refusal; the first of all revenues. Experience is a cheat, and fact a liar, if this power in the subject of proportioning his grant, or of not granting at all, has not been found the richest mine of revenue ever discovered by the skill or by the fortune of man. It does not, indeed, vote you one hundred and fifty-two thousand seven hundred and fifty two Pounds eleven Shillings two and three-quarter Pence, nor and other paltry limited sum. But it gives the strong box itself, the fund, the bank, from whence only revenues can arise amongst a people sensible of freedom: Posita luditur arca. Cannot you in England; cannot you at this time of day; cannot you, a House of Commons, trust to the principle which has raised so mighty a revenue, and accumulated a debt of near one hundred and forty millions in this country? Is this principle to be true in England, and false every where else? Is it not true in Ireland? Has it not hitherto been true in the Colonies? Why should you presume, that, in any country, a body duly constituted for any function, will neglect to perform its duty, and abdicate its trust? Such a presumption would go against all Governments in all modes. But, in truth, this dread of penury of supply, from a free assembly, has no foundation in nature. For, first observe, that besides the desire which all men have naturally of supporting the honour of their own Government; that sense of dignity, and that security to property, which ever attends freedom, has a tendency to increase the stock of the free community. Most may be taken where most is accumulated. And what is the soil or climate where experience has not uniformly proved, that the voluntary flow of heaped-up plenty, bursting from the weight of its own rich luxuriance, has ever run with a more copious stream of revenue, than could be squeezed from the dry husks of oppressed indigence, by the straining of all the politick machinery in the world.

Next we know, that parties must ever exist in a free country. We know too, that the emulations of such parties, their contradictions, their reciprocal necessities, their hopes and their fears, must send them all in their turns to him that holds the balance of the state. The parties are the gamesters, but Government keeps the table, and is sure to be the winner in the end. When this game is played, I really think it is more to be feared, that the people will be exhausted, than that Government will not be supplied. Whereas, whatever is got by acts of absolute power ill obeyed, because odious, or by contracts ill kept, because constrained, will be narrow, feeble, uncertain, and precarious. "Ease would retract vows made in pain, as violent and void."

I, for one, protest against compounding our demands; I declare against compounding, for a poor limited sum, the immense, overgrowing, eternal debt, which is due to a generous Government from protected freedom. And so may I speed in the great object I propose to you, as I think it would not only be an act of injustice, but would be the worst economy in the world, to compel the Colonies to a sum certain, either in the way of ransom, or in the way of compulsory compact.

But to clear up my ideas on this subject - a revenue from America transmitted hither - do not delude yourselves - you never can receive it; no, not a Shilling. We have experience that from remote countries it is not to be expected. If, when you attempted to extract revenue from Bengal, you were obliged to return in loan what you had taken in imposition, what can you expect from North America? for certainly, if ever there was a country qualified to produce wealth, it is India; or an institution fit for the transmission, it is the East India Company. America has none of these aptitudes. If America gives you taxable objects, on which you lay your duties here, and gives you, at the same time, a surplus by a foreign sale of her commodities to pay the duties on these objects which you tax at home, she has performed her part to the British Revenue. But with regard to her own internal establishments, she may, I doubt not she will, contribute in moderation. I say in moderation, for she ought not to be permitted to exhaust herself. She ought to be reserved to a war, the weight of which, with the enemies that we are most likely to have, must be considerable in her quarter of the globe. There she may serve you, and serve you essentially.

For that service, for all service, whether of Revenue, Trade, or Empire, my trust is in her interest in the British Constitution. My hold of the Colonies is in the close affection which grows from common names, from kindred blood, from similar privileges, and equal protection. These are ties which, though light as air, are as strong as links of iron. Let the Colonies always keep the idea of their civil rights associated with your Government - they will cling and grapple to you, and no force under Heaven will be of power to tear them from their allegiance. But let it be once understood that your Government may be one thing, and their privileges another; that these two things may exist without any mutual relation, the cement is gone; the cohesion is loosened, and every thing hastens to decay and dissolution. As long as you have the wisdom to keep the sovereign authority of this country as the sanctuary of liberty, the sacred temple consecrated to our common faith, wherever - the chosen race and sons of England worship freedom, they will turn their faces towards you. The more they multiply the more friends you will have; the more ardently they love liberty, the more perfect will be their obedience. Slavery they can have any where; it is a weed that grows in every soil. They may have it from Spain, they may have it from Prussia. But until you become lost to all feeling of your true interest and your natural dignity, freedom they can have from none but you. This is the commodity of price, of which you have the monopoly. This is the true Act of Navigation, which binds to you the commerce of the Colonies, and through them secures to you the wealth of the world. Deny them this participation of freedom, and you break that sole bond which originally made, and must still preserve, the unity of the Empire. Do not entertain so weak an imagination, as that your Registers and your Bonds, your Affidavits and your Sufferances, your Cockets and your Clearances; are what form the great securities of your commerce. Do not dream that your Letters of Office, and your Instructions, and your Suspending Clauses, are the things that hold together the great contexture of this mysterious whole. These things do not make your Government. Dead instruments, passive tools as they are, it is the spirit of the English communion that gives all their life and efficacy to them. It is the spirit of the English Constitution, which, infused through the mighty mass, pervades, feeds, unites, invigorates, vivifies, every part of the Empire, even down to the minutest member.

Is it not the same virtue which does every thing for us here in England? Do you imagine, then, that it is the Land Tax Act which raises your Revenue; that it is the annual vote in the Committee of Supply which gives you your Army? or that it is the Mutiny Bill which inspires it with bravery and discipline? No! surely no! it is the love of the people; it is their attachment to their Government, from the sense of the deep stake they have in such a glorious institution, which gives you your Army and your Navy, and infuses into both that liberal obedience, without which your Army would be a base rabble, and your Navy nothing but rotten timber.

All this, I know well enough, will sound wild and chimerical to the profane herd of those vulgar and mechanical politicians, who have no place among us; a sort of people who think that nothing exists but what is gross and material; and who, therefore, far from being qualified to be directors of the great movement, of Empire, are not fit to turn a wheel in the machine. But to men truly initiated and rightly taught, these ruling and master principles which, in the opinion of such men as I have mentioned, have no substantial existence, are in truth every thing, and all in all. Magnanimity in politicks is not seldom the truest wisdom; and a great Empire and little minds go ill together. If we are conscious of our situation, and glow with zeal to fill our places as becomes our station and ourselves, we ought to auspicate all our publick proceedings on America, with the old warning of the Church, Sursum corda! We ought to elevate our minds to the greatness of that trust to which the order of Providence has called us. By advertising to the dignity of this high calling, our ancestors have turned a savage wilderness into a glorious Empire, and have made the most extensive and the only honourable conquests, not by destroying, but by promoting the wealth, the number, the happiness of the human race. Let us get an American Revenue as we have got an American Empire. English privileges have made it all that it is; English privileges alone wilt make it all it can be.

In full confidence of this unalterable truth, I now (quod felix faustumque sit) lay the first stone of the Temple of Peace; and I now move you,

"That the Colonies and Plantations of Great Britain, "in North America, consisting of fourteen separate Governments, and containing two millions and upwards of free "inhabitants, have not had the liberty and privilege of electing and sending any Knights and Burgesses, or others, to "represent them in the High Court of Parliament." *

The question being put on this Resolution, Mr. Burke was answered by the Attorney General, who displayed great dexterity and address in his observations on the plan. The other speakers on that side, were, Mr. Jenkinson, Mr. Cornwall, Lord Frederick Campbell, and others. The motions were supported by Lord John Cavendish, Mr. Hotham, Mr. Tuffnell, Mr. Sawbridge, and by Mr. Fox, who spoke with the greatest ability and spirit.

The Ministerial side did not, in general, so much object to this plan, as repeat and enforce their general arguments on the supremacy of the British Parliament, and in favour of the policy and necessity of American Taxation. They denied that the American Assemblies ever had, at any time, a legal power of granting a Revenue to the Crown; that this was the privilege of Parliament only, and could not be communicated to any other body whatsoever. For this,

Mr. Jenkinson quoted the famous Act for securing the rights and liberties of the subject, commonly called the Declaration of Rights, which, as they insisted, clearly enforced the exclusive right of taxing in Parliament all parts

* During this debate the standing order, for the exclusion of strangers, was strictly enforced,

"On this motion, and on the whole matter, the debate was long and animated. It was objected, in general, that these Resolutions abandoned the whole object for which we were contending. That in words, indeed, they did not give up the right of taxing; but they did so in effect. The first Resolution, they said, was artfully worded as containing in appearance, nothing but matters of fact; but if adopted, consequences would follow highly prejudicial to the publick good. That the mere truth of a proposition did not, of course, make it necessary or proper to resolve it. As they had frequently resolved not to admit the unconstitutional claims of the Americans, they could not admit Resolutions directly leading to them. They had no assurance, that if they should adopt these propositions, the Americans would make any dutiful returns on their side; and thus the scheme, pursued through so many difficulties, of compelling that refractory people to contribute their fair proportion to the expenses of the whole Empire, would fall to the ground. The House of Lords would not, they said, permit another plan, somewhat of the same kind, so much as to lie on their table; and the House of Commons had in this session, already adopted one, which they judged to be conciliatory upon a ground more consistent with the supremacy of Parliament. It was asserted that the American Assemblies had made provision upon former occasions; but this, they said, was only when pressed by their own immediate danger; and for their own local use. But if the dispositions of the Colonies had been as favourable as they were represented, still it was denied that the American Assemblies ever had a legal power of granting a revenue to the Crown. This they insisted to be the privilege of Parliament only; and a privilege which could not be communicated to any other body whatsoever. In support of this doctrine, they quoted the following clause from that palladium of the English Constitution, and of the rights and liberties of the subject, commonly called, the Bill, or Declaration, of Rights: viz. that "Levying money for, or to the use of "the Crown, by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament, "for a longer time or in other manner, than the same is, or shall be "granted, is illegal."

"This clause, they insisted, clearly enforced the exclusive right in Parliament of taxing every part of the Empire. And this right they said, was not only prudent, but necessary. The right of taxation must be inherent in the supreme power; and, being the most essential of all others, was the most necessary, not only to be reserved in theory, but exercised in practice; or it would, in effect, be lost, and all other powers along with it. This principle was carried so far, that it was said any Minister ought to be impeached, who suffered the grant of any sort of revenue from the Colonies to the Crown. That such a practice, in time of war, might possibly be tolerated from the necessity of

of the King's Dominions. The Article is as follows, that, "Levying money for, or to the use of, the Crown, by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament, for a longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal." This, he said, was not only prudent but necessary. The right of taxing was inherent in the supreme power; and by being the most essential of all powers, was the most necessary, not only to be reserved in theory, but exercised in practice; or it would, in effect, be lost, and all other powers along with it. It was, he said, a great mistake, that the establishment of a Parliament in Ireland precluded Great Britain from taxing that Kingdom; that the right of taxing it had always been maintained and exercised too, whenever it was thought expedient, and ought, undoubtedly, always to be so, whenever the British Parliament judged proper, having no other rule in this respect but its own discretion; that all inferior assemblies were only like the Corporate Towns in England, who had a power, like them, of making By-laws, and nothing more. He recommended the example of the French Government in their Provinces, called Pais d'Etats; where, though the people seem to grant, yet, in reality, the mode alone of raising the tax is left to the Province; the Crown always fixing the sum to be raised. These grants are, therefore, not free, but, as one of their own writers, Voltaire, calls them, repertus libres, reputed free; and that the people were so well satisfied with this reputed freedom, that they never have refused to grant, except once, when the states of Languedoc were refractory; but an Army being sent to reduce them, they were brought to obedience, and have been ever since perfectly quiet. This was the substance of Mr. Jenkinson's speech.

Lord Frederick Campbell took up the same maxims, and maintained them with great warmth, declaring that he thought any Minister ought to be impeached who suffered the grant of any sort of revenue from the Colonies to the Crown. Indeed, it was possible that such a practice in time of war, from the necessity of the case, might be tolerated, but that a revenue in time of peace could not be granted by the Assemblies, without subverting the Constitution.

Mr. Jenkinson moved the previous question.

And the previous question being put, "That that question be now put?" the House divided: Ayes, 78; Noes, 270.

So it passed in the Negative.

the case; but that a revenue, in time of peace, could not be granted by any of the Assemblies, without subverting the Constitution. In the warmth of prosecuting this idea, it was asserted, by more than one gentleman on that side, that the establishment of a Parliament in Ireland, did not by any means preclude Great Britain from taxing that Kingdom whenever it was thought necessary. That that right had always been maintained, and exercised too, whenever it was judged expedient; and that the British Parliament had no other rule in that exercise, than its own discretion. That all inferior assemblies in this Empire, were only like the Corporate Towns in England, which had a power, like them, of making By-laws, for their own municipal government, and nothing more.

"On the other side, it was urged, that the clause in the Declaration of Rights, so much relied on, was calculated merely to restrain the prerogative, from the raising of any money within the Realm, without the consent of Parliament; but that it did not at all reach, nor was intended to interfere with, the taxes levied, or grants passed by legal Assemblies out of the Kingdom, for the publick service. On the contrary, Parliament knew, at the time of passing that law, that the Irish grants were subsisting, and taxes constantly levied in consequence of them, without their once thinking, either then, or at any other time, of censuring the practice, or condemning the mode as unconstitutional. It was also said, that different Parliaments, at different periods, had not only recognised the right, but gratefully acknowledged the benefit which the publick derived from the taxes levied, and the grants passed by the American Assemblies. As to the distinction taken, of a time of war, and the necessity of the case, they said it was frivolous and wholly groundless. The power of the Subject in granting, or of the Crown in receiving, no way differs, in time of war, from the same powers in time of peace; nor is any distinction on such a supposition made in the article of the Bill of Rights. They argued, therefore, that this article of the Bill of Rights is confined to what it was always thought confined, the prerogative in this Kingdom; and bound, indeed, the Crown; but could not, in securing the rights and liberties of the Subject in this Kingdom, intend to annihilate them every where else. That as the Constitution had permitted the Irish Parliament and American Assemblies to make grants to the Crown; and that experience had shown, that these grants had produced both satisfaction and revenue, it was absurd to risk all in favour of theories of supremacy, unity, sovereign rights, and other names, which hitherto had led to nothing but confusion and beggary on all sides, and would continue to produce the same miserable effects as long as they were persisted in. That the mover had very wisely avoided these speculative questions, and confined himself to experience; and it would be well if they could persuade themselves to follow that example. The previous question was moved on the first proposition, and carried by 270 to 78." - Ann. Regis.

FOURTH SERIES.

Mr. Burke then moved, That the said Colonies and Plantations have been made liable to and bounden by several subsidies, payments, rates, and taxes, given and granted by Parliament, though the said Colonies and Plantations have not their Knights and Burgesses in the said High Court of Parliament, of their own election, to represent the condition of their country, by lack whereof they have been often times touched and grieved by subsidies given, granted, and assented to in the said Court, in a manner prejudicial to the Commonwealth, quietness, rest, and peace of the subjects inhabiting within the same.

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out from the word "country" to the end of the question.

And the question being put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question;

It passed in the Negative.

Then the main question, so amended, being proposed, That the said Colonies and Plantations have been made liable to, and bounden by, several subsidies, payments, rates, and taxes, given and granted by Parliament, though the said Colonies and Plantations have not their Knights and Burgesses in the said High Court of Parliament, of their own election, to represent the condition of their country;

And the previous question being put, that that question be now put;

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Burke then moved, and the question being proposed, That from the distance of the said Colonies, and from other circumstances, no method hath hitherto been devised for procuring a representation in Parliament for the said Colonies.

And the previous question being put, that that question be now put;

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Burke then moved, and the question being proposed, That each of the said Colonies hath, within itself, a body chosen in part, or in the whole, by the Freeman, Freeholders, or other free Inhabitants thereof, commonly called the General Assembly or General Court, with powers legally to raise, levy, and assess, according to the several usages of such Colonies, Duties and Taxes, towards defraying all sorts of publick services;

And the previous question being put, that that question be now put;

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Burke then moved, and the question being put, That the said General Assemblies, General Courts, or other bodies legally qualified as aforesaid, have, at sundry times, freely granted several large Subsidies and Publick Aids for his Majesty's service, according to their abilities, when required thereto, by Letter from one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State; and that their right to grant the same, and their cheerfulness and sufficiency in the said Grants, have been, at sundry times, acknowledged by Parliament;

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Burke then moved, and the question being put, That it hath been found, by experience, that the manner of granting the said Supplies and Aids by the said General Assemblies hath been more agreeable to the inhabitants of the said Colonies, and more beneficial and conducive to the publick service than the mode of giving and granting Aids and Subsidies in Parliament, to be raised and paid in the said Colonies;

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Burke then moved, and the question being proposed, That it may be proper to repeal an Act, made in the seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America, for allowing a Drawback of the Duties of Customs upon the exportation from this Kingdom of Coffee and Cocoa Nuts, of the produce of the said Colonies or Plantations; for discounting the drawbacks payable on China Earthen Ware exported to America, and for more effectually preventing the clandestine running of goods in the said Colonies and Plantations;" and also that it may be proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of his present Majesty's reign, entitled "An Act to discontinue in such manner, and for such time, as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping, of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, at the Town, and within the Harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America;" and also, that it may be proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of his present Majesty's reign, entitled "An Act for the impartial Administration of Justice, in the cases of persons questioned for any acts done by them in the execution of the Law, or for the suppression of Riots and Tumults in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" and also, that it may be proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of his present Majesty's reign, entitled "An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" and also, that it may be proper to explain and amend an Act made in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, entitled "An Act for the trial of Treasons committed out of the King's Dominions."

And an objection being made, that the said proposed question was a complicated question, including several distinct propositions, the same was, by consent of the House, divided into five separate questions.

And the first question being proposed, That it may be proper to repeal an Act made in the seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for allowing a Drawback of the Duties of Customs, upon the exportation from this Kingdom of Coffee and Cocoa Nuts, of the produce of the said Colonies or Plantations; for discontinuing the Drawbacks payable on China Earthen Ware exported to America; and for more effectually preventing the clandestine running of Goods in the said Colonies and Plantations;"

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out the words "may be" and inserting the word "is" instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words "may be" stand part of the question;

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the word "is" be inserted instead thereof;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put, That it is proper to repeal an Act made in the seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for allowing a Drawback of the Duties of Customs, upon the exportation from this Kingdom of Coffee and Cocoa Nuts, of the produce of the said Colonies or Plantations; for discontinuing the Drawbacks payable on China Earthen Ware exported to America; and for more effectually preventing the clandestine running of Goods in the said Colonies and Plantations;"

It passed in the Negative.

And the second question being proposed, That it may be proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act to discontinue, in such manner, and for such time, as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping, of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, at the Town, and within the Harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America;"

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out the words "may be" and inserting the word "is" instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words "may be" stand part of the question;

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the word "is" be inserted instead thereof;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put, That it is proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An act to discontinue in such manner, and for such time, as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping, of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, at the Town, and within the Harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America;"

It passed in the Negative.

And the third question being proposed, That it may be proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for the impartial Administration of Justice in the cases of persons questioned for any acts done by them in the execution of the Law, or for the suppression of Riots and Tumults in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;"

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out the words "may be" and inserting the word "is" instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words "may be" stand part of the question;

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the word "is" be inserted instead thereof;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put, That it is proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for the impartial Administration of Justice in the cases of persons, questioned for any acts done by them in the execution of the Law, or for the suppression of Riots and Tumults in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;"

It passed in the Negative.

And the fourth question being proposed, That it may be proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;"

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out the words "may be" and inserting the word "is" instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words "may be" stand part of the question;

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the word "is" be inserted instead thereof;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put, That it is proper to repeal an Act made in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled "An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;"

It passed in the Negative.

And the fifth question being proposed, That it may be proper to explain and amend an Act made in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, entitled "An Act for the trial of Treasons committed out of the King's Dominions;"

An amendment was proposed to be made to the question, by leaving out the words "may be" and inserting the word "is" instead thereof.

And the question being put, that the words "may be" stand part of the question;

It passed in the Negative.

And the question being put, that the word "is" be inserted instead thereof;

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put, That it is proper to explain and amend an Act made in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, entitled "An Act for the trial of Treasons committed out of the King's Dominions;"

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Burke then moved, and the question being put, That from the time when the General Assembly or General Court of any Colony or Plantation in North America shall have appointed, by Act of Assembly, duly confirmed, a settled salary to the offices of the Chief Justice and Judges of the Superiour Courts, it may be proper that the said Chief Justice and other Judges of the Superiour Courts of such Colony shall hold his and their office and offices during their good behaviour, and shall not be removed therefrom, but when the said removal shall be adjudged by his Majesty in Council, upon hearing on complaint from the General Assembly, or on a complaint from the Governour, or the Council, or the House of Representatives, severally, of the Colony in which the said Chief Justice and other Judges have exercised the said office;

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Burke then moved, and the question being proposed, That it may be proper to regulate the Courts of Admiralty and Vice Admiralty, authorized by the fifteenth chapter of the fourth George the Third, in such a manner as to make the same more commodious to those who sue, or are sued, in the said Courts;

And the previous question being put, that that question be now put;

It passed in the Negative.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 27, 1775.

Mr. Hartley rose and said:

I find myself under the necessity of making some apology to the House for the trouble which I am going to give them this day, and to assure them that it is with the greatest deference that I presume to obtrude any sentiments of mine, upon the important subject of America. Though I have so lately had the honour of a seat in this House, yet I have for many years turned my thoughts and attention to matters of publick concern and national policy. This question of America is now of many years standing - of the greatest publick notoriety, as to the facts upon which it turns; and every opinion has been so fully debated, over and over, that any man, who has given his mind to publick business, may be supposed equally informed, out of the House, as in it.

When I threw out the Propositions, casually, before Christmas, which I shall offer more formally to you to-day, my view was in no sort hostile to the Administration. I saw the difficulty that we were got into by our own precipitancy; that unhappy dilemma, which offered nothing but ruin in going forward, or disgrace in the retreat. I was in hopes, from some phrases dropped by the noble Lord at the head of the Treasury, in the beginning of the session, of others being more sanguine and more impatient than himself, that he, at least, would have shewn some disposition to relent; and I still believe, if he were at liberty to follow his own inclination and judgement, that it would be so. I am the more warranted in thinking so, from the proposition which the noble Lord himself offered to the House some time ago, [See Folio 1598.] There was in that proposition a show of conciliation to captivate one side of the House, and sufficient to betray what were his own wishes; but on the other side there was the reality of every unrelenting and vindictive measure annexed, to prove that there still were others more sanguine and more impatient than himself, over whom, with all his abilities, with all his eloquence, with all the advantages of his situation, he could not maintain his ascendant. Whatever struggles the noble Lord may have had with himself, or his friends, they are all at an end; the die is cast for war with America. It was found that any conciliatory proposition must have been, in some degree, a concession, which none of his unrelenting friends would consent to.

However, by the noble Lord's Proposition, there is one concession made to America, under the authority of this House, which cannot be recalled, and which, finally and conclusively, condemns the conduct of every Administration for these ten years past, one excepted - I mean the repeal of the Stamp Act. If it can be proper now to offer to the Colonies to pay upon requisition, what can this Nation say for having kept out of the only right road for ten years? How can we censure the Colonies for any errors committed by them, which were the consequences of our own beginning at the wrong end? Though a threat is now annexed to the noble Lord's requisition, yet if, at first, we had begun with a requisition instead of taxing, it would have been more just and prudent. There could be no justice or prudence in threatening a people who had always contributed most freely; who never would have called our supposed right in question, but for our misapplication of it. Therefore, sir, when I have brought back the noble Lord's compulsory requisition to my free requisition, it stands confessed, upon the very nature of his proposition itself, that I have set it upon its own true original ground.

There is another objection to the noble Lord's plan, which, as I have mentioned it upon a former occasion, I shall only remind you of in a few words: I mean a breach of faith with the Colonies. A Secretary of State writes, in 1769, a circular letter to the Colonies to assure them that you will never raise a revenue by taxing. A few years after, upon a negotiation with the East India Company, the three-penny Tea Tax becomes not only merely a quit-rent for the point of honour, but rises to an actual revenue. Then you plead that you did not break your word, as the revenue arising was not in your original intentions, but only casual, from a regulation of trade. But what can you say now? The noble Lord boasts that he has put the question upon the true ground, a demand for a substantial revenue; a demand attended with threats of compulsion. What is this less than raising a revenue by a tax?

But, in any case, let the noble Lord think what he will of his proposition, why has he not, in so many weeks, given it some practicable shape? Why has he not offered some act of Parliament to give it effect? However, as he has omitted that, I shall take the proposition without its objectionable parts, and propose an Address to the King to give it force; in which motion, I hope to meet with the support of those gentlemen who gave it countenance originally, when it came from the noble Lord. I shall give the whole substance of the proposition, only leaving out, in the Address to the King, any threats of the compulsion which you meditate in reserve. If you think that you have the right of taxing, I pass it over in silence; if you have the power, I do not - I cannot take that away. Then make a free requisition, and be contented to keep to yourselves the satisfaction of thinking, that you have something in reserve, in case of non-compliance. Keep that sub silentio, at least, till you find that it becomes necessary. I am not an advocate either for the right or the expediency of taxing the Americans, but the contrary. However, as far as we go the same road of requisitions, let us go together.

As what I have to offer will be founded upon requisitions to the Colonies, I will endeavour to answer an objection beforehand, which I have heard in this House: it is to the plan of Royal requisition. This objection to the interference of the Royal name, comes from a side of the House from which one should least have expected it. However, if this be an objection, mine are not Royal requisitions. My motion originates from the House of Commons, to desire the King, as the Executive Magistrate, to put their plan into effect. If the power of making requisitions to the Colonies is not in the King, my motion is to give the authority and sanction of Parliament to this measure. It is so far from being my proposition to enable the Crown to raise what supply it can from America, independent of Parliament, that my motion is the very first which has ever had in contemplation to lay a Parliamentary control upon that power, and to require that all answers from America shall be laid before this House for the very purpose of controlling that power in the Crown. I have so doubly guarded that point, that my motion is not even for the Crown to demand a supply from America, but for services to be performed in America, for the defence, security, and protection of the Colonies themselves.

I would wish to state to the House the merits of this question, of requisitions to the Colonies, and to see upon what principles it is founded; to revise and settle the accounts between Great Britain and her Colonies; and then, upon a foundation of distributive justice, to come to some settlement. We hear of nothing now but the protection which we have given to them; of the immense expense incurred on their account. We are told that they have done nothing for themselves; that they pay no taxes; in short, every thing is asserted about America to serve the present turn, without the least regard to truth. I would have these matters fairly sifted out.

To begin with the late war. The Americans turned the success of the war at both ends of the line. General Monkton took Beausejour, in Nova Scotia, with fifteen hundred Provincial Troops and about two hundred Regulars. Sir William Johnson, in the other part of America, changed the face of the war to success with a Provincial Army, which took Baron Dieskau prisoner. But, sir, the glories of the war, under the united British and American arms, are recent in every ones' memory. Suffice it to decide this question, that the Americans bore, even in our judgement, more than their full proportion; that this House did annually vote them an acknowledgement of their zeal and strenuous efforts, and a compensation for the excess of their zeal and expenses, above their due proportion. They kept, one year with another, near twenty-five thousand men on foot, and lost in the war the flower of their youth. How strange must it appear to them to hear of nothing down to March 14, 1763, but encomiums upon their active zeal and strenuous efforts; and then, no longer after than the year 1764, in such a trice of time, to see the tide turn, and from that hour to this to hear it asserted that they were a burthen upon the common cause; asserted even in that same Parliament, which had voted them compensations for the liberality and excess of their services.

Nor did they stint their services to North America; they followed the British arms out of their Continent to the Havana and Martinique, after the complete conquest of America. And so they had done in the preceding war. They were not grudging of their exertions; they were at the siege of Carthage, yet what was Carthage to them, but as members of the common cause, of the glory of this country? In that war, too, sir, they took Louisbourg from the French, single-handed, without any European assistance: as mettled an enterprise as any in our history! - an everlasting memorial of the zeal, courage, and perseverance of the Troops of New England. The men themselves dragged the cannon over a morass which had always been thought impassable, where neither horses nor oxen could go, and they carried the shot upon their backs. And what was their reward for this forward and spirited enterprise? for the reduction of this American Dunkirk? Their reward, sir, you know very well; it was given up for a barrier to the Dutch. The only conquest in that war which you had to give up, which would have been an effectual barrier to them against the French power in Amerwa, though conquered by themselves, was surrendered for a foreign barrier. As a substitute for this. you settle Halifax for a Place d'Armes, leaving the limits of the Province of Nova Scotia as a matter of contest with the French, which could not fail to prove, as it did, the cause of another war. Had you kept Louisbourg, instead of settling Halifax, the Americans may say, at least that there would not have been that pretext for imputing the late war to their account. It has been their forwardness in your cause that made them the objects of the French resentment. In the war of 1744, at your requisition, they were the aggressors with the French in America. We know the orders given to Monsieur D'Anville, to destroy and lay all their Sea-port Towns in ashes; and we know the cause of that resentment: it was to revenge their conquest of Whenever Great Britain has declared war, they have taken their part. They were engaged in King William's war and Queen Anne's, even in their infancy. They conquered Acadia in the last century for us, and we then gave it up. Again, in Queen Anne's war they conquered Nova Scotia, which, from that time, has always belonged to Great Britain. They have been engaged in more than one expedition to Canada, ever foremost to partake of honour and danger with the mother country.

Well, sir, what have we done for them? Have we conquered the country for them from the Indians? Have we cleared it? Have we drained it? Have we made it habitable? What have we done for them? I believe precisely nothing at all, but just keeping watch and ward over their trade, that they should receive nothing but from ourselves, and at our own price. I will not positively say, that we have spent nothing; though I do not recollect any such article, upon our Journals; but I mean, not any material expense in setting them out as Colonists. The Royal Military Government of Nova Scotia cost, indeed, not a little sum; above £500,000 for its plantation, and its first years. Had your other Colonies cost any thing similar, either in their outset or support, there would have been something to say on that side; but, instead of that, they have been left to themselves for one hundred or one hundred and fifty years, upon the fortune and capital of private adventurers, to encounter every difficulty and danger. What Towns have we built for them? What deserts halve we cleared? What country have we conquered for them from the Indians? Name the Officers; name the Troops; the Expeditions; their dates. Where are they to be found? Not in the Journals of this Kingdom. They are no where to be found.

In all the wars which have been common to us and them, they have taken their full share. But in all their own dangers, in all the difficulties belonging separately to their situation, in all the Indian wars which did not immediately concern us, we left them to themselves, to struggle their way through. For the whim of a Minister, you can bestow half a million to build a Town, and to plant a Royal Colony of Nova Scotia; a greater sum than you have bestowed upon every other Colony together, since their foundation.

And notwithstanding all these, which are the real facts, now that they have struggled through their difficulties, and begin to hold up their heads, and to shew that Empire which promises to be the foremost in the world, we claim them and theirs, as implicitly belonging to us, without any consideration of their own rights. We charge them with ingratitude, without the least regard to truth, just as if this Kingdom had, for a century and a half, attended to no other object; as if all our revenue, all our power, all our thought, had been bestowed upon them, and all our national debt had been contracted in the Indian wars of America, totally forgetting the subordination in commerce and manufactures, in which we have bound them; and for which, at least, we owe them help towards their protection.

Look at the preamble of the Act of Navigation, and every American Act, and see if the interests of this country is not the avowed object. If they make a Hat or a piece of Steel, an Act of Parliament calls it a nuisance: a Tilting Hammer, a Steel Furnace, must be abated in America as a nuisance. Is it so with their fellow-subjects on this side of the Atlantic? Are the Hats and Cloths of Gloucestershire nuisances? Are the Tilting Hammers of Pontipool nuisances? Are the Cutleries of Sheffield and Birmingham nuisances? Are the Stockings of Nottingham nuisances? Are the Linens of Scotland, Ireland, or Broomsgrove, nuisances? Are the Woollen Cloths of Yorkshire, the Crapes of Norwich, or the Cottons of Manchester, nuisances? Sir, I speak from facts. I call your Books of Statutes and Journals to witness. With the least recollection, every one must acknowledge the truth of these facts.

But, it is said, the Peace Establishment of North America has been, and is, very expensive to this country. Sir, for what has been, let us take the Peace Establishment before 1739, and 1748. All that I can find in your Journals, is four Companies kept up at New-York, and three Companies in Carolina. As to the four Companies at New-York, this country should know best why they put themselves to that expense; or whether they were really at any expense at all; for these were Companies of fictitious men. Unless the money was repaid into the Treasury, it was applied to some other purpose; for these Companies were not a quarter full. In the year 1754, two of them were sent up to Albany, to attend Commissioners to treat with the Six Nations, to impress them with a high idea of our military power; to display all the pomp and circumstance of war before them, in hopes to scare them; when, in truth, we made a very ridiculous figure. The whole complement of the two Companies, did not exceed thirty, tattered, tottermg invalids, fitter to scare the crows. This information I have had from eye-witnesses.

It has not fallen in my way to hear any account of the three Carolina Companies: these are trifles, The substantial question is, what material expense have you been at in the periods alluded to, for the Peace Establishment of North America? Ransack your Journals, Search your publick Offices for Army or Ordnance expenses. Make out your bill, and let us see what it is. No one yet knows it. Had there been any such, I believe the Administration would have produced it before now, with aggravation, as was the case a few years ago with the East India Company, who had their effects arrested for a long bill, when they little expected it, and that bill too, not very scrupulously charged; but when money is in the case, whether from the East or from the West, Ministers can make as long bills as other people.

But, is not the Peace Establishment of North America now very high, and very expensive? I would answer that by another question; why should the Peace Establishment since the late war, and the total expulsion of the French interest, be higher than it was before the late war, and when the French possessed above half the American Continent? If it be so, there must be some singular reason.

I cannot suppose that you mean, under the general term of North America, to saddle all the expenses of Canada, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Newfoundland, Florida, and the West Indies, upon the old Colonies of North America. You cannot mean to keep the sovereignty, the property, the possession, (these are the terms of the cession in the Treaty of 1763,) to yourselves, and lay the expense of the Military Establishment, which you think proper to keep up, upon the old Colonies.

Sir, the Colonies never thought of interfering in the Prerogative of making War or Peace; but if this Nation can be so unjust as to meditate the settling the expense of your new conquests separately upon them, they ought to have had a voice in settling the terms of Peace. It is you, on this side of the water, who have first brought up the idea of separate interests, by planning separate and distinct charges. It was their men, and their money, which had conquered North America, and the West Indies, as well as yours, though you seized all the spoils; but they never thought of dictating to you what you should keep, or what you should give up, little dreaming that you reserved the expense of your Military Governments for them. Who gave up

Who gave up Martinique? Who gave up Guadeloupe, with Mariegalant? Who gave up Santa Lucia? Who gave up the Newfoundland Fishery? Who gave up all these, without their consent, without their participation, without their consultation, and after all, without equivalents? Sir, if your Colonies had but been permitted to have gathered up the crumbs which have fallen from your table, they would have gladly supported the whole establishment of North America.

Your Colonies have now shewn you the value of lauds in North America; and, therefore, you have vested in the Crown the sovereignty, property, and possession of infinite tracts of land, perhaps as extensive as all Europe, which the Crown may dispose of at its own price, as the land rises in America, and grants become invaluable; and to enable the Crown to support an arbitrary Military, nay, even a Romish Government, till these lands rise to their future immense value, you are casting about to saddle the expense either upon the American or the British supplies. The Americans must, indeed, be in a state of insanity, if they do not see the tendency of all this; and we, ourselves, must be more insane and blind even than the Americans; we, who have already seen the patronage of the East Indies put into the hands of the Crown, and who now see the sovereignty, property, and possession of North America, with every military and despotick power, vested solely in the King's hands; we, who are made to learn every hour, by precept and example, that Charters, being but the breath of Kings, are to be annihilated by the breath of pliable Parliaments; we must be, sir, I say, more insane than them, if we do not see the tendency of all this, and if we do not provide, in time, for our own security, as well as for that of America. I will not suppose, that we can be so improvident as not to attend to these important, and, perhaps, not very distant events; nor, with respect to the present question, will I suppose that Parliament meditates so great an injustice, as to require your old Colonies to support the charge of all your new conquests, and all the rest of America.

This country is very liberal in its boasting of its protection and parental kindness to America. Is it for that purpose that we have converted the Province of Canada into an absolute and military Government, and have established the Romish bigotry dominant, as a terrour upon all our ancient and Protestant Colonies? What security, what protection do they derive? In what sort are they the better for the conquest of the French Dominions: if we take that opportunity to establish a Government, Civil, Military, and Ecclesiastical, in the utmost degree hostile to the Government of our own Provinces, and with the intent to set a thorn in their sides? Is this affection and parental kindness? Surely, you do not expect that they should be taxed and talliaged to pay for this rod of iron which you are preparing for them!

Now, sir, I come to a point, in which I think you may be said to have given some protection. I mean the protection of your Fleet to the American Commerce. And even here I am at a loss by what terms to call it; whether you are protecting yourselves or them. They are your Cargoes, your Manufactures, your Commerce, your Navigation. Every Ship from America is bound to Great Britain. None enter an American Port. but British Ships and Men. While you are defending the American Commerce, you are defending Leeds and Halifax, Sheffield and Birmingham, Manchester and Hull, Bristol and Liverpool, London, Dublin, and Glasgow. However, as our fleet does protect whatever Commerce belongs to them let that be set to the account. It is an argument to them as well as to us. As it has been the sole policy of this Kingdom, for ages, by the operation of every commercial Act of Parliament, to make the American Commerce totally subservient to our own convenience, the least that we owe to them in return is - protection.

Sir, I have now stated my sentiments upon the preliminary matters. I have endeavoured to state the services in war, of the Americans, with ours, and their mutual proportions; in which, by our own confession, the Americans have taken more than their share. I have stated the expense of your Military Establishment for them, such as it has been, or such as it need to be, always protesting against the imposition of the charge of the conquered Provinces upon them; and I have stated the necessity and convenience of your Fleet to their Commerce. Let this line of dividing the question be pursued to what minuteness you will, in order that we may come to a fundamental judgment; let debtor or creditor fall on which side it will, I have no bias to either side of the argument; but to have perfect and liberal justice done, and reconciliation, if possible, effected upon sound and equitable principles. I will beg leave to read to the House, a draft of a Letter of Requisition, which I have drawn up after the manner of former requisitions to the Colonies, and which I have endeavoured to adapt to the present circumstances.

Here he read the following draught * of a Letter of Requisition to the Colonies:

"His Majesty having nothing so much at heart, as to see every part of his Dominions put into a state of security, both by Sea and Land, against any attack, or even apprehension of attack, from foreign Powers, has, therefore, particularly taken into his consideration the necessity of keeping up a respectable Marine Establishment, as well for the actual protection of the commercial interests of Great Britain and America, as to maintain, undiminished, the power and pre-eminence of the Royal Flag of Great Britain, and to preserve that Navy, which has, in the time of war, carried us triumphant over all your enemies, from falling into neglect or inaction in the time of peace. The Naval power of Great Britain is, more especially, necessary for the protection of his Majesty's American subjects, from the special nature of their case; who have, indeed, each of them, by their respective Militias, a provincial security by Land, but from the want of a similar establishment at Sea, are particularly ungarded on that element. The Colonists are dependent upon the security of the Sea, not only for their own trade, but likewise for that supply of British Manufactures, which, if they were under the necessity of providing for themselves, would draw them off from those objects of their colonization, which are more beneficial to them - the possessing, and bringing into culture, the extensive and fertile lands of America. It is, therefore, the peaceable pursuit and enjoyment of all and every one of these advantages, for which they are beholden to his Majesty's Royal Navy for protection.

* This draught is made out according to the usual and official forms, and upon the model of former Letters of Requisition to the Colonies. Whenever it has been thought proper to require aids from the Colonies, it has been the invariable custom for the Secretary of State to write a Circular Letter to the Governours of the several Provinces, stating the occasion of the demand, the circumstances of the case, and the necessity, importance, or expediency of the services required, with directions to lay the same before the respective Assemblies, "to use his influence with them, and to recommend it to them, to take these matters into their consideration, and to comply with such reasonable requisitions." The American Colonies have ever complied, most cheerfully and liberally, with all such reasonable and constitutional requisitions.

"Majesty has likewise taken into his consideration the State of the American Colonies, with respect to their military defence by land. The glory of all the American conquests, in the late war, was accomplished by the active zeal, and strenuous efforts of the British and American united arms; in the prosecution of which, his Majesty has repeatedly had experience, that his faithful and loyal subjects of America, have contributed more than their proportion. His Majesty is, therefore, well pleased, that his American subjects should reap, upon the fortunate termination of that war, the advantages of security most peculiarly beneficial to their situation. He considers this security as no more than a just and adequate recompense for the liberality, zeal, and courage of their exertions, in the conquest of all those hostile Provinces, and in the extirpation of all those foreign, European interests, which have for many years been hovering, with an evil aspect, over the British American Colonies, and circumscribing their early growth.

"His Majesty considers, that the establishment and confirmation of his newly-acquired Dominions, for the peace, safety, and tranquillity of his ancient and loyal Colonies, requires the same union of mind and measures between all his subjects, on each side of the Atlantic Ocean, by which they were acquired; and that suitable and proportionate provisions should be made, by the respective parts of his Majesty's Dominions, according to the interest or advantages to each, respectively, resulting; the sovereignty, property, and possession of the said conquered Dominions, being ceded to Great Britain on the one side, and a permanent and peaceable security, from all foreign enemies, or foreign forces, being the beneficial advantage acquired, and from the time of their conquest enjoyed, by the American Colonies on the other. His Majesty, therefore, on this subject, considers, that in reason, by much the greater part of the expenses of the establishment of the conquered Provinces should fall where the sovereignty, property, and possession are vested.

With respect to the military defence of his Majesty's ancient Colonies, the same plan may be adopted, which has obtained in former times of peace, as no greater standing force need be added to the Militias of each Province, than was found necessary, before the expulsion of all foreign interests from North America. Upon consideration of each of these branches requiring some Military Establishment, his Majesty thinks it necessary, with the consent of Parliament, to keep up some standing forces in America, as well for the security of his newly acquired Dominions, as to be in readiness, in case any of his ancient Colonies should be attacked, to act in conjunction with the Militia of any such Colony, for the required defence. His Majesty, therefore, upon consideration of the premises, both with respect to the necessary Naval and Military Establishments, thinks it not unreasonable, to order Requisitions to be made to the several Assemblies of his loyal Colonies in North America, for a suitable and voluntary provision, for the purposes of defending, protecting, and securing the said Colonies.

"And to make the execution of this matter as convenient, and as satisfactory as possible, to his subjects in America, his Majesty recommends the mode to the option of the Colonies; as it will be equally satisfactory to him, if the Colonies, themselves, will undertake the performance of the services, under his Majesty's orders, by equipping, arming and maintaining, a suitable number of Vessels, with the proper complement of Men, to be under the command of such Naval Officers, as his Majesty shall from time to time appoint: and in like manner to levy, clothe, pay and provide for, such proportion of forces upon the Military Establishment of America as shall be equitable upon the circumstances of the case, and upon consideration of the respective abilities of each Province; such forces to Act either separately, or in conjunction, with any other of his Majesty's Forces, and to be under the supreme command of all such Officers as his Majesty shall think proper to appoint. His Majesty will order an account to be laid before the several Assemblies, of the Naval and Military Establishments, which his Majesty hereby requires them to furnish.

"His Majesty is not unmindful of the many restraints and prohibitions which the Colonies are under, in respect to their Commerce and Manufactures; and that many of the regulations established by the authority of the British Parliament, operate to the same effect (though indirectly) as taxes. This is the accepted condition of their emigration, to continue subordinate to the British Commerce, and instrumental to the support and extension of British Manufactures, while they are left at liberty themselves, to spread into the Continent of North America. But as many of these regulations and restraints were formed in old times, when the principles of Commerce were, perhaps, ill understood, and as it may be found that many of them are nugatory, or vexatious to the American Colonies, without being beneficial to Great Britain; his Majesty hopes, that an amicable compliance with the above-mentioned reasonable requisitions, and an ostensible contribution on the part of the Colonies, to the general Parliamentary supply, will pave the way for many relaxations in the articles of Commerce. And his Majesty gives the strongest assurances to his Colonists, that he will, at all times, recommend to his Parliament, to revise, repeal, explain, amend and relax, all such restraints and prohibitions, as shall appear to be frivolous, unjust, impolitical and oppressive to the Colonies.

"It is with great grief that his Majesty, who is the common father of his people, and views with an equal eye of affection, his subjects in every part of his Dominions, has of late years observed the very unhappy divisions, which have subsisted between his British Parliament and the Assemblies of his American subjects; and, that needless and imprudent discussions of speculative points, from mutual misapprehensions, have been converted into anger and animosities, which threaten the most fatal consequences. His Majesty is too well acquainted with the natural justice and moderation of his British Parliament, to believe that they could ever entertain the thought of any known or intended injustice or grievance to their fellow-subjects in America; and from the many recent and repeated proofs of obedience, loyalty, and affection from the Colonists, and of their liberality and disinterested zeal for the honour of his Majesty's Arms, which they have freely and cheerfully followed into distant climates, after the complete conquest of America; he is equally assured, that his American subjects are incapable of being influenced by narrow or selfish motives. His Majesty has the fullest confidence in the repeated declarations of his American Colonies, who have separately, and collectively, declared "That they do sincerely "recognise their allegiance to his Crown, and all due subordination to the Parliament of Great Britain; that they "shall always retain the most grateful sense of the assistance and protection which they have received; that their "lives and fortunes are entirely devoted to his Majesty's "service, to which, on his Royal Requisitions, they have "ever been ready to contribute to the utmost of their "ability." Therefore, his Majesty has the fullest dependence, "that whenever the exigencies of the state may "require it, they will, as they have heretofore done, cheerfully contribute their full proportion of men and money." His Majesty entertains the most confident hope, from the upright intentions of both parties, that, upon a cool reconsideration of the original matters in dispute, which his Majesty has endeavoured to state upon the grounds of reason, with fairness and impartiality, all unhappy animosities and civil distractions will be composed upon the solid foundations of equity and justice; and that all things will be restored to that happy state of harmony and mutual affection which subsisted at the termination of the late glorious war; and that every hostile and vindictive Act, or Declaration, which has passed from the commencement of these unfortunate troubles, will be buried in everlasting oblivion.

"It would be a grievous affliction to his Majesty, to see the courage of his faithful subjects averted to civil dissensions, and the lustre of the national Arms stained with civil blood; to see the general peace and tranquillity broken, and invitations thereby thrown out to his enemies, to disturb the glories of his reign; to see the unhappy divisions of this Kingdom against itself, giving courage to their secret resentments, and tempting them, in an evil hour, to re-assume those hostile purposes against his Majesty's Dominions, which the united and compacted powers of the whole House of Bourbon were unable, in the late glorious war, to accomplish, against the then united and compacted Arms of Great Britain and America. His Majesty's most earnest and most anxious wishes are, to see unanimity restored amongst all his subjects, that they may long enjoy, in peace, the fruits of those common victories which have heretofore cemented them in one general cause; that living in harmony and brotherly kindness one towards another, and in one common obedience to the supreme Legislature, they may join all hands with one heart, to support the dignity of his Crown, the just authority of Parliament, the true and combined interests of Great Britain and America; and thus transmit to posterity, with everlasting honour, the united Empire of these Kingdoms."

This is the plan, and the terms, or to the effect, that according to the best of my judgement, a Requisition on the present subject should be drawn. I have endeavoured to state the case in such a manner as may open a way to reconciliation on both sides. Make your requisitions free, and let them be founded in reason and justice; and there are no subjects in any Kingdom that will be deaf to reason, justice, common interest, and mutual obligations: and I am sure, from the repeated liberality and zeal of our Colonies, we, of all the Kingdoms in the world, have the least reason to distrust those of our own consanguinity.

I cannot think it a possible thing in our Constitution, that any one seriously, upon a moment's reflection, can admit the thought of denying to the Americans their judgement upon the necessity or application of money required. That is the right of all free subjects, without which they have nothing that they can call their own. Let your requisitions be free, for reasonable and substantial services, and faithfully performed, and there is no example of a refusal in such a case, in any state. That consents are withheld, and ought so to be, in case of grievances unredressed, our own history abounds with examples. Our rights and liberties would have long ago been trampled under foot, but for that reserved power in the Commons. But a refusal, in a reasonable case, is, as yet, without example. Absurdity and caprice are not the principles which govern men in the great concerns of state: but reason overrules all little caprices. In Holland, the consent not only of the States General, but of the Provincial States, and in many instances, I believe, of every Town in each Province, is necessary for great acts of state; and yet that negative never stands in the way against reason. Where measures have common sense, and common reason, for their foundation, they will never be obstructed; where they have not, they ought to be defeated.

But it is said, that we can hear of no terms with the Americans, who have been in a state of resistance to our authority. Sir, I wish to cast no retrospect, but only to look forward to reconciliation, and to prevent the shedding of blood. The Resolution of the noble Lord has confessed: and the House has adopted the truth of it, that Requisition is the proper way. Your Colonies have been calling out to you incessantly for ten years, to make your demands by constitutional requisitions. This House, after a ten years misunderstanding, has confirmed that to be, in their opinion too, the right way. Then why not close now, at least, upon that ground, without retrospect. The Colonies have been driven to resistance against their wills, lest they should have nothing that they could surely call their own. The right to take any Nation's money indefinitely, without their consent, without measure, without account, without any inquiry into the application, is not to be conceded or compromised by any Nation upon the earth. Resistance or ruin must infallibly be the consequence; and those who are compelled to resistance, by your having persevered in the principle of taking by force, till the noble Lord's proposition, which has, at least, condemned it, have been forced to deny that authority, which they always had, and always would have wished to acknowledge and support. It was that unconquerable and irresistible impulse of nature, self-defence, which cut off all retreat; then let us cast no retrospect. If the grounds of this unhappy dispute can be settled, all may be peace yet. If the Americans could be assured that you would not again make resistance absolutely necessary to their security, and very being as a people, they are ready enough to acknowledge their subordination, and all the rights of Great Britain. Let them know, that peace and security to their rights and properties shall be the certain condition of acknowledging the supreme Legislation of this country, and the matter is ended.

Sir, after I shall have received the determination of the House upon the motion for Requisitions, I shall take the liberty to offer three other motions, for a suspension of the three vindictive American Bills of the last session. The connexion of these motions with the preceding, is too obvious to require any explanation or debate. I would only take leave to say, that I should not have moved for a mere suspension of these Bills, if a motion for their repeal had not already been rejected by this House. Having given an unavailing vote for their repeal, I now come to entreat for the next degree, at least for suspension. You have excommunicated Boston, and proscribed the whole Province of New England, unheard: then recollect your justice, and whether you send even the noble Lord's compulsory Requisition to America, or this motion of mine for a free Requisition; suspend your vindictive hand, and, whilst you treat for peace, arrest the sword.

Sir, I have now offered what I have to say upon this important subject. I have given it my most serious, I may say, my only attention, ever since I have been in a situation to give a responsible vote upon it; and I heartily wish - that some means or other may be found in time to stop the effusion of civil blood. And here, sir, I offer my poor sentiments to the House, and to the noble Lord, as in the place of Minister. It is a great responsibility that will lie at his door, who is to have the recommendation, I might say the decision, of the measures to be adopted. We, on this side the House, who have opposed the whole system of American measures, have not done it merely for the sake of opposition. We have not sheltered ourselves under "No, no;" but we have declared our principles, we have offered our plans; and they must now remain with Great Britain and America, at large, to discuss and weigh their merits, to accept, or to reject them. The noble Lord has a great ascendant in this House. Perhaps his plan, if he has any thing to be called a plan, may find advocates and voices here. But our country at large, Great Britain and America, must finally decide. My honourable friend near me (Mr. Burke) has, with unrivalled ability, opened to you his principles and plan. The Earl of Chatham has, in the other House, offered his provisional Bill, for conciliation, to the Ministry there; and for myself, sir, it is with the greatest deference and humility that I presume to offer any thing of mine, in conjunction with such great names and abilities. I can only plead the sincerity of my intentions as an apology for my presumption. All our plans tend to one centre, and to one point of reconciliation, to save the effusion of blood between those who ought to be, reciprocally, good and useful friends. If the noble Lord has any secret feelings of relenting, as many of his friends, and many more who would be his friends, most sincerely wish, let him stand out, and do justice to his feelings. His country calls upon him, not to give way to sanguinary and impatient councils, contrary to his own better judgement. This is the decisive hour; the fate of Great Britain and America are depending.

The eyes of all this country, and America too, are turned towards the noble Lord, as the ostensible and responsible Minister, to receive his final determination as to the measures which are to decide the safety or ruin of this Empire. The ways of peace are still before him. If war is to be the measure with America, let him consider that it is not a majority of this House that can conquer America. The support of reason and justice to his measures will stand him better in stead, than the noisy tumult of a majority; in which majority there may be lurking, treacherous counsellors, and pretended friends, secretly urging him to his ruin, even against his own judgement. The important responsibility is out of measure. When the debates and measures of this year are transmitted to America, they may, perhaps, tell the noble Lord: - Had you pursued a plan of equity and justice, all had been peace. At home one plan of conciliation has already been proposed, for which the City of London, foreseeing the certain ruin of other measures, has given thanks to its great and noble author, as an earnest for the rest of the Kingdom. If Great Britain and America should come to one mind of peace, they may unite to crush those men who keep them asunder.

He then moved,

"That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give orders, that Letters of Requisition be written to the several Provinces of his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America to make provisions for the purposes of defending, protecting, and securing the said Colonies and Plantations; and that his Majesty will be pleased to order all such Addresses as he shall receive, in answer to the aforesaid Letters of Requisition, to be laid before this House."

Sir Cecil Wray seconded the motion: he declared he did it as it recurred to a system which had been in use before the present troubles had begun, namely, before the unfortunate passing of the Stamp Act, and wished all the rest of our disputes could also be put on the same foundation. He observed, in respect to the right of taxation, that the Parliament of Britain had no right to tax those it did not represent; that representation had originally been for the sole purpose of taxation, and that it was only by chance, and an usurpation by the people from the Crown, that the Representatives had acquired the rights of Legislation. This appeared from our ancient Parliaments; in which, after the Parliament had granted taxes, they applied, by Petition, to the Crown to remedy certain grievances, which the Crown sometimes did, by making an Ordinance for that purpose; and that, even in the most despotick German Governments, the Prince could not at this day, impose internal taxes without the approbation of the States, or Representatives of the people. That even if Parliament had the right to tax America he should be against using that power; as, in that case, justice would demand that we should give to America an equal power of paying taxes; that that could only be done by opening the trade of the whole world to America, in common with Britain; a measure which no one could wish to see adopted, as it would then be at the expense of the latter, and a very considerable defalcation ensue in its power of then paying the taxes it now does. That Britain, in his opinion, was, at present, low taxed, in comparison with either of the neighbouring Nations, or of what it was at the period before the commencement of the National Debts. That the quantum of taxes are not to be estimated by the sum of money raised, but by the proportion such sum bears to the ability of the persons taxed: for instance, if a farmer who, at the last mentioned era, paid one hundred Pounds a year rent, and now is enabled to raise three hundred Pounds more than the sum he could then, by the increased price of his Goods, he cannot be said to have his rent raised, but rather lowered, if his landlord makes him pay two hundred Pounds rent instead of one. He next observed, how impolitic it waste undervalue the courage of those we were to engage with; mentioned the high spirit shown by the people of Genoa, in driving out the veteran Germans, when raised by enthusiastick valour. He observed, too, that perhaps the character given of the Americans was as true of our own common people as that in all conflicts between them and the military, a very few muskets from a few red coats, had always dispelled the most mutinous; at the same time mentioned that the cause of this was the total disuse of arms; for those very people, when once disciplined, became the best of Soldiers. In his opinion, the sole power this country ought to have over the Colonies, which was of necessity, not of right, vested in the British Parliament for the good of the whole, should only be exerted in saying what the Colonists should not do, not what they should do; that, in particular, it was requisite for Parliament to have a watchful eye on the Navigation Act, and on all others which regulated the external commerce of all parts of our Dominions, as on those, and on our trade, depended the sole power of paying our taxes.

Lord North opposed the motion. He entered into the reasons for which the present measures had been adopted; and said that it could not, in the present state of affairs, betwixt us and the Colonies, be consistent with our dignity in the least to recede. The propositions made to Parliament against the measures adopted by the House, were very different from one another, and, therefore, inconsistent-Lord Chatham's, Mr. Burke's, and the present; and that Parliament having adopted his own, which were more consistent with the dignity and superiority claimed by Britain over her Colonies, it would now be very unparliamentary to adopt new measures which would, in effect, overturn it. He objected to Royal Requisitions, as projected, as he could not see the difference betwixt such a requisition and the demand by Charles the First of Ship-money; as it was the same thing whether we asked for Ships, or Money to build Ships. He observed, that if we adopted this proposal, it would not bring us back to the state we were in before the Stamp Act passed; nor could the idea of the gentleman, who seconded the motion, of Parliament's having a right to say what the Colonies should not do, take place without the consent of the Colonies; as in the instance of burning the Tea, assaulting the Magistracy, destroying the King's Stores and other acts of violence, the Colonies had been lately guilty of, which they would say they had a right to do, notwithstanding our prohibition of them.

Sir Cecil Wray said he did not mean that this measure would bring us back to the state we were in with the Colonies before the Stamp Act; but approved of the measure, as being similar to those in practice before the passing the Stamp Act; and that, as to the Prohibitory Acts, he did not mean such as the noble Lord had mentioned, which were only acts of self-defence against the execution of unjust, tyrannical laws, but regulations of external trade, and things of that nature, which, for the good of the whole, it was the duty of Parliament to regulate.

Mr. T. Townshend observed, that though the present measures were adopted by a large majority in Parliament, yet, if they did not succeed, the noble Lord would find himself responsible; that it had been frequently said, that the disturbances in America arose from the advice and speeches made in England; that this he would call calumny, unless some gentleman would get up and avow this doctrine, and produce convincing proofs that this was so.

Lord W. Campbell answered, that he had said so in debate, and he had a right to do so; he had letters in his pocket proving it; but the Papers on the table were sufficient to convince every gentleman of it, without applying to private proofs.

Mr. Lyttelton observed, that the quarrel which brought on the late war was not for a quantity of derelict land in America, but that the French had endeavoured, by their encroachments, to obtain another Port on the Sea-coast, Quebec being shut up by the ice for many months in the year, and Louisiana by no means a flourishing Colony; that this Port and communication would have been by the River St. John; that, therefore, the war must be considered as an American war.

Sir G. Savile shewed, that the three different propositions mentioned, had been made at different times; that when one could not be obtained, a second, (something different, according to the rule of Parliament,) and now a third, again differing, were made; that this did not show a difference of measures, but only a desire of obtaining something in favour of ourselves and the Colonies. He expressed his surprise that the noble Lord should liken requisitions of this nature to Ship-money; the dispute in the latter case was not the demand, but the manner of enforcing that demand under the sanction of law.

Mr. Vyner was surprised at two assertions of the seconder of the motion; the first, that Britain was not high taxed; he did not know what could be called so, if the present state was not. Did we not pay three Shillings in the Pound? Was not every article of life taxed? As to the second, namely, the cowardice of the people of England, that too he utterly denied; they were, indeed, inferior to regular Troops, but that these Troops were Englishmen, and as brave as any in the world.

Mr. Tuffnell attempted to shew, that the war, though begun in America, was the plan of the French Minister, but that he did not mean it should have taken place so soon as it did.

The question then being put on the motion,

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Hartley then moved, and the question being put, That leave be given to bring in a Bill to suspend, for the term of three Years, the force and execution of an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, entitled "An Act "to discontinue in such manner, and for such time, as are "therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or "shipping of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, at the "Town and within the Harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America;"

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Hartley then moved, and the question being put, That leave be given to bring in a Bill to suspend, for the term of two Years, the force and execution of an Act of Parliament, passed in the last session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for the impartial Administration of Justice "in the cases of persons questioned for any acts done by "them in the execution of the Law, or for the suppression "of Riots and Tumults, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England;"

It passed in the Negative.

Mr. Hartley then moved, and the question being put, That leave be given to bring in a Bill to suspend, for the term of three Years, the force and execution of an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, entitled "An "Act for the better regulating the Government of the "Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England;"

It passed in the Negative. -

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 24, 1775.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in a Bill to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act passed in this present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for punishing Mutiny and "Desertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and "their Quarters;" and that the Lord Barrington and Sir Charles Whitworth do prepare and bring in the same.

MONDAY, March 27, 1775.

The Lord Barrington presented to the House, according to order, a Bill to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act passed in this present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment "of the Army and their Quarters;" and the same was received and read the first time.

Resolved, That the Bill be read a second time.

TUESDAY, March 28, 1775.

A Bill to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act passed in this present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for punishing "Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the "Army and their Quarters," was read a second time.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Thursday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the said Bill..

THURSDAY, March 30, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, upon the Bill to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act passed in this present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for punishing "Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the "Army and their Quarters," be now read;

And the said Order being read accordingly,

Ordered, That it be an instruction to the said Committee, that they have power to receive a clause, or clauses, for extending the provisions of the said Bill to his Majesty's Marine Forces.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, March 31, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to Order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act passed in this present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for the punishing Mutiny and

"Desertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and "their Quarters," was committed, the amendments which the Committee had made to the Bill; and which they had directed him to report to the House; and he read the Report in his place; and afterwards delivered the Bill, with the amendments, in at the Clerk's table, where the amendments were once read throughout; and then a second time, one by one; and upon the question severally put thereupon, were agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the Bill, with the amendments, be engrossed.

WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1775.

An engrossed Bill to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act passed in this present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for "punishing, Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters;" was read the third time.

Resolved, That the Bill do Pass, and that the Title be, An Act to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act passed in the present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for punishing "Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the "Army and their Quarters, and for extending the provisions of the said Act to his Majesty's Marine Forces in "America."

Ordered, That Sir Charles Whitworth do carry the Bill to the Lords, and desire their concurrence.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

TUESDAY, April 6, 1775.

Message was brought from the House of Commons by Sir Charles Whitworth, and others;

With a Bill, entitled "An Act to amend and render "more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, "An Act passed in the present session of Parliament, entitled 'An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and "for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters," and for extending the provisions of the said Act to his "Majesty's Marine Forces in America;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The said Bill was read the first time.

FRIDAY, April 17, 1775.

The Bill entitled "An Act to amend and render more "effectual in his Majesty's Dominions in America, An Act "passed, in the present session of Parliament, entitled "An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the "better Payment of the Army and their Quarters, and for "extending the provisions of the said Act to his Majesty's Marine forces in America;" was read the second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House."

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill on Monday next.

MONDAY, April 10, 1775.

The House, according to order, was adjourned during pleasure, and put into a Committee upon the Bill entitled "An Act to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America an Act passed in the present session of Parliament, entitled 'An Act for punish-

"ing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of 'the Army and their Quarters,' and for extending the provisions of the said Act to his Majesty's Marine Forces in America."

After some time the House was resumed,

And the Earl of Galloway reported from the Committee, That they had gone through the Bill, and directed him to report the same to the House without any amendment.

TUESDAY, April 11, 1775.

The Bill entitled "An Act to amend and render more effectual, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act repassed in the present session of Parliament, entitled 'An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters,' and for extending the Provisions of the said Act to his Majesty's Marine Forces in America;" was read the third time.

The question was put, "Whether this Bill shall Pass?"

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

An Act to amend and render more effectual in his Majesty's Dominions in AMERICA, an Act, passed in the present session of Parliament, entitled, "An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters," and for extending the provisions of the said Act to his Majesty's Marine Forces in AMERICA.

Whereas, in and by an Act, made in this present session of Parliament, entitled, "An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters," several regulations are made and enacted for the better government of the Army, and their observing strict discipline, and for providing Quarters for the Army, and Carriages on marches, and other necessary occasions, and inflicting Penalties on Offenders against the same Act, and for many other good purposes therein mentioned; but the same may not be sufficient for the Forces that may be employed in his Majesty's Dominions in America: And whereas, during the continuance of the said Act, there may be occasion for marching and quartering of Regiments and Companies of his Majesty's Forces in several parts of his Majesty's Dominions in America: And whereas, the Publick Houses and Barracks in his Majesty's Dominions in America may not be sufficient to supply Quarters for such Forces: And whereas, it is expedient and necessary that Carriages and other conveniences upon the march of Troops in his Majesty's Dominions in America should be supplied for that purpose, Be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords, Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That for and during the continuance of this Act, and no longer, it shall and may be lawful to and for the Constables, Tithingmen, Magistrates, and other Civil Officers, of Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts, and other places within his Majesty's Dominions in America, and in default or absence, for any one Justice of the Peace, inhabiting in or near any such Village, Township, City, District, or place, and for no others, and such Constables, Tithingmen, Magistrates and other Civil Officers aforesaid, are hereby required to quarter and billet the Officers and Soldiers in his Majesty's service in the Barracks provided by the Colonies; and if there shall not be sufficient room in the said Barracks for the Officers and Soldiers, then, and in such case only, to quarter and billet the residue of such Officers and Soldiers (for whom there shall not be room in such Barracks) in Inns, Livery Stables, Ale-Houses, Victualling-Houses, and the Houses of Sellers of Wine by retail, to be drank in their own houses, or places thereunto belonging; and all Houses of persons selling of Rum, Brandy, Strong Waters, Cider, or Metheglin, by retail, to be drank in Houses; and in case there shall not be sufficient room for the Officers and Soldiers in such Barracks, Inns, Victualling, and other Publick Ale-Houses, that in such, and no other case, and upon no other account, it shall and may be lawful for the Governour and Council of each respective Province in his Majesty's Dominions in America, to authorize and appoint, and they are hereby, directed and empowered to authorize and appoint such proper person or persons, as they shall think fit, to take, hire, and make fit, and in default of the said Governour and Council appointing and authorizing such person or persons, or in default of such person or persons, so appointed, neglecting or refusing to do their duty, in that case it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in or near the said Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts, and other places, and they are hereby required to take, hire, and make fit for the reception of his Majesty's Forces, such and so many uninhabited Houses, Out-Houses, Barns, or other Buildings, as shall be necessary to quarter therein the residue of such Officers and Soldiers for whom there should not be room in such Barracks and Publick Houses as aforesaid, and to put and quarter the residue of such Officers and Soldiers therein.

II. And it is hereby declared and enacted. That there shall be no more billets at any time ordered than there are effective Soldiers present to be quartered therein: and in order that this service may be effectually provided for, the Commander-in-Chief in America, or other Officer, under whose orders any Regiment or Company shall march, shall, from time to time, give, or cause to be given, as early notice as conveniently may be, in writing, signed by such Commander or Officer, of their march, specifying their numbers and time of marching, as near as may be, to the respective Governours of each Province through which they are to march, in order that proper persons may be appointed and authorized, in pursuance of this Act, to take up and hire, if it shall be necessary, uninhabited Houses, Out-Houses, Barns, or other Buildings, for the reception of such Soldiers as the Barracks and Publick Houses shall not be sufficient to contain or receive.

III. And, whereas, doubts have been entertained whether Troops can be quartered otherwise than in Barracks, in case Barracks have been provided sufficient for the quartering of all the Officers and Soldiers within any Town, Township, City, District or place, within his Majesty's Dominions in North America: And, whereas, it may frequently happen, from the situation of such Barracks, that if Troops should be quartered therein, they would not be stationed where their presence may be necessary and required: Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, That, in such cases, it shall and may be lawful for the persons hereby authorized, to quarter Troops as aforesaid, in any of the Provinces within his Majesty's Dominions in North America, and they are hereby respectively authorized, empowered and directed, on the requisition of the Officer, who, for the time being, has the command of his Majesty's Forces in North America, to cause any Officers or Soldiers in his Majesty's service to be quartered and billeted in such manner as is by this Act directed, where no Barracks are provided by the Colonies.

IV. And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if it shall happen at any time, that any Officers or Soldiers in his Majesty's service shall remain within any of the said Colonies without Quarters for the space of twenty-four hours, after such Quarters shall have been demanded, it shall and may be lawful for the Governour of the Province to order and direct such and so many uninhabited Houses, Out-Houses, Barns, or other Buildings; as he shall think necessary to be taken, (making a reasonable allowance for the same,) and made fit for the reception of such Officers and Soldiers, and to put and quarter such Officers and Soldiers therein, for such time as he shall think proper.

V. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any Military Officer shall take upon himself to quarter Soldiers in any of his Majesty's Dominions in America, otherwise than is limited and allowed by this Act; or shall use or offer any menace or compulsion to or upon any Justice of the Peace, Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other Civil Officer before mentioned, in his Majesty's Dominions in America, tending to deter and discourage any of them from performing any part of the duty hereby required or appointed; such Military Officer, for every such offence, being thereof convicted, before any two or more of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, living within or near such Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts, or other places, by the oaths of two or more credible witnesses, shall be deemed and taken to be, ipso facto, cashiered, and shall be utterly disabled to have or hold any military employment in his Majesty's service, upon a certificate thereof being transmitted to the Commander-in-Chief in America; unless the said conviction shall be reversed upon an appeal brought within six months in the proper court for hearing appeals against convicting by Justices of the Peace: and in case any person shall find himself aggrieved in that such Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other Civil Officer, shall have quartered or billeted in or upon his House a greater number of Soldiers than he ought to bear in proportion to his neighbours, and shall complain thereof to one or more Justice or Justices of the Peace of the Village, Town, Township, City, District, or other place, where such Soldiers are quartered; such Justice or Justices has or have hereby power to relieve such person, by ordering such and so many of the Soldiers to be removed and quartered upon such other person or persons as they shall see cause; and such other person or persons shall be obliged to receive such Soldiers accordingly.

VI. Provided also, and be it further enacted, That no Justice or Justices of the Peace, having or executing any Military Office or Commission in his Majesty's Regular Forces in America; may, during the continuance of this Act, directly or indirectly, act or be concerned in the quartering, billeting, or appointing any Quarters for any Soldier or Soldiers, according to the disposition made for quartering of any Soldier or Soldiers by virtue of this Act, (except where there shall be no other Justice or Justices of the Peace,) but that all warrants, acts, matters or things, executed or appointed by such Justice or Justices of the Peace, for or concerning the same, shall be void, any thing in this Act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

VII. Provided nevertheless, and it is hereby enacted, That the Officers and Soldiers so quartered and billeted as aforesaid, (except such as shall be quartered in the Barracks and hired uninhabited Houses or other Buildings as aforesaid,) shall be received, and furnished with Diet, Small Beer, Cider or Rum, mixed with Water, by the owners of the Inns, Livery Stables, Ale-Houses, Victualling-Houses, and other Houses in which they are allowed to be quartered and billeted by this Act, paying and allowing for the same the several rates hereinafter mentioned, to be payable out of the Subsistence Money, for Diet and Small Beer, Cider or Rum, mixed with Water.

VIII. Provided always, That in case any Inn-holder or other person, on whom any Non-Commission Officers or Private Men shall be quartered, by virtue of this Act, in any of his Majesty's Dominions in America, (except on a march, or employed in recruiting, and likewise except the Recruits by them raised, for the space of seven days at most, for such Non-Commission Officers and Soldiers who are recruiting, and Recruits by them raised,) shall be desirous to furnish such Non-Commission Officers or Soldiers with Candles, Vinegar and Salt, and with Small Beer or Cider, not exceeding five pints, or half a pint of Rum, mixed with a quart of Water, for each man per diem, gratis; and allow to such Non-Commission Officers or Soldiers the use of fire, and the necessary Utensils for dressing and eating their meat, and shall give notice of such his desire to the Commanding Officer, and shall furnish and allow the same accordingly; then, and in every such case, the Non-Commission Officers and Soldiers so quartered shall provide their own Victuals; and the officer to whom it belongs to receive, or that actually does receive, the pay and subsistence of such Non-Commission Officers and Soldiers, shall pay the several sums hereinafter mentioned, to be payable out of the Subsistence Money for Diet and Small Beer, to the Non-Commission Officers and Soldiers aforesaid, and not to the Inn-holder or other person on whom such Non-Commission Officers and Soldiers are quartered, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

IX. And whereas, there are several Barracks in several places in his Majesty's said Dominions in America, or some of them, provided by the Colonies, for the lodging and covering of Soldiers, in lieu of Quarters, for the ease and convenience, as well of the inhabitants of and in such Colonies as of the Soldiers, It is hereby further enacted, That all such Officers and Soldiers so put and placed in such Barracks, or in hired uninhabited Houses, Out-Houses, Barns, or other Buildings, shall, from time to time, be furnished and supplied there by the persons to be authorized or appointed for that purpose by the Governour and Council of each respective Province, or upon neglect or refusal of such Governour and Council, in any Province, then by two or more Justices of the Peace residing in or near such place, with Fire, Candles, Vinegar and Salt, Bedding, Utensils for dressing their Victuals, and Small Beer or Cider, not exceeding five pints, or half a pint of Rum, mixed with a quart of Water, to each man, without paying any thing for the same.

X. And that the several persons who shall so take, hire, and fit up, as aforesaid, such uninhabited Houses, Out-Houses, Barns, or other Buildings, for the reception of the Officers and Soldiers, and who shall so furnish the same, and also the said Barracks, with Fire, Candles, Vinegar, and Salt, Bedding, Utensils for dressing Victuals, and Small Beer, Cider, or Rum, as aforesaid, may be reimbursed and paid all such charges and expenses they shall be put to therein, Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the respective Provinces shall pay unto such person or persons all such sum or sums of money so by them paid, laid out, or expended, for the taking, hiring, and fitting up such uninhabited Houses, Out-Houses, Barns, or other Buildings, and for furnishing the Officers and Soldiers therein, and in the Barracks, with Fire, Candles, Vinegar, and Salt, Bedding, Utensils for dressing Victuals, and Small Beer, Cider, or Rum, as aforesaid; and such sum or sums are hereby required to be raised in such manner as the publick charges for the Provinces respectively are raised.

XI. Provided always, and be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any Officer within his Majesty's said Dominions in America, shall take, or cause to be taken, or knowingly suffer to be taken, any money of any person for excusing the quartering of Officers or Soldiers, or any of them, in any House allowed by this Act, every such Officer shall be cashiered, and be incapable of serving in any military employment whatsoever.

XII. And whereas, some doubts may arise, whether Commanding Officers of any Regiment or Company within his Majesty's said Dominions in America may exchange any men quartered in any Village, Town, Township, City, District, or place, in his Majesty's said Dominions in America, with another man quartered in the same place, for the benefit of the service, Be it declared and enacted by the authority aforesaid, That such exchange, as above mentioned, may be made by such Commanding Officers respectively, provided the number of men do not exceed the number at that time billeted on such House or Houses and the Constables, Tithingmen, Magistrates, and other chief Officers of the Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts, or other places where any Regiment or Company shall be quartered, are hereby required to billet such men so exchanged accordingly.

XIII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other chief Officer or person whatsoever, who, by virtue or colour of this Act, shall quarter or billet, or be employed in quartering or billeting any Officers or Soldiers within his Majesty's said Dominions in America, shall neglect or refuse for the space of two hours to quarter or billet such Officers or Soldiers, when thereunto required, in such manner as is by this Act directed, provided sufficient notice be given before the arrival of such Forces; or shall receive, demand, contract, or agree for any sum or sums of money, or any reward whatsoever, for or on account of excusing, or in order to excuse, any person or persons whatsoever from quartering, or receiving into his, her, or their House or Houses, any such Officer or Soldier; or in case any Victualler, or any other person within his Majesty's Dominions in America, liable by this Act to have any Officer or Soldier billeted or quartered on him or her, shall refuse to receive or victual any such Officer or Soldier so quartered or billeted upon him or her, as aforesaid; or in case any person or persons shall refuse to furnish or allow, according to the directions of this Act, the several things herein before directed to be furnished or allowed to Officers and Soldiers, so quartered or billeted on him or her, or in the Barracks, and hired uninhabited Houses, Out-Houses; Barns, or other Buildings, as aforesaid, at the rate hereinafter mentioned, and shall be thereof convicted before one of the Magistrates of any one of the supreme, chief, or principal Common Law Courts of the Colony where such offence shall be committed, either by his own confession, or by the Oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, (which oath such Magistrate of such Court is hereby empowered to administer,) every such Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other chief Officer or person so offending, shall forfeit, for every such offence, the sum of Five Pounds sterling, or any sum or sums of money not exceeding Five Pounds, nor less than Forty Shillings, as the Magistrate, before whom the matter shall be heard, shall, in his discretion, think fit, to be levied by distress and sale of the Goods of the person offending, by warrant under the hand and seal of such Magistrate before whom such offender shall be convicted, to be directed to a Constable or other Officer within the Village, Town, Township, City, District, or other, place, where the offender shall dwell; and shall direct the said sum of Five Pounds, or such other sum as shall be ordered to be levied in pursuance of this Act, as aforesaid, when levied, to be paid into the Treasury of the Province or Colony where the offence shall be committed, to be applied towards the general charges of the said Province or Colony

XIV. And, that the Quarters both of Officers and Soldiers in his Majesty's said Dominions in America, may hereafter be duly paid and satisfied, Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the twenty fourth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, every Officer to whom it belongs to receive, or that does actually receive, the pay or subsistence money, either for a whole Regiment, or particular Companies, or otherwise, shall immediately, upon each receipt of every particular sum which shall, from time to time, be paid, returned, or come to his or their hands, on account of pay or subsistence, give public notice thereof to all persons keeping Inns or other places where Officers or Soldiers are quartered by virtue of this Act, and shall also appoint the said Innkeepers, and others, to repair to their Quarters at such times as they shall appoint, for the distribution and payment of the said pay and subsistence money to the said Officers or Soldiers, which shall be within four days at farthest after receipt of the same, as aforesaid; and the said Innkeepers and others shall then and there acquaint such Officer or Officers with the accounts or debts (if any shall be) between them and the Officers and Soldiers so quartered in their respective Houses; which account the said Officer or Officers are hereby required to accept of, and immediately pay the same, before any part of the said pay or subsistence be distributed either to the Officers or Soldiers; provided the accounts exceed not, for a Commission Officer of Foot, being under the degree of a Captain, for such Officer's Diet and Small Beer, per diem, One Shilling; and if such Officer shall have a Horse or Horses, for each Horse or Horses, for their Hay and Straw, per diem, Six Pence; nor for one Foot Soldier's Diet and Small Beer, Cider, or Rum, mixed as aforesaid, per diem, Four Pence; and if any Officer or Officers, as aforesaid, shall not give notice, as aforesaid, and not immediately, upon producing such account stated, satisfy, content, and pay the same, upon complaint and oath made thereof by any two witnesses, before two of his Majesty's Justices for the Village, Town, Township, City, District, or other place, where such Quarters were, (which oath such Justices are hereby authorized and required to administer,) the Paymaster or Paymasters of his Majesty's Guards and Garrisons, upon certificate of the said Justices before whom such oath was made of the sum due upon such accounts, and the persons to whom the same is owing are hereby required and authorized to pay and satisfy the said sums out of the arrears due to the said Officer or Officers, upon penalty that such Paymaster or Paymasters shall forfeit their respective place or places of Paymaster, and be discharged from holding the same for the future: and in case there shall be no arrears due to the said Officer or Officers, then the said Paymaster or Paymasters are hereby authorized and required to deduct the sums he or they shall pay, pursuant to the certificates of the said Justices, out of the next pay or subsistence money of the Regiment to which such Officer or Officers shall belong; and such Officer or Officers shall, for every such offence, or for neglecting to give notice of the receipt of such pay or subsistence money, as aforesaid, be deemed and taken, and is hereby declared to be, ipso facto, cashiered.

XV. And where it shall happen that the Pay or Subsistence Money due to any Officer or Soldier within his Majesty's said Dominions in America, shall, by occasion of any accident, not be paid to such Officer or Soldier, or such Officer or Soldier shall neglect to pay the same, so that Quarters cannot be or are not paid as this Act directs; and where any Forces Shall be upon their march in his Majesty's said Dominions in America, so that no Subsistence can be remitted to them to make payment as this Act directs, or they shall neglect to pay the same, in every such case it is hereby further enacted, That every such Officer shall, before his or their departure out of his or their Quarters, where such Regiment, Troop, or Company, shall remain for any time whatsoever, make up the accounts with every person with whom such Regiment or Company shall have quartered, and sign a certificate thereof, and give the said certificate, so by him signed, to the party to whom such money is due, with the name of such Regiment or Company to which he or they shall belong, to the end the said certificate may be forthwith transmitted to the Paymaster of his Majesty's Guards and Garrisons, who is hereby required immediately to make payment thereof to the person or persons to whom such money shall be due, to the end the same may be applied to such Regiment or Company, respectively, under pain as before in this Act directed for non-payment of Quarters.

XVI. And for the better preventing abuses in quartering or billeting the Soldiers in his Majesty's Dominions in America, in pursuance of this Act, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful to and for any one or more Justices of the Peace, or other Officer, within their respective Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts, or other places in his Majesty's said Dominions in America, by warrant or order under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, at any time or times, during the continuance of this Act, to require and command any Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other chief Officer, who shall quarter or billet any Soldiers in pursuance of this Act, to give an account in writing unto the said Justice or Justices, or other Officer requiring the same, of the number of Officers and Soldiers Who shall be quartered or billeted by them, and also the names of the Housekeepers or persons upon whom, and the Barracks and hired uninhabited Houses or other Buildings, as aforesaid, in which and where every such Officer or Soldier shall be quartered or billeted, together with an account of the street or place where every such Housekeeper or person dwells, and where every such Barrack or hired uninhabited House or Buildings is, or are, and of the Signs (if any) Which belong to their Houses, to the end that it may appear to the said Justice or Justices, or other Officer, where such Officers or Soldiers are quartered or billeted, and that he or they may, thereby, be the better enabled to prevent or punish all abuses in the quartering or billeting them.

XVII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That, for the better and more regular provision of Carriages for his Majesty's Forces in their marches, or for their Arms, Clothes, or Accoutrements in his Majesty's said Dominions in America, all Justices of the Peace within their several Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts and places, being duly required thereunto by an order from his Majesty, or the General of his Forces, or of the General Commanding, or the Commanding Officer there, shall, as often as such order is brought and shown unto one or more of them by the Quartermaster, Adjutant, or other Officer of the Regiment, Detachment, or Company, so ordered to march, issue out his or their warrants to the Constables, Tithingmen, Magistrates, or other Officers of the Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts, and other places, from, through, near, or to which such Regiment, Detachment, or Company, shall be ordered to march, requiring them to make such provision for Carriages, with able men to drive the same, as shall be mentioned in the said warfare, allowing them reasonable time to do the same, that the neighbouring parts may not always bear the burden; and in case sufficient Carriages cannot be provided within any such Village, Town, Township, city, District, or other place, then the next Justice or Justices of the Peace, of the Village, Town, Township,

City, District, or other place, shall, upon such order as aforesaid being brought or shown to one or more of them, by any of the Officers as aforesaid, issue his or their warrants to the Constables, Tithingmen, Magistrates, or other Officers of such next Village, Town, Township, City, District, or other place, for the purposes aforesaid, to make up such deficiency; and such Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other Officer, shall order or appoint such person or persons, having Carriages within their respective Villages, Towns, Townships, Cities, Districts, or other places, as they shall think proper, to provide and furnish such Carriages and Men according to the warrant aforesaid, who are hereby required to provide and furnish the same accordingly.

XVIII. And be it further enacted, That the pay or hire for a New-York Wagon, carrying twelve hundred pounds gross weight, shall be Seven Pence sterling for each mile, and for every other Carriage in that and every other Colony in his Majesty's said Dominions in America, in the same proportion, and at or after the same rate or price for what weight every such other Carriage shall carry; and that the first day's pay or hire for every such Carriage shall be paid down by such Officer to such Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other Civil Officer, who shall get or procure such Carriages for the use of the owner or owners thereof; and the pay or hire for every such Carriage, after the first day, shall be paid every day, from day to day, by such Officer as aforesaid, into the hands of the driver or dryers of such Carriages respectively, until such Carriages shall be discharged from such service, for the use of the owner and owners thereof.

XIX. Provided, always, and be it further enacted, That no such Wagon, Cart, or Carriage, impressed by authority of this Act, shall be obliged or liable, by virtue of this Act, to carry above twelve hundred weight, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

XX. Provided, also, That no such Wagon, Cart, or Carriage, shall be obliged to travel more than one day's march, if within that time they shall arrive at any other place where other Carriages may be procured; but in case other sufficient Carriages cannot be procured, then such Carriages shall be obliged to continue in the service till they shall arrive at such Village, Town, Township, City, District, or other place, where proper and sufficient Carriages for the service of the Forces may be procured.

XXI. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other Civil Officer, within his Majesty's Dominions in America, shall wilfully neglect or refuse to execute such warrants of the Justices of the Peace as shall be directed to them for providing Carriages, as aforesaid; or if any person or persons appointed by such Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other Civil Officer, to provide or furnish any Carriage and Man, shall refuse, or neglect to provide the same, or any other person or persons, whatsoever, shall wilfully do any act or thing, whereby the execution of the said warrants may be delayed, hindered, or frustrated; every such Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, Civil Officer, or other person so offending, shall, for every such offence, forfeit any sum not exceeding Forty Shillings sterling, nor less than Twenty Shillings, to be paid into the Treasury of the Province where any such offence shall be committed, to be applied towards the aforesaid contingent charges of the Province: and all and every such offence and offences, and all and every other offence and offences in this Act mentioned, and not otherwise provided, shall and may be inquired of, heard, and fully determined, by two of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, dwelling in or near the Village, Town, Township, City, District, or place, where such offence shall be committed, who have hereby power to cause the said penalty to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's Goods and Chattels, rendering the overplus, if any, to the owner.

XXII. And whereas, the allowance hereby provided for the payment of the Carriages that may be necessary in the marching of Troops may not be a sufficient compensation for the same, and to satisfy the Constables, Tithingmen, Magistrates, and other Civil Officers, their charges and expenses therein; for remedy whereof, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Constables, Tithingmen, Magistrates, and Civil Officers, procuring such Carriages, shall pay a reasonable expense, or price, for every Carriage so procured; and that every such Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, Civil Officer, or other person, shall be re-paid what he or they shall so expend, together with his or their own charges and expenses attending the same, by the Province or Colony where the same shall arise.

XXIII. Provided always, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where it shall be necessary to take Wagons or other Carriages for long marches beyond the settlements, an appraisement shall be made of the value of such Horses and Carriages, at the time of taking them up to be employed in such marches beyond the settlements, by two indifferent persons, one to be chosen by the Commanding Officer of such Forces, and the other by the owner of such Cattle or Carriages, a certificate of which appraisement shall be given to the owner or owners of such Cattle or Carriages respectively: and in case any of the Cattle or Carriages, so taken up for such service, shall, in the execution thereof, be lost or destroyed, that then, and in every such case, upon producing the said certificate, and proper vouchers, upon oath, of such loss or destruction, to the Paymaster General of his Majesty's Guards and Garrisons, the said Paymaster shall, and he is hereby required to, pay to the respective owners of such Cattle or Carriages the sums specified in such certificates and vouchers to be the value of such Cattle or Carriages so lost or destroyed.

XXIV. And whereas several Soldiers being duly enlisted in his Majesty's service, do often Desert such service; for remedy whereof, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful to, and for the Constable, Tithingman, Magistrate, or other Civil Officer of the Village, Town, Township, City, District, or place, within the said Dominions in America, where any person who may be reasonably suspected to be such Deserter, shall be found to apprehend, or cause him to be apprehended; and to cause such person to be brought before any Justice of the Peace, or other Chief Magistrate, living in or near such Village, Town, Township, City, District, or place, who hath hereby power to examine such suspected person; and if, by his confession, or the testimony of one or more witness or witnesses, upon oath, or the knowledge of such Justice of the Peace, or other Magistrate, it shall appear to be found, that such suspected person is a listed Soldier and ought to be with the Regiment or Company to which he belongs, such Justice of the Peace or other Magistrate shall forthwith cause him to be conveyed to the Jail of the Village; Town, Township, City, District, County, or place, where he shall be found, or to the House of Correction, or other publick Prison in such Village, Town, Township, City, District, County, or place, where such Deserter shall be apprehended, and transmit an account thereof to the Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's Forces in the said Dominions in America, or to the Commanding Officer of the Forces posted nearest to such Justice or Justices, or other Magistrate or Magistrates, for the time being, to the end that such person may be proceeded against according to law; and the Jailer or keeper of such Jail, House of Correction, or Prison, shall receive the full subsistence of such Deserter or Deserters, during the time that he or they shall continue in his custody, for the maintenance of such Deserter or Deserters, but shall not be entitled to any fee or reward on account of the imprisonment of such Deserter or Deserters, any law, usage, or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.

XXV. Provided always, That if any persons shall harbour, conceal, or assist any Deserter from his Majesty's service, within his Majesty's said Dominions in America, knowing him to be such, the person so offending shall forfeit, for every such offence, the sum of Five Pounds; or if any person shall knowingly detain, buy, or exchange, or otherwise receive any Arms, Clothes, Caps, or other Furniture belonging to the King, from any Soldier or Deserter, or any other person, upon any account or pretence whatsoever, within his Majesty's Dominions in America, or cause the colour of such Clothes to be changed, the person so offending shall forfeit, for every such offence, the sum of Five Pounds; and upon conviction upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before any of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace; the said respective penalties of Five Pounds, and Five Pounds shall be levied by warrant, under the hands of the said Justice or Justices of the Peace, by distress and sale of the Goods and Chattels of the offenders, one moiety of the said first mentioned penalty of Five Pounds to be paid to the Informer, by whose means such Deserter shall be apprehended, and one moiety of the said last mentioned penalty of Five Pounds to be paid to the Informer, and the residue of the said respective penalties to be paid to the Officer to whom any such Deserter or Soldier did belong; and in case any such offenders, who shall be convicted as aforesaid of harbouring or assisting any such Deserter or Deserters, or having, knowingly, received any Arms, Clothes, Caps, or other Furniture belonging to the King, or having caused the colours of such Clothes to be changed, contrary to the intent of this Act, shall not have sufficient Goods and Chattels whereon distress may be made to the value of the penalties recovered against him for such offence, or shall not pay such penalties within four days after such conviction, then, and in such case, such Justice of the Peace shall and may, by warrant under his hand and seal, commit such offender to the Common Jail, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, for the space of three months, or cause such offender to be publicly whipped, at the discretion of such Justice.

XXVI. And, whereas, evil disposed persons frequently endeavour to delude his Majesty's good subjects who have engaged themselves as Soldiers in the service of his Majesty and their country, and to prevail with them to Desert the same, for remedy whereof, and for the more effectual and exemplary punishment of offenders in that behalf, within his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons whatsoever, (other than such as are or shall be enlisted as Soldiers, against whom sufficient remedy is already provided by law,) shall, by words, or other means whatsoever, directly or indirectly, persuade or procure any Soldier or Soldiers in the service of his Majesty, his heirs or successors, within any of the said Colonies or Plantations, to desert or leave such service, or shall go about and endeavour, in manner aforesaid, to persuade, prevail, or procure such Soldier or Soldiers to desert or leave such service as aforesaid, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall, for every such offence, forfeit to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, or any other person or persons who shall sue for the same, the sum of Forty Pounds. to be recovered by bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's Courts of Record within the Province or place where the offence shall be committed, wherein no essoin; protection, or wager of law shall be allowed; and if it shall happen that such offender, so convicted as aforesaid, shall not have Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, to the amount or value of the said sum of Forty Pounds, to pay and satisfy the said penalty, or that from the circumstances or heinousness of the crime it shall be thought proper and convenient, the Court before which the said conviction shall be made as aforesaid, shall award the said offender to Prison, there to remain for any time not exceeding six months, without bail or mainprize, and also to stand in the Pillory for the space of one hour, in some Market Town next adjoining to the place where the offence was committed, in open Market there, or in the Market Town itself, where the fact was committed.

XXVII. Provided always, That no such action shall be brought, or prosecution carried on by virtue of this Act, unless the same be commenced within six months after the offence committed.

XXVIII. And be it further enacted, That no Commission Officer shall break open any House within his Majesty's Dominions in America, to search for Deserters, without warrant from a Justice of the Peace, and in the day-time; and that every Commission Officer who shall, in the night, or without warrant from one or more of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, (which said warrants the said Justice or Justices are hereby empowered to grant,) forcibly enter into, or break open, the Dwelling House or Out-Houses of any person whatsoever, under pretence of searching for Deserters, shall, upon due proof thereof, forfeit the sum of Twenty Pounds.

XXIX. And, whereas, several crimes and offences have been, and may be, committed by several persons not being Soldiers, at several Forts or Garrisons, and several other places within his Majesty's Dominions in America, which are not within the limits or jurisdiction of any Civil Government there hitherto established, and which crimes and offences are not properly cognizable or triable and punishable by a Court Martial, but by the Civil Magistrate, by means whereof several great crimes and offences may go unpunished, to the great scandal of Government: for remedy whereof, Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the twenty-fourth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and for so long afterwards as this Act shall continue in force, if any person or persons, not being a Soldier or Soldiers, do or shall commit any crime or crimes, or offence or offences, in any of the said Forts, Garrisons, or places within his Majesty's Dominions in America, which are not within the limits or jurisdiction of any Civil Government hitherto established, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons to apprehend such offender or offenders, and to carry him, her, or them before the Commanding Officer for the time being of his Majesty's Forces there; and such offender being charged upon oath, in writing, before the said Commanding Officer, and which oath the said Commanding Officer is hereby empowered to administer; that then, and in every such case, the said Commanding Officer shall receive and take into his custody and safely keep every such offender, and shall convey and deliver, or cause to be conveyed and delivered, with all convenient speed, every such offender to the Civil Magistrate of the next adjoining Province, together with the cause of his or her detainer, to be committed and dealt with by such Civil Magistrates or Magistrate: according to law; and every such Civil Magistrate is hereby commanded and required to commit every such offender, that he or she may be dealt with according to law; and in every such case, it shall and may be lawful to prosecute and try every such Offender in the Court of such Province or Colony where crimes and offences of the like nature are usually tried, and where the same would be properly tried, in case such crime or offence had been committed within the jurisdiction of such Court; and such crime shall and may be alleged to be committed within the jurisdiction of such Court; and such Court shall and may proceed therein to trial, judgement, and execution, in the same manner as if such crime or offence had been really committed within the jurisdiction of such Court, any law, usage, custom, matter, or thing whatsoever, to the contrary notwithstanding.

XXX. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That every Bill, Plaint, Action, or Suit against any person or persons, for any act, matter, or thing to be acted or done in pursuance of this Act, or the said other in-part recited Act, in any of his Majesty's Dominions in America, shall be brought and prosecuted in and before some principal Court of Record in the Colony where such matter or thing shall be done or committed; and in case the same shall not be done or committed within the jurisdiction of any such Court, then in the Court of the Colony next to the place where the same shall be done and committed, and in no other Court whatsoever.

XXXI. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where any Troops or Parties upon command have occasion, in their march, in any of his Majesty's Dominions in America, to pass regular Ferries, it shall and may be lawful for the Commanding Officer either to pass over with his party as passengers, or to hire the Ferry Boat entire to himself and his party, debarring others for that time in his option; and in ease he shall choose to take passage for himself and party as passengers, he shall only pay for himself, and for each person, Officer or Soldier under his command, half of the ordinary rate payable by single persons at any such Ferry; and in case he shall hire the Ferry Boat for himself and party, he shall pay half of the ordinary rate for such Boat or Boats; and in such places where there are no regular Ferries, but that all passengers hire Boats at the rate they can agree for, Officers, with or without parties, are to agree for Boats at the rates that other persons do in the like cases.

XXXII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all sum and sums of Money mentioned in this Act, and all penalties and forfeitures whatsoever to be incurred or forfeited for any offence, cause, matter or thing whatsoever, to be done, committed, or omitted to be done in his Majesty's Colonies and Dominions in America, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this Act, shall be, and shall be paid and forfeited in lawful Money of the Colony or place where the same shall be forfeited or become due, at the rate of Four Shillings and Eight Pence, sterling Money, for a Spanish milled Dollar, and not otherwise

XXXIII. Provided always, and be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That nothing in this Act contained, touching the quartering his Majesty's Forces, and the supplying them in their Quarters, and the furnishing Carriages on their marches, and on other necessary occasions, shall extend, or be construed to extend to any Province, Colony, or Plantation, during such time as any law of such Province, Colony, or Plantation which shall have received the confirmation of his Majesty in Council, shall be in force for providing Quarters for his Majesty's Officers and Soldiers, and for furnishing them in their Quarters, and for providing Carriages for them on marches, or on any other necessary occasion, within such Province, Colony, or Plantation.

XXXIV. Provided always, and be it enacted, That whenever any Troops shall march through, or be stationed in any place in North America, it shall and may be lawful for the Civil Magistrates, Selectmen, or other person or persons, (appointed by Act of Parliament, or by any Law of such Province, Colony, or Plantation as aforesaid, to quarter and make provision for Troops,) as likewise for the Officer commanding the Troops so marching or stationed as aforesaid, by mutual agreement, signed by the respective parties, to provide Quarters for the said Troops, in any manner most convenient to them and to the country, any Act or thing to the contrary notwithstanding, so as that no expense be brought on the Crown by such agreement.

XXXV. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any Action, Bill, Complaint, or Suit, shall be brought or commenced against any person or persons, for any act, matter, or thing done or acted in pursuance of this Act, that it shall and may be lawful to and for all and every person or persons so sued to plead thereto the general issue, that he or they are not guilty, and to give the special matter in evidence to the Jury who shall try the cause; and if the verdict therein shall pass for the defendant or defendants, or the plaintiff or plaintiffs therein shall become nonsuit, or suffer a discontinuance, or by any other means judgement therein shall be given for the defendant or defendants therein; that in every such case the Justice or Justices, or other Judge or Judges of the Court in which such action shall be brought, shall, by force and virtue of this Act, allow unto such defendant or defendants his or their treble costs, which he or they shall have sustained or be put to by reason of the defence of such suit, for which costs such defendant and defendants shall have the like remedy as in other cases where costs are by the law given to defendants.

XXXVI. And whereas, during the continuance of this Act, there may be occasion for the marching and quartering of some of his Majesty's Marine Forces in some parts of his Majesty's Dominions in America, Be it therefore further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That this Act, and all and singular the clauses and provisions herein mentioned and contained, as well relating to the quartering and billeting of his Majesty's Land Forces in his Dominions in America, and providing them with Carriages on their marches, as also relating to all and every other provision, regulation, penalty, punishment, matter, and thing herein provided, enacted, and made, with respect to the said Land Forces, shall be deemed, construed, and taken to extend, and the same, and all and every part and parts thereof, and of this Act, are, in all respects, and to all intents and purposes whatsoever, hereby extended to his Majesty's Marine Forces, while on shore, in any of his Majesty's Dominions in America, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the said Marine Forces had herein been particularly mentioned in conjunction with his Majesty's other Forces.

XXXVII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That this Act, and every thing herein contained, shall continue and be in force in all his Majesty's Dominions in America, from the twenty-fourth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, until the twenty-fourth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven,

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 11, 1775.

Lord North moved, That the House do resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, on the 27th instant, to consider of the Encouragement proper to be given to the Fisheries of Great Britain and Ireland.*

He introduced his motion with disclaiming any motives of resentment against America, by the present measure, or meaning it either directly or indirectly to oppress that country. He said, that Fisheries, well conducted and properly directed, were an inexhaustible fund of riches; for while they extended our commerce, and kept open a continual advangeous intercourse with foreign Nations, they increased our naval strength, and were, consequently, the great source of that power which gave us the pre-eminence over all the other Nations of Europe.

Mr. Burke thanked his Lordship for the friendly disposition he had now shown towards his (Mr. Burke's) native country; observing, at the same time, that, however desirous he might be to promote any scheme for the advantage of Ireland, he would be much better pleased that the benefits thus held out should never be realized, than that Ireland should profit at the expense of a country which was, if possible, more oppressed than herself.

Mr. Thomas Townshend condemned in the most point-cacy for enticing future service. It was not, in itself, very considerable; but it was said it might be considered as a beginning; and small benefits carry weight with those who had not been habituated to great favours.

It was shown, in the course of the late evidence before the House, that the Exports, from this country to Ireland, amounted to two million four hundred thousand Pounds annually; besides her supporting a large and excellent Standing Army, at all times ready for our defence; and the immense sums of her ready cash which her numerous Absentees, Pensioners, and Placemen spend in this country. Yet, from oppressive restrictions in Trade, some of them highly impolitical and prejudicial to ourselves, that country is cut off from the benefit of her great natural staple commodity, as well as excluded, in general, from the advantages which she might derive from her admirable situation, and her great number of excellent Harbours.

The Minister, accordingly, moved for a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of the encouragement proper to be given to the Fisheries of Great Britain and Ireland. This attention to Ireland was generally approved of, and, after some conversation upon the hardships which that country suffered, it was proposed by some gentlemen who were particularly attached to its interests, to extend the motion by adding the words, Trade and Commerce; and thereby affording an opportunity of inquiring particularly into the state of that Kingdom, and of granting such relief and indulgence in those respects, as could be done without prejudice to ourselves.

The Minister did not object to the reasonableness or expediency of entering upon this subject at a proper time; but said that the proposed amendment would introduce a mass of matter much too weighty and extensive for present consideration; that he would, therefore, confine the motion to the immediate objects of the Fisheries, leaving the other matter at large. - Ann. Regis.

* As the American Fisheries were now abolished, it became necessary to think of some measures for supplying their place, and particularly to guard against the ruinous consequences of the foreign markets either changing the course of consumption, or falling into the hands of strangers, and those, perhaps, inimical to this country. The consumption of Fish Oil, as a substitute for Tallow, was now become so extensive as to render that also an object of national concern; the City of London alone expending about three hundred thousand Pounds annually in that commodity. Whatever present purposes the evidence lately before the House might answer, in showing that there was a sufficient fund of Money, Ships, Men, and inclination, ready for an immediate transfer of the Fisheries, not only without loss, but with great gain and benefit, it soon became evident that the Minister did not choose to risk matters of such infinite importance upon the veracity of these representations.

It seemed also necessary, in the present state of publick affairs, that the Kingdom of Ireland should be taken more notice of, and some greater consideration paid to her interests, than had been the practice for many years. The question between the Colonies and Parliament, particularly in the manner in which it had been lately argued, was not calculated to quiet that Kingdom. The repose of all parts still at rest was never more necessary. In the crisis to which matters were now evidently tending, little doubt remained that even assistance would be requisite from that country; besides, her patience, her sufferings, and her forbearance were to be held up as a mirror, and in contrast to the Colonies; and though these merits had long passed unregarded, this did not seem a fit reason to encourage an opinion, that a similar conduct would never obtain any reward. The nature of the benefit was, however, to be considered, and nothing could seem better adapted than a donation which would be an advantage instead of a loss to the giver. A share in the first fruits of a spoil was also a lure of undoubted offied terms, the narrow, weak, and ill-founded policy which had directed the English Councils in respect to Ireland, ever since that country had become a part of the British Dominions; and recommended, very warmly, an inquiry into the state of Irish commerce and Manufactures, in order that such of them as did not immediately interfere with those of Great Britain might receive every possible encouragement consistent with the general interests of the whole Empire.

Mr. Connolly drew a very melancholy picture of the present state of Ireland, and recapitulated many instances of the eminent loyalty of that country, and of the repeated proofs she had given, for a series of years back, of her readiness to contribute, much beyond her ability, to the common support. Besides the merits she had to plead on these grounds, he pointed out the absurdity of several of the restraints laid upon the Irish Commerce; and endeavoured to show that some of those were as unkind as impolitic; and that there were some branches of trade, particularly that to the Levant, which might be laid open, much to the advantage of both countries, and to the complete rivalry of the French.

Mr. Burke rose a second time, and predicted the most happy conclusion from the dawning favourable disposition of the Minister. He, therefore, offered an amendment, by proposing to insert the words, Trade and Commerce."

Lord North observed, that the amendment suggested by the honourable gentleman would introduce a mass of matter much too weighty and extensive for present consideration; that nothing of the kind was intended by the present motion; and that it arose purely from matter which came out in the course of a discussion on the Massachusetts Bay Fishery Bill, though he could assure the House that it was by no means dictated by a spirit of resentment, but was simply taken up on the mere independent idea which the motion expressed, that of encouraging the Fisheries of Great Britain and Ireland as an independent proposition.

The question was then put, and it was carried in the Affirmative.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Thursday fortnight, the 27th day of this instant, April, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of what Encouragements it may be proper to give to the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain and Ireland.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider of what Encouragements may be proper to give to the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain and Ireland.

And the said Order being, read accordingly -

Lord North observed, that when the present proposition was first moved, he wished it to be understood, and explained himself so at the time, that the only object meant to be considered was the Fishery alone; but since that time application had been made, and it had been thought reasonable, that as several Regiments serving in the West Indies, North America, and his Majesty's Governments of Gibraltar and Minorca, were paid by that Kingdom, and by the Law, as it now stood, no Clothing, Accoutrements,

&c., could be sent from thence, to allow such Clothing, &c. to be sent, under certain restrictions, directly from Ireland. His Lordship next proceeded to observe, that the Linen being the staple manufacture of Ireland, and it being dreaded that the American Non-Importation Agreement might cut that country off from the annual supplies of Flax-seed from North America, though, for his own part, he had no reason to think so, as he imagined such an unnatural combination, from the very nature of it, must shortly be dissolved: he begged leave to submit to the consideration of the House, considering the immediate urgent circumstances which now presented themselves, if it would not be proper to grant a small bounty on the importation of Flax-seed into Ireland, for a limited time. He said he was fully aware of the seeming oddity of such proposal, and of the jealousies and alarm such a measure might probably occasion; but when the motives which induced him were properly considered, and that no fraud could be carried into execution; doubted not but the House would immediately subscribe to their propriety. He assured the House, before he sat down, that the indulgence given to export the Clothing for the Troops should be carefully guarded; and that as to the bounties paid on the importation of Flax-seed into Ireland, there could be no fraud, because the Parliament of that Kingdom had already granted a similar bounty, which usually amounted, on an average, to seven thousand five hundred Pounds per annum; therefore the certificates, in one instance, would be vouchers to the British Parliament, to prevent even the suspicion of fraud, or imposition of any kind whatever. His Lordship then moved the two following instructions: -

"Ordered, That it be an instruction to the said Committee, that they do consider of allowing the Clothing and Accoutrements necessary for his Majesty's Forces, which are to be paid out of any of his Majesty's Revenues arising in the Kingdom of Ireland, and are sent from thence, upon his Majesty's service, to be exported from Ireland to the places where such Forces shall be so ordered to serve."

"Ordered, That it be an instruction to the said Committee, that they do consider of what Encouragement it may be proper to give to promote the importation of "Flax-seed into Ireland, for a limited time."

Ordered, That the Minutes of the examination of witnesses, taken before the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein to be mentioned, under certain conditions, and for a time to be limited, was committed, and also on the report of the said Bill, be referred to the said Committee.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Cooper took the Chair of the Committee.

Lord North moved the following Resolutions:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the following Bounties should be paid; that is to say, Forty Pounds for twenty-five Vessels, of the burthen of fifty tons and upwards, that shall first arrive from Newfoundland with a cargo of bank Fish, and not less than ten thousand in tale; and, disposing of the same, shall catch a Second cargo of the same.

Resolved, That Twenty Pounds per Vessel, for one hundred Vessels that shall next arrive, as before mentioned, be paid.

Resolved, that Ten Pounds a Vessel, for the next One hundred Vessels that arrive, as above mentioned, shall be paid.

Upon this he remarked, that the design of it was to encourage the going out early enough to make two voyages a year, which was very practicable. He observed, that there could not be a doubt but it would be infinitely for the advantage of this country to make Newfoundland, as much as possible, an English Island, rather than an American Colony; that sedentary Fisheries ought to be discouraged, and the bank Ship Fishery encouraged, which was the great nursery of Seamen; that the experiment was not an expensive one, as the whole demand could not exceed four thousand Pounds, a sum not great enough to alarm any one.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the following Bounties shall be paid: Five Hundred Pounds to the Ship that shall bring home the greatest quantity of Oil, being the Oil of not less than one Whale, caught in Seas to the South of the Greenland and Davis's Straits' Fisheries; Four Hundred Pounds to the first that shall bring home the next greatest quantity; Three Hundred Pounds to the next greatest quantity; and Two Hundred Pounds to the next greatest quantity.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the Duties on the import of Oil, Blubber, Bone, &c., from Newfoundland, &c., shall cease and determine.

He explained this point, by observing that while these Imports from Greenland were allowed Duty-free, the same from Newfoundland, &c., were charged with a Duty; an absurdity he was, till lately, ignorant of.

Resolved, It is the opinion of this Committee, that the Duties at present payable on the importation of Seal-skins, shall cease and determine.

Lord North said, that it appeared from Mr. Lyster's examination, that many more Seal-skins would be imported, were it not for a Duty of about four Pence half-penny each, which they paid at present; it was, therefore, thought right to exonerate them from that charge.

Resolved, It is the opinion of this Committee, that it shall be lawful for the subjects of Ireland to export Provisions, Hooks, Lines, Nets, Tools, and Implements, for the purpose of the Fishery.

He remarked, that the Irish being tied from these Exports at present, was, in effect, excluding them from the Fishery. He, however, observed, that this Resolution must be followed with limitations, in order to prevent a clandestine supply of the Colonies with Irish Manufactures.

Resolved, It is the opinion of this Committee, that it shall be lawful to export from Ireland Clothes and Accoutrements for such Regiments on the Irish Establishment as are employed abroad.

His Lordship remarked on this Resolution, that as the Irish were burthened with the expense of several Regiments serving elsewhere, which they were ill able to bear, he thought it but fair to allow them to export the Clothing and Accoutrements of such Regiments, which, at present, they could not do by law; that the Export must be guarded very carefully against frauds, which would not be difficult, as the Clothes would consist only of Uniforms.

Resolved, It is the opinion of this Committee, that a Bounty of Five Shillings a barrel should be paid on the import to Ireland, of Flax-seed, from any place whatsoever.

Upon this Resolution, Lord North said, that he had framed it much more in obedience to the desires and apprehensions of others, than in consequence of any he had himself. But as some gentlemen were apprehensive that the Non-Exportation Agreements of the Colonies would be lasting, and have the effect of doing a great prejudice to Ireland, by withholding Flax-seed; and as it was found that the Seed raised in Ireland was not so good as that imported from abroad, he had, in compliance of these ideas, come into the present proposition; that his own opinion was directly contrary. He was clear, that engagements so very contrary to their interests, could never be lasting; however, for a limited time, he agreed to the Bounty.

These Resolutions were all agreed to without opposition.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Mr. CooTer reported from the Committee, that they had come to several Resolutions, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning

FRIDAY, April 28, 1775.

Mr. Cooper, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider of what Encouragements it may be proper to give to the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain and Ireland, the Resolutions which the Committee had directed him to report to the House; which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same were read, and are as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the following Bounties be allowed to certain Ships, of the burthen of fifty tons, or upwards, employed in the British Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, for a limited time, under certain conditions and limitations; that is to say, a Bounty of Forty Pounds each, to twenty-five such Ships that shall first arrive in each year in the Island of Newfoundland, with a cargo of Fish, not less than ten thousand by tale, caught on the banks thereof; and shall, after landing the same, proceed for and return with one cargo of Fish more, at least, caught on the said banks; and a Bounty of Twenty Pounds each, for one hundred such Ships which shall next arrive at the said Island with a like cargo, and shall afterwards proceed again to the said banks, and return from thence in manner before mentioned; and a Bounty of Ten Pounds each for another one hundred of such Ships which shall next arrive at the said Island with a like cargo, and shall afterwards proceed again to the said banks, and return from thence in manner before mentioned.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the following Bounties be allowed to five Ships belonging to Great Britain, Ireland, or the Isle of Man, employed in the Whale Fishery in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, or on the Coasts of Labrador, Newfoundland, or in any Seas to the Southward of the Greenland Seas and David's Straits, for a limited time, under certain conditions and limitations; that is to say: to the Vessel that shall arrive in each year in any Port of Great Britain, with the greatest quantity of Oil, being the produce of one or more Whale or Whales taken or killed by the Crew of such Vessel, a Bounty of Five Hundred Pounds; to the Vessel that shall, in like manner, arrive in the same year with the next greatest quantity of such Oil, a Bounty of Four Hundred Pounds; to the Vessel that shall so arrive in the same year with the next greatest quantity of such Oil, a Bounty of Three Hundred Pounds; to the Vessel that shall so arrive in the same year with the next greatest quantity of such Oil, a Bounty of Two Hundred Pounds; to the Vessel which shall so arrive in the same year with the next greatest quantity of such Oil, a Bounty of One Hundred Pounds; the Oil so to be imported by each of the said Ships being the produce of one Whale at the least.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the liberty granted by law to import into this Kingdom, Duty free, Oil or Blubber, and Whale Fins from Greenland, and from the parts and Seas adjacent, and from those of Newfoundland, and of any other of his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America, in Ships belonging to Great Britain, be extended to Oil and Blubber of Fish, and to Whale Fins of Whales caught by Ships belonging to Great Britain, in any part of the Ocean; and that the like liberty be granted to his Majesty's subjects of Ireland and the Isle of Man.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the like Bounties which are granted by an Act of the eleventh year of his present Majesty's reign, to Ships fitted out from Great Britain or America, for the Whale Fishery, to the Greenland Seas and Davids Straits, be allowed, under certain restrictions, to Ships fitted out for that purpose from the Kingdom of Ireland and from the Isle of Man.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the Duty payable upon the importation of Seal-skins, caught by Vessels belonging to Great Britain, Ireland, or the Isle of Man, and fitted out from thence, respectively, shall cease, and be no longer paid.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that power be given to his Majesty's subjects, residing in Ireland, to ship and transport from thence to Newfoundland, or any part of America, where the Fishery now is; or may hereafter be, carried on, Provisions, Hooks, Lines, Netting, or other Tools or Implements of the product or manufacture of Great Britain or Ireland, necessary for, and used in, the Fishery by the Ships or Vessels carrying out the same, and the Craft belonging to, and employed by, such Ships in the said Fishery.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the like power be given to his Majesty's subjects residing in the Isle of Man, to transport from thence, for the same purpose, the like Provisions, Tools, and Implements, of the product or manufacture of Great Britain or the Isle of Man.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that Clothing and Accoutrements necessary for his Majesty's Forces, which are paid out of any of his Majesty's Revenues arising in the Kingdom of Ireland, and are sent from thence, upon his Majesty's service, be allowed to be exported from Ireland to the places where such Forces shall be so ordered to serve, under certain restrictions and limitations.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a Bounty of Five Shillings per hogshead be allowed upon all Flax-seed, imported from any place whatsoever, into the Kingdom of Ireland, for a limited time, and that such Bounty be paid out of any moneys arising from the Revenue under the management of the Commissioners of the Customs in England.

The said Resolutions being severally read a second time, were, upon the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That a Bill, or Bills, be brought in upon the said Resolutions, and that the Lord North, Mr. Jenkinson, Mr. Rigby, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Thomas Townshend, the Lord Clare, Lord George Germaine, Mr. Conolly, Mr. Cooper, and General Irwin, do prepare and bring in the same.

THURSDAY, May 4, 1775.

Mr. Jenkinson presented to the House, according to Order, a Bill for the Encouragement of the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions in Europe, and for securing the return of the Fishermen, Sailors, and others, employed in the said Fisheries, to the Ports thereof; at the end of the fishing season; and the same was received and read the first time.

Resolved, That the Bill be read a second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time upon Tuesday morning next.

TUESDAY, May 9, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the second reading of the Bill, be now read.

And the said Order being read accordingly;

The said Bill was read a second time.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Thursday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, upon the said Bill.

THURSDAY, May 11, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Bill, be now read.

And the said Order being read accordingly;

Ordered, That it be an instruction to the said Committee, that they have power to extend certain provisions of the said Bill, to the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto, which they had directed him to report; when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received upon Monday morning next.

MONDAY, May 15, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to Order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Bill was committed, the amendments which the Committee had made to the Bill; which, upon the question severally put thereupon, were agreed to by the House.

A clause was offered to be added to the Bill, That any Ship, clearing out with Goods from Newfoundland, shall be liable to the same limitations and restrictions as if this Act had not been made.

And the said clause was twice read; and, upon the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House to be made part of the Bill.

Ordered, That the Bill, with the amendments, be engrossed.

WEDNESDAY, May 17, 1775.

The Bill was read the third time.

Resolved, That the Bill do Pass; and that the Title be, An Act for the Encouragement of the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions in Europe; and for securing the return of the Fishermen, Sailors, and others, employed in the said Fisheries, to the Ports thereof, at the end of the fishing season.

Ordered, That Mr. Jeukinson do carry the Bill to the Lords, and desire their concurrence.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, May 18, 1775.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Mr. Jenkinson, and others;

With a Bill, entituled "An Act for the Encouragement of the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions in Europe; and for securing the return of the Fishermen, Sailors, and others, employed in the said Fisheries, to the Ports thereof, at the end of the fishing season;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

FRIDAY, May 19, 1775.

The Bill, entituled "An Act for the Encouragement of the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions in Europe; and for securing the return of the Fishermen, Sailors, and others, employed in the said Fisheries, to the Ports thereof, at the end of the fishing season;" was read the second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill on Monday next.

MONDAY, May 22, 1775.

The House, according to order, was adjourned during pleasure, and put into a Committee upon the Bill, entituled "An Act for the Encouragement of the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions in Europe; and for securing the return of the Fishermen, Sailors, and others, employed in the said Fisheries, to the Ports thereof, at the end of the fishing season."

After some time the House was resumed :

And the Lord Scarsdale reported from the Committee, "That they had gone through the Bill, and directed him to report the same to the House without any amendment."

The Bill was read the third time.

The question was then put, "Whether this Bill shall Pass?"

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 3, 1775.

Ordered, That the Order of the Day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of Ways and Means for raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, be now read.

And the said Order being read accordingly;

The House resolved itself into the said Committee.

Lord North moved the following Resolutions:

1. "That persons who, on the 24th of April last, were possessed of Three per centum Annuities, shall be at liberty to accept eighty-eight Pounds for every one hundred Pounds towards the redemption of £1,000,000 of the "said Funds or Stocks; one moiety to be paid on or before the 15th of July, and the other on or before the 20th of October next, with interest to the 5th of July 1775; and for every one hundred Pounds of such subscription, shall receive six tickets in a Lottery to consist of 60,000 tickets, at twelve Pounds ten Shillings each; and the capital Stock of such subscription shall be annihilated. That books shall be opened at the Bank, the 8th of May, from nine in the morning till six in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving said subscription. No person to subscribe more than £20,000 nor less than £100; and after the whole is summed up, the same to be ratably divided among the subscribers, in proportion to the quantity of Stock subscribed, over and above the said £1,000,000 of Annuities to be so annihilated.

2. "That towards raising the Supply, £1,915,552 16s. 11d. be issued out of the sinking fund.

3. "That £1,250,000 be raised by loans on Exchequer Bills, to be charged on the first Aids, to be granted next session.

4. "That £15,000, out of the Moneys remaining in the Exchequer the 5th of April, 1766, the produce of American Duties, be applied towards maintaining the Forces and Garrisons in the Plantations.

5. "That Moneys paid into the Exchequer after the 5th of April, 1775, and before the 5th of April, 1776, produce of the Duties on the importation and exportation of Gum Senega and Gum Arabick, be applied towards the Supply."

He observed, that £3,800,000 of light or diminished Money had been paid into the Bank, under the first Act; that £4,800,000 had been paid in like manner, under the Royal Proclamation of receiving Guineas not under five penny-weights three grains, nor more than six grains; that it was computed, that when the second Proclamation was issued for calling in all Guineas under full standard, upwards of £4,000,000 more would be called in, the whole amounting to about £14,000,000 and the expense of melting down, receiving, interest paid to the Bank, gratuities to the country Commissioners, and re-coinage to about £650,000; that the deficiencies on Land and Malt were computed at £450,000, that is, £50,000 lower than they were the last year; that the whole of the Grants consisted of the Land and Malt, estimated at £2,250,000, the Exchequer Bills £1,250,000, the profits on a Lottery £150,000, the produce of the Sinking Fund, from the 5th January to the 5th April, £886,000, the three next quarters produce of said Fund £1,915,000, which would make the whole of the Sinking Fund £2,800,000, and Miscellaneous Savings, with the expected produce of the sale of French Prizes £17,000, and sales of Lands in the Ceded Islands, £50,000, taken together, would amount to £300,000; while, on the other hand, the services were, the Navy £1,700,000, the Ordnance £300,000, the Army £1,600,000, Exchequer Bills of last year 1,250,000, Army Extraordinaries £270,000, Miscellaneous of Grants and Coinage £348,000. So that on the whole, the Grants would be £6,550,000, and the services voted £5,550,000, which would leave a surplus of £1,000,000 excess of Grants, with which he proposed to pay off the above £1,000,000 of Three per centum Annuities, for the sum of £880,000, which last surplus again of £120,000, would remain to make good the deficiencies of the Grants, or to balance the £100,000 voted for the purchase of the Queen's Palace and Somerset House.

His Lordship then proceeded to state the Publick Debts, as they appeared on the 5th of January last, compared with their amount on the 5th of January, 1773. At the latter period they were £123,000,000 funded, and £13,000,000 unfunded, which, with the fractions, made in the whole £136,000,000; at the former, £124,000,000 funded, £3,000,000 unfunded, in the whole £127,000,000; paid off £9,000,000. His Lordship did not state the respective interests paid at those periods, but generally stated the decrease in the following manner: Total decrease on the whole £440,000 per annum, and £30,000 by the present operation, in the whole £470,000, out of which take for the Navy Bills unfunded, £20,000, and the Exchequer Bills in circulation, at four per cent. £40,000, both these sums, with the trifling discount on Navy and Victualling Bills, would leave a clear decrease in the interest money paid to the publick creditors of the sum of £400,000 per annum.

After he had stated the several sums necessary to the explanation of the financial operation, which he was about to submit to the House, he observed, that the Nation might think that the reduction of the National Debt proceeded very slowly; but when it was considered, the very heavy burdens contracted during the late glorious and successful war, the consequent increase of interest, and that that war was entered into at the express desire of the people, joined with the numerous, and singular, advantages derived to this country, both in respect of commerce and territory, the Nation, uniting all these considerations, had much less reason to be impatient or complain. The four great wars we have maintained since the Revolution, said his Lordship, neither originated from the ambition of our Princes, nor the corruption of Ministers; and the vast sums expended, however enormous, or heavily at present we may feel the weight, were for the most part laid out, either directly in the protection or advancement of our own immediate interests, or, in upholding those with which they were essentially connected. Our endeavours have, in general, corresponded to the glory of our motives, and the magnitude of our designs, as taking the lead among the great Powers of Europe, by protecting others, securing our own interests, and setting limits to the ambition of the enemies of both. The war commenced at the Revolution, was a popular war; so was that which followed about the succession. The rupture in 1739 with Spain, originated entirely in popular motives. I will, not, however, pretend to say it was as well-founded as the two preceding, at least, so well-timed, though I have no doubt that it might, in the end, become as necessary. The late war was, if possible, still more popular than any of the rest, as it was, in the beginning, undertaken without any view to Continental connexions, but purely to protect our subjects in America, which, I shall ever think, ought to be a very strong incentive to them, to assist us to alleviate those burthens we now feel, and of which they have been the primary cause.

I will now beg leave to return to the subject that naturally falls more immediately under the consideration this day, which is the reduction of this heavy load of debt, and the approbation of the Fund allotted for that purpose to other uses. A person of confessed ingenuity (Dr. Price) has written a pamphlet with great ability, on this subject, and condemned the great Minister, (Sir Robert Walpole) who first devised the Sinking Fund, for departing from his own plan. I admire the ingenuity of the author. I have partly, since I came into my present situation, adopted his plan of reduction, as much as times and circumstances would permit; yet, I am far from approving all of what he recommends; nor can I lightly condemn an able Minister, of approved judgement, high abilities, and great experience, while I remain ignorant of the true motives which influenced his conduct, or, perhaps, the total impracticability of his acting up to his own ideas: plans on paper, or measures proposed in the closet, often becoming difficult in the execution, or inexpedient, though they should be practicable. Another very popular topick is, taking off the taxes from the necessities of life, in order to relieve the lower order of the people. Besides a thousand impediments, that I shall forbear to insist on, which might grow out of such a measure, to obstruct it, I fear it would not answer the ends proposed, though every possible obstruction were removed, because the effect might be, that the tax would be lost, and the revenue suffer, without the least benefit to the consumer, as means would be probably devised still to keep the commodity up at the taxed price. On the whole, the vast riches of this country, its extensive credit, which it has never yet violated in respect of either its domestick or foreign creditors, its prodigious commerce, its surprising paper circulation, which must be immense, when it is considered that the money alone in circulation is considerably more than fourteen millions, as appears by the documents this day referred to; all this great system of power, riches, and external strength, I say, taken together, with the magnificence, splendour, and luxury of individuals, induce me to believe, that though the national, and consequent, annual burdens be enormous, they are far from being disproportion to our abilities to pay. I just beg leave to mention one circumstance more before I sit down, to shew the difficulty of a hasty reduction of the publick debts, by the means we are necessarily obliged to pursue. A very able deceased Minister (Mr. Pelham) reduced the National Debt, by lowering the interest: we are necessitated to effect the same purpose, by paying off the principal itself, our progress must be, therefore, more slow. That gentleman payed off twenty millions with ease, by only laying an obligation on the annuitants, to receive their principal, or reduce their annuities; and the consequence was, that they gladly accepted of the offer, and consented to take three instead of four per cent. What was the reason then? And what would be the probable consequence now? The Funds were up at par at the former period; they are now considerably below, owing, it may be presumed, to the greater quantity being in the market, so that the publick creditors would, at this period, be as desirous of receiving their capitals, as they were at the former to accept of the reduced annuities. I do, therefore, recur to my first assertion, that we must proceed slowly in the proposed reduction, or lay on new taxes, in order to effect our purpose with greater facility and expedition; for I repeat it, there is no other method of getting at the principal, hut either by reducing it directly by specifick payments of the capital, or by being able, by the rise of the Fund, to lower the interest.

Mr. Hartley rose, chiefly to point out the impropriety of anticipating the produce of the Sinking Fund, and of charging more on it than it would be able to bear; the manner of making up the accounts at the Exchequer for the last year, which produced a surplus of two hundred thousand Pounds, or the total receipt of one week, with part of the Debt payed in by the East India Company, having swelled the Sinking Fund much beyond its natural size. That, therefore, the sum it was now rated at, was considerably too high. He next entered into a string of observations, relative to the ill-judged policy of pushing matters to extremity with America, and the probability, nay, the inevitable certainty, of the interference of France and Spain; and of a general European war, should the sword be once drawn against our brethren on the other side of the Atlantic. He concluded with drawing a most melancholy picture of the consequences such an event must produce, in its operations on our trade, manufactures, finances, publick credit, external strength, and internal prosperity; reminding the country gentlemen, at the same time, that this would, in all probability, be the last year they would, even in time of peace, enjoy the benefit of a three Shillings in the Pound Land Tax, though they had been prevailed on to give their support to measures so evidently destructive of their own interest, and of the Nation at large, because they were, in the first instance, to bear no part of the additional burthens such measures were to create.

Mr. Vyner answered, that he was certain the landed gentlemen were not actuated by the motives imputed to them by the honourable gentleman; but purely from the apparent necessity of the measure itself, in support of which they were ready to risk any event, sooner than forego those advantages of trade and riches, which were inseparably involved in the supremacy of Great Britain over her Colonies; for were that once given up, the others would soon follow. In support of such a cause, therefore, he was willing to pay not only four Shillings, but fourteen Shillings in the Pound: and as he entertained not a single doubt but we should prevail in the contest, we ought to oblige America to pay the expense she had wantonly put us to, and which would likewise enable us to bring back Our quondam Peace Establishment, that of a Land Tax of two Shillings in the Pound.

Mr. T. Townshend, after condemning the bad policy of reducing the Land Tax, from four Shillings to three Shillings in the Pound, some years since, as one great means of retarding the reduction of the National Debt, observed upon two items, for which his Lordship took credit; one was the sum of £17,000 charged on the sale of French prizes in the West Indies, the other a sum of £50,000, said to be the produce of sales of the Lands in the ceded Islands, which have been voted regularly, year after year, since 1771; and had as regularly returned into the Ways and Means, without a shilling of them being actually brought to the credit of publick accounts.

Lord North replied, that one honourable gentleman seemed to delight in drawing a gloomy picture of the dreadful consequences of breaking with America. He said the predicted evils would be easily averted, by America returning to its duty. There had been an offer made which would at once obviate all difficulties, if they were sincere; if not, and they should pertinaciously refuse terms, virtually correspondent to their own ideas, the question would then be a very simple one; that is, whether they were to be independent, or whether we should avail ourselves of those rights we were indubitably entitled to, in order to secure to the Nation those great benefits derived from our trade and commerce with that country, which must be forever lost, if we acquiesced in the unreasonable and unnatural claims it now set up. As to the honourable gentleman's fears respecting a breach with our Colonies being productive of a French and Spanish war, his Lordship replied, that the wisdom and prudence of the French Minister would prevent him, as a friend to the interest of his country, to hazard any such experiment; nevertheless, France was an opulent, powerful Nation, abounding in native wealth and internal strength, and might break with us, either now or in the event of an American civil war, if she pleased, nor could he see how any mode of stating an account of debtor and creditor on the present occasion, could possibly prevent it.

Governor Johnstone closed the conversation, by observing, that though his Lordship was no conjurer to effect miracles by stating an account, it had always been customary with the Minister, on this day, to give a kind of state of the Nation, both respecting her finances, the terms she stood on with foreign Powers, and the general posture of affairs in Europe. This mode had been likewise adopted by his Lordship uniformly, since his coming into office; it was a matter of the first consequence to the commercial part of the Nation, as a means of preventing publick and private imposition, by preventing artful men from improperly operating on our Funds. The reason of the thing was as clear, he said, as the custom was invariable; and is it not for this very purpose, said he, that you admit the Merchants and Traders of London this day into your gallery. Besides, I remember on the last occasion of this kind, how much this House was edified, by the extensive knowledge, and minute information given by the noble Lord, respecting the political state of France, her annual revenues, encumbrances, &c. Then it was poor, weak, ruined, bankrupt France, unable to lift her head. Now, within twelve months, the face of things are changed; she is rich, powerful, and opulent; and we are told that we have no other assurance of the preservation of the publick tranquillity, not even for a day, or an hour, but the wisdom of her councils, and the prudence and political discretion of her Ministers. Whatever I might have thought of his Lordship's former account, I certainly agree with him in the latter; and though the Administration in that country be not yet formed, so as to act upon any permanent system, I believe as soon as that event takes place, we may expect to be engaged in a war with the two branches of the House of Bourbon; and I believe, likewise, the present approaching breach with our Colonies will be the means of accelerating it.

The Resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, That they had come to several Resolutions, which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

Sir Charles Whitworth also acquainted the House, That he was directed by the Committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Friday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of Ways and Means for raising the Supply granted to his Majesty.

THURSDAY, May 4, 1775.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to whom it was referred to consider further of Ways and Means for raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, the Resolutions which the Committee had directed him to report to the House; which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same were read, and are as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that any person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, who, on the 24th day of April last past, was or were possessed of, interested in, or entitled unto any Annuities, being part of the Capital or Joint Stock of Three Pounds per centum Annuities consolidated by several Acts of Parliament, of the twenty-fifth, twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, thirty-second, and thirty-third years of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, and of several subsequent Acts which were made payable and transferable at the Bank of England, or of the Annuities consolidated by the Acts of the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth years of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Second, and of the fifth year of the reign of his present Majesty, called Reduced Annuities, also payable and transferable there, or of certain Three Pounds per centum Annuities, which are payable and transferable at the South Sea House, called Old South Sea Annuities and New South Sea Annuities, of Three Pounds per centum Annuities, which were created by an Act of the twenty-fourth year of the reign of his said late Majesty, King George the Second, and made payable and transferable at the South Sea House, shall be at liberty, between the hours of nine of the clock in the morning and six in the afternoon, on the eighth day of this instant May, to deliver or transmit to the chief Cashier, or other proper officer appointed to receive the same at the Bank of England, a writing, signed with his or their name or names, signifying his, her, or their consent, to accept in lien of his, her, or their interest, in any part of the said Principal or Capital Stocks, and in full satisfaction and discharge thereof, the sum of eighty-eight Pounds in money for every one hundred Pounds, and so in proportion any greater or less sum, composing one or more entire sum or sums of one hundred Pounds, or fifty Pounds of such Principal or Capital Stock, and expressing what stun or sums, part of the said Capitals or Joint Stocks, he, she, or they are desirous of subscribing towards the redemption of one million of the whole of the said Joint Stocks; and in case the several sums so subscribed shall, together, exceed the sum of one million, the several distinct sums so subscribed shall be reduced in such proportion as the total sum subscribed bears to one million, as near as the same can be done, so that no fractional part of fifty Pounds be admitted, but that the sum to be allowed on each subscription shall be fifty Pounds, or a multiple of fifty Pounds; and that every person, body politick or corporate, shall receive forty-four Pounds for each fifty Pounds contained in such sum or sums allowed, in respect of his, her, or their subscription of such Principal or Capital Stock; one moiety thereof to be paid on or before the 15th day of July next, and the other moiety on or before the 20th day of October next, together with the interest due on the Capital Stock so subscribed, to the 5th day of July, 1775.

That every person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, shall, for every one hundred Pounds of such subscription, be entitled to receive six tickets in a Lottery to consist of sixty thousand tickets, at the rate of twelve Pounds ten Shillings each, (and in that proportion for any greater or less sum,) the said tickets to be paid for in manner following: that is to say; that every person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, so subscribing as aforesaid, shall, on or before the 18th day of this instant, May, make a deposit of one Pound, in respect of the money to be paid for each ticket, as a security for making the future payments to the Cashiers of the Bank Of England on or before the times hereinafter limited; that is to say, for and in respect of every such ticket, two Pounds on or before the 22d day of June next; three Pounds on or before the 28th day of July next; three Pounds on or before the 29th day of August next; and three Pounds ten Shillings on or before the 2d day of October next; that upon such payments being completed, tickets shall be delivered, as soon as the same can be prepared, to the persons entitled thereto; that the sum of six hundred thousand Pounds shall be distributed into prizes for the benefit of the proprietors of the fortunate tickets in the said Lottery, Milch prizes shall be paid at the Bank of England, in money, to such proprietors upon demand, on the 1st day of March, 1776, or as soon after as certificates can be prepared, without any deduction whatsoever; and that all the moneys so to be received by the said Cashiers shall be paid into the receipt of his Majesty's Exchequer, from time to time, to such services as shall then have been voted by this House, in this session of Parliament; and that every person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, so possessed of, interested in, or entitled to, any of the said Annuities, and so subscribing as aforesaid, shall have a certificate from the said Cashiers of the Governour and Company of the Bank Of England, for such of the Annuities as are payable at the Bank, and from the Accountant General, or other proper officer of the South Sea

Company, in respect of such of the Annuities as are payable at the South Sea House for the amount of the Principal or Capital Stock of their said subscription, or of such sum to which such subscription shall or may be reduced as aforesaid, and of all such sum and sums of money as he, she, or they shall be entitled to receive in consideration thereof, and in lieu, and in discharge of his, her, or their capital, so subscribed or reduced as aforesaid; and the holders or bearers of such certificates shall be paid at the Bank of England, or at the South Sea House, respectively, the several sums of money expressed in such certificate, together with interest, after the rate, of three Pounds per centum per annum on the capital Stock subscribed, in the manner, and at the times herein before described; that, upon payment of such sum or sums of money, with such interest, the whole of the Principal or Capital Stock of such subscription shall stand discharged, and be annihilated, and the Annuity payable in respect thereof shall, from the said fifth day of July, 1775, cease, and be extinguished.

That books be opened at the Bank of England on the 8th day of this instant, May, for receiving such subscription and consent as aforesaid; and that no person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, be admitted to subscribe, or signify his, her, or their, consent for any sum or sums, amounting in the whole to more than twenty thousand Pounds, or to less than one hundred Pounds, principal or Capital Stock.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that, towards raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, there be issued and applied the sum of one million, nine hundred and fifteen thousand, five hundred and fifty-two Pounds, sixteen Shillings, and eleven Pence, three-farthings, out of such moneys as shall, or may, arise of the surpluses, excesses, or overplus moneys, and other revenues composing the fund commonly called the Sinking Fund.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that, towards raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, the sum of one million, two hundred, and fifty thousand Pounds be raised by Loans or Exchequer Bills, to be charged upon the first Aids to be granted in the next session of Parliament; and such Exchequer Bills, if not discharged, with interest thereupon, on or before the 5th day of April, 1776, to be exchanged and received in payment, in such manner as Exchequer Bills have usually been exchanged and received in payment.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that a sum not exceeding fifteen thousand Pounds, out of such moneys as remain in the receipt of the Exchequer, and that shall be paid in there on or before the fifth day of April, 1776, of the produce of all or any of the Duties and Revenues, which, by any Act or Acts of Parliament have been directed to be reserved for the disposition of Parliament, towards defraying the necessary expenses of defending, protecting, and securing the British Colonies and Plantations in America, be applied towards making good such part of the Supply as hath been granted to his Majesty for maintaining his Majesty's Forces and Garrisons in the Plantations, and for Provisions for the Forces in North America, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland; and the Ceded Islands, for the year 1775.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that such of the moneys as shall be paid into the receipt of the Exchequer, after the 5th day of April, 1775, and on or before the 5th day of April, 1776, of the produce of the Duties charged by two Acts made in the fifth and fourteenth years of his present Majesty's reign, upon the importation and exportation of Gum Senega and Gum Arabick, be applied towards making good the Supply granted to his Majesty.

The said Resolutions being severall; read a second time, were, upon the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That a Bill, or Bills, be brought in upon the said Resolutions; and that Sir Charles Whitworth, the Lord North, Mr. Charles Townshend, the Lord Beauchamp, Mr. Cornwall, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Eden, do prepare and bring in the same.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 15, 1775.

Mr. Burke informed the House, that he had in his hand a paper of importance from the General Assembly of the Province of New-York; a Province which yielded to no part of his Majesty's Dominions in its zeal for the prosperity and rarity of the Empire, and which had ever contributed as much as any, in its proportion, to the defence and wealth of the whole. He observed, that it was a complaint, in the form of a Remonstrance, of several Acts of Parliament, some of which, as they affirmed, had established principles, and others had made regulations, subversive of the rights of English subjects. That he did not know whether the House would approve of every opinion contained in that paper; but, as nothing could be more decent and respectful than the whole tenour and language of the Remonstrance, a mere mistake in opinion upon any one point, ought not to binder them from receiving it, and granting redress on such other matters as might be really grievous, and which were not necessarily connected with that erroneous opinion. He represented this direct application from America, and dutiful procedure of New-York, in the present critical juncture, as a most desirable, and even fortunate circumstance; and strongly urged, that they never had before them so fair an opportunity of putting an end to the unhappy disputes with the Colonies as at present; and he conjured them, in the most earnest manner, not to let it escape, as, possibly, the like might never return. He thought this application from America, so very desirable to the House, that he could bare made no sort of doubt of their entering heartily into his ideas, if the noble Lord (North) some days before, in opening the budget, had not gone out of his way, to pass a panegyrick on the last Parliament; and, in particular, to commend, as acts of lenity, and mercy, those very laws, which the Remonstrance considers as intolerable grievances. This circumstance, indeed, did somewhat abate the sanguine hopes of success which he had entertained for this dutiful procedure of the Colony of New-York. That he was so ill as not to be able to trouble them, if he were willing, with a long speech. He had several times in the session expressed his sentiments very fully upon every thing contained in that Remonstrance; as for the rest, it spoke so strongly for itself, that he did not see how people in their senses could refuse at least the consideration of so reasonable and decent an Address. He then moved, "That the Representation and Remonstrance of the General Assembly of the Colony of New-York be brought up."

Lord North moved that the entry in the Journals of the House of the 7th day of December, 1768, of the proceedings of the House, touching the Petition of the Representatives of Freemen in Assembly of Pennsylvania, then offered to be presented to the House, might be read. And the same was read accordingly.

Lord North also moved that an Act, made in the sixth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled, "An Act for the better securing the Dependency of his Majesty's Dominions in America, upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain," might be read. And the same was read accordingly.

He then spoke greatly in favor of New-York, and said, that he would gladly do every thing in his power to shew his regard to the good behaviour of that Colony; but the honour of Parliament required, that no paper should be presented to that House, which tended to call in question the unlimited rights of Parliament. That they had already relaxed in very essential points; but could not so much as hear of any thing which tended to call in question their right of taxation. As to the Quebec Duties, by which the Province of New-York was affected, as he did not pretend to be infallible, he confessed they were not laid exactly as they ought to be, and he was willing to give satisfaction in that point immediately. This, however, was but a trifle to the general objects of the Remonstrance.

He then moved an amendment, which was an indirect, though effectual, negative upon the motion, by inserting after the word "Remonstrance" the words "in which the said Assembly claim to themselves rights derogatory to, and inconsistent with, the Legislative authority of Parliament, as declared by the said Act."

Mr. Cruger. No person can be less disposed to trouble the House than I am; but when a subject so important and interesting is before us, I am confident I shall be forgiven, though I intrude on your patience for a few minutes. Sir, I pant after peace between this country and its Colonies, and will gladly join my feeble voice to any proposal or overture that tends to an amicable settlement of the dispute. Any other mode of determining, must inevitably injure both. The strength and prosperity of Great Britain and America have a common foundation; they stand on the same basis, and one cannot be shaken without endangering the other. It is, therefore, the interest of both parties, to discover a disposition to be reconciled, not to be too severe in marking each others errors, to remember their old friendship, and calmly and dispassionately advance to a renewal of confidence for the future. The Assembly of New-York have pursued this path; they have endeavoured to put a truce to resentment and tumult; and, while the other Colonies (in the phrenzy of riot, commotion and despair) have nearly annihilated the powers of their Legislatures, and rush on to civil war, they dutifully submit their complaints to the clemency of the mother country.

Such conduct, sir, cannot but meet the approbation of this House. The Legislature cannot but invite subjects thus peacefully to pursue every legal way of redress: on the contrary, should this application be attended with no success, the Colonies will be discouraged from such attempts, and the Assembly of New-York be driven into the common stream of opposition, to escape the charge of ineffectual and imprudent singularity. Although almost every other Colony on the Continent has transferred the business of petitioning from their own proper Legislature to a General Congress, the Province of New-York has ventured to be singular in reverence and obedience to her Colonial Constitution, and has resolutely adhered to her duty, uninfluenced by the example of her neighbours.

Policy and justice recommend the encouragement of such a spirit and conduct. It will induce others to copy their example; the citizens of New-York have, during the present unhappy dispute, distinguished themselves by their temperate conduct. If they meet the protection and patronage of Government, they will be animated to pursue the same path with greater alacrity and firmness. In their present Addresses to the Throne, and both Houses of Parliament, though they may have extended their claims and complaints a little too far, still let us make a generous allowance for the difficulty of their situation: they could not, at this particular crisis, wholly disregard the opinion of their sister Colonies, and, indeed, every lover of this liberal Constitution cannot but, at least, forgive the apprehension and disquietudes of freemen, under a claim which stamps them with the character of slaves. I mean the claim held up by this country of binding them, without the consent or security of their own Representatives, in all cases whatever - than which there cannot be a more complete description of the most ignominious servitude; and it is reserved to distinguish the Administration of this day to assign as a reason for rejecting a Petition from British subjects, and in an English House of Commons, that they claimed a right of giving and granting their own money by their own Representatives.

And, sir, as a refutation of many unjust charges alleged against them, they particularly disclaim all intentions and desire of Independence. They confess the necessity of a superintending power in Parliament, and explicitly state their conviction of its utility and equity when exercised for the regulation of Trade. They look up to the Legislature for redress; they entreat the exertions of its wisdom and benevolence to propose and adopt some method to terminate the present destructive dispute, for the happiness, and to the satisfaction, of both countries. They gratefully acknowledge the blessing which they have derived from the parental state; they deeply lament the interruption of your affection, and hope to avert your indignation by remonstrance and prayer. What more humble would Englishmen ask from Englishmen and the sons of Englishmen? Permit me then, sir, to beseech the House not to turn a deaf ear to their requests; but to embrace the first favourable opportunity of bringing them back to their duty, and leading them on to higher acts of obedience by new instances, on our part, of mildness, remission, and friendship.

Mr. Cornwall said it was contrary to every idea of the supremacy of Parliament to receive a paper in which the Legislative rights of Parliament were denied; before such a paper could be brought up, the Declaratory Act ought to be repealed: but the paper was not of that magnitude; it was only from twenty-six individuals.

Mr. Jenkinson, on the same side, urged that the House had never received Petitions of this nature: but that here the name of a Petition was studiously avoided, lest any thing like an obedience to Parliament should be acknowledged. the opposition of the Colonies was not so much against the tax which gave rise to the present dispute, as to the whole Legislative authority of Parliament, and to any restrictions of their trade. He reprobated every part of the Remonstrance, and, therefore, was not for suffering so disrespectful a paper to be brought up.

Mr. Aubrey. After all the abilities that have been exerted this session, in behalf of the rights of America, it would be inexcusable in me, were I to presume to detain the House more than a few moments with any thing that I might have to offer upon the subject before us: but, as I have ventured to deliver my sentiments here upon some occasions, I am unwilling to give a silent vote upon this; because I think it a very critical, as well as a very important one. The Petitioners, 'tis true, who now apply to us, remonstrate against our right of internal taxation; but they acknowledge, with great decency and respect, the supreme government of this Legislature over the whole Empire, as well as its authority, to the utmost extent, to regulate the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies, and at the same time, they give us the strongest assurances, "that they are, "as they ever have been, ready to bear their full proportion of Aids, whenever the Crown, with the consent and "approbation of Parliament, may make such requisitions "as the publick service shall call for." Sir, this Remonstrance may be in opposition to our Declaratory Act: but it is in defence of their customary and prescriptive exemption from British taxation; the loss of which exemption will put them into the condition of slaves, whose all will then depend only upon the justice or the generosity of their masters.

Though I am ready, sir, to declare in the words of the greatest Minister this country knows, that I think "we "have no right under Heaven to tax the Americans without their consent; "yet, for the sake of argument, I will admit that such a right, if we reason strictly and logically, may be made out partly from the words of some of their Charters, and partly upon the nature of sovereignty itself: but, whatever the right may be, every one knows that, till of late, it was never exercised, and was, therefore, grown, at best, obsolete, if a thing never practised, can properly be called so. Now, a right that is become obsolete, is very near akin to no right at all; and when revived, is as offensive as if it had never previously existed. Among the oppressive measures of Charles the First, it was none of the least that he revived obsolete claims. Indeed, some of our modern historians (and those I allude to are at present most in fashion) have reduced the whole of his oppressions to this denomination: but, sir, this Nation was incensed, and the greater part rose in arms against him for this practice. And do we wonder that the Americans are so little disposed to claims that had laid dormant so long, and which few of them, if any, had ever so much as heard of? After looking backward to the origin of this right, let us now look forward to its consequences. And here the Americans seem equally excusable for not admitting a principle which may be abused to their ruin, and which is not unlikely to be so abused. Whenever a Minister wants money for bad purposes, and finds the Nation clamorous against his raising it at home, what so natural for him as to supply his wants by the plunder of another Nation, whose clamours either do not reach him, or, from their distance, are too weak to disturb his repose. The temptation, sir, is as great as the necessities of Ministers are frequent; and both together will easily overcome their scruples. I cannot, therefore, think that the Americans can be too tenacious of that customary privilege of taxing themselves, which is their only security against being reduced to beggary and famine. And I shall only farther add, that as long as Government persists in attempting to tax the Americans without their consent, so long shall I think myself justified in taking every opportunity of voting on the side of that oppressed, perhaps I might say, devoted people.

Mr. Fox said, the right of Parliament to tax America was not simply denied in the Remonstrance, but as coupled with the exercise of it. The exercise was the thing complained of, not the right itself. When the Declaratory Act was passed, asserting the right in the fullest extent, there were no tumults in America, no opposition to Government in any part of that country; but when the right came to be exercised, in the manner we have seen, the whole country was alarmed, and there was an unanimous determination to oppose it. The right, simply, is not regarded; it is the exercise of it that is the object of opposition. It is this exercise that has irritated, and made almost desperate, several of the Colonies, but the noble Lord (North) chooses to be consistent; he is determined to make them all mad alike. The only Province that was moderate, and in which England had some friends, he now treats with contempt. What will be the consequence, when the people of this moderate Province are informed of this treatment? That Representation which the cool and candid of this moderate Province had framed, with deliberation and caution, is rejected; is not suffered to be presented - no, not even to be read by the Clerk. When they hear this, they will be inflamed; and, hereafter, be as distinguished by their violence, as they have, hitherto, been by their moderation. It is the only method they can take to regain the esteem and confidence of their brethren in the other Colonies, who have been offended at their moderation. Those who refused to send Deputies to the Congress, and trusted to Parliament, will appear ridiculous in the eyes of all America; it will be proved, that those who distrusted and defied Parliament had made a right judgement; and those who relied upon its moderation and clemency, had been mistaken and duped. The consequence of this must be, that every friend the Ministers have in America, must either abandon them, or lose all credit and means of serving them in future.

The noble Lord (North) acknowledges the Quebec Duties are not laid exactly as they ought to be. This matter is not introduced in the Remonstrance on account of its being a grievance; but to shew how extremely ignorant the present Ministers are of the proper mode of American taxation. What is there to hinder the people of New-York from trading with the interior country as before? Every thing is just the same; there are no Troops to hinder them passing and repassing as usual, Is there so much as an Officer to receive that Duty which is directed to be paid? It is mentioned to convince you of your ignorance in taxing America. You make an Act of Parliament, to raise a revenue in that country, and you not only make a capital blunder in it, but stumble at the threshold of collecting it.

Governor Johnstone observed, that when Mr. Wilkes had formerly presented a Petition, full of matter which the House did not think fit to enter into, they did not prevent the Petition being brought up; but separated the matter which they thought improper, from that which they thought ought to be heard. The House might make use of the same selection here. Ministers have long declared, they wished for a dutiful application from one of the Colonies, and now it is come they treat it with scorn and indignity. He was severe on Mr. Cornwall's saying it came only from twenty-six individuals. These twenty-six are the whole Assembly. When the question to adopt the measures recommended by the Congress, was negatived by a majority of one only, in this Assembly of twenty-six individuals, the Ministers were in high spirits; and these individuals were then represented as all America.

During the Debate, the question was frequently called for, and being, at length, put upon Lord North's amendment, the House divided: Yeas, 186; Noes, 67.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put, "That "the said Representation and Remonstrance, in which the "said Assembly claim to themselves rights derogatory to, "and inconsistent with, the Legislative authority of Parliament, as declared by the said Act, be brought up:"

It passed in the Negative.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

WEDNESDAY, May 17, 1775.

Lord Camden presented to the House the following Petition:

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled:
(The Petition of his Majesty's loyal and dutiful subjects, settled in the Province of QUEBEC, humbly sheweth:

That since the commencement of Civil Government in this Province, your Lordships' humble Petitioners, under the protection of English laws, granted us by his sacred Majesty's Royal Proclamation, bearing date the 7th day of October, which was in the year of our Lord 1763, have been encouraged to adventure their properties in Trade, Estates, and Agriculture, to a very considerable amount, thereby rendering the Province a valuable acquisition to Great Britain: that, to their inexpressible grief, they find, by an Act Parliament, entituled "An Act for making "more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," they are deprived of the Habeas Corpus Act and Trial by Juries, are subjected to arbitrary fines and imprisonment, and liable to be tried, both in civil cases and matters of a criminal nature, not by known and permanent laws, but by Ordinances and Edicts which the Governour and Council are empowered to make void at their will and pleasure, which must render our persons and properties insecure, and has already deeply wounded the credit of the country, and confined our views, in trade, to very narrow limits. In this cruel state of apprehension and uncertainty, we humbly implore your Lordships' favourable interposition, as the hereditary guardians of the rights of the people, that the said Act may be repealed or amended, and that your humble Petitioners may enjoy their constitutional rights, privileges, and franchises, heretofore granted to all his Majesty's dutiful subjects. And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Quebec, November 12, 1774.

Before the Clerk read the Petition,

Earl Gower said, he should be glad to be informed through what channel the Petition came into the noble Lord's hands, as he understood that such a Petition had been in Town for some months; but not coming in a manner in which his Majesty's Ministers could take the desired notice of it, he did not see how the House could entertain it, without it came accompanied with the necessary forms. He heard, he said, that a gentleman, no way connected with the Province, had such a Petition in his possession; but how the House could be satisfied that the Petition, now presented, was the Petition of the persons to whom it was attributed, was not in his power to determine.

Lord Camden replied, it mattered very little how the Petition came into his hands; this, however, he would venture to assure the House, that it was genuine; and if their Lordships conceived any suspicion that it was unfairly or surreptitiously obtained, the Agent of the Colony (Mr. Maseres) would give them the fullest satisfaction on that head.

The Petition was then read by the Clerk.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie on the table.

Then it was moved, "That the Bill, entituled 'An Act "for making more effectual provision for the government "of the Province of Quebec, in North America,'" might be now read.

The same was accordingly read by the Clerk:

Which done,

Lord Camden acquainted the House, that the Petition having been, previously, offered to every Peer in Administration, had, at last, been delivered to himself to present to that House; a task which he had undertaken, not having those reasons that might have influenced the Lords in Office to decline it; because he had, uniformly, from principle and conviction, opposed the Act which they had planned, and by their persuasive powers carried through the House.

His Lordship then observed, that after the fullest examination of the Act in question, he found it so thoroughly impolitick, pernicious, and incompatible with the Religion and Constitution of our country, that no amendment, nor any thing short of a total repeal of it would be sufficient. He remarked on the provisions of the Act as being wholly inconsistent with the reasons recited in it; and he concluded that they were not the true reasons on which it was founded; that there must be other secret motives and designs which had produced the measure, and which could be best discovered by attending to the purposes the Act was calculated to answer, which, from the provisions made therein, appeared to be no other than to prevent the farther progress of freedom and the Protestant Religion in America, and to secure a Popish Canadian Army to subdue and oppress the Protestant British Colonies of America. His Lordship arranged his objections to the Act under the three following heads: - First, The extension of the limits of Quebec. Second, The establishment of Popery there; and Third, The civil despotism in which the inhabitants of that immensely extended Province are to be perpetually bound, by being deprived of all share in the Legislative power, and subjected, in life, freedom, and property, to the arbitrary Ordinances of a Governour and Council, appointed by, and dependent on, the Crown.

Under the first of these heads his Lordship proved, that there could be no good reason for so extending the limits of Quebec, as to make them comprehend a vast extent of country, two thousand miles in length from North to South, and bounded on the West only by the South Sea. That this enlargement could only be intended to extend the shackles of arbitrary power and of Popery over all the future settlements and Colonies of America. That by drawing the limits of that Province close along the interior settlements of all the old English Colonies, so as to prevent their further progress, an eternal barrier was intended to be placed, like the Chinese wall, against the further extension of civil liberty and the Protestant religion. His Lordship then animadverted particularly on the instructions lately transmitted to General Carleton, whereby the regulation of all the Indian trade of North America is put into the hands of the Governour and Council of Quebec, and the other Colonies are obliged, in their intercourse with the Indians, to submit to the laws, not of the British Parliament, but of a despotick unconstitutional Legislature in Canada; a measure calculated to produce endless contentions and animosities.

Under the second head his Lordship proved, that the Popish religion, though not in express terms, is, in effect, really and fully established in the Province of Quebec. By confirming not only the Laity, in a free exercise of their religion, but the Romish Clergy, in the enjoyment of all their former tythes and ecclesiastical dues, rights, &c., and the Bishop, (the Pope's representative,) in the exercise of all his spiritual powers and funetions, and in the disposal of one hundred and eighty ecclesiastical benefices; and also by dispensing with the Oath of Supremacy, whereby every officer of Government in that Province, both civil and military, even the Governour himself, may be of the Romish religion. And here his Lordship particularly referred to the Act of the first Elizabeth, which forever excludes the Pope from all jurisdictions within the Kingdom of England, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, or which may, at any future time, be acquired; and prescribes an Oath of Supremacy to be taken through this Kingdom and all its Dominions. This Act his Lordship represented as the great support and barrier of the Protestant religion; and as being, in its nature, as sacred and fundamental as the Act of Settlement, or even as Magna Charta itself; and yet, said his Lordship, this has been unnecessarily and wantonly violated by the Quebec Act, whereby the oath which it prescribes is wholly dispensed with in that Province. His Lordship observed, that the capitulation with Sir Jeffery Amherst promised the people of Canada only a toleration in the exercise of their religion, and that, by the Definite Treaty of Peace, they were only to be allowed to "profess the worship of their religion, according to the "rights of the Romish Church, as far as the laws of Great Britain permit;" that the utmost which the inhabitants of Canada had expected, in consequence of this, was a religious toleration, such as is allowed to Protestant dissenters in England? whose Clergy not only receive no tythes, but are exposed to a train of penalties from which they have in vain solicited relief. And that the Popish Clergy of Quebec were so far from expecting any grant of tythes, that they had not even asked for them in the course of more than ten years, which had since elapsed. That they were unexpected, unreasonable bounties, "quod nemo Divûm promittere auserat." His Lordship farther observed, that by thus clothing the Popish Clergy with wealth and power, and the rites of the Romish religion, with that alluring splendour, magnificence, and pomp, which are its chief supports, an impolitick, insuperable, bar was placed against the conversion of the people of Canada, from their present attachment to the Popish religion, and their desire of returning again to the dominion of France.

Under the third and last head, his Lordship took an extensive review of the History and Constitution of England, as well as of the Royal prerogative, in respect to new dominions and conquered countries; he animadverted on the doctrine said to have been delivered by Lord Mansfield in the cause respecting the duty of four and a half per cent. levied by the Crown in Grenada, and clearly proved, that, in all accessions of territory to the Crown, the King is, constitutionally, intrusted and required to extend to his new subjects the laws of England, and the benefit of a constitution similar to that of our own country; that he can give no less than those rights and privileges which, by the Common Law, as well as by the Act of Settlement, are declared to be "the birthright of every British subject;" that, accordingly, this had been invariably done in every acquisition of territory and dominion, particularly in the case of Ireland, of the Counties Palatine (Chester and Durham) of Wales, of Berwick upon Tweed, of Calais, of Jamaica, of New-York, of St. Christopher's, of Grenada, &c.; that the same was also promised to be done in the Province of Quebec; and that, by the Proclamation of 1763, the faith of the Crown was solemnly plighted to the settlers in that and the other new Colonies, that their respective Governours "shall summon and call General Assemblies within "the said Governments, respectively, in such manner and "form as is used and directed in those Colonies and Provinces in America, which are under our immediate government;" and, continues the Proclamation, "we have "also given power to the said Governours, with the consent "of our said Councils, and the Representatives of the people, so to be summoned as aforesaid, to make, constitute, "and ordain Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, for the publick "peace, welfare, and good government of our said Colonies, and the people and inhabitants thereof, as near as "may be agreeable to the laws of England, &c., and in "the mean time, and until such Assemblies can be called "as aforesaid, all persons inhabiting in, or resorting to, our "said Colonies, may confide in our Royal protection for the "enjoyment of the benefit of the laws of our Realm of England," for which purpose Courts of Justice were to be erected, &c., all which, Lord Camden observed, had been done and fulfilled in every other Province, excepting that of Quebec, to which many settlers had been allured by this Proclamation, who, by a most disgraceful violation of the Royal faith, were since, with the rest of that Province, subjected to the civil laws of France, and to the despotism of a Governour and a dependent Council, instead of being allowed an Assembly, and laws made by the Representatives of the people, as they were solemnly promised. His Lordship also represented, that the tyrannical Government thus established, is considered as the most oppressive act of injustice by all the Protestant, and even by all the Popish, inhabitants of Quebec, except the Romish Clergy and French Noblesse, who are willing to submit to a despotick Government, for the sake of tyrannizing over the peasantry of Canada. He likewise observed, that the slavery imposed by the Act in question is so repugnant to the success of commerce, and abhorrent to the feelings of native British subjects, that if it be not soon repealed, both the former and latter will abandon that Province.

His Lordship having, by these and many other facts and arguments, proved the impolicy, injustice, tyranny, and iniquity of the Act in question, declared, that it deserved to be reprobated by the unanimous voice of Parliament, and that it would, necessarily, receive the censure of their Lordships, if there remained the smallest regard for liberty and the Constitution in one part of the House, or for the Protestant religion in the other.

His Lordship concluded with offering the following Bill:

A Bill to repeal an Act made in the last session of the last Parliament, entituled "An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of QUEBEC, in NORTH AMERICA."

Whereas, an Act was passed in the last session of the last Parliament, entituled "An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province "of Quebec, in North America;"

And whereas, the said Act, contrary to the example of all former times, and to the faith of his Majesty's Proclamation, issued in the year 1763, has established an arbitrary Government in the said Province;

And whereas, the said Act, by permitting both the Clergy and Laity there to hold offices and benefices, without taking the Oath of Supremacy, and by granting to the Popish Clergy, in the said Province) the enjoyment of their accustomed dues and rights, has entirely stopped the growth and propagation of the Protestant religion, and in the room thereof has established the religion of the Church of Rome in the said Province forever;

And whereas, the said Act, by enlarging the boundaries of the said Province, and making the Legislature thereof co-extensive with the same, may put the Indian trade, among other things, under the sole management of that Legislature, as, in truth, appears to be already done, by the instructions lately given to Governour Carleton, by which that trade, which had before been freely carried on by all his Majesty's subjects in North America without restriction, is now to be confined to such regulations as the said Legislature may think fit to impose upon it, and thereby the rights of his Majesty's other Colonies unwarrantably abridged and invaded; and, by a like extension of the said Legislature, the said other Colonies may come to be excluded from having any intercourse or correspondence whatsoever with the Indian Nations of that vast Continent, without the leave or permission of the said Legislature, which would naturally give rise to unnatural divisions, and endless controversies between his Majesty's subjects of the old Colonies, and the inhabitants of the new Province of Quebec;

May it, therefore, please your most excellent Majesty, That it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the first day of May, 1776, the above mentioned Act, and the several matters and things therein contained, shall be, and is, and are, hereby repealed and made void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

The said Bill was read the first time.

Lord Camden then acquainted the House, that he had delayed the proposed repeal until the first day of May next, to the end that time might be obtained in the interval to provide a better plan of government for the Province of Quebec.

The Earl of Dartmouth then moved, "That the said Bill be now rejected.

The Earl of Dartmouth said, he should decline entering into a detailed view of the vast mass of matter which had been travelled over by the noble Lord. He made the same objection to the mode of obtaining the Petition, and the manner of presenting it, as Earl Gower had done. He said, that the Petition had been offered to be delivered to him so early as the 23d or 24th of January; but, besides, that his sentiments were clearly in favour of the Act, he could not, with propriety, receive any paper importing to be a Petition from the inhabitants of that Province; unless it came through the channel of the Governour and Council. But, said his Lordship, supposing that the Petition had been fairly obtained, what does it literally, or substantially, import? Does it desire a repeal? Does it even hint at any such thing? How, then, can the noble and learned Lord come; upon the ground of this Petition, to Parliament to desire a repeal, when the very utmost the Petitioners themselves look for is, that they may have the benefit of the Habeas Corpus law, and the Trial by Jury. The former of which, it is evident, they are entitled to, by the laws of England, and the latter they now enjoy in all criminal matters. His Lordship then read the Address presented to Governour Carleton, from the French inhabitants, on his arrival, and their Address to the King, wherein they express their gratitude to his Majesty, for restoring them to their ancient rights and privileges. These, he insisted, were the most indubitable proofs, that the French Canadians were made happy by the change, and that by no one rule of good policy, justice, or a regard to publick faith, could it be expected that nearly one hundred thousand peaceable loyal subjects should be rendered unhappy and miserable, purely to gratify the unreasonable request of two or three thousand persons, who wished for what was impracticable, and looked upon themselves deprived of what they were actually in possession of.

On these grounds he moved for the rejection of the Bill.

The Duke of Richmond said, the present motion of repeal was not supported solely on the contents of the Petition now presented, but on the idea that every noble Lord had a right to propose an amendment, and move for a repeal, of any law which they deemed impolitick or oppressive. His Grace observed, that great industry had been used on a former occasion, and he made no doubt would be much resorted to, and great stress would be laid on the same mode of reasoning this day, that suppose the powers vested by the Act might, on account of giving the Canadians some civil Constitution, suited to the immediate necessity of the case, somewhat exceed those modes of legislation and government usually exercised where no such necessity existed; yet the acknowledged disposition of those, to whom this power was delegated, removed the most distant jealousy or suspicion, that this trust would be abused. That this maxim, said his Grace, applied directly, is certainly true in fact, though notoriously fallacious in every other respect, by way of argument; for where would it lead us, but directly to the establishment of arbitrary power? I am confident, there is not a Lord in this House, who has made politicks his study, or has taken time to consider the different Constitutions of Government that have been framed and established, but will agree with me, that the true end of all civil regimen, is the happiness and prosperity of the governed; and that, consequently, the best Government is that which is best exercised. But I trust there is not a noble Lord who will openly contend, that, because the person to whom the execution of the laws is intrusted, probably will employ the trust thus committed to his charge with fidelity, and a sacred regard for the interests of his people, that, therefore, they should, from their unbounded confidence in him, foolishly and blindly make a surrender of their rights and liberties; thinking his virtues and abilities transmissible and hereditary with his political office. To guard against this mistake, our Constitution was first framed, and every one law enacted to secure to us the blessings we at present enjoy, is directed not to bind good Princes, or direct wise ones, but to prevent weak or bad men from abusing that trust, necessary, from the nature of civil Government, to be lodged somewhere. I will even come more immediately to the point before your Lordships, to the personal character of the Governour, who is charged with the execution of those monstrous arbitrary powers which are the subject of this day's debate. I do not, for my part, believe there is a more worthy or deserving man breathing. - I know him well; I have, I may say, lived with him for several years, and I am convinced of his high integrity and eminent skill in his profession; but will it follow, that because I know General Carleton to be a man to whom I might safely trust every thing I hold dear and sacred, that, therefore, I must wish to trust the Governour of Quebec, be he whom he may, with powers which, from their nature, if exercised at all, must be productive of oppression and injustice; and if badly exercised by any future Governour who may happen to succeed him, may be turned into an engine of oppression and tyranny equal to those claimed by the most absolute despot on earth? His Grace, besides his general argument, applied particularly to the Bishops to rise and explain themselves on the article of religion; and whether they were of opinion that it was proper that Popery should be indulged with a Legislative establishment in any part of the British Empire?

Lord Lyttelton. My Lords: the noble mover has told your Lordships, that the Bill which passed last session, far establishing a Government in Canada, was a Bill, "abhor"rent to the British Constitution, and that it ought to be "repealed by the unanimous voice of this House." I shall first put his Lordship in mind, that this Bill was not made for the meridian of England; that it was framed for the conquered subjects of France, consonant to the faith of Treaties, and to the stipulations agreed upon by the conqueror, which was part of the solemn pact, between Great Britain and France, covenanted for, and ratified by, both Nations at the conclusion of the war: and then, my Lords, I will go a step further; I will meet the noble Lord on his own ground; and will uphold that the general principles and policy of this Canada Bill were founded in wisdom; that the principles of it, which his Lordship affirms to be repugnant to Christianity, emanated from the Gospel, and are coeval with the religion of our Saviour; that they breathe forth the spirit of their Divine Master; for they are neither principles of Popery, nor servitude; they are principles, my Lords, of toleration, unrestrained by prejudice, and unlettered by absurd and odious restrictions. The inhabitants of Canada were Catholics before they were conquered by England, they are Catholics now, but under the jurisdiction of a Protestant Parliament, and under the cognizance of Protestant Bishops, who form a part of that Parliament, and who, I believe, were unanimous in allowing them the free exercise of their religion. In regard to the policy of the Bill, I cannot but think it to be indisputably excellent, because it tends, lay the beneficence of its aspect, to remove those rooted prejudices which are carefully instilled into the minds of all the subjects of France, against the laws and the Constitution of England.

This Bill, my Lords, has more effectually opened their eyes, than the perusal of all our Statute books; it has given them, with the mild code of our criminal law a share of those blessings which we derive from freedom; it has abolished the torture; it has raised the people from the oppression and tyranny under which they crawled, and has perpetuated in their hearts that dominion, which has so recently been acquired by our arms. But, says the noble Lord, (and here he seems to press on triumphantly his arguments) you have, by this Bill, affected the interests of commerce, those interests that ought to be most dear to Great Britain: they ought to be so, indeed, my Lords; and so far are those interests from being hurt, that it has been the chief purpose of the Bill to improve them: they have flourished under it, even beyond the most sanguine expectation; for, my Lords, since the Non-Importation Agreement has been entered into by all the other Provinces of America, who but the Canadians have opened a channel for British Manufactures? Who but the Canadians have kept alive your drooping commerce, by taking prodigious quantities of Goods from England, which by their spirit and diligence have, notwithstanding the unlawful combinations of the Americans, penetrated and pervaded every part of the Continent? Notwithstanding the factious Resolutions of the Assemblies; notwithstanding the inflexible enmity of the Congress, the Canadians have opened a way for the English Trader: by their means he has found a passage into America for his various sorts of Merchandise; they have been carried into all the Provinces; they have even crossed over the peninsula of Boston, These, my Lords, these are the consequences you have derived from this Canada Bill; reprobated, indeed, by the noble Lord, but most cordially received by the loyal Canadians, who take every occasion to shew how sensible they are of its utility, and how desirous of testifying their gratitude.

But the noble and learned Lord has not confined his opposition to the general principles and policy of this Act: he has, with the designing subtlety of a Lawyer, attacked the law part of the Bill: he has told your Lordships, that the intention of it was to throw an unlimited power into the hands of the Crown; that the design was manifest, because they were denied the Habeas Corpus: he has assured you, that by excepting the Canadians from the salutary influence of this excellent provision made for the liberty of the subject, you have altered the tenour of that wholesome policy, which has always induced, and by law should always compel, Great Britain to give to all conquered countries the full and perfect system of English freedom in return for their allegiance. The noble Lord has instanced the case of Jamaica, of Barbadoes; but, above all, of Ireland. Has the noble Lord forgot, then, that Ireland, though in possession of the criminal law of England, has not the Habeas Corpus Act? That Act, which is a special privilege monopolized by Great Britain, is not even extended to Ireland; but Ireland has what is, in fact, equivalent to it, and so has Canada. Would the noble Lord then desire, that those new conquered subjects of England, against whom he shews such strong and irreconcilable hatred, should be indulged with a privilege which even Liberty herself seems to be jealous of, and which has, hitherto, been denied to the loyal inhabitants of Ireland? My Lords, he does desire it; he would do any thing to answer his purposes - to increase the storm-to perplex, to distress Administration. Animated by these views, I am not surprised, that he hates the nobility of every country; they stand in his way. He would rub them out of his system of Government. He has told your Lordships that it is the Noblesse, and the Priests of Canada, that are only benefited by this Bill; and that it would be better for the Province, if both Prelates and Nobility were whipped out of it: these are his Lordship's sentiments; Republican sentiments, my Lords, which, with less impropriety, might have come from the mouth of a factious burgher of Geneva, but which are foreign from the genius of the British Constitution. He concluded with calling upon Administration to know what the Spaniards were about, affirming that the great Armament fitting out in the Spanish Ports could not be intended against the Moors.

The Duke of Manchester replied to the charges of faction thrown out by the last noble Lord on Opposition in general. He said, he often happened to differ from Administration; but he had never till that day heard such difference of opinion directly imputed as a crime, or branded with an indecent and ill-founded epithet.

The Earl of Rochford. As far as it may be consistent with the nature of my office, I will inform the House of what I know concerning the Armament the noble Lord speaks of. By the best accounts I have been able to collect, the Armament consists of no more than twelve or thirteen Men-of-War of the line at most; what the inferior Vessels of force, or the number of Frigates may be, I cannot precisely say. I understand, the Land Forces. so far from being prepared to get aboard the Transports, at a short warning, though they may amount to about thirty thousand men, are composed partly of Cavalry and Guards, which can never be meant for a Naval Expedition. Whatever suspicions such appearances may create, I am to inform your Lordships, that our Minister at the Court of Madrid has been instructed to press for explanations, and has received the strongest assurances, that nothing was intended against Great Britain or her allies. I cannot say that I have any great reliance on assurances in general; but yet; ridiculous as it may appear to us, that the Spaniards should incur so immense an expense, in preparations for chastising the Moors: when their policy and religion are considered, and that the Moorish war is taken up on conscientious notions of religion, our wonder will in a great measure cease. Besides, there are many other motives which might, probably, induce Spain to arm at this time, without having any hostile intentions against this country. Sicily is disturbed by civil commotion, and threatened with latent discontents, which his Catholic Majesty feels for, almost as much as if they were in his own Kingdom. A kind of war actually subsists between Spain and Portugal in the Brazils. There is a revolt in Mexico, and the total silence of the Consuls and the Merchants, whose business it is to give information, join to strengthen me in the same opinion. The Portuguese Envoy at this Court seems perfectly undisturbed, and free from apprehensions of any invasion of his country; and that if he should be mistaken, and that those Armaments are actually intended against Portugal, I shall, for my part, think Great Britain as much interested in the event: as if part of her own dominions were actually attacked.

The Earl of Bristol. I have not the least doubt, my Lords, but the Spaniards have a very powerful Naval Armament in great forwardness for the Sea; and though I cannot think, from the tonnage and construction of the Transports, they are calculated to convey Troops beyond the Ocean, yet I must confess, Britain; however conscious she may be of her Naval superiority, has just reason to be seriously alarmed. The noble Earl speaks of insurrections in Mexico, of a kind of war at present subsisting between the subjects of his Catholic Majesty and the Portuguese in the Brazils: and how deeply his Catholic Majesty concerns himself in the latent discontents which threaten to disturb the Kingdom of Sicily. I need not repeat again, that, in my opinion, this Armament can never be intended to cross the Ocean; neither do I think, if the transport service were calculated for that purpose, would it be at all necessary to collect such a strong military force, so near the water-side; And I beg leave to differ from his Lordship, when he supposes they are scattered through the different Provinces in cantonments; for if I be not misinformed, though they are not, perhaps, just ready to embark, they are, nevertheless, stationed in such a manner as to be drawn together at a very short warning. In such a state of uncertainty, if intended at all for actual service, it may be asked, whither are they destined? For my part, if I were to hazard a conjecture, I should be inclined to imagine for the Coast of Africa, for Lisbon, or Gibraltar; and the more so, against either of the two latter, for the very reason the noble Earl in office has assigned, that the Land Forces consisted in a good measure of Cavalry, and the Spanish and Walloon Guards, who never serve out of the Kingdom, but who might, very consistently with their usual designation, either co-operate with a Fleet in attacking Lisbon or Gibraltar. Every noble Lord in this House, by consulting the situation of the rendezvous, and its vicinity to Gibraltar, may readily conclude with what facility the Fleet and Transports might turn down into Gibraltar Bay. It is true, that Gibraltar is almost invulnerable on the land side, and that very strong defences and additional works have been, within the three or four last years, erected towards the sea. Yet, how much soever I may be inclined to depend on the bravery of the Troops, and the ability of the Officers in superiour command, I would feel very sensibly for the fate of that fortress, if attacked, and if not quickly relieved by Naval succours from England. I am certain, before those additional works were raised, it could not hold out against a Fleet of seventeen Ships-of-the-Line a single day; and even now it is possible it would be obliged to submit in a week, though it might hold out much longer. A great deal will, however, depend, should such a disagreeable event take place, on the present state of our Navy. If we have a force equal, or superiour to theirs, ready at a short notice, it is probable the gallantry of the Troops might be able to baffle every attempt of the assailants, till succours should arrive. The noble Earl, at the head of the Admiralty, who has, much to his honour, done more than any man who has presided at that Board for upwards of a century, can inform the House, whether or not a sufficient Naval Force could be made ready, so as to answer the necessity of so critical an emergency.

Lord Lyttelton. I did not press the noble Earl, in office, to betray the secrets of it, nor divulge matters of state; I wished, only, to give his Majesty's Ministers, if they thought proper, an opportunity of averting part of the censure which might be, undeservedly, thrown on them, in case an unexpected blow should happen to be struck, and prevent the fraud and imposition the people might be liable to from a few among them, perhaps, who might have better or earlier intelligence than the rest. I have, it is true, no great opinion of Spanish politicks, yet I must abide by my former assertion, that I am convinced, however conscientious his Catholic Majesty may be, and desirous of propagating the Christian faith, and extirpating the enemies of the Cross, his Majesty, much less his Ministers, would never put the Nation to the enormous expense of the present Armament, merely to make proselytes in the wilds and deserts of Africa. The Spanish Cabinet is composed, like those of other Princes, of men of different abilities and dispositions; and business is transacted in it; as it is in all others, where there is no Prime Minister, by a plurality of voices. I can never, therefore, be persuaded to think that a majority of men, trained up to publick business, could ever be led to adopt so preposterous a measure. The noble Earl, in office, seems to place too great a reliance on the positive assurances given by the Spanish Court; and I will tell your Lordships why I think so. It is because I am well informed; I know it to be the current language of the several branches of the House of Bourbon, that they do not look upon themselves bound to give us any previous information of their hostile intentions, either by declaration of war, or otherwise, on account of our capture of the French Ships, before the commencement or the late war. On the whole, the noble Earl, who spoke last, has put the matter upon the clearest and most incontrovertible footing, not upon the faith of Spanish assurance, or their ideas of political justice or injustice, but on what are our powers of immediate resistance, should such an attempt be made. I do, therefore, call upon the noble Earl, at the head of the Admiralty, to inform the House what Force we have immediately ready to put to Sea, should the first accounts from that quarter bring us intelligence that Gibraltar was attacked by a Spanish Fleet.

The Earl of Sandwich. The noble Lord who spoke last, has called upon me, particularly, to come to certain explanations which I do not, by any means, think myself obliged to give, nor his Lordship authorized to ask. However, as the main part of his inquiry depends upon facts, already sufficiently public, I can, with propriety, tell his Lordship, that we have seventeen Sail-of-the-Line, fit for immediate service; that the number of Men wanting to complete the Ships, to their full complement, is not more than four thousand five hundred; that, by issuing Press-warrants, they might be readily procured in a week; and that the whole Armament would be ready to proceed to Sea within ten days. In a very little time we shall have eighty Men-of-War, of the line, with all the necessary Stores for their equipment, ready, as occasion may require, to be drawn out into actual service; which is a force superior to any the united efforts of our enemies can possibly bring against us.

The Earl of Bristol. The noble Earl has told us that we have seventeen Sail-of-the-Line ready to proceed to Sea, at a few days notice; but I should be glad to know, in the event of Gibraltar being attacked, with such a Fleet as has been, this day, mentioned, whether his Lordship is of opinion it would be prudent to send the whole Force, he speaks of, to the immediate relief of that Fortress.

The Earl of Sandwich. I can hardly think myself enabled, from my official situation, to answer the noble Earl's question. That is a matter of state, not, in my opinion, at all connected with the immediate business of my Department. If I was ordered to comply with such a requisition, I must, certainly, obey it, whatever might be my own private opinion, my sentiments in this House, or the arguments I might use elsewhere, when it came under deliberation as a matter of state. For instance, if I received directions to order out half the number, or the whole, or keep the Fleet at home, to defend our own Coasts, the question would not turn on what I, in my official capacity, wished to do; but what the majority of his Majesty's servants had, really, decided. As to the Force, and the facility of sending it to Sea, I need only appeal to the noble Earl himself, to whom, in a great measure, the Nation is obliged for that arrangement. When his Lordship sat, as a member, at the Board at which I have the honour to preside, I stood much indebted to him for his assistance in effectuating the plan, by which we are enabled, at all times, to have a Fleet ready to put to Sea, on a few days notice, by converting the Guard-Ships, which, formerly; were almost totally useless, into Vessels fit for immediate service; and, though still I have his private assistance, I must confess I have great reason to regret his absence from that Board.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in answer to what had fallen from the two noble Dukes, and the noble Lord who presented the Bill, observed, that so far from the Protestant Religion being totally neglected at Quebec, four Clergymen, of the Church of England, were actually established in that Province with a stipend of two hundred Pounds per annum each; that more would be appointed, as soon as the necessity of the case, or an increase of population, should require it; and denied that the Popish religion was established in Canada, or that it was possible for Parliament to have acted otherwise, consistent with the faith of the capitulation, or the terms of the Definitive Treaty.

The Earl of Shelburne. It is with great reluctance that I presume to trouble your Lordships on a subject which has been so ably and fully discussed by so many noble Lords, much better informed and capable to decide on it. I cannot, however, be so entirely wanting in my duty, as a member of this House, to pass over, in total silence, some things which have fallen in the course of this day's debate. A noble Lord, who spoke early, has said, that there are some present who regret the absence of a certain noble Lord from his place (the Earl of Chatham.) If that be a crime, I am willing to share part of the imputation, for I own myself one of that number, though I, by no means, agree with his Lordship in the motives he has assigned for that absence, nor in the supposed sentiments attributed by him to the noble Earl, respecting the Quebec Act. I am, on the contrary, convinced that he would have been present in his place, on this occasion, were it not for an accident; and so far from approving of the Bill in every other part but relative to the sedentary Fishery, that, from every thing I could learn then, and in every private conversation I have had the honour to have since had with him, I have found his sentiments to be for condemning the Bill in toto. I believe the noble Lord has but a confused recollection of the true state of that matter, otherwise he must have remembered that his Lordship's supposed reconciliation to the Bill was no part of what he now alludes to, but that the very Ministers themselves disapproved of divesting the Commodore, on the Newfoundland station, of the control over the Fishery on the Coast of Labrador. The other parts of the Bill having been already so fully discussed, I shall just crave your Lordships' patient attention to a few words on the dangerous consequences which must flow from annexing this fishery to the Province of Quebec, and taking it out of the superintendence and control of the Commander of his Majesty's Ships-of-War, on the Newfoundland station. By the Bills lately passed, it seems to be the professed policy of those in power to reserve the whole of the Newfoundland Fishery for the benefit of the inhabitants of Great Britain and Ireland. I will say nothing of the immediate spirit which has given rise to this policy; but this I will venture to affirm, that not a single reason was adduced, either from the evidence at your Lordships' Bar, or in the House, that did not directly apply to evince the supreme folly of annexing the Labrador Fishery to the Province of Quebec. It was both proved and pressed, in argument, that the spirit of the Act of the twelfth of William the Third should be strictly adhered to, that of preventing settlers, and making as many Sailors as possible; in fine, strongly condemning the permission of a sedentary Fishery. What was the evidence of a most able and experienced Naval Officer (Sir Hugh Palliser) on that occasion? That the settlers had done every thing in their power to defeat the periodical Fishery from Europe; that they destroyed their Nets, seduced the Men to run away, and get over to the Continent; and that they supplied the Fishermen with French spirituous liquors, and other French commodities. Now, my Lords, I would submit, if there be any one Lord in this House who will take upon him to affirm, that every one of those evils will not increase an hundred fold; or that we shall be able to prevent them on the Coast of Labrador, where, if aggrieved, the party must go all the way to Quebec to seek redress against Frenchmen and French smuggling, when even numberless evils were, by the nature of the service, obliged to be left uncorrected, tinder, almost, the very eye of the Commodore. The Peltry, or Skin trade, my Lords, is a matter which, I presume to affirm, is of the last importance to the trade and commerce of the Colonies and this country. The regulation of this business has cost his Majesty's Ministers more time and trouble than any one matter I know of. The noble Earl, (of Hillsborough.) it is true, differed from me, among others of his Majesty's servants, on the regulating the trade with the Indians; but it was never so much as dreamt of, that the whole Skin trade, from Hudson's Bay to the Forks of the Mississippi, should be at once taken from the several American Colonies, and transferred to the French Canadians; or, which is substantially the same thing, that, by a Royal instruction, the sole direction of it should be vested in the Governour of Quebec. For, I will be bold to contend, whatever colourable construction may be put on it, it will operate as a complete exclusion and total monopoly, so far as the Protestant British Colonies can possibly be interested.

However foreign the Spanish Armament may be to the subject of this debate, or irregular it may have seemed to introduce it in such a manner, I must confess myself very ready to dispense with mere forms, when matters of such singular importance, so pressingly call for our most serious deliberation. I remember, a few years since, that we were lulled into a security, which must, inevitably, have proved fatal, but for the strange revolution which took place in the French Cabinet, the dismissal of that bold, enterprising Minister, Choiseul, who had planned the destruction of this country, in revenge for the disgraces France had suffered, and the repeated injuries, he imagined, she had received, in the course of a long, glorious, and successful war, carried out by Great Britain. I will not pretend to dive into the secrets of Cabinets farther than I am well warranted, or presume to point out the persuasive arguments employed to bring over the woman, to whose influence this unexpected turn of affairs is attributed; but this, I will venture to assert, because I have the proofs in my power, that Gibraltar, Minorca, Jamaica, and the greater part of our possessions in the East and West Indies, would have been among some of the first sacrifices that would have fallen; had it not, I may say, been for the miraculous interposition of Providence in our favour. We were, then, not a whit less consistent than we are now; though we had not a single Line-of-battle-Ship fit for actual service. I trust, however fashionable it may be to hold the same language at present, we should not again trust to the chapter of accidents, but that we will make an inquiry into the true state of our Navy, as well as the conduct of the persons to whose care it has been intrusted; and, whenever that day shall come, I pledge myself to your Lordships, that I will take an active and decided part in bringing to condemnation Such as have been wanting in their duty. Two things have come out in the debate, which I cannot bring myself to subscribe to; one is, that the Spaniards are not to be depended on; and that the language of the House of Bourbon is justifiable, because we took their Ships before a declaration of war. On the former, I shall only observe, that I presume the Spaniards, in their publick transactions, have as much honour as any other Nation; and that, though I was but a child at the time, by the best and most impartial account I have read on that affair, I never could discover but Great Britain was fully justified in her conduct on that occasion. I shall trouble your Lordships with but one observation more, relative to the determined pacifick system of the Court of Versailles, so confidently set forth and relied on by the first noble Earl in office, who spoke in this debate; and I trust your Lordships will think it fully in point, should the Court of Spain, by their conduct, create the occasion. In 1741, in the second or third year of the Spanish war, during the ministry of Cardinal Fleury, a man of the most pacifick dispositions that ever directed the Councils of France, Lord Waldegrave being then our Ambassador at Paris, frequently pressed his Eminency relative to an Armament then fitting out at Brest, to know its destination, or whether particularly it was meant to join and co-operate with the Spanish Fleet. The Cardinal always assured him, in the fullest and most explicit terms, that France was resolved to take no part whatever in the quarrel subsisting between the two Crowns. His Lordship, however, went out one day, and heard it publicly asserted in the streets, that the Fleet had sailed from Brest, and were destined to reinforce the Spanish Fleet, then cruising in the Mediterranean; on which, he immediately repaired to the Cardinal to upbraid him with his breach of promise, if the fact should turn out to be true. "You were not misinformed, my Lord," replied the Cardinal, "the Fleet is actually sailed, and for the purpose you heard. I confess, likewise, that I had, frequently, solemnly assured you of the contrary: and I further own, that Spain is entirely in the wrong, and that it is, perhaps, neither prudent nor politick in us to take part in their business; but I would wish you, my Lord, at the same time, to perfectly understand, though we do not approve of the motives of their going to war, and will always carefully avoid to encourage them in their broils in the first instance, when engaged for any time, we can never submit to remain inactive spectators of their ruin, and your consequent aggrandizement."

Lord Mansfield rose to defend the general principles of the Bill, and to reply to the objections urged by those who were in favour of the repeal. His Lordship, though he did not directly own the sentiments imputed to him, containing certain doctrines in law and politicks, said to have been maintained by him in giving judgement in the cause of Campbell nearest the Receiver General of Grenada, relative to the four and a half per cent. Duties, claimed by the King on the exported produce of that Island, virtually proved, nevertheless, that the sentiments were not without foundation, because he endeavoured to defend every single proposition they contained.

Lord Camden went over the same ground again, by either maintaining his former positions, illustrating the facts on which they were built, or replying to every answer that had, in the course of the debate, been attempted to be made to his original objections, and at the conclusion, claimed the victory, in reference to those objectionable doctrines adverted to; observing, that the learned Lord (Mansfield) had deserted the main proposition, on which all the others rested; namely, that the King, coming in as a conqueror, could give the conquered any constitution be pleased; or, if the new subjects claimed the benefit of capitulation or cession, the King might, at his option, stand in the place of the former Prince; whereas, the learned Lord was now obliged to confess, contrary to his former opinion, that a King of England could not, in any circumstances, or coming in under any title, exercise an arbitrary power, or reign over any of the subjects of the British Empire in a despotick manner, against the spirit of the Constitution.

This law contest lasted near two hours; but Lord Camden having, in reply to something Lord Mansfield said, such as, that some constitution was better than none, pledged himself to produce a better in twenty-four, or even twelve hours; the Earl of Denbigh demanded, why the learned Lord had not produced one before.

The question was then put on the Earl of Dartmouth's motion to reject the Bill: The House divided. Contents, 88; Non-Contents, 28.

It was resolved in the affirmative;

Ordered, That the said Bill be rejected.

List of the Minority. - Dukes, Gloucester, Cumberland, Richmond, Manchester. - Marquis, Rockingham. - Earls, Abingdon, Scarborough, Stanhope, Cholmondeley, Fitzwilliam, Radnor, Effingham, Spencer. - Bishop, Exeter. - Lords, Craven, Ponsonby, Ravensworth, Archer, Wycombe, Beaulieu, Camden. PROXIES. - Dukes, Devonshire, Portland. - Earls, Stamford, Tankerville. - Viscount, Torrington. - Bishop, Asaph - Lord, King.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 18, 1775.

Sir George Savile presented the following Petition: -

To the Honourable the Commons of GREAT BRITAIN, in Parliament assembled:

The humble Petition and Memorial of his Majesty's ancient subjects, the Seigneurs, Freeholders, Merchants, Traders, and others, settled in his Majesty's Province of Quebec, Sheweth,

That, under the sanction of his Majesty's Royal Proclamation of the seventh day of October, 1763, which raises to all persons inhabiting in, or resorting to, the said

Province, the enjoyment of the benefit of the Laws of the Realm of England, until Assemblies should be called therein, the Petitioners settled themselves in the said Province, having intrusted their own properties, as well as very considerable sums of their friends, in Goods and Merchandise from Great Britain, and intrusted the same into the hands of the Canadians, as well for the purpose of Internal Trade in the Province, as for outlets in carrying on the traffick of Furs and Peltries in the Indian Countries and fisheries below Quebec; many of them having purchased Lands and Houses, and been employed in Agriculture, and the exportation of Grain and other Produce to foreign markets, to the great benefit and emolument of the said Province, which has flourished chiefly by the industry and enterprising spirit of the said subjects, who, under the protection of British Laws, and by the assistance of annual supplies of British Manufactures, and other Goods and Merchandise, obtained upon credit from the Merchants of Great Britain, have been enabled to carry on at least four parts in five of all the Imports and Exports, which are principally made in British Bottoms, the latter consisting of Furs, Peltries, Wheat, Fish, Oil, Pot-Ash, Lumber, and other Country Produce; and for the more convenient carrying on the said Trade and Commerce, they have built Wharves and Store-Houses, at a very great expense, inasmuch, that the property, real and personal, now in British hands, or by them intrusted to Canadians, at a long credit, is one-half of the whole value of the Province, exclusive of the wealth of the different communities, which the Petitioners have, in part, set forth in their Petition to his Majesty, dated at Quebec, the 31st day of December, 1773, praying that he would be graciously pleased to require his Governour, or Commander-in-Chief, to call a General Assembly, in such manner, and of such constitution and form, as to his high Majesty should seem best adapted to secure the peace, welfare and good government of their Province; wherefore, with concern, the Petitioners observe, that in Certain examinations taken before the House, the British subjects at Quebec, have been grossly abused and misrepresented, as well as to their numbers, as in their importance in the said Province, for the numbers of the new subjects have, the Petitioners conceive, been greatly exaggerated: it being, by the last computation, about seventy-five thousand; and that by an enumeration of the British subjects, they amount, at this time, to upwards of three thousand souls, besides many that the Petitioners cannot immediately ascertain, that are dispersed in the Indian countries carrying on traffick with the Savages, besides the Merchants and Traders, with their families, settled at Detroit and its dependencies, and at the Fisheries below Quebec; and that an Act has lately passed, for the making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America, which is said to have been passed upon the principles of humanity and justice, and at the pressing instance and request of the new subjects, signified to his Majesty by a Petition, setting forth their dislike to the British laws and form of Government, and praying in the name of all the inhabitants and citizens of the Province to have the French Institutes in their stead, and a total abolition of Trials by Jury, together with a capacity of holding places of honour and trust, in common with his Majesty's ancient subjects; and the Petitioners beg leave to inform the House, that the said Petition was never imparted to the inhabitants in general, that is, the Freeholders, Merchants, and Traders, who are equally alarmed with the Petitioners, at the Canadian Laws being to take place, but was in a secret manner carried about, and signed by a few of the Seigneurs, Chevaliers, Advocates, and others in their confidence, at the suggestions, and under the influence of their Priests, who, under colour of French Laws, have obtained an Act which deprives his Majesty's ancient subjects of all their rights and franchises; destroys the Habeas Corpus Act, and the inestimable privilege of Trial by Juries, the only security against the venality of a corrupt Judge, and gives unlimited power to the Governour and Council to alter the Criminal Laws; which Act has already struck a damp upon the credit of the country, and alarmed the Petitioners with the just apprehensions of arbitrary fines and imprisonment, and which, if it takes place, will oblige them to quit the Province, or in the end it must accomplish their ruin, and impoverish or hurt their generous creditors, the Merchants in Great Britain, &c.; to prevent which, the Petitioners pray, that the said Act may be repealed or amended; that they may have the benefit and protection of the English Laws, in so far as relates to personal property; and that their liberty may be ascertained, according to their ancient constitutional rights and privileges heretofore granted to all his Majesty's dutiful subjects throughout the British Empire.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.
Quebec, November 12, 1774.

Sir George Savile took a retrospect of the Quebec Act: said the prayer of the Petition relative to the Habeas Corpus Act, was not a matter involved in nice distinctions of law, or to be fathomed arid decided by the rules of deep political investigation; it was an alternative which struck with equal force the meanest as the most enlightened understanding; it was simply, whether people would wish to be freemen or slaves, under a Government which, if honestly or wisely administered, held out freedom, indiscriminately, to every individual entitled to its protection. And he would be bold to maintain, that the proposition in favour of an Habeas Corpus Law was so self-evident, and carried with it such intuitive, forcible conviction, that the English, French, Popish, and Protestant, Whites, Blacks, Tawnies, nay, the very Beasts of the fields, and Reptiles crawling on the Earth, were they capable of distinguishing between the value of personal liberty, and being shut up in a prison, at the will of a tyrant, would unite in one voice, in crying out for the enjoyment of so inestimable a blessing as the Habeas Corpus Act. He turned to the Ministry, observing with indignation, the mean subterfuges they were driven to, when they endeavoured to persuade Parliament, that a Governour who was obliged, literally, to comply with his instructions, assisted by five Popish Counsellors, would do what they (the Ministry) did not think fit to let Parliament do. He said, he was informed, that orders had been given to raise a Canadian Regiment of French Papists. When those guardians of the Laws of England, and the Protestant Religion, are embodied, where will they march? or for what service are they destined? Not, I hope, to quell the Protestant peaceable Settlers, nor yet the still more Favoured and loyal French Papists; but to sit, I presume, mere inactive spectators. No, that I cannot believe. I am not lawyer enough to point out how far they might legally march, but were I to form any conjecture about the limits they would set to themselves, with arms in their hands, and the instant they would forbear to act, I should presume that the limits would be some River or Lake, over which they had no means of conveyance, and the instant they would cease to act in a military manner would be, when all their Powder, Ball and Ammunition were spent. I am, therefore, strongly against raising or embodying any Regiment of French Papists. He concluded, with moving,

"That an Act, made in the fourteenth Year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled, 'An Act, making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America,' might be read.

And the same was read accordingly.

He then moved, "That leave be given to bring in a Bill to repeal the said Act."

Mr. T. Townshend seconded the motion, and condemned the Bill throughout, as unjust, impolitick, and unconstitutional. He said, the Canadians themselves had been deceived, as they were assured they should have the benefit of an Assembly, the Habeas Corpus Act, and Trial by Jury.

Mr. De Grey entered into a view of the state of the Colony, before the passing of the Bill, destitute of all law, order, or security in point of property; and insisted that the present Government, however exceptionable in some respects, was better than none, and ought to be continued till the Province was prepared to receive an Assembly.

Mr. Howard spoke warmly against the Act. It was brought in at the end of the last session, when the House had not the information it now possessed; he was against it then, and should ever continue to be so, as a disgrace to the Statutes. He was severe on Dr. Shebbeare, whom he represented as pensioned for vilifying the characters of King William and Queen Mary and the late King, and writing against the Revolution.

Lord North said, if the honourable gentleman who made the motion, had been informed of what had passed in the other House the preceding day, he presumed, he never would have made it, as he knew no Bill could pass without the consent of the Lords. [Mr. T. Townshend cried "to order, to order," and it was instantly echoed from almost every part of the House. His Lordship insisted what he said was not disorderly.] For his part, his opinion, in regard to the Act, was the same as it was when it passed, and as well now, as then, he looked upon the Act to be on principles of the most just and sound policy. He avowed the intention of arming the Canadians. He said, he stood up in his place to assert, that if the refractory Colonies cannot be reduced to obedience by the present force, he should think it a necessary measure to arm the Roman Catholics of Canada, and to employ them in that service. He further observed, that when Great Britain and America were contending about sovereignty, if any Colony had discovered a proper sense of duty, and united itself in principle with this country, it was liable to objection from the gentlemen on the other side; but if it joined the other Colonies against the Legislature (for the quarrel was not with the Ministry but the Parliament) those gentlemen would, he could venture to affirm, hold a different language: and declared, whatever others might think on the subject, he did not approve of Juries in civil cases. However, he would venture to affirm, the dispute with America was not so alarming as some people apprehended; he had not the least doubt it would end speedily, happily, and without bloodshed.

Mr. Fox, alluding to Lord North's observation, that the Bill originated in the Lords, observed, that this construction or apology arose, because his Lordship did not choose to own who was the real planner of it; that withholding from the Canadians an Assembly, and putting arms in their hands, shewed he was more afraid of their tongues than their swords; and that after eleven years shameful neglect and procrastination, he was convinced, if the disputes had not arisen with our American Colonies, the Act of last year would never have been thought of; but the Colony left without law or any political regulation whatever.

Sir Robert Smyth. Not having had the honour of a seat in the last Parliament, and never before this day an opportunity of publicly declaring my sentiments upon this Bill, I am in some measure indebted to my honourable friend who has given me that opportunity by the proposition of to-day. However great my opinion may be of the abilities and integrity of my worthy friend, however high my esteem for his private, as well as his Parliamentary character, however just my respect for his abilities, or my deference for his judgement, I find myself obliged, upon many occasions, to differ from him upon publick questions; such, I confess, is the case with respect to the present proposition. I do not mean to enter into the detail of this argument, which has been very ably and minutely discussed, but shall content myself with giving my general reasons why I approve of this Bill. When the glory of our arms had extended into almost every part of the globe, and a very considerable addition of territory, acquired by war, became confirmed to us by the subsequent Treaty of Peace, it was the duty of a wise, as well as a warlike Nation, that what had been acquired by conquest, should be established by proper and wholesome regulations: what had been the object of our ambition to conquer necessarily became the object of our policy to arrange. The Province of Canada, the most extensive as well as the most valuable of our acquisitions, was in such a state of confusion at the expiration of the war, that it has been the object of successive Administrations for these ten years past, to give it a permanent system of jurisprudence. But the fluctuating state of our politicks, the rapid changes of measures, and the precarious tenure by which Ministers held their employment, made them more anxious about preserving their own power at home, than forming establishments for. our distant Provinces abroad: the very great disproportion between the Canadian and British subjects, as was proved at your bar, made it an object of justice as well as of sound policy, that the Canadian Laws should form the basis of your system, and that the English Laws should only be adopted in criminal cases, where Trial by Jury gives them an advantage over every other system that ever was instituted. Whoever reflects upon the excellencies of the British Laws, whoever considers them in theory, or sees the daily advantages of them in practice, whoever justly admires them for their peculiar lenity, moderation, equity, and impartiality, would wish to see them extended over the whole face of the British Empire; but, if there are local and circumstantial reasons, arising from the national character of the people, their language, customs, usages, institutions, and I will even add, their prejudices, which in this case ought to be consulted, and not only consulted, but in some measure indulged; if there are reasons arising from these various circumstances, that make it impossible for the English Laws to be adopted in their original purity, I will venture to affirm, that a Legislator is not only justified, but that it is an essential part of his duty, so to alter and modify these laws, as may best adapt them to the peculiar genius and temper of the people, so as to become the best rule of civil conduct possible, and the best calculated to promote their general happiness. It was ever the maxim of the greatest Legislators of antiquity, to consult the manners and dispositions of the people, and the degrees of improvement they had then received, and to frame such a system of laws as was best suited to their then immediate situation. Thus, sir; when Lycurgus was reproached with not having given to the Spartans the most perfect code of laws, he acknowledged they were not the best he was capable of giving them, but the best they were then capable of receiving. Therefore, sir; I shall content myself with dissenting from the present motion, and supporting the Quebec Bill upon grounds, and from reasons, founded upon the general principles of the fitness, policy, expediency and necessity of the measure,

Colonel Barré after complimenting Sir Robert Smyth on his great powers of eloquence, assured him, if he had heard the evidence at the Bar last year, he would have been of another way of thinking. He sported a good deal with the Comptroller's white wand, and was called to order.

Sir W. Meredith observed, that whatever magick power it might contain, it was no weapon of defence.

Colonel Barré said, he might have been disorderly, but desired, for his own justification, and the satisfaction of the House, if there was any standing order of the House respecting the Comptroller and his wand, that it might be read, otherwise he should look upon himself at liberty to allude to Mr. Comptroller and his wand as often as either came in the way; for if they did not contain any great store of wit themselves, they at least bore a strong resemblance to another well known facetious knight, they were the occasion of producing it in others. He said, that in the discussion of the Quebec Bill last year, he had often asked who was the father of it, but could never receive any satisfactory answer till this day, when the noble Lord's speech, and that irresistible partiality parents are known to have for their own offspring, gave him reason to believe that the noble Lord himself was the true father of that monstrous production of tyranny, injustice, and arbitrary power. He next took notice of the Spanish Armament; said he supposed the conquest of Gibraltar was what they had in contemplation; that he advised the noble Lord last year to order some additional works towards the Sea. as the only place in which it was vulnerable; but it was now too late, for if the Spaniards attacked it with a Fleet, the fate of it must be decided in spite of all the possible assistance Britain could give it.

"The question then being put on Sir George Savile's, motion to repeal the Act; the House divided: Yeas, 86; Noes, 174.

So it passed in the Negative.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, May 18, 1775.

The Duke of Manchester presented to the House, "A Memorial of his Majesty's faithful subjects and Representatives of the Colony of New-York, in General Assembly convened;" and moved, "That the said Memorial might be read by the Clerk."

The Earl of Dartmouth observed, that it was usual for a Lord, when he presented a Petition, to State the subject of it, in order for the House to have an idea how far it was proper to give leave for it to be read.

The Duke of Manchester replied, that he could not take upon him to state the matter of the Petition without doing injustice to it; but, in general, it was to complain of grievances; and read the concluding words.

The Earl of Buckinghamshire said, it ought certainly to be opened more fully; and desired to know if it did not contain matter derogatory to the supreme Legislative power of Great Britain.

The Earl of Denbigh observed, that the title of the paper rendered it inadmissible. It was called a Memorial: now, Memorials are presented from one crowned head to another; but as to a Memorial from an American Assembly, it was unheard of, and ought not to be read.

Earl Gower added, that the title given to the paper was suspicious: a Petition from the same Assembly had been presented to the King, the Colonies not denying the supreme rights of his Majesty; a Remonstrance to the Commons; and now a Memorial to the Lords. They dropped the usual word Petition, lest, from that, it should be imagined that they acknowledged the supreme power of those branches of the Legislature; upon this account, therefore, the contents of it ought to be opened to the House.

The Duke of Manchester replied, that if the House insisted on his performing the office of Clerk he would submit, but till then he should decline reading it; and as to opening the subject of it, he had done it already.

The Earl of Hillsborough said, that the Orders of the House were not to be dispensed with; a Lord was not allowed to present a Petition, unless he opened the purport of it; that the noble Duke reading it in his place, as a part of his speech, would be accepted by the House; or if the Duke thought that it would be too great a burden for him to read it himself, then the Clerk might stand by his Grace, and read the Memorial, as a part of his speech.

The Duke of Richmond ridiculed this idea. What, my Lords, the Clerk go and stand by a Lord, and read a paper, as a part of that Lord's speech! Very pretty, truly! Why, then, we need not, any of us, be at the trouble of making speeches; we need only get our speeches written for us, and have the Clerk read them; we may, then, any of us, prove as eloquent as the noble Earl himself. Objections have been made to the term Memorial as if belonging to Sovereigns, and denying our rights: that is very strange, surely: when it is well known every Ensign in the Army, who has objections to the treatment he receives, has the right of presenting a Memorial to the King; I think, therefore, there is nothing in the term derogatory to the dignity of this House.

The Earl of Sandwich contended, that the noble Duke had been repeatedly called on to open the contents of the Memorial, but would not comply; for as to telling the House, merely, it was a complaint of grievances, that was not satisfactory; as this was the case, he moved, as an amendment to the Duke of Manchester's motion, to insert after "Memorial" these words: "the contents thereof not having been opened."

The Duke of Richmond observed, that this amendment threw a reflection on the noble Duke who brought in the Memorial, which would be highly unjust: that, in his opinion, the contents had been opened; that is, the principal part of the Memorial, the prayer of it, which was, for a redress of grievances; therefore, if the amendment was accepted, he must move another, to do justice to the noble Duke, by an explanation of how far he had opened it; and moved to add the concluding words of the Memorial, which the Duke of Manchester had read.

Earl Gower said, that the noble mover had not opened the contents; for merely saying it was for a redress of grievances, and reading the concluding words, was saving nothing, unless he mentioned what those grievances were: a friend of the House of Stuart might petition for the redress of grievance, and that grievance might be the want of the Throne; thus, if the particulars are not mentioned, we can judge of nothing.

Lord Camden stated the great injustice of not allowing a Lord, to open the contents of a Petition in any way he thought proper; there could be but two ways, one forcing him to read the whole, which was a drudgery they could not think of; the other, touching the heads of it: now, if a Lord is to open the contents particularly, and upon that opening the fate of the Petition is to depend, then it must depend upon the capacity and abilities of the individual who does it, which would be throwing a negative upon Petitions in general. But he was so great a friend to Petitions being received and read, let them come from whom they might, and under whatever name, that throwing these obstructions upon them must be very mischievous. That the amendment in favour of the noble Duke was highly reasonable, and ought to be accepted.

Lord Mansfield attempted to shew, that a Lord must open the contents of a Petition, and that the Duke had not done it.

The Earl of Shelburne reminded the House, that when the City of London presented their Remonstrance to the King, lawyers were consulted upon the legality of not receiving it; yet so highly was the right of a subject to petition thought of, that it was determined it must be received, under whatever name.

The Earl of Effingham. The turn which this debate has taken, makes it unnecessary for me to remark on any thing which, in the course of it, has fallen from any noble Lord; but as I wish to call your Lordships' attention rather to the subject matter, than to the form and manner, of the paper offered to you, I hope I shall stand excused, if I treat the latter as trifling, when put in competition with the salutary or dreadful effects of admitting or rejecting the means, now in your hands, of restoring harmony to this distracted Empire. What may be the fate of the amendment proposed, I know not; but I fear it is too easily to be guessed, from the complexion of the House, what will be that of the Memorial. If any thing, my Lords, can add to the reluctance with which I, at any time, trouble your Lordships, it is a consciousness of my own inability to treat this subject as it ought to be treated. Indeed, the importance of it is such, as would deter me from entering into it at all, did I not think that, in the precarious situation in which this country stands at present, it is the duty of every man to avow his principles and sentiments with firmness and integrity. The indulgence which I have before experienced, encourages me to expect again, from your candour, that attention, which I have not, like many among your Lordships, the abilities to command. I confess I wish to avoid the discussion of our right to such a power as we are contending for; that is to say, a power of taxing a set of subjects who are not represented among us, and who have full power to tax themselves in the ordinary and constitutional manner. Were any particular Province, among the Americans, to refuse grants of money in proportion to others, or to commit any act in abuse of their Charters, I think that supreme controlling power, which the Province in question allows in its full extent, would give us the charge. "Ne quid detrimenti, res capiat publica." And in that case, my Lords, almost the whole Empire would be united against the wrong-headed few, who would be soon brought to reason. But I am satisfied that, without such necessity, we have no more right to exercise the power of taxation in that country, than a Roman Dictator had to begin his office with a declaration, that his power should be perpetual, and was necessary in the ordinary business of Government. Therefore, my Lords, whatever has been done by the Americans, I must deem the mere consequence of our unjust demands. They have come to you with fair arguments, you have refused to hear them; they make the most respectful remonstrances, you answer them with bills of pains and penalties; they know they ought to be free, you tell them they shall be slaves. Is it, then, a wonder, if they say, in despair, "for the short remainder of our lives, we will be free!" Is there one among your Lordships, who, in a situation similar to that which I have described, would not resolve the same? If there could be such a one, I am sure he ought not to be here. To bring the history down to the present scene. Here are two armies in presence of each other; armies of brothers and countrymen; each dreading the event, yet each feeling that it is in the power of the most trifling accident, a private dispute, a drunken affray in any publick house in Boston; in short, a nothing, to cause the sword to be drawn, and to plunge the whole country into all the horrors of blood, flames, and parricide. In this dreadful moment, a set of men more wise and moderate than the rest, exert themselves to bring us all to reason. They state their claims and their grievances; nay, if any thing can be proved by law and history, they prove them. They propose oblivion, they make the first concessions; we treat them with contempt, we prefer poverty, blood, and servitude, to wealth, happiness, and liberty. My Lords, I should think myself guilty of offering an insult to your Lordships, if I presumed to suppose there was any amongst you who could think of what was expedient, when once it appeared what was just. I might otherwise have adverted to the very formidable Armament preparing by Spain; but as that argument ought to have no consideration with your Lordships, I shall not suppose it would have any; and for that reason will entirely reject it. What weight these few observations may have, I do not know; but the candour your Lordships have indulged me with, requires a confession on my part which may still lessen that weight. I must own I am not personally disinterested. Ever since I was of an age to have any ambition at all, my highest has been to serve my Country in a military capacity. If there was on earth an event I dreaded, it was to see this country so situated as to make that profession incompatible with my duty as a citizen. That period is, in my opinion, arrived; and I have thought myself bound to relinquish the hopes I had formed, by a resignation,* which appeared to me the only method of avoiding the guilt of enslaving my country, and embruing my hands in the blood of her sons.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY, May 26, 1775.

His Majesty being seated on the Throne, adorned with his Crown and Regal Ornaments, and attended by his Officers of State, (the Lords being in their Robes,) commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to let the Commons know "It is his Majesty's pleasure that they attend him, immediately, in this House."

Who being come, their Speaker, after the following Speech, in relation to the Money Bills to be passed, delivered them to the Clerk:

SIR: Your faithful Commons present to you three Money Bills: the first for raising Money, by loans of Exchequer Bills, for the Service of the year 1775; the second for establishing a Lottery, and for paying off one million Pounds Three per centum Annuities, and for other purposes therein mentioned; and the other for appropriating the surpluses of the Sinking Fund for the service of the current year.

These are all necessary grants, but they are yet very heavy, and are what nothing but the particular exigencies of the times could justify, in a time of profound peace. The unhappy differences in America, have been the chief cause of this expense; and I trust that when the people of America see, in a proper light, the conduct of this country, they will learn to pay the proper obedience to the laws; if, on the contrary, they should persist in their Resolutions, and that the sword must be drawn, your faithful Commons will do every thing in their power to maintain and support the supremacy of the Legislature. A great part of the session has been taken up in determining complaints respecting Controverted Elections. I cannot but admire the wisdom of the last Parliament in enacting that law; neither can I withhold the praise justly due to the Committees who have acted so much to the satisfaction of the publick, and so fully in discharge of their own con-

*A Letter from the Right Honourable Thomas Howard, Earl of Effingham, and Captain in General Gage's Regiment of Foot, destined for Boston.

ADELPHI BUILDINGS, April 12, 1775.

MY LORD: I beg the favour of your Lordship to lay before his Majesty the peculiar embarrassment of our present situation.

Your Lordship is no stranger to the conduct which I have observed in the unhappy dispute with our American Colonies.

The King is too just, and too generous, not to believe that the votes I have given in Parliament, have been given according to the dictates of my conscience. Whether I have erred or no, the course of future events must determine. In the mean time, if I were capable of such duplicity, as to be any way concerned in enforcing these measures, of which I have so publicly and solemnly expressed my disapprobation, I should ill deserve, what I am most ambitious of obtaining, the esteem and favourable opinion of my Sovereign.

My request, therefore, to your Lordship is this: that, after having laid these circumstances before the King, you will assure his Majesty, that he has not a subject who is more ready than I am, with the utmost cheerfulness, to sacrifice his life and fortune, in support of the safety, honour, and dignity of his Majesty's Crown and person; but the very same principles which have inspired me with these unalterable sentiments of duty and affection to his Majesty, will not suffer me to be instrumental in depriving any part of his people of those liberties, which form the best security for their fidelity, and obedience to his Government.

As I cannot, without reproach from my own conscience, consent to bear arms against my fellow-subjects in America, in what, to my weak discernment, is not a clear cause; and as it seems now to be finally re-

When the duties of a soldier and a citizen become inconsistent, I shall always think myself obliged to sink the character of the soldier in that of the citizen, till such time as those duties shall again, by the malice of our real enemies, become united. It is no small sacrifice which a man makes, who gives up his profession; but it is a much greater, when a predilection, strengthened by habit, has given him so strong an attachment to his profession as I feel. I have, however, this one consolation, that, by making that sacrifice, I, at least, give to my country an unequivocal proof of the sincerity of my principles.

The question was then put, "Whether these words shall be inserted?"

It was resolved in the Negative.

The question was then put, "Whether the said Memorial shall be read?"

It was resolved in the Negative.

sciences. On the whole, sir, I make no doubt but you will faithfully apply the Money, thus granted, to the purposes for which it was appropriated.

After his Majesty had given his assent to several Bills, he was pleased to make a most gracious Speech from the Throne, to both Houses of Parliament, as followeth, viz: My Lords and Gentlemen:

I cannot, in justice to you, forbear to express my entire satisfaction in your conduct, during the course of this important session.

You have maintained, with a firm and steady resolution, the rights of my Crown, and the authority of Parliament, which I shall ever consider as inseparable. You have protected and promoted the commercial interests of my Kingdoms; and you have, at the same time, given convincing proofs of your readiness (as far as the Constitution will allow you) to gratify the wishes, and remove the apprehensions, of my subjects in America; and, I am persuaded, that the most salutary effects must, in the end, result from measures formed and conducted on such principles.

The late mark of your affectionate attachment to me, and to the Queen, and the zeal and unanimity which accompanied it, demand my particular thanks.

I have the satisfaction to acquaint you, that, as well from the general dispositions of other Powers, as from the solemn assurances which I have received, I have great reason to expect the continuance of peace. Nothing, on my part, consistent with the maintenance of the honour and interest of my Kingdoms, shall be wanting to secure the publick tranquillity.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It gives me much concern, that the unhappy disturbances in some of my Colonies have obliged me to propose to you an augmentation of my Army, and have prevented me from completing the intended reduction of the solved, that the Twenty-second Regiment is to go upon the American service, I desire your Lordship to lay me, in the most dutiful manner, at his Majesty's feet, and humbly beg that I may be permitted to retire.

Your Lordship will also be so obliging to entreat, that, as I waive what the custom of the service would entitle me to, the right of selling what I bought, I may be allowed to retain my rank in the Army, that, whenever the envy or ambition of foreign Powers should require it, I may be enabled to serve his Majesty and my country in that way, in which, alone, I can expect to serve them with any degree of effect.

Your Lordship will easily conceive the regret and mortification I feel, at being necessitated to quit the military profession, which has been that of my ancestors for many generations; to which I have been bred almost from my infancy; to which I have devoted the study of my life; and, to perfect myself in which, I have sought instruction and service in whatever part of the world they were to be found.

I have delayed this to the last moment, lest any wrong construction should be given to a conduct which is influenced only by the purest motives. I complain of nothing; I love my profession; and should think it highly blameable to quit any course of life, in which I might be useful to the publick, so long as my constitutional principles, and my notions of honour, permitted me to continue in it.

I have the honour to be, with great respect, your Lordship's most obedient and most humble servant,

EFFINGHAM
Lord BARRINGTON, Secretary at War.

Lord Barrington declined laying the above Letter before the King, saying, it should come through the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, as the Regiment was there. Lord Effingham replied, he might do as he pleased with the Letter, but that he would not go to America.

establishment of my Naval Forces. I cannot, sufficiently, thank you for the cheerfulness and publick spirit with which you have granted the Supplies for the several Services of the current year.

My Lords and Gentlemen:

I have nothing to desire of you, but to use your best endeavours to preserve and to cultivate, in your several Counties, the same regard for publick order, and the same discernment of their true interests, which have, in these times, distinguished the character of my faithful and beloved people; and the Continuance of which cannot fail to render them happy at home, and respected abroad.

After which the Lord Chancellor, by his Majesty's command, said:

My Lords and Gentlemen:

It is his Majesty's royal will and pleasure, that this Parliament be proroged to Thursday, the 27th day of July next, to be then here held; and this Parliament is, accordingly, prorogued to Thursday, the 27th day of July next.

PETITION FROM THE FREEHOLDERS, ETC., OF QUEBEC.
To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:
The most humble Petition of the subscribers, your Majesty's ancient and loyal subjects, Freeholders, Merchants, and Planters, in the Province of QUEBEC, in NORTH AMERICA, Sheweth:

That, whereas, your Majesty, by your Royal Proclamation, bearing date at St. James's, the seventh day of October, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, was most graciously pleased to publish and declare, "That out "of your Majesty's paternal care for the security of the "liberty and properties of those who then were, or should "thereafter become, inhabitants of the four several Gov- "ernments, therein mentioned, (of which this your Ma- "jesty's Province was denominated to be one) your Ma- "jesty had, in the Letters Patent, by which the said Gov- "ernments were constituted, given express power and "direction to your Governours, that so soon as the state "and circumstances of those Governments would admit of "it, they should, with the advice of your Majesty's Coun- "cils, summon and call General Assemblies, within the "said Governments, respectively, in such manner and form "as is used and directed in those Colonies and Provinces, "in America, which are under your Majesty's immediate "government. And, also, that your Majesty had been "graciously pleased to give power to your said Govern- "ours, with the consent of your Majesty's said Councils, "and the Representatives of the people, so to be sum- "moned as aforesaid, to make, constitute, and ordain Laws, "Statutes, and Ordinances, for the publick peace, welfare, "and good government of your Majesty's said Colonies, and "of the people and inhabitants thereof, as near as might "be agreeable to the laws of England, and under such regu- "lations and restrictions as are used in other Colonies." And, whereas, it has graciously pleased your Majesty, in the Letters Patent of Commission to your Captain-Gen- eral and Governour-in-Chief, and in case of his death, or during his absence, in the Letters Patent of Commission to your Majesty's Lieutenant Governour of this Province, to give and grant unto him full power and authority, with the advice and consent of your Majesty's Council, so soon as the situation and circumstances of this Province would admit of it, and when, and as often as need should require, to summon and call General Assemblies of the Freeholders and Planters within this Government, in such manner as he, in his discretion, should judge most proper. And whereas your Petitioners, whose properties, real and per- sonal, in this Province are become very considerable, hav- ing well considered its present state and circumstances, and humbly conceiving them to be such as to admit the summoning and calling a General Assembly of the Free- holders and Planters, did, on the third day of December, last past, present their humble Petition to the Honourable Hector Theophilus Cramahé, Esquire, your Majesty's Lieutenant Governour, and now Commander-in-Chief, stat- ing as above; and humbly praying that he would be pleased, with the advice and consent of your Majesty's Council, to summon and call a General Assembly of the Freeholders and Planters within this Government, in such manner as he, in his discretion, should judge most proper. And your Majesty's said Lieutenant Governour, on the eleventh day of December, last past, after having taken the said Petition into his consideration, was pleased to inform your Petition- ers that the subject of the said Petition was a matter of too much importance for your Majesty's Council here to advise, or for him, your said Lieutenant Governour, to de- termine upon, at a time that, from the best information, the affairs of this Province were likely to become an object of publick regulation; but that he would transmit the said Petition, by the first opportunity, to your Majesty's Secre- tary of State.

Your Majesty's Petitioners being fully convinced, from their residence in the Province, and their experience in the affairs of it, that a General Assembly would, very much, contribute to encourage and promote Industry, Agricul- ture, and Commerce, and (as they hope) to create har- mony and good understanding between your Majesty's new and old subjects, most humbly supplicate your Majesty to take the premises into your royal consideration, and to direct your Majesty's Governour, or Commander-in-Chief, to call a General Assembly, in such manner, and of such constitution and form, as to your Majesty, in your royal wisdom, shall seem best adapted to secure its peace, wel- fare, and good government. And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray, &c.

Montreal, January 10, 1774.

Jenkin Williams,	Zachary Smith,	Ezekiel Solomons,
John Welles,	John Lynd,	Levy Solomons,
Randle Meredith,	James Hanna,	James Doig,
Alexander Davison,	John White Swift,	James Finlay,
John Lees, Jun.,	R. Gray,	John Gregory,
N. Byard,	Robert M'Fie,	Benj. Frobisher,
P. Mills,	Alexander Lawson,	Joseph Bindon,
John Halsted,	Frederick Petty,	James M'Gill,
James Ted,	Francis Anderson,	John Stenhouse,
Arthur Davidson,	Hugh Ritchie,	Alexander Henry,
John Majer.	George Hipps,	Solomon Milleherges,
J. Melvin,	Daniel Robertson,	William Murray,
Simon Fraser, Jun.,	John Wharton,	Alexander Henry,
Duncan Munro,	Dumas,	James Price,
W. Lindsay,	Samuel Morfison,	William Heywood,
D. Lynd,	George Singleton,	Jean El Wadery,
William Laing,	Alexander Paterson,	Hugh Farries,
William Keith,	Charles Paterson,	John Sunderland,
Charles Hay,	Peter Arnold,	Samuel Edge,
Daniel Morrison,	Edward Antill,	Abraham Holmes,
Charles Grant,	John Lilly,	Samuel Holmes,
William Grant,	John Porteous,	Richard Livingston,
Zachary Macaulay,	John Thomson,	John Richardson,
John M'Cord,	Edward Chinn,	John Jones,
Adam Lymburner,	G. Christie,	Robert Simpsell,
John Renaud,	Chabrand de Lisle,	James Fraser,
Alexander Fraser,	Minister,	James Noel,
Jonas Clarke Minot,	Pierre du Calvet,	J. Pullman,
Murdoch Stuart,	J. Grant,	Robert Cruckshank,
Michael Cornud,	Alexander Hay,	John Neagle,
Robert Woolsey,	Edward Wm. Gray,	Peter Forbes,
D. Gallway,	Richard Huntley,	Allan M'Farlin,
Thomas M'Cord,	John Blake,	John Trotter,
John Ross,	James Blake,	Nicholas Brown,
John Burke,	George Measam,	Philip Brichmerr,
Francis Smith,	Richard Dobio,	Edward Cox,
Rod. Macleod,	Thomas Walker,	Roger M'Cormick,
Godfrey King,	Thomas Walker, Jr.,	Philip Loch,
John Saul,	Richard Walker,	John Marteilhe,
George Jenkins,	William Weir,	James S. Godard,
Malcolm Fraser,	John Kay,	Peter M'Farland,
John Lees,	William M'Carty,	Andrew Porteous,
Alexander Martin,	Law. Ermatinger,	C. Dumoulin,
Simon Fraser,	James D. White,	G. Young,
Henry Boone,	Thomas M'Murray,	Thomas Duggan,
Charles Lemarchant,	James Morrison,	J. Duggan,
John De Mercier,	Jean Bernard,	William Aird,
Jacob Row,	Richard M'Neall,	John Migad, Major,
James Sinclair,	Joseph Howard,	Daniel M'Killip.
George King,	J. Vander Heyden.

To the Right Honourable the Earl of DARTMOUTH, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State.

The Memorial of the Freeholders, Merchants, Planters, and others, his Majesty's ancient and loyal subjects, now in the Province of QUEBEC, Sheweth:

That your Lordship's Memorialists, encouraged by the capitulation of Canada, confirmed by the Definitive Treaty of Peace, and his Majesty's Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763, did purchase Lands, Plant, Settle, and carry on Trade and Commerce in this Province, to a very considerable amount, and to the manifest advantage of Great Britain, in confident expectation of the early accomplishment of his Majesty's said Proclamation, giving express power and direction to his Governour, with the advice and consent of his Council, to summon and call General Assemblies, to make, constitute, and ordain, Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, for the publick peace, welfare, and good government of the said Province, as near as might be agreeable to the Laws of England. For which reasons your Memorialists have drawn up and transmitted herewith, their most humble Petition to the King, praying his Majesty will, out of his royal and paternal care of all his dutiful and loyal subjects of this Province, be graciously pleased to relieve them from the apprehensions they are under of their property being endangered, and losing the fruits of their labour, exposed to Ordinances of a Governour and Council, repugnant to the Laws of England which take place before his Majesty's pleasure is known, and are not only contrary to his Majesty's commission and private instructions to his said Governour; but, we presume, equally grievous to his Majesty's new and ancient subjects.

Your Lordship's Memorialists further see, with regret, the great danger the children, born of Protestant parents, are in, of being utterly neglected, for want of a sufficient number of Protestant Pastors, and thereby exposed to the usual and known assiduity of the Roman Catholic Clergy of different orders, who are very numerous in this country, and who, from their own immense funds, have lately established a Seminary for the Education of Youth, in this Province, which is the more alarming, as it excludes all Protestant Teachers of any science whatever.

Wherefore, your Lordship's Memorialists humbly pray, that you will be pleased to present their said Petition to his Majesty, and also pray your Lordship's intercession and good offices in that behalf.

And your Lordship's Memorialists, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

Montreal, January 15, 1774.

EDWARD W. GRAY,	JAMES M'GILL,
R. HUNTLEY,	JAMES FINLAY,
LAWRENCE ERMATINGER,	EDWARD CHINN.
WILLIAM HAYWOOD,

A Committee appointed at a General Meeting of the Inhabitants of Montreal.

This Petition and Memorial were sent over to Francis Maseres, Esq., Cursitor Baron of the Exchequer, (who had formerly been Attorney General of the said Province,) in order to be by him presented to the Earl of Dartmouth: and he did accordingly present them to that noble Lord soon after he had received them, that is, about the beginning of the month of March, 1774.

LETTER FROM MASERES TO THE QUEBEC COMMITTEE.

Inner Temple, (London) March 19, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: I have presented the papers you have done me the honour of transmitting to me, concerning your desire of having an House of Assembly in the Province of Quebec, to my Lord Dartmouth, and have waited upon his Lordship at his levee, since I did so. But his Lordship has not informed me of the sentiments of himself, or any other of his Majesty's Ministers of State, concerning your request: so that I cannot, yet transmit to you any information upon that subject. But I conjecture, that his Majesty's servants are of opinion, that the state of the Province is not yet quite ripe for the establishment of an Assembly, and that they rather incline, for the present, to supply the want of one, by establishing a Legislative Council, nominated by the King, with sufficient powers to do the necessary business of the Province, till the more natural and constitutional measure, of a General Assembly, shall appear to them more practicable. If such a Council should be established, I hope it will be made as popular and independent as may be, that it may be respected by the people, and act agreeably to their sense and true interests. With a view to which, I have suggested to his Majesty's Ministers, and others, that it would be expedient that the members of it should be thirty-one in number, and not either removeable or suspendable by the Governour; and that seventeen of them should be necessary to make a House, and do business; and that a fortnight's notice should be given in the Quebec Gazette, before every meeting of them, to prevent the Governour's packing them; and that every member should be at liberty to propose a Bill in it, as well as to assent to those proposed by the Governour; and that it should not have the power of laying taxes, but only that of making Laws; and that it should consist only of Protestants. But whether this plan is approved, or not, by his Majesty's Ministers, I know not. If it should be approved, and carried into execution, I confess I should think the inhabitants of the Province would be likely to be governed more happily under it for seven or eight years to come, than under the influence of an Assembly into which the Papists should be admitted. As to an Assembly of Protestants only, I see no objection to the establishment of one, but the danger of disobliging the Catholics of the Province, who are so much superiour in number. If that can be got over, and the Catholics can be brought to acquiesce in the erection of an Assembly, in which they are not permitted to sit, by indulging them with the liberty of voting in the election of the members of it, as I remember to have heard some gentlemen suggest when I was in the Province, or by some other compromise or expedient, I should be very glad to see your Petition for an Assembly immediately complied with, as, indeed, I suppose it would, in that case, be. But, whatever may be my own opinions upon this subject, I shall always faithfully and cheerfully represent yours to the King's Ministers, and deliver such papers and messages as you shall think proper to intrust to me. And, in order to facilitate the attainment of your wishes, I here beg leave to hint to you, that I believe it would greatly contribute to that end, if you would previously declare, that you conceive the British Parliament to have a complete legislative authority over the Province of Quebec, and that such authority will continue after the establishment of an Assembly; and that you, and the other petitioners, are willing, that every member of such future Assembly, should be required to recognise the said supreme authority in every article whatsoever, both of Legislation and Taxation, in the plainest and strongest terms, before he is permitted to take his seat. Such a previous declaration, would greatly tend to remove the prejudices now subsisting in the minds of many people in England against the erection of new Houses of Assembly in America, arising from the conduct of the Assembly at Boston, and in others of the American Provinces, in totally denying the supreme authority of Parliament, and thereby dismembering and dividing, as much as in them lies, the British Empire, into so many distinct and separate states, independent of each other, though subject to the same King, like the Electorate of Hanover. I know nothing that would contribute more to your obtaining an Assembly, than your making a declaration of this kind. I hope soon to wait on Lord Dartmouth again, and to hear from his Lordship the King's answer to your Petition. When I have received it, I will transmit it to you without delay. In the mean time, I return you my sincere thanks for the honour you have done me, in approving my endeavours for the settlement of the Province of Quebec, and your declaration of your belief that I am heartily interested in that good cause, to which I shall always think it the greatest glory of my life to have contributed, if any of the measures I have proposed for that purpose should, hereafter, be adopted, though, at present, I see but little reason to flatter myself that they will be so. I remain with great regard, gentlemen, your most obedient and humble servant,

FRANCIS MASERES.

To the Committee of the Petitioners for an Assembly in the Province of Quebec.

PETITION OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC INHABITANTS OF QUEBEC.

A Petition of divers of the Roman Catholic Inhabitants of the Province of QUEBEC, to the King's Majesty; signed and transmitted to the Earl of DARTMOUTH, his Majesty's Secretary of State for AMERICA, about the month of DECEMBER, 1773, and presented to his Majesty about the month of FEBRUARY, 1774.

SIR: Your most obedient and faithful new subjects, in the Province of Canada, take the liberty to prostrate themselves at the foot of your throne, in order to lay before you the sentiments of respect, affection, and obedience, towards your august person, with which their hearts overflow, and to return to your Majesty their most humble thanks for your paternal care of their welfare.

Our gratitude obliges us to acknowledge, that the frightful appearances of conquest by your Majesty's victorious arms, did not long continue to excite our lamentations and tears. They grew every day less and less, as we gradually became more acquainted with the happiness of living under the wise regulations of the British Empire. And even in the very moment of the conquest, we were far from feeling the melancholy effects of restraint and captivity. For the wise and virtuous General who conquered us, being a worthy representative of the glorious Sovereign who entrusted him with the command of his Armies, left us in possession of our Laws and Customs: the free exercise of our Religion was preserved to us, and afterwards was confirmed by the Treaty of Peace; and our own former countrymen were appointed judges of our disputes concerning civil matters. This excess of kindness towards us we shall never forget. These generous proofs of the clemency of our benign conqueror will be carefully preserved in the annals of our history; and we shall transmit them from generation to generation to our remotest posterity. These, sir, are the pleasing ties by which, in the beginning Of our subjection to your Majesty's Government, our hearts were so strongly bound to your Majesty; ties which can never be dissolved, but which time will only strengthen and draw closer.

In the year 1764, your Majesty thought fit to put an end to the Military Government of this Province, and to establish a Civil Government in its stead. And from the instant of this change we began to feel the inconveniences which resulted from the introduction of the Laws of England, which, till then, we had been wholly unacquainted with. Our former countrymen, who, till that time, had been permitted to settle our civil disputes, without any expense to us, were thanked for their services and dismissed; and the Militia of the Province, which had, till then, been proud of bearing that honourable name under your Majesty's command, was laid aside. It is true, indeed, we were admitted to serve on Juries: but at the same time we were given to understand, that there were certain obstacles that prevented our holding places under your Majesty's Government. We were also told that the Laws of England were to take place in the Province, which, though we presume them to be wisely suited to the regulation of the mother country, for which they were made, could not be blended and applied to our customs, without totally overturning our fortunes, and destroying our possessions. Such have been, ever since the era of that change in the Government, and such are still, at this time, our just causes of uneasiness and apprehension; which, however, we acknowledge to be rendered less alarming to us, by the mildness with which your Majesty's Government has been administered.

Vouchsafe, most illustrious and generous Sovereign, to dissipate these fears, and this uneasiness, by restoring to us our ancient laws, privileges, and customs, and to extend our Province to its former boundaries. Vouchsafe to bestow your favours equally upon all your subjects in the Province, without any distinction! Preserve the glorious title of Sovereign of a free people: a title, which surely would suffer some diminution, if more than an hundred thousand new subjects of your Majesty in this Province, who had submitted to your Government, were to be excluded from your service, and deprived of the inestimable advantages which are enjoyed by your Majesty's ancient subjects. May Heaven, propitious to our wishes and our prayers, bestow upon your Majesty along and happy reign! May the august family of Hanover, to which we have taken the most solemn oaths of fidelity, continue to reign over us to the end of time!

We conclude, by entreating your Majesty to grant us, in common with your other subjects, the rights and privileges of citizens of England. Then our fears will be removed, and we shall pass our lives in tranquillity and happiness, and shall be always ready to sacrifice them for the glory of our Prince, and the good of our country.

We are, with the most profound submission, your Majesty's most obedient, most loyal, and most faithful subjects,

FR. SIMONNET, &c., &c.

Memorial in support of the Requests made by his Majesty's most obedient and most faithful new subjects, in CANADA, in their foregoing Petition.

The improvement of so vast a country as Canada is, if considered as having the same boundaries as it had in the time of the French Government; a country in which there are at present more than an hundred thousand inhabitants, of whom more than nineteen in twenty are new subjects of the King; the increase of Agriculture in this country; the encouragement of its Trade and Navigation; a settlement of the Laws by which its inhabitants are to be governed, built upon solid and immoveable foundations, as to remove, and cut up by the roots, the confusion which, at present, overspreads the Province, in consequence of the want of clear and known laws established by an incontestable authority; are points which are now proposed to the consideration of the British Government, and are worthy objects of its attention and wisdom.

The continuance of our ancient laws, customs, and privileges, in their whole extent, (because it is impossible to change, or alter them, without destroying and totally overthrowing our titles to our estates and our fortunes,) is a favour, and even an act of justice, which we hope for from the goodness of his Majesty.

We ardently desire to be admitted to a share of the civil and military employments under his Majesty's Government. The thought of being excluded from them is frightful to us. We have taken the most solemn oath of fidelity to his Majesty, and the august family of Hanover; and, ever since the conquest of the country, we have behaved like loyal subjects. And our zeal and attachment to our gracious Sovereign, will make us always ready to sacrifice our lives for his glory, and the defence of the state.

The Province, as it is now bounded, by a line passing through the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, is confined within too narrow limits. This line is only fifteen leagues distant from Montreal. And yet it is only on this side, that the lands of the Province are fertile, and that agriculture can be cultivated to much advantage. We desire, therefore, that, as under the French Government our Colony was permitted to extend over all the upper countries, known under the names of Michilimackinac, Detroit, and other adjacent places, as far as the River Mississippi, so it may now be enlarged to the same extent. And this re-annexation of these inland posts to this Province is the more necessary, on account of the Fur trade which the people of this Province carry on to them; because, in the present state of things, as there are no Courts of Justice, whose jurisdiction extends to those distant places, those of the Factors we send to them with our Goods to trade with the Indians for their Furs, who happen to prove dishonest, continue in them, out of the reach of their creditors, and live upon the profits of the Goods intrusted to their care; which entirely ruins this Colony, and turns these Posts into harbours for rogues and vagabonds, whose wicked and violent conduct is often likely to give rise to wars with the Indians.

We desire, also, that his Majesty would be graciously pleased to re-annex to this Province the Coast of Labrador, which formerly belonged to it, and has been taken from it since the peace. The fishery, for Seals, which is the only fishery carried on upon this Coast, is carried on only in the middle of Winter, and sometimes does not last above a fortnight. The nature of this fishery, which none of his Majesty's subjects, but the inhabitants of this Province understand; the short time of its continuance, and the extreme severity of the weather, which makes it impossible for Ships to continue, at that time, upon the Coast, are circumstances which all conspire to exclude any fisherrnen from Old England from having any share in the conduct of it.

We further most humbly represent, that, by means of the ravages and calamities of the late war, and the frequent fires that have happened in our towns, this Colony is not, as yet, in a condition to defray the expenses of its own Civil Government, and, consequently, not in a condition to admit of a General Assembly. We are, therefore, of opinion, that a Council, that should consist of a greater number of members than that which has hitherto subsisted in the Province, and that should be composed partly of his Majesty's old subjects, and partly of his new ones, would be a much fitter instrument of Government for the Province in its present state.

We have reason to hope, from the paternal care which his Majesty has hitherto shewn for our welfare, that the powers of this Council will be restrained by his Majesty within proper bounds, and that they will be made to approach, as near as possible, to the mildness and moderation which form the basis of the British Government.

We hope the rather that his Majesty will indulge us in the above requests, because we possess more than ten out of twelve of all the seigniories in the Province, and almost all the lands of the other tenure, which are holden by rent-service.

FR. SIMONNET,&c., &c.

PETITION FROM THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, DELIVERED TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, ON THE 18TH OF JANUARY, 1775, TO BE BY HIM PRESENTED TO THE KING.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:
The Petition of your Majesty's most loyal and dutiful, your ancient subjects settled in the Province of QUEBEC, most humbly Sheweth:

That we, upon the faith of your sacred Majesty's Royal Proclamation, bearing date the seventh day of October, which was in the year of our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, did come and settle ourselves in the said Province, purchasing Houses and Lands, and carrying on extensive Trade, Commerce, and Agriculture, whereby the value of the Land, and wealth of its inhabitants, are more than doubled; during all which time, we humbly crave leave to say, that we have paid a ready and dutiful obedience to Government, and have lived in peace and amity with your Majesty's new subjects. Nevertheless, we find, and, with unutterable grief, presume to say, that, by a late Act of Parliament, entitled "An Act for "the making more effectual provision tor the government "of the Province of Quebec, in North America," we are deprived of the franchises granted by your Majesty's royal predecessors, and by us inherited from our forefathers; that we have lost the protection of the English Laws, so universally admired for their wisdom and lenity, and which we have ever held in the highest veneration, and in their stead the laws of Canada are to be introduced, to which we are utter strangers, disgraceful to us as Britons, and, in their consequences, ruinous to our properties, as we thereby lose the invaluable privilege of Trials by Juries. That, in matters of a criminal nature, the Habeas Corpus Act is dissolved, and we are subjected to arbitrary fines and imprisonment, at the will of the Governour and Council, who may, at pleasure, render the certainty of the criminal Laws of no effect, by the great power that is granted to them, of making alterations in the same.

We, therefore, most humbly implore your Majesty to take our unhappy state into your royal consideration, and grant us such relief as your Majesty, in your royal wisdom, shall think meet. And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Quebec, November 12, 1774.

Zach. Macaulay, John Aitkin, John Paterson, Randle Meredith, John Lees, John Welles, S. Fargues,	Quebec Committee.	Thomas Walker, James Price, John Blake, Isaac Todd, Alex. Paterson, John Porteous,	Montreal Committee.
John M'Cord, Charles Grant, Robert Woolsey, Nicholas Bayard, C. Le Merchant, John Painter, Thomas M'Cord, Henry Grebassa, Robert Willcocks, John Renaud, Christy Cramer, George Gregory, Lewis Chaperon, Frederick Petry, James Cuming, William Laing, George Jenkins,	Thomas M,Murray, Allen Paterson, James Symington, Abram Holmes, John Neagle, Peter Arnoldi, Daniel Robertson, Alexander Milmine, Thomas Fraser, A. Porteous, Joseph Ingo, Adam Scott, James Finley, Pat. M'Clement, William Pantree, Jacob Bittez, Leach Smith,	G. Young, William Ashby, Gavin Lourie, Phil. Brickman, Benj. Holborn, Joseph Borrel, John Conolly, John Durocher, B. Janis, J. Joran, Jacob Maurer, Simon Levy, Edward Chinn. Richard M'Neall, R. Cruickshanks, John Comfort, Adam Wentzel, Francis Smith, Alex. Wallace, Richard Dobie, George Measam, Samuel Jacobs Nicholas Brown, Michael Morin, William Kay, John Lilly, John Sunderland, J. Grant, James Morrison, James Sinclair, John Chisholm, James Jeffry, Robert M'Fie, Fancis Atkinson, David Shoolbred, Jonas C. Minot, Godfrey King, John Land, Caleb Thorne, John Lees, Jun., Robert Jackson, Hugh Ritchie, Alex. Lawson, Charles Daily, Edw. Manwaring, Michael Flanagan, J. Melvin, George Munro, James Hanna, Joseph Torrey, T. Walker, Jun., James D. White, John Bell, Andrew M'Gill, Samuel Holmes, James Blake, James Noel,	John Saul, Francis Anderson, Simon Fraser, John Ross, John M'Cluer, James Woods, John Lees, Lemuel Bowles, Thomas Davidson, Patrick O'Donell, Archibald Lawford, Simon Fraser, Jun., Richard Vincent, Daniel Cameron, James Galbraith, Roderick M'Leod, John White Swift, John Bondfield, William Callander, David Geddes, Samuel Morrison, John Thompson, Alexander Hay, James Doig, Joseph Bindon, Andrew Hays, George Singleton, John Stonhouse, John Kay, D. Salesby Franks, J. Richardson, Jun., James Loach, Ezekiel Solomons, James Perry, James Beck, Law. Ermatinger, Simon M'Tavish, J. Pullman, James Frazer,	Allan M'Farlain, J. Vender Heyden, Hinrick Gonnerman, John Hare, Jun., George W. Knowles, Benjamin Frobisher, William Murray, James Anderson, John Trotter, Christopher Chron, William England, Meeshach Leeng, Thomas Boyd, John Mittleberger, Sol. Mittleberger, Isaac Judah, Peter M'Farlane, James May, Jacob Schieffelin, Benaiah Gibb, John George Walk, Michael Philips, C. Dumoulin, Francois Dumoulin, Duncan Cumrning, William Heywood, Robert M'Cay, James Robinson, Jean Bernard, Lazarus David, P. Bouthillier, Richard Walker, Josiah Bleakley, Aaron Heart, Levy Solomons. Alexander Fraser, Malcom Fraser, John M'Cord, Jun., Henry Dunn.

---	--	---

PETITION PRESENTED TO THE KING, BY MESSRS. LANE, MOLLESON, AND BRIDGEN, FROM THE COMMITTEE OF MERCHANTS, MARCH 23, 1775. *

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:
The humble Address and Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of LONDON, concerned in the Commerce of NORTH AMERICA:

We, your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Merchants, Traders, and others, concerned in the Commerce of North America, beg leave to approach, and humbly lay before, your Majesty, those grievances, from the weight of which we are obliged to seek refuge in your royal wisdom and justice. An application of this extraordinary nature, we hope, will not be attributed to any design on our part to disturb your Majesty's Government, but to our present uncommon sufferings, the severity of which is aggravated by the prospect of future calamities.

We are constrained, with very deep concern, to observe, that the Ministers of your Majesty have, for some years past, adopted a new mode of Government, with regard to the Colonies; a mode which has created great disquietude in the minds of your Majesty's American subjects, and has been productive of repeated interruptions of the valuable Commerce carried on between this country and America. An evil of such magnitude awakes us from that silence which we have hitherto observed, in confidence that your Males-

* While the Americans are preparing for opposition, the British Ministry are no less active in pursuing measures to counteract their endeavours; to increase their distresses; and to incite the Parliament to enact such laws, as either to render them desperate, and force them to resistance, or, by a tame acquiescence, to resign their boasted privileges of free English subjects. With this view to all the other Acts complained of by them as unconstitutional, an Act has passed, not only to restrain the Trade, but to cut off the subsistence of nearly one-sixth part of the inhabitants of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, the Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, by prohibiting them from carrying on any fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, the Coast of Labrador, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on the coast of Cape Breton or Nova-Scotia, or any other part of North America, without a certificate from a Governour or Commander-in-Chief of one of the British Colonies aforesaid; which certificate depends entirely on the will of the Governour, and may be granted or withheld just as he shall please to direct.

Against this Act, so grievous in itself, so destructive to the commercial interests of this country, and so ruinous to individuals, the American Merchants petitioned both Houses of Parliament; but their Petition made no impression on either House. They, therefore, as their last resource, in all humility, determined to approach the Throne, and to seek that redress from the clemency of the King, which they had been denied by the unfeeling insensibility of his Ministers and their adherents. Accordingly a Petition was presented by a committee of this body, on the 23d of March.

This Address and Petition was soon after followed by another, which was presented at St. James's, by four of the principal people, called Quakers. To these Petitions it does not appear, by the papers, that any answer was given. - Gent. Mag.

ty's Ministers, perceiving the effects of this fatal innovation, would revert, at length, to those wise regulations by which the Government of the Colonies had been successfully administered. In the measures of late pursued, we have the unhappiness to find that experience has been disregarded; and that the mischiefs resulting from this error, which, by the application of seasonable and moderate remedies, might have been prevented, have been suffered to grow to a degree of alarming inveteracy. The interruption of Commerce, the distress of Manufactures, the diminution of your Majesty's Revenues, are mischiefs which are lost in the contemplation of more disastrous consequences --- the alienated affections of your Majesty's subjects in America, and the horrors of a civil war.

If the subjects of your Majesty in North America have been led into any acts of extravagance, we confide in your Majesty's justice, to explain their present proceedings by that loyalty which has distinguished them upon former occasions. Your Majesty will estimate their conduct by the integrity of their intentions; and, if they have been betrayed, by repeated provocations, or excessive punishment, into any measures which may not be approved, your Majesty will impute them to their true cause, and will make a just distinction between the turbulence of a faction, and the eager contentions of a free people.

To enforce this system of severity towards the Colonies, an Act has been passed by both Houses of Parliament, and is now awaiting your Majesty's royal assent. "to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the banks of Newfoundland," &c.

By the operation of this Act, many thousands of your Majesty's subjects in those Provinces, bereft of their occupation, and, in vain, desirous of exerting their usual industry, will either remain a burthen on the community, or suffer themselves to be hurried away by a spirit of enterprising despair. The loss they will sustain, by the interruption of so valuable a branch of their Commerce, will be aggravated by the want of provisions, which they derive from that source. Their minds, already too much irritated, will be still more inflamed; and, to their other causes of discontent, will be added, the strong and irresistible impulse of famine. So forcible an incentive it is scarcely to be supposed that human nature can withstand. The most moderate will, at length, give way to the impatience of complaint; the most loyal will forget their duty in the severe conflict of obedience and necessity.

We are sensible, indeed, from the imperfect institution of human judicatures, that it is not possible, in all cases, to discriminate the innocent from the guilty; but no arguments, in our apprehension, can justify a mode of punishment that involves thousands, who, confessedly, are not guilty of the offence for which it is inflicted; a punishment, that is not to be averted by the future deportment of the unfortunate persons who are the innocent victims of it, but which may be entailed upon them forever, by the persevering resistance of their neighbours.

The impolicy of this Act, we apprehend, will afford an argument no less weighty to induce your Majesty to withhold your assent from it. It must be admitted, if the European market could be supplied by the Merchants of Great Britain or Ireland, that it cannot be supplied upon the same terms, and, consequently, that it will create an opening for the French to interfere and rival us in that beneficial commerce. Nor can it be urged, that they are prevented from so doing, by the limits to which their Fishery is confined; for it is not improbable, but that they may take a sufficient quantity of fish within their own limits, to supply the European market; and, even if that were not the case, they would undoubtedly effect it by other means. Whatever reliance may be placed in theory, upon the invisible lines drawn by Treaty, as the boundaries of their right of Fishery, we are well acquainted, by experience, how easily those limits are eluded or transgressed. But, if this profitable branch of trade should be once interrupted, it will be as a River diverted from its course, and will either lose itself entirely, or wander into new channels, from whence no human effort can recall it.

We, therefore, most humbly pray your Majesty to withhold your royal assent from an Act, which is no less repugnant to good policy than justice. We acknowledge the many blessings which we and our ancestors have enjoyed under the Princes of your Majesty's illustrious House; and, feeling an unfeigned satisfaction in the paternal regard which your Majesty has repeatedly expressed for the welfare and happiness of all your subjects, with the greater confidence we entreat the exertion of that just and necessary prerogative which the Constitution has wisely placed in your Majesty's hands. Permit us, at the same time, to express our wishes that your Majesty may temper, with clemency, those rigorous measures with which your American subjects are threatened. The benevolence of your Majesty will inspire you, upon this occasion, with a recollection of the high deserts of the ancestors of this unfortunate people, who, flying from the house of bondage, and guided by the spirit of freedom, and their own enlightened conscience, traversed the vast Ocean, and encountered all the perils of a dreary Wilderness.

Your Majesty will contemplate, likewise, the extensive benefits gradually derived from their patient industry and perseverance, and weighing the great commercial advantages that, for many years, have accrued to these Kingdoms from the American Colonies, and the dreadful consequences of the disorders which now distract them, will pursue such lenient measures as can alone restore true harmony, and promote the happiness and prosperity of the British Empire.

PETITION OF THE QUAKERS.

To GEORGE the Third, King of GREAT BRITAIN, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, the Address and Petition of the people called Quakers.

May it please the King:

Gratefully sensible of the protection and indulgence we enjoy, under thy Government, and with hearts full of anxious concern for thy happiness, and the prosperity of this great Empire, we beg leave to approach thy Royal presence.

Prompted by the affection we bear to our brethren and fellow-subjects, impressed with an apprehension of calamities, in which the whole British Empire may be involved, and moved by an ardent desire to promote thy royal intention of effecting a happy reconciliation with thy people in America, we beseech thy gracious regard to our petition.

From the intercourse subsisting between us and our brethren abroad, for the advancement of piety and virtue, we are persuaded there are not, in thy extensive Dominions, subjects more loyal, and more zealously attached to thy royal person, thy family, and government, than in the Provinces of America, and amongst all religious denominations.

We presume not to justify the excesses committed, nor to inquire into the causes which may have produced them; but, influenced by the principles of that religion which proclaims, "Peace on earth, and good will to men," we humbly beseech thee to stay the sword, that means may be tried to effect, without bloodshed, and all the evils of intestine war, a firm and lasting union with our fellow-subjects in America.

Great and arduous as the task may appear, we trust men may be found, in this country, and in America, who, properly authorized, would, with a zeal and ardour becoming an object so important, endeavour to compose the present differences, and establish a happy and permanent reconciliation, on that firm foundation, the reciprocal interest of each part of the British Empire.

That the Almighty, by whom Kings reign, and Princes decree justice, may make thee the happy instrument of perpetuating harmony and concord through the several parts of thy extensive Dominions, that thy clemency and magnanimity may be admired in future generations, and a long succession of thy descendants fill, with honour to themselves, and happiness to a grateful people, the Throne of their ancestors, is the fervent prayer of thy faithful subjects.

PETITION OF THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND LIVERY OF LONDON, PRESENTED TO THE KING APRIL 10, 1775. *

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:

The humble Address, Remonstrance, and Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Livery of the City of LONDON, in Common-Hall assembled:

We, your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Livery of the City of London, beg leave to approach the Throne, and to declare our abhorrence of the measures which have been pursued, and are now pursuing, to the oppression of our fellow-subjects in America. These measures are big with all the consequences which can alarm a free and commercial people; a deep and, perhaps, fatal wound to Commerce; the ruin of Manufactures; the diminution of the Revenue, and consequent increase of Taxes; the alienation of the Colonies; and the blood of your Majesty's subjects.

But your Petitioners look with less horror at the consequences, than at the purpose of those measures. Not deceived by the specious artifice of calling despotism dignity, they plainly perceive that the real purpose is, to establish arbitrary power over all America.

Your Petitioners conceive the liberties of the whole to be inevitably connected with those of every part of an Empire founded on the common rights of mankind. They cannot, therefore, observe, without the greatest concern and alarm, the Constitution fundamentally violated in any part of your Majesty's Dominions. They esteem it an essential, an unalterable principle of liberty, the source and security of all constitutional rights, that no part of the Dominion can be taxed without being represented. Upon this great leading principle, they most ardently wish to see their fellow-subjects, in America, secured in what their humble Petition, to your Majesty, prays for - Peace, Liberty, and Safety. Subordination in Commerce, under which the Colonies have always cheerfully acquiesced, is, they conceive, all that this country ought, in justice, to require. From this subordination such advantages flow, by all the profits of their commerce centring here, as fully compensate this Nation for the expense incurred, to which they, also, contribute, in Men and Money, for their defence and protection, during a general war; and, in their Provincial wars, they have manifested their readiness and resolution to defend themselves. To require more of them would, for this reason, derogate from the justice and magnanimity which have been hitherto the pride and character of this country.

It is, therefore, with the deepest concern that we have seen the sacred security of Representation, in their Assemblies, wrested from them; the Trial by Jury abolished, and the odious powers of Excise extended to all cases of Revenue; the sanctuary of their Houses laid open to violation, at the will and pleasure of every Officer and Servant in the Customs; the Dispensation of Justice corrupted, by rendering their Judges dependent, for their seats and salaries, on the will of the Crown; Liberty and Life rendered precarious, by subjecting them to be dragged over the Ocean, and tried for treason or felony here; where the distance, making it impossible for the most guiltless to maintain his innocence, must deliver him up, a victim to Ministerial vengeance. Soldiers and others, in America, have been instigated to shed the blood of the people, by establishing a mode of trial which holds out impunity for such murder;

* On Monday, the 10th of April, at two o'clock, the Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Sheriffs, and the Aldermen Bull, Sawbridge, Hayley, Lewes; and Newenham, went up to St. James's, with the Address, Remonstrance, and Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Livery, in Common-Hall assembled, "praying for the removal of his present Ministers, for their iniquitous measures with respect to our fellow-subjects in America." The Lord Chamberlain having previously informed the Sheriffs, that his Majesty would not receive more than the usual number of Liverymen, the following gentlemen were appointed a Committee of the Livery, to attend the Lord Mayor from Guildhall to St. James's, on this occasion, viz: William Lee, Esq., Mr. Luke Stavelly, Mr. Deputy Howse, Mr. William Saxby, Mr. Henry John Mascal, Mr. Richard Hern, Mr. John Crompton, Mr. Thomas Gorst, and Mr. John Jacob. When the City Council had read the paper, he gave it to the Lord Mayor, who delivered it to the King, with a half bent knee, and the most profound reverence. His Majesty handed the Petition to the Lord in waiting, and then deliberately taking a paper from his pocket, read the answer. A silence of two minutes ensued, when the Lord Mayor made a low bow, then retreated backwards to the middle of the room, made a second, and, in like manner, a third, at the door, when the King moved his hat to his Lordship, and thus ended the business.

the capital of New England has been punished with unexampled rigour, untried and unheard, involving the innocent and the suspected in one common and inhuman calamity; Chartered Rights have been taken away, without any forfeiture proved, in order to deprive the people of every legal exertion against the tyranny of their rulers; the Habeas Corpus Act, and Trial by Jury, have been suppressed, and French Despotick Government, with the Roman Catholic Religion, have been established, by law, over an extensive part of your Majesty's Dominions, in America; dutiful Petitions for redress of those grievances, from all your Majesty's American subjects, have been fruitless.

To fill up the measures of these oppressions, an Army has been sent to enforce them.

Superadded to this, measures are now planned, upon the most merciless policy, of starving our fellow-subjects into a total surrender of their liberties, and an unlimited submission to arbitrary Government.

These grievances have driven your Majesty's faithful subjects to despair, and compelled them to have recourse to that resistance which is justified by the great principles of the Constitution, actuated by which, at the glorious period of the Revolution, our ancestors transferred the Imperial Crown of these Realms from the Popish and tyrannical race of the Stuarts, to the illustrious and Protestant House of Brunswick.

Your Petitioners are persuaded that these measures originate in the secret advice of men who are enemies, equally, to your Majesty's title, and to the liberties of your people. That your Majesty's Ministers carry them into execution by the same fatal corruption which has enabled them to wound the peace and violate the Constitution of this country; thus they poison the fountain of publick security, and render that body, which should be the guardian of liberty, a formidable instrument of arbitrary power.

Your Petitioners do, therefore, most earnestly beseech your Majesty to dismiss, immediately and forever, from your Councils, these Ministers and advisers, as the first step towards a full redress of those grievances which alarm and afflict your whole people. So shall peace and commerce be restored, and the confidence and affection of all your Majesty's subjects be the solid supporters of your Throne.

The King's Answer, delivered to the Lord Mayor by the Earl of HERTFORD, Lord Chamberlain.

It is with the utmost astonishment that I find any of my subjects capable of encouraging the rebellious disposition which, unhappily, exists in some of my Colonies in North America.

Having entire confidence in the wisdom of my Parliament, the great Council of the Nation, I will steadily pursue those measures which they have recommended for the support of the constitutional rights of Great Britain, and the protection of the commercial interests of my Kingdoms.

THE LORD CHAMBERLAIN'S LETTER TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD MAYOR, THE DAY AFTER HIS PRESENTING TO HIS MAJESTY THE HUMBLE ADDRESS, ETC., OF THE COMMON-HALL.

MY LORD: The King has directed me to give notice that, for the future, his Majesty will not receive, on the Throne, any Address, Remonstrance and Petition, but from the Body Corporate of the City.

I, therefore, acquaint your Lordship with it, as Chief Magistrate of the City; and have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,
HERTFORD.

THE LORD MAYOR'S ANSWER TO LORD HERTFORD'S LETTER.
Mansion House, May 2d, 1775.

MY LORD: It is impossible for me to express, or conceal the extreme astonishment and grief I felt at the notice your Lordship's letter gave me, as Chief Magistrate of the City, "that, for the future, his Majesty will not receive, on the Throne, any Address, Remonstrance and Petition, but from the Body Corporate of the City."

I entreat your Lordship to lay me, with all humility, at the King's feet, and as I have now the honour to be Chief Magistrate, in my name to supplicate his Majesty's justice and goodness in behalf of the Livery of London, that he would be graciously pleased to revoke an order, highly injurious to their rights and privileges, which, in this instance, have been constantly respected and carefully preserved by all his royal predecessors. The Livery of London, my Lord, have approved themselves the zealous friends of liberty and the Protestant succession; they have steadily pursued only those measures which were calculated to secure the free Constitution of this country; and this, your Lordship well knows, has created them the hatred of all the partisans of the exiled and proscribed Family. They form the great and powerful body of the Corporation, in whom most important powers are vested, the election of the First Magistrate, the Sheriffs, the Chamberlain, the Auditors of the Receipt and Expenditure of their Revenues, and of the four Members, who represent, in Parliament, the Capital of this vast Empire. The full Body Corporate never assemble, nor could they legally act together as one great aggregate body: for, by the Constitution of the City, particular and distinct privileges are reserved to the various members of the Corporation, to the Freemen, to the Liverymen, to the Common Council, to the Court of Aldermen. His Majesty's Solicitor General, Mr. Wedderburn, was consulted by the City in the year 1771, respecting the legality of Common-Halls, and the Remonstrances of the Livery. In conjunction with Mr. Sergeant Glynn, Mr. Dunning, and Mr. Nugent, he gave an opinion, which I have the honour of transcribing from our record.

"We apprehend that the head Officer of every Corporation may convene the Body, or any class of it, whenever he thinks proper; that the Lord Mayor, for the time being, may, of his own authority, legally call a Common-Hall; and we see no legal objection to his calling the two last. We conceive it to be the duty of the proper officers of the several Companies, to whom precepts for the purpose of summoning their respective Liveries have been usually directed, to execute those precepts; and that a wilful refusal on their part, is an offence punishable by disfranchisement."

The City, my Lord, have been careful that all their proceedings should be grounded in the true principles of Law and the Constitution, notwithstanding it is the clear right of the subject to petition the King for the redress of grievances; a right which so many thousands of our fellow-subjects, my Lord, have justly thought it their duty, very frequently, to exercise in the last ten years; yet the City, from excess of caution, took a great legal opinion in the case, and I find the following words entered in their Journals by the express order of the Common-Hall:

"The Livery of London, legally assembled in Common-Hall, either on Midsummer, Michaelmas, or any other day, have an undoubted right to take into consideration any matter of publick grievance they may think proper. is beyond dispute that the right is inherent in them." A Jury have likewise declared this in a solemn verdict.

I have been thus particular, my Lord, on this subject from our records, because I differ in one point from the last opinion, which I quoted; for I know there is no right or privilege of this free people, or of mankind, but what has been disputed, and even denied, by pensioned pens and tongues in the service of the arbitrary Ministers of arbitrary Kings.

Your Lordship, I am sure, will now no longer suffer a doubt to remain in your mind as to the legality of Common-Halls, or of their extensive powers, and, therefore, I presume to lay claim, on behalf of the Livery of London, to the ancient privilege of presenting to the King, on the Throne, any Address, Petition, or Remonstrance. In this manner, have the Addresses of the Livery constantly been received, both by his present Majesty and all his royal predecessors, the Kings of England. On the most exact research, I do not find a single instance to the contrary. This immemorial usage, in the opinion of the ablest lawyers, gives an absolute right, and is as little subject to controversy, as any fair and just prerogative of the Crown.

Other rights and privileges of the City have been invaded by despotick Monarchs; by several of the accursed race of the Stuarts, but this, in no period of our history. It has not even been brought into question till the present inauspicious era. I have an entire confidence, my Lord, that a right left uninvaded by every tyrant of the Tarquin race, will be sacredly preserved under the Government of our present Sovereign, because his Majesty is perfectly informed, that, in consequence of their expulsion, his family was chosen to protect and defend the rights of a free people, whom they endeavoured to enslave.

It cannot escape your Lordship's recollection, that at all times when the privileges of the Capital were attacked, very fatal consequences ensued. The invasion of the liberties of the Nation, we have generally seen preceded by attempts on the franchises of the first City in the Kingdom, and the shock has spread from the centre to the most distant point of the circumference of this wide extended Empire. I hope his Majesty's goodness will revoke an order, which might, perhaps, in this light, be considered as ominous to the people at large, no less than injurious to the citizens of this Metropolis. Such a measure only could quiet the alarm, which has already spread too far, and given gloomy apprehensions of futurity.

The privilege, my Lord, for which I contend, is of very great moment, and peculiarly striking. When his Majesty receives, on the Throne, any Address, it is read by the proper officer to the King, in the presence of the Petitioners; they have the satisfaction of knowing that their Sovereign has heard their complaints; they receive an answer. If the same Address is presented at a levee, or in any other mode, no answer is given; a suspicion may arise, that the Address is never heard, or read, because it is only received, and immediately delivered to the Lord, in waiting. If he is tolerably versed in the supple, insinuating arts practised in the magick circle of a Court, he will take care never to remind his Prince of any disagreeable and disgusting, however important and wholesome, truths; he will strangle in its birth the fair offspring of Liberty, because its cries might awaken and alarm the parent, and thus the common father of all his people may remain equally ignorant and unhappy in his most weighty concerns.

Important truths, my Lord, were the foundation of the last humble Address, Remonstrance and Petition, to the King, respecting our brave fellow-subjects in America. The greatness, as well as goodness of the cause, and the horrors of an approaching civil war, justified our application to the Throne. It comprehended every thing interesting to us, as a free and commercial people, the first principles of our common liberty, and the immense advantages of the only trade we enjoy, unrivalled by other Nations. I greatly fear, that your Lordship's letter, immediately following his Majesty's unfavourable answer to the Remonstrance, will be considered as a fresh mark of the King's anger against our unhappy brethren, as well as of his displeasure against the faithful citizens of his Capital. The Livery, possessing the purest intentions, the most noble and exalted views for the publick good, will comfort themselves with the appeal to that justice in the Sovereign's heart, which cannot fail of soon restoring them to the royal favour; but the Americans may be driven to despair, unless a merciful Providence should graciously interpose, and change the obdurate hearts of those unjust and wicked Ministers, who have been so long permitted, by Divine vengeance, to be a scourge both to us and our brethren. The true friends of liberty, I am sure, will not be remiss in their duty. I doubt not, my Lord, from that love of your country, and zeal for his Majesty's glory, which have equally distinguished your Lordship, that the Livery of London will have your hearty concurrence with them, as well as your powerful intercession with the King for the revocation of the late order. Such a conduct will secure to your Lordship the esteem and affection of all good men, and add to the unfeigned respect, with which I have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient, humble servant,

JOHN WILKES.

To the Right Honourable, the Earl of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain of the King's Household.

AMERICAN ARCHIVES

EDITOR'S INDEX, Compiled by Peter Force

INDEX: VOL. I

Abingdon, Earl of , Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., 1687	Barclay, David , Agent for London American Merchants, attends House of Commons to examine Witnesses in support of their Petition, - - 1638
Ackland, William , Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition, 1607, '11	Barrington, Lord , Motion to fix Land Forces at 17,547 Men, 1479
Adam, William , Views on Address to the King, - 1559	Motion for Supplies for 1775, - - - 1596
Same on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition, 1606	Beauchamp, Lord , Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - - 119
Adams, John , Letter from Dr. Samuel Cooper, on arrival of Troops, 878	Same on Repeal of Tea Duty, - 164
Adams, Samuel , Letters to Arthur Lee, 238, 332, 1239	Motion and draft of Address to the King, - 1471
Letter from Richard H. Lee, 445	Speech on Supplies, - 1478-9, 1598
Letter to same, - 447	Views on Bill Restraining Trade with the Northern Colonies, - 1625
Letter to Dr Chaucey, 793	Beebe, Dr. , tarred and feathered, - - - 787
Agents of Colonies, in London --	Belfast, Ireland , Petition from Merchants and others, to the House of Commons, - 1631
William Bollan, for Massachusetts, - - 30	Birmingham , Merchants and Traders to Edmund Burke, 1221
Benjamin Franklin, for Pennsylvania, 1281	Petition from Town and Neighbourhood, 1524, '33
Arthur Lee, for Virginia, - 1281	Bollan, William , Agent (See Agents)
Edmund Burke, for New-York, - 1289	Appears before the House of Lords, - - 30
Letters to them, - - - 929, '38	Petition to the House of Commons, 35, 46, 79
Letter from them to Pennsylvania, -	Same to the House of Lords, - - - 60
Petition to be heard before the House of Commons, - 1524, '32	Letters to Committee of Council of Massachusetts Bay, - - 225, '7, '9, '30, '1
Allen, Ethan , and others, reward for them as Rioters, - - - 1323	Boston (See Letters)
Annapolis , Supplies from, to Boston, (Note,) 593	Committee of Correspondence, - 27
Appleton, Nathan , to Josiah Quincy, Jan, - 980	Destruction of Tea, -- 28, '9
Arms , Motion to take up, in Massachusetts, - - 1039	Port Bill, Parliamentary Proceedings, 35, 40
Shipped from England, - - - 1225	Passage and Act, 60, '1
Procured for Massachusetts, - - - 1365	Town Meeting, 331-2
General Supplies for same, - - - 1366-7-8	Address to Governoer Hutchinson - Protest of Merchants--Address of Lawyers, &c, 361-3
Warlike Stores for 15,000 Men in Massachusetts, - - - - 1367	Circular and Covenant against Importing, - 397
Army (See Parliament and Massachusetts Bay)	Merchants and others to Governour Gage, and his Answer, - 398-9
British, at Boston, brigaded, - 1068	Resolutions of June, 1774,-- - 423
6,000 Men and Officers, to be shipped, 1224	Letter, describing progress of feelings there and at Salem, 429
Motion to fix at 17,547 Men, 1479	Address, signed "An American," - - 434
Massachusetts Constitutional, Rules and Regulations, 1350	Letter published at, - - - 487
Same, Army to be raised, - - - 1359	Town Meeting, concerning Committee of Correspondence, 489
Association, Articles of , by Continental Congress, 913	Protest against the Committee, - - 490
Astley, Sir Edward , Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay,	Supplies to (See States, Counties, Towns)
Aubrey, Mr. , advocates presentation of Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, - 1821	Committee of, to Baltimore Committee, - 594
Austin, Nicholas , of New-Hampshire, gives satisfaction for procuring Artificers to erect Barracks at Boston, 974	Meeting concerning employment of the Poor, 637
Bailey, Mr. , Remarks on Petition of West India Planters, 1744	Committee of, to the Committee of New-Jersey, - 728
Baltimore , Supplies from to Boston, - - 593	Application of Donations from abroad, 743
Burré, Colonel , Speech on Address to the King, 36 1473, 1565	784, 1172
Speech on Boston Port Bill, - - 40, 46	Juries refuse to be sworn, reasons therefor, 747
Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 85	Anonymous publications at, - - 669
Speech on Administration of Justice in same, 113 120, '5	756, 1183, 1216, '60
Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - - - 165	Selectmen, interview with Governour Gage, on Obstructions at Boston Neck, 775
Speech on Quebec Bill, - 184, '7, 205	Committee of, to Israel Putnam, - - 784
Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1529	Elects Representatives to Assembly and Provincial Congress at Concord, - 798
Speech on Supplies for 1775, - - 1591, '96	Committee, to Mechanics, not to assist the Troops in building, &c, - - 802, '20
Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition, - - - 1607	Committee, to Mechanics in New-York, - 804
Supports the Quebec Petition, - 1838	Future intentions of Parliament respecting Town Meeting recommend an increase of Watchmen, - - - - 968

- Boston*, Town Meeting, on Answer of Gov. Gage to Peyton Randolph, President of Congress, 1077
 Committee of, to Philadelphia Committee, - 1100
 Same to New-York Committee, - 1106
 Provincial Congress Report, - 1357
 Poor families to be removed, - 1361
Brattle, General, Letter to General Gage, - 739
Brewton, Miles, Letter to Josiah Quincy, Jun., - 534
Bridgesport Manufacturers, Petition to the House of Commons, 1627
Bristol, Earl of, Speech on Petition from Quebec, 1829-31
Bristol, Petition from Merchants' Society, - 1519
 Petition from Merchants and others, - 1521
Brush, Mr., Speech against necessity of appointing Delegates to second Continental Congress, - 1290
Buckingham, Earl of, amendment to Bill Restraining Trade, &c., - 1688
 Views on New-York Memorial, - 1838
Bull, Alderman, on Bill Restraining Trade with the Southern Colonies, 1714
Bullet, Mr., Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - 165
 His Motion for Supplies, 1476, 1589
Burgoyne, General, Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, 164
 Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1619
Burke, Edmund, Motions and Speech on Address to the King, - - 33, '4
 Speech on Boston Port Bill, - - - 50
 Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - 90
 Speech on Administration of Justice in same, 121
 Speech on Repeal of Duty on Tea, - 135
 Speech on Quebec Bill, 187, 204, '5, '9
 Letter, imputed to him, - - - 337
 Speech at the Hustings, 16th October, 1774, 876
 Agent of New-York, - 1289
 Speech on Address to the King, 1474, 1547, '64
 Speech on Supplies, - - 1478, '86, '88
 Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1516
 Presents Petition of Merohants' Society of Bristol, - - 1519
 Speech on Petition of London Merchants, 1527-30
 Motion to inquire into the manner of procuring and signing Petitions, - - 1536
 Speech on Restraining Trade, &c, with the Northern Colonies, - - 1625, '55, '59
 Remarks on Questions to Witnesses, - - 1743
 Introduces his Resolutions for Conciliation with America, 22d March, 1775, - 1745-78
 Views on encouraging Fisheries of Great Britain and Ireland,
 Presents Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, 15th May, 1775, - 1819
Butler, Zebulon, Memorial to Assembly of Connecticut on disputed territory adjoining Pennsylvania, 859
Byng, Mr., Speech on Boston Port Bill, - - 44
 Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - 66, 88
 Speech on Administration of Justice therein, 119
 Speech on Quebec Bill, - - - 209
Camden, Lord, Speech on Address to the King, 1467
 1571-3, '84
 Same on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall the Troops from America, - - 1501
 Same on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, - 1510
 Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c, 1663
 1675, '86
 Presents Petition from Quebec against late Act, 1823, '34
 Views on New-York Memorial, - - 1839
Camybell, Lord Frederick, opposes Mr.. Burke's Resolutions, 1776-7
Campbell, Lord William, on Mr.. Hartley's Proposition for Conciliation, 1792
Canada, Boundary, 204, '7
 Montreal Committee, against late Act of Parliament, - 891
 Address to, by Continental Congress, 934
Canada, Massachusetts Committee of Correspondence, 999
 Letter from Montreal, 1164
Carleton, General, examined in the House of Commons on the Quebec Bill, - 189
 Arrives at Quebec, as Governour, - - 791
 Address to him by Clergy and Quebec City, 791
Carlisle, Earl of, Speech on Restraining Trade of Northern Colonies, - 1673
Carmarthen, Marquis of, on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - - - 87
 Same on Administration of Justice there, 117
 Same on Address to the King, - - 1473
Canterbury, Archbishop of, on Petition from Quebec, - 1831
Cavendish, Lord John, Speech on Quebec Bill, - 184
 Same on Address to the King, - 1472
 Same on Supplies, 1478-9, 1591
 Same on Petition of London Merchants, - 1517
 Same on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King, 1549
 Supports Mr. Burke's Resolutions, - - 1776
Chatham, Lord, Speech on Quartering Troops in America, 167
 Speech on Quebec Bill, - - - 211
 His opinion of Proceedings of Continental Congress, 1058, '67, '85
 Thanks to him from London Common Council, and his Answer, - - 1233
 Speech and Motion for an Address to his Majesty to Recall Troops from America, 1498
 His Provisional Bill, and Speeches thereon, 1503-14
Chauncy, Dr., from Samuel Adams, - - 793
Chauncy, Charles, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., - 958
Clare, Lord, Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, 165
 Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1517
 Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c, - 1659
Clerke, Sir J. P., Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1617
Clymer, George, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., - - 406
Colden, Lieutenant Governour (See New-York)
Committees of Correspondence (See States, Counties, Towns, passim) Commons, House of, (See Parliament)
Concord, Provincial Congress meet there 22d of March, 1775, 1343
 Warlike Stores and Supplies there, 1365-70
Congress, Continental--
 Recommended, - - - 416 '21, '6
 Meets at Phadelphia, 5th September, 1774, 893
 Credentials produced--Rules established--
 Mr. Duché, Chaplain--Peyton Randolph, President--Charles Thomson, Secretary
 --Committees appointed, 899
 Dinner to Delegates, (Note) 900
 Suffolk Resolutions, 901
 Resolution on Non-Importation, - - 905
 Mr. Galloway's Plan for a union between Great Britain and the Colonies, 905
 Resolution of Non-Exportation, - 906
 Address to his Majesty to be prepared, 906
 Boston Committee of Correspondence, 907
 Resolutions thereon, 908
 Letter to Governour Gage, and Resolution advising people of Boston and Massachusetts to conduct themselves peaceably, - 909
 939, 1077
 Memorial to the People to be prepared, - 910
 Address to the People of Great Britain, do, 910
 Resolution on Rights and Grievances of the Colonies, - - 910
 Plan of Association adopted and signed 20th October, 1774, 913
 Address to the People of Great Britain, 917
 Memorial to the People of the Colonies, - 922
 Resolution against Transportation for Trial, 928
 Recommend a new Congress for 10th May next, - 928 Letter to the Colonies of St. Johns, &c., - 929

- Congress, Continental--*
 Letter to the Agents of Colonies in London, 929
 Address to Inhabitants of Quebeck, -- 930
 Address to the King, - - 934, 1083
 Estimate of Population, (Note) - - 936
 Agents to whom the Address to the King were to be sent, (Note) - - 938
 Answer of Governour Gage, (received after Congress adjourned,) - - 939, 1077
Congress, General, proposed by Rhode-Island, June 15, 1774, 416
 Proposed by Pennsylvania, June 18, 1774, 426
 Proposed by Massachusetts, June 17, 1774, 421
Connecticut, Governour of, to Governour of Pennsylvania, on Boundaries, - - 261
 Further Proceedings in Pennsylvania, 604, 1177
 Farmington Proceedings, May, 1774, - 336
 Resolutions of House of Representatives, 1774, - 355
 Joseph Johnson, a Mohegan Chief, petitions to remove his Tribe to Oneida, 386
 Norwich Resolutions, 390
 Essex Resolutions, 391
 Letter from Congregational Ministers to the Clergymen in Boston, and the Answer, 442-3
 Windsor Town Proceedings, - 445
 Delegates to Continental Congress appointed, - 554
 Silas Deane asks Governour Trumbull for certain Records and Documents, and complains of the neglect and destruction of the Publick Records - - 710
 Roy Samuel Peters, how treated by "Sons of Liberty," - 711
 Matthew Griswold to Governour Trumbull, on proceedings of certain citizens of Connecticut at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, 724
 Colonel Willard, member of new Council, his treatment, - 731
 New Council, (Note.) - - 731
 Court at Hartford resolve not to exercise any authority under the Act to regulate Massachusetts, - 747
 "Juba," to the General Congress, 754
 Dr. Beebe tarred and feathered, 787
 Army of Observation suggested, - - 787
 Resolutions of Delegates of several Towns, 788
 Stamford Meeting and Resolves, 827
 The Delegates in Congress, to Governour, - 854
 Assembly meets---Resolutions--Memorial of Zebulon Butler, on territory claimed by Pennsylvania, - - 858
 Ebenezer Hazard's Memorial on the Lands West of Pennsylvania, part whereof is known as the Connecticut Western Reserve," 861-7
 Silas Deane to Gov. Trumbull, on Congress, 888
 Danbury Town Meeting, 1038, 1215
 Fairfield Proceedings, - - 1075, 1236, '58
 Joseph Trumbull to the Governour, about Ammunition, 1077
 Gunpowder and Lead purchased, - 1139, '77
 Condition of Militia and Munitions of War, 1173
 Ridgefield Resolutions, 1202, '10, '36
 Newtown Resolutions, - - 1215
 Wethersfield Proceedings, - 1236
 Ridgebury "Liberty Men," - - 1238
 Reading Association and Proceedings of Committee, 1258
 Litchfield County Proceedings, - - 1270
 Committee from Massachusetts, on raising an Army, 1359
Connolly, Mr., his views on encouraging Fisheries of Ireland, 1807
Connolly, Captain, on Indian Affairs, - 465-485
 Letter to Col. George Washington, - - 1222
Cortway, General, Speech on Address to Kings 35
 Speech on Boston Port Bill, 45
Conway, General, Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 72, 89
 Speech on Administration of Justice there, - 117
 Speech on Restraining Trade, &c, of Southern Colonies, 1715
Cooper, Mr., Grey, Speech on Boston Port Bill, - 51
Cooper, Samuel, to John Adams--Arrival of Troops, 878
Cornwall, Mr., Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, 122
 Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - - 134
 Speech on Supplies for 1775, 1478, '88, 1591
 Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition, 1607
 Opposes Mr. Burke's Resolutions, - - 1776
 Opposed to presentation of Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, - - 1821
Copper Currency, created for Virginia, - 982
Court, Supreme, of Massachusetts, Salaries by the King, - 27
 Proceedings thereon by House of Representatives, 31
Coxe, Mr., Views on Motion for Supplies of 1775, 1596
Croghan, George, Correspondence on Indian Affairs, 465
Cruger., Mr., Speech on Supplies for 1775, - 1482
 Presents Petition from Bristol, - - 1521
 Speech on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King, - 1544
 Speech on Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, - - - 1820
Cushing, Thomas, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., - 1080
 To Arthur Lee, 1208
Dartmouth, Earl of, Letter to Governour Gage, 380
 Letter to Lieut Governour Penn, - 519
 Letters to Lieutenant Governour Colden, 519
 953, 1035
 Circulars to Governours, 881, 953, 1034, '85
 Rumour of his Retiring, - - - 1059, '68
 Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, 1504
 Lays certain Papers from America before the House of Lords, - - - 1489, 1569
 Speech on Address to his Majesty, - - 1584
 Motion and Views on Bill Restraining Trade, 1670
 Motion to reject Bill to repeal Act for Government of Quebeck, - - - 1826
 Objects to New-York Memorial, - - 1837
Davis, George, examined on North American Fisheries, 1669
Dean, Silas, asks for certain Records from the Governour of Connecticut, and complains of neglect, 710
 Letter to Governour Trumbull, - - 888
D'Bernicre, Ensign, Narrative of a Reconnaissance of part of Massachusetts, 1263
De Grey, Mr., Views on Quebeck Petition, - 1836
Delaware--
 Meeting called at New-Castle, June, 1774, 419
 Speech at Lewistown, at General Meeting, July, 1774, 658
 Convention at New-Castle---appoint Delegates to General Continental Congress, and their Instructions, - - 663-8
 New-Castle Resolutions---Militia Enrolled, 1022
 Motion of Lord North to include Delaware in the Bill Restraining the Trade, &ce, of Southern Colonies, 1708
Dempster, Mr., Speech on Boston Port Bill, - 44
 Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, 194
 Speech on Quebeck Bill, - 184
Denbigh, Earl of, Speech on right to the Flout, - 1571
 Speech on Address to his Majesty, - 1572
 Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c, - 1674
 Speech on New-York Memorial, - - 1839
Desertion and Mutiny, Act to Punish, 1793-5
Dickinson, John, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., 434, 947
 His Draught of Argument in Convention for the Assembly of Pennsylvania, 557-93
 Letters to Arthur Lee, - - 726, 947
Dowdeswell, Mr., Speech on Boston Port Bill 39, 49

Dowdeswell, Mr. , Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, -	69, 79
Speech on Administration of Justice there,	117, '20
Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, -	- 166
Drayton, Hon. William Henry , Charge to Grand Jury,	959
Presentments and Address thereon, -	961-2
Duché, Rev. , Chaplain to first Contineatal Congress,	899
Dudley , Petition of Merchants and others to House of Commons, -	1523
Dudley, Viscount , on Bill Restraining Trade, &c, of Northern Colonies,	1675
Dulany, Daniel, Jun. , to Arthur Lee, -	- 354
Dundas, Mr. , Solicitor General of Scotland, Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition,	1607
Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c.,	1654, '60
Dunning, Mr. , Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, -	- 83
Speech on Administration of Justice there,	121
Speech on Quebec Bill, -	182, 208
Speech on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King, -	1542
Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution,	1610
Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., with Northern Colonies,	1623
Duntze Sir John , on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., of Southern Colonies, -	1715
Edmiston, Rev. William , Proceedings against him by Committee of Baltimore County, -	1146
Effingham, Earl of , Speech on Amendment to the Bill Restraining Trade &c., -	- 1689
Speech on New-York Memorial, -	- 1840
Tenders his Resignation in the Army, -	- 1841
Elliot, Sir Gilbert , Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, -	- 77
Speech on Petition of London Merchants,	1516
Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition,	1607
Ellis, John , examined in the House of Commons on Petition of West India Planters, -	- 1731
Ellis, Mr. Welbore , Speech on Boston Port Bill, -	- 50
Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay,	71
Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition,	1606
Exports , in 1772-3, from England to America, -	1533
	1547, 1749
For many Years---ordered, -	- 1589
From Scotland to American Colonies, &c.,	1627
	1629, '50-1, '99
Fasting and Prayer , recommended in Virginia, -	350
Recommended in Massachusetts, -	1363
Fisheries , of North America, Witnesses examined in House of Commons,-	- 1638
Of Newfoundland, Prohibited by Act of Parliament, -	- 1691
Of Scotland, Whale, -	- 1661
Of Great Britain and Ireland, Encouraged,	1805
	1809, '12
Flax-seed , Bounty on Importing into Ireland, -	1809
Florida, East and West , Proclamation erecting the Government thereof in 1763, -	172
Estimates for Civil Establishment, -	1709
Fox, Charles J. , Speech on Boston Port Bill, 45, '8
Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay,	77, 90
Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, -	- 164
Speech on Quebec Bill, -	184, 211
Speech on Address to the King, -	- 1473
Speech on Supplies for 1775,	1482, 1591
Speech on Petition of London Merchants,	1517
	1529-30
Speech on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King, -	1543
Speech on Lord North's Motion to Postpone Consideration of American Papers, -	1568
Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition,	1605
Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c.,	1653-9

Fox, Charles J. , Speech on Call for Papers, -	1669
Supports Mr. Burke's Resolutions, -	1776
Supports Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, -	- 1822
Supports Quebec Petition, -	- 1837
Fox, Stephen , Speech on Regulating Massachusetts Bay, -	67, 87
Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, -	- 134
Franklin, Benjamin (Vide Agents)
Letter to Thos. Cushing, Speaker, on Boston Port Bill, -	- 235
Fuller, Mr. Rose , Speech on Boston Port Bill, 41, '5
Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, -	71
Speech on Administmtion of Justice there,	126
Speech on Supplies for 1775, -	1479, '86
Gage, Governour , arrives at Boston, 13th May, 1774, (Note,) -	- 331
Letters to Earl of Dartmouth (See Massachusetts)
Letter to Governour Trumbull,	344
Address to General Court, -	- 346
Answer to a Letter from Continental Congress,	939, 1077
Letter to him from Williamsburg, -	- 945
Orders Reconnoissance of part of Massachusetts,	- 1263
Galloway, Joseph , his Plan for, a union between Great Britain and the Colonies, -	- 905
Gascoigne, Mr. , Speech on Boston Port Bill,	43
Georgia , Proclamation concerning, in 1763, -	173
Meeting of Inhabitants, called on state of Boston, &c., -	- 549
Governour Sir James Wright to the Earl of Dartmouth on Proceedings in Georgia and Carolina, -	- 633, 708, '31, 867, 1040
General Meeting at Savannah, -	- 638
Governour Wright's Proclamation disapproving of Savannah Meeting, -	- 690
Resolutions of Meeting at Savannah, -	700
Committee to receive Subscriptions for Poor of Boston,	701
Letter from St John's Parls--approve of General Congress--200 barrels Rice subscribed for Boston, -	766
Proclamation of Governour Wright on Survey, Sale and Apportionment of Publick Lands, -	- 889
Proclamation of Peace and Intercourse with Creek Indians, -	- 1137, '53
Governour Wright's Speech to General Assembly, and their Answer, -	- 1152
Declaration of Rights and Association, -	1156
Extract of a Letter from, to New-York, -	1160
St John's Parish Proceedings, -	- 1161
Provincial Congress,	1162
Resolutions at Charlestown, South Carolina,	1163
Darien Resolutions,	1135
Proclamation of Governour concerning supposed Murder of a British Seaman, -	1253
Estimates of Civil List, -	- 1710
Germain, Lord George , Speech on Address to the King,	34
Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay,	67, 89
Speech on Petition of London Merchants	- 1530
German Officers sail for America, (Note,) -	- 1340
Gilbert, Colonel , denounced by Massachusetts, -	1356
Goddard, William , proposes to establish Post Offices,	500
Gordon, Mr. Cosmo , Speech on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King. -	- 1543
Glasgow , Petition from Merchants and Traders, -	1622
Glover, Mr. , Agent and Manager of Evidence before House of Commons on West India Trade,	1720, '33
Glynn, Mr. Serjeant , Speech on Quebec Bill, 184, 208
Proposed as a Candidate for Parliament from Middlesex, in conjunction with Mr. John Wilkes--their Sentiments, -	- 805-6
Gower, Earl , Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops from America, -	1502

Gower, Earl , Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, - - 1509, '11	" Independence on Great Britain ," Letter from Hartford to New-York,	1139
Speech on Point of Order--Right to the Floor,	Indians and Indian Affairs --The King's Proclamation of Protection, 1763,	174
Speech on Address to the King, -	Publication at Philadelphia, May, 1774,-	345
Speech on Quebeck Petition, -	Letter concerning them at and near Fort Pitt, -	363
Speech on New-York Memorial, - -	Disturbances in Virginia, -	373
Grafton, Duke of , Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill,	394, 405, '45, 536, 707, '22, '37, '87,	808
Speech on Address to the King, -	1013, 1226
Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., -	Joseph Johnson, a Mohegan Chief, petitions Connecticut about removal of his Tribe to Oneida, - - -	386
Granby, Marquis of , on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c.,	Same preaches at New-York, - - -	387
Grant, Colonel , on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King,	Letter from Fort Pitt concerning Captain Connolly, &c., - -	429, '49
Grants in New-Hampshire , Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Colden,	Letter from Cumberland, Maryland, concerning Colonel Cresap, -	435
Grenada , Proclamation of Government thereof, 1763,	Letter from Charlestown, South Carolina, respecting the Creeks and Cherokees,	451
Grenville, Mr. , on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King,	Letter from Captain Connolly respecting Shawanese and others, -	454, 1222
Grey, Mr , Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay,	Correspondence of Alexander McKee,	463-4
Griffin, Sir John Griffin , on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c.,	Proceedings of Pennsylvania Council,	454, 545
Griswold, Matthew , to Governour Trumbull, on the Proceedings at Great Barrington, - -	General Correspondence, Virginia and Pennsylvania, -	454-485
Gunpowder , Manufactory begun in Pennsylvania, -	Æneas Mackay to Governour Penn, -	471
- Premium offered in Virginia, - -	Letter from Carlisle respecting Connolly and Cresap,	506
Haldimand, General , to Earl of Dartmouth, on Disturbances at Boston, -	Congress of the Six Nations at Johnson Hall, New-York,	550
Hancock, John , Governour Gage withdraws his Commission as Colonel, -	Proceedings in Assembly of Pennsylvania	602
President of Provincial Congress of Massachusetts, - -	605, '9, 1278
Hanna's Town, Penn , Proceedings at, - -	Disturbances in Pennsylvania, -	737, 1013
Harris, Mr. , Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay,	Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Dunmore,	774
Hartley, Mr. , Views on Address to the King,	Council held by Lord Dunmore, -	871, '6
Views on Supplies, - 1479, '84-5,	Cherokee Chief executed for murder, on demand of South Carolina, -	974
Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution,	Proclamation of South Carolina concerning Indian Intercourse,	975
Motion and Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c, - - 1657,	Lord Dunmore's War, - -	1014-20
1702, '12	Logan's Speech to Lord Dunmore, -	1020
Calls for Letter from Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour Colden, -	Fight between Creeks and Chotaws, near Mobile, -	1099
His Propositions for Conciliation, -	Proclamation by Georgia--Peace and Intercourse with Creeks, -	1137, '53
On Ways and Means for Supplies, -	Proclamation of Virginia for their Protection,	1169
Harvey, Capt. , Speech on Lord North's Address to the King,	Stockbridge Indians in Massachusetts enlisted as Minute Men, - - -	1347
Hayley, Alderman , Motion on Petition of London Merchants,	Mohawk Indians, Address to them from Massachusetts,	1349
Presents second Petition from same, -	Ireland, Belfast , Petition from Merchants and others,	1631
Hazard, Ebenezer , Memorial to Connecticut concerning Lands West of Pennsylvania, -	Rosen's Proclamation under James the Second, against Londonderry, -	1672
Herbert, Mr. , Speech on Boston Port Bill, -	Waterford, Petition on Restraining Trade, &c, -	1693
Hey, Chief Justice , examined in House of Commons on Quebeck Bill,	Bill to encourage Fisheries, - -	1805
Higginson, Stephen , examined before the House of Commons on American Fisheries, &c, -	Export of Clothing and Provisions therefrom	1809
Hillsborough, Earl of , Motion and Draft of Address to the King,	Bounty on Flax-Seed, Imported	1809
Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill,	Irnham, Lord , Speech on Address to the King	1556
Views on New-York Memorial, -	Jamaica , Memorial of Assembly to the King's Council,	1072
Hotham, Mr. , Speech on Petition of London Merchants,	Products and Property, in 1767, (Note.)	1074
Supports Mr. Burke's Resolutions, -	Petition and Memorial to House of Commons, -	1743
House of Commons (See Parliament)	Jefferson, Thomas , Draft of certain Resolutions, -	690
Howe, Lord , Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c.,	Jenkins, Seth , examined in both Houses of Parliament on North American Fisheries, &c.,	1650, '63
Howard, Mr. , Speech on Quebeck Petition, -	Jenkinson, Mr. , Speech on Boston Port Bill,	44
Huddersfield , Petition in favour of the power and conduct of Parliament, - -	Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, -	73
Hutchinson, Governour of Massachusetts , Address of Episcopal Churches,	Same on Quebeck Bill, - - -	206
Writes from London to pay for the Tea destroyed,	Views on Petition of London Merchants,	1527
Imports and Exports , England and America, 1772, and 1773, -	Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Proposition,	1606
For many Years, ordered, 1589, 1629, '50-1	Opposes Mr. Burke's Resolutions, -	1776
Scotland, &c., 1699	Opposes presentation of Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, -	1821
" Independence on Great Britain ," Letters from London to New-York, -		1035, '37

- Johnson, Joseph*, a Mohegan Indian, petitions Connecticut for removal of his Tribe to Oneida, 386
 Preached in New-York, - - - 387
- Johnson, Dr.*, "Taxation no Tyranny," supposed to be written by, - 1331
 Answer to the above, 1449
- Johnson, Sir William*, his death announced to the Council of Pennsylvania, - 645
- Johnstone, Governour*, Speech on Boston Port Bill, 53
 Remarks on his Speech (Note,) - 56
 Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 73
 Speech on Address to the King, - - 1473
 Speech on Supplies for 1775, - 1480, 1590
 Speech on Petition of Bristol Merchants' Society, - - 1520
 Speech on Lord North's Address to the King, - - 1559
 Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1622
 Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade with Northern Colonies, - 1623
 Speech on Ways and Means for Supplies, 1816
 Supports Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, - - - 1822
- Jolliffe, Mr.*, his views on Address to the King, 1556
 "Juba," a Paper addressed to the General Congress, 754
- Juries*, in Boston, refuse to be sworne, 747
 Grand Jury in South Carolina presents as a grievance the claim of England to Tax the Colonies, 961-2
 Essex County, New-Jersey, Grand Jury to Chief Justice Smyth, - 967
- King of Great Britain*, his Message to House of Lords, on Disturbances in Boston, - 5
 Same to House of Commons, - 32
 Proclamation creating Copper Currency for Virginia, - - - 982
 His Answer to both Houses, 10th February, 1775, - - 1569
 Speech to both Houses, 26th May, 1775, - 1842
 Petitions to him by Mayor, Aldermen, &c., and also by Merchants of London--Answer and Proceedings thereon, 1850-56
- Kirkland, Rev. Mr.*, Letter to him from Massachusetts Assembly, concerning Mohawk and other Indians, - - - 1349
- Ladies*, Association of, in North Carolina, - 1349
- Lands* granted to Officers and Soldiers in French War, 1763, - - - 173
- Lane, John*, examined before House of Commons on the American Fisheries--Credit of Merchants, &c., 1648
- Lee, Richard*, President of Maryland Council, to Governour Penn, - - - 546 Letter from Governour Penn, - 739
- Lee, Charles, General*, Letter to the Duke of _____ Military Preparations attributed to him in England, - - - 1066
- Lee, Richard Henry*, to Samuel Adams, 445
 From Colonel Adam Stephen, 1209, '44
- Lee, Arthur* (Vide Agents)
 Letters to R. H. Lee, - 228, 1040, '58, '68
 Letter to Francis L. Lee, - 237
 Letter from Daniel Dulany, Jun., - 354
 Letters from John Dickinson, - 726, 947
 Letter from Thomas Cushing, - 1208
 Letters from Samuel Adams, 238, 332, 1239
 Letter from Joseph Warren, - 1252
 Agent from Virginia, - - - 1289
- Leeds*, Petition from the Borough to House of Commons, - 1537
 Petition from Merchants, - - 1538
- Letters*, Copies and Extracts from, the names of the writers being omitted, originally, but which appeared in the publick prints under their present form --
 To the Colonies in 1774, - - - 348
 From Boston to Philadelphia, - 380, 1216
- Letters*, From Philadelphia to New-York, - - 386
 1180, 1215, '33, '70
 From Philadelphia to Boston, - 388
 To P. P., on Repeal of Stamp Act, - 395
 From Norwich, England, to New-York, on conduct of Lord North, - - - 404
 From Charlestown, South Carolina, to New-York and Philadelphia, - - 408
 From a Gentleman in England, 436, '93, '98, 614
 Front New-York to Boston, - 505, 1191, 1203
 From London, - 230
 240, '41, '48, '89, 506, '13, 628, '41, '61, '62
 668, 701, '08, '71, 815, '29, 1025, '35, '52, '65
 1067, '83, '85, 1101, '03, 1202, '10, '14, '28
 1225, '34
 From a Gentleman in Virginia, with subscriptions for Boston, 517
 From Boston to New-York, - - 344
 646, 1039, 1178, 1248
 From a Member of Parliament to Colonel Charles Lee, 769
 From Georgia to a Gentleman in New-York, 773
 1160
 From Maryland to London, - - 809
 From Montreal to New-York, - 853, 1164
 To Peyton Randolph, late President of Congress, and divers Letters referred to in Note, 939
 From an Officer in camp, at Boston, to his friend in Edinburgh, - - - 957, 1068
 From Williamsburg to Governour Gage, - 945
 From Charles Lee to the Duke of _____ -- 949
 From a Gentleman at Bladensburg, Maryland, to his brother in Glasgow, - - 953
 From a Gentleman in New-York to his correspondent in London, - - 969
 From a Gentleman in Amsterdam to his correspondent in Philadelphia, - - 979
 From an Officer at Boston to his friend in London, 991, 1049
 From Georgia to Philadelphia, - - 1033
 From Boston to New-York--Motion to take up Arms, in the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts, - 1039
 From a Gentleman in Philadelphia to a Member of Parliament, 1066-7
 From King's County, New-York, to Mr. Rivington, Printer, - - 1076
 From Yorkshire to New-York, - - 1080
 From a Gentleman in Connecticut to his friend in Newport, 1133
 From Hartford, Connecticut, to New-York, speaking of "Independence," - 1139
 From Bristol to New-York, - - 1139
 From a Gentleman in Massachusetts to his friend in London, - - - 1167, 1227
 From a Gentleman in Baltimore to his friend in New-York, - - - 1190
 From a Merchant, in Annapolis, to Philadelphia, 1194, 1208
 From Philadelphia to Mr. James Rivington, Printer, - - 1211, '31, '70
 From Connecticut to the same, - 1227
 From Kent, in Delaware, - - 1230
 Considerations respecting the Measures of England, - - 1369
 Taxation no Tyranny, - 1431
 Answer to the above, - - 1449
 From an old English Merchant to Lord Sandwich, 1681
- Lewis, Mr.*, Views on Petition of London Merchants, 1527
- Liverpool*, Petition from Merchants, &c, to House of Commons, - - 1531
- Lister, Benjamin*, examined before Parliament on Fisheries, &c, 1652-68
- Logan*, a Shawanese Chief, Speech to Lord Dunmore, 1020
- London*, Petition from Merchants on Quebeck Bill, 186
 Petition from Lord Mayor, &c, on same, 194, 214

- London*, Meeting of the Livery at Guildhall, and candidates for Parliament, - 817
- West India Merchants meet, - - 1082, 1147
- Merchants, and others, concerned in American Commerce, Proceedins and Documents, - - 1086-'91, 1107, 1219
- Society of the Supporters of the Bill of Rights, - - 1145
- Samuel Clay Harvey's Address to Lord North, 1204
- Thanks of Common Council to Lord Chat-ham, and his Answer, - - - 1233
- Resolutions of Common Council, - - 1252
- Merchants' Petition to House of Commons, 1513
- Second Petition to same, - 1525
- Petitions laid on the table, - - - 1587
- Petition against Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., 1633-5 1661
- Petition of Merchants, &c, to the King on his Throne, 1850
- Petition of Mayor, Aldermen, &c, to same, 1852
- King's Answer to above-Lord Chamberlain's Letter to the Lord Mayor, John Wilkes, and his Reply, - 1852-56
- Lords*, House of (See Parliament)
- Lotbiniere*, M De, examined in House of Commons on Quebec Rill, - - - - 195
- Louisbourg*, Lord Sandwich refers to the conduct of the Americans there, and is answered by "An old English Merchant," 1681
- Lovell*, James, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., - - 948
- Lownes*, Joseph, declines acting on Committee for County of Philadelphia, (Note,) - - - 1011
- Lumley*, Lord, Views on Lord North's Address to the King, 1549
- Luttrell*, John, Speech on Restraining Trades &c, of Southern Colonies, 1705
- Luttrell*, Mr. Temple, Speech on Supplies for the Year 1775, 1477, 1592
- Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1517
- Speech on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King, - 1544
- Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1613
- Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c, of Southern Colonies, - 1704, '6
- Lyttelton*, Lord, Speech on Quebec Hill, - 212
- Speech on Address to the King, - 1466
- 1576, '78, '84
- Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to recall the Troops, &c., 1500
- Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, 1507
- Speech on Petition from Quebec, - 1827, '30
- Mackworth*, Mr. Motion on Quebec Bill, - 207
- Views on Lord North's Address to the King, 1565
- Mackay*, Æneas, to Governour Penn, on Indian Affairs. 471
- Macartney*, Sir George, Speech on Address to the King, - - - - 1473
- Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1517
- M'Dougall*, Mr., declines nomination to Congress, (Note,) 315
- M'Kee*, Alexander, Correspondence on Indian Affairs, - - 463-4
- Malcolm*, John, seized by the people of Boston,- 31
- Manchester*, Duke of, Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, 1513
- Speech on Address to the King, - - 1584
- Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., 1673-4 1688
- Speech on Petition from Quebec, - - 1829
- Manchester*, Petition from Merchants, and others, 1530
- Mansfield*, Lord, Remarks on Point of Order, Right to the Floor, - - - - 1570
- Speech on Address to the King, - - 1572
- 1575, '77, '79, '84
- Remarks on Petition from Quebec, - - 1834
- Remarks on New-York Memorial, - 1840
- Manufactures*, Tools used in England not to be Exported, 220
- Manufactures*, Plan for an American Manufactory, 1956
- Paper Manufacture enooumged in Massachu- setts, - 1334
- Saltpetre, - 1334
- Fire-Arms, 1341
- Marriott*, Doctor, Examined in House of Commons, on Quebec Bill, - - - - 195
- Martin*, Colonel Samuel, Letter from him, - 639
- Martin*, Governour, of South Carolina, discourages Publick Meetings, &c., 706
- Marblehead*, Proceedings to carry out the plans of the Continental Congress, &c., 969
- Maryland*--
- Meeting and Resolutions of Chester Town, 334
- Meeting and Resolutions of Talbot Court House, 347
- Meeting and Resolutions of Annapolis, 352, '4
- Meeting and Resolutions of Queen Anne, 366
- Meeting and Resolutions of Baltimore Coun- ty, 366, 1142, '46
- Meeting and Resolutions of Kent County, - 379
- Meeting and Resolutions of Harford County, 402
- Meeting and Resolutions of Anne Arunndel, 384
- 972, 1061, 1140
- Meeting and Resolutions of Frederick Coun- ty, 403, '33, 704, 1173
- Meeting and Resolutions of Charles County, 409
- 703, 1081, 1168
- Meeting and Resolutions of Caroline, recom- mend a Congress, 426
- Convention at Annapolis, 22d June, 1774, 438
- William Goddard proposes to establish Post Offices, 500
- Richard Lee, President of Council, to Gov- ernour Penn, 546
- Supplies sent to Boston, 593
- Charles County Committee--Proceedings concerning certain Teas on board Brigan- tine Mary and Jane, 703
- Frederick County Committee, on same, 704
- Boundary Line with Pennsylvania, 455
- 546, 737, '89
- Teas, and Vessel bringing it, burned by the owners, at Annapolis, - - - 885, 1061
- Proclamation of Governour Eden, - - 972
- Committee of Observation for Baltimore County, 975
- Committee of Observation for Calvert Coun- ty, 982
- Committee of Observation for Charles Coun- ty, 985
- Committee of Observation for Frederick County, 986
- Convention approve Proceedings of Conti- nental Congress, - - - 999
- Magistrates in Frederick County--Address to Delegates in Congress, 992
- Grand Jury, to same - - - - 993
- Tea destroyed at Elizabethtown, (now Ha- gerstown,) - - - 1009
- Prince George Committee, 1011, '55, 1141
- Convention at Annapolis, 8th December, 1774, Delegates to Continental Congress, Instructions, 1031
- St. Mary's County Committee, - - 1059
- Governour Eden to Earl of Dartmouth, - 1076
- Militia, organizing, - - - 1081
- Merchant, in Annapolis, to his friend in Philadelphia, 1194
- Papers from, not presented to the House of Commons, 1513
- Massachusetts Bay*--
- Committee in House of Lords, 10
- Report of same, 12-31
- Proceedings in House of Representatives on Justices' Salaries, 31
- Bill better Regulating the Government of, - 65
- Passed Parliament 91, '6
- Copy of the Act, 104
- Reasons of Dissentient Lords, 93, '5

Massachusetts	Bay--		Massachusetts	Bay--
Bill for Impartial Administration of Justice in,		111	General Court convened in 1774, -		357
Copy of the Act,		129	Governour Gage's Proclamation against their
Letter from Benj. Franklin to Mr. Speaker			Proceedings,		973
Cushing, on Boston Port Bill, -		235	York County Congress Proceeding, -		983
Marblehead Address to Governour, -		358, '60	Provincial Congress, 23d November, 1774,
Middlesex to Governour Hutchinson, -		364	at Salem--Bayonets procured--Thanks to
Governour Gage to Earl of Dartmouth, 333, '68			the other Colonies--Delegates to Conti-
450, 514, 615, '38, 741, '67, '69, '95, 804, '14			ental Congress--its Proceedings approv-
880, 950, '81, 1046, '69, 1244, 1634, '98, 1708			ed of--Committee to correspond with
House of Representatives' Answer to Gov-			Canada--Address to the Clergy--Census
ernour Gage,		400	ordered--Manufactures recommended--
Council's Address to same, -		400	Military Tactics proposed--Address to
Merchants and others, of Salem, to same, 401, '24			Inhabitants--Militia Returns to be made,
House of Representatives, 17th June, 1774,					993-1008 recommend a meeting of Delegates from			Motion in Provincial Congress "to take up all the Colonies at Philadelphia, in Sep-			Arms against the King's Troops," 10th
tember, 1774, and appoint Delegates, -		421	December, 1774,		1089
£500 voted to pay expenses of Delegates, -		422	Salem, a publication at, speaks of "United Resolutions concerning Boston and Charles-			Colonies,"		1053 town, and recommend non-consumption			Barnstable Proceedings,		1092
of Teas, &c.,		422	Marshfield Proceedings, -		1177-8, 1249
Worcester Justices, to Governour Gage, -		444	Worcester Convention,		1192
Governour Gage's Proclamation against Bos-			Plymouth Selectmen to Governour Gage,		1218 ton Committee of Correspondence,		491	The Colony and her abettors declared in Plymouth Justices to Governour Gage, and			Rebellion, 10th February, 1775,		1223-5
his Answer, -		515	Address to the Provincial Congress, -		1260
Governour's Proclamation of Pardon to De-			Reconnoissance of part of the Colony order-
serters, -		555	ed by Governour Gage,		1263
Suffolk Justices to Governour Gage, and his			King's Troops march from Marblehead to
Answer, -		613	Salem, and return--proceedings at Salem,		1268
Eastou, Bristol County, Freeholders, &c.,			Provincial Congress at Cambridge, Februato same,		613	ry, 1775--John Hancock, President--
Proclamation of the Governour for Encour-			Delegates to Continental Congress--Res-agement of Piety, &c., -		625	solves against assisting King's Troops--
Governour Gage to Governour Trumbull, of			Committee of Safety--General Officers--
Connecticut, on maltreatment of Francis			Address to Inhabitants--Hampshire and
Green, of Boston--Bissell and others to			Berkshire Counties ask for Arms--Militia
Governour--Answer of Governour Trum-			and Minute Men to be enumerated-- bull,		629, '33	Warlike Stores to be ascertained--Manu-
John Hancock's Commission, as Colonel,			facture of Saltpetre encouraged--Pedwithdrawn by Governour, -		709	lars discouraged--Militia Exercise recom-
Proceedings of the People on opening Courts			ended--Manufacture of Arms--Com-at Great Barrington,		724	mittee from Connecticut--Committee of Proclamation of Governour forbidding Meet-			Correspondence--Day of Fast and Praying at Salem, -		729	er--Adjourn to meet at Concord, 22d
Account of above Meeting, -		730	March--Congress met--Preparations for
New Council appointed,		731	Defence encouraged--Roles and Regula-
Thomas Oliver, Lieutenant Governour, 8th			tions for a Constitutional Army--recusant
August, 1774,		731	Counsollor's names--Stockbridge Indians
Proceedings of the People at Taunton, on			enlist as "Minute Men"--new Provincial new Council and Sheriff, -		732	Congress, if Governour does not call the General Brattle to General Gage, "Minute			Assembly--Mohawk Indians addressed--
Men," -		739	Col. Gilbert denounced--Proceedings at
Worcester threatens Resistance by Arms, 742, '95			Billerica--Army to be raised--Delegates
Salem Committee arrested--Admiral Graves			to Connecticut, Rhode-Island, and New-threatens Salem and Marblehead, -		744	Hampshire, on that subject--County Com-
Middlesex Resolutions, at Concord, 31st			mittees--Six Artillery Companies to be
August, 1774, -		750	trained--Families assisted to remove from
Middlesex, Inhabitants collect in large bodies			Boston--adjourn till 10th May, 1323-66 with Arms, &c.--advance to Cambridge--			Committee of Safety, to procure Army Pro-resignation of Counsellors--Thomas Oli-			visions,		1365
ver, Lieutenant Governour, statement,		762-6	Committee of Safety, to procure Army Sup-
Governour Gage to Earl of Dartmouth, 2d			plies generally,		1366-8
September, 1774--"Civil Government			Warlike Stores for 15,000 Men, -		1367 near its end"--"Nothing can be done			One-fourth of the Militia to assemble, -		1368
but by forcible means," -		767	Governour Gage's Letter, of 18th January,
Suffolk County Resolutions--Committee to			1775, to Earl of Dartmouth, laid before can on the Governour, their correspond-			House of Commons, -		1634
ence,		776-82	Maseres, Mr. , examined in House of Commons on
Cumberland County Resolutions--Sheriff			Quebeck Bill, -		191
Tyng's Declaration--Report of Commit-			Agent of the Colony of Quebeck,		1823
tee,		798-802	Mason's and Dixon's Line , -		455, 739
Resolves of Committees at Boston, -		807	Mayne, Sir Wm. , Speech on Address to the King, 1473
Governour Gage, by Proclamation, postpones			Speech on Supplies for 1775, -		1479-84
meeting of General Court, -		809	Speech on Address to the King, -		1554
Provincial Congress, 7th October, 1774, at			Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., with
Salem -- constituted out of Members of the			the Southern Colonies,		1712
General Court and others--Names and			Meredith, Sir Willam , Speech on Government of doings--publick and secret sessions,		829-53	Massachusetts Bay,		84

Meredith, Sir Wm., Speech on Supplies for 1775, 1487
 Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1515
 Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., with the Northern Colonies, - - - 1624
Middlesex, England, Wilkes and Glynn, proposed as Candidates for Parliament, - 805-6
Minute Men, 1050
Montague, Mr., Frederick, Speech on Boston Port
 Bill, - - - 43
 Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - 165
Montgomery, John, Correspondence on Indian Affairs, - 463-4
Montreal Petition from, for a General Assembly, - 1844
Moreton, Mr., Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, 122
Morris, Gouverneur, Letter to Mr. Penn, - - 342
Murray, James, Commission as Governour of the Province of Quebec: 175
Mutiny and Desertion, Act to Punish, - 1793-5
Nantucket, Motion to exempt Whale Fisheries from Bill Regulating Trade, &c., 1653
Naturalization, Petitioned for in New-York, - 1297 Newbern, North Carolina, Convention, 24th August, 1774, 733
New-Castle, Petition from Manufacturers to House of Commons, - 1535
Newfoundland, Proclamation of the King, 1768, 172
New-Hampshire---
 Committee at Portsmouth, May, 1774, 337, 1223
 Votes in House of Representatives on Fort
 William and Mary, &c., - 361-2
 Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth, 393
 512, '16, '36, 745, '86, 981, 1013, 1041-2
 Portsmouth Committee of Inspection--Meeting dispersed by Sheriff, 534-5-6
 Francetown Resolves, - - 888
 Nicholas Austin gives satisfaction for procuring Artificers to work on Barracks at Boston, - 974
 Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Colden, on
 New-Hampshire Grants, - - - 1035
 Powder in Castle William and Mary seized, 1041-2
 Cannon do. do. - - 1042-3, '53, '69
 Address to the Inhabitants of British America, &c., - 1063, 1246
 Epsom Resolves, - 1105
 Exeter Meeting, - - - 1105
 Convention at Exeter: 25th January, 1775, and Address, - - 1180
 Brentwood Proceedings, - 1222
 Hollis Proceedings, - 1229
 Plymouth Town Meeting, - - 1245
 Committee from Massachusetts on raising an Army, - 1359

New-Jersey---
 Governour Franklin to Earl of Dartmouth, 368
 428, 1697
 Letter from a Member of Assembly, - 380
 Lower Freehold Resolutions, - - - 390
 Essex County Resolutions, 403, 1012, '94
 Bergen County Resolutions, - - - 450
 Morris County Resolutions and Proceedings, 452
 1106
 Hunterdon County Resolutions, - 524, 1163
 Middlesex County Resolutions, - 553, 1083
 Sussex County Resolutions, - 594
 Monmouth County Resolutions, - - 610
 County Committees--General Meeting--Resolutions and Delegates to Continental Congress, - - - 624
 Anonymous Address on the expected Con-gross, - - 634, 728
 Same, exhorting to Moderation, - - 642
 Same, against Colonial Proceedings, - 987 Committee of Correspondence to Committee of Boston, - 657, 728
 Essex County Grand Jury to Chief Justice
 Smyth, 967
 Committee to Freeholders of Essex County, 1009

New-Jersey---

Committee chosen at Newark--Thanks to Congress Delegates--Resolution concerning James Rivington, Printer, New-York, 1092
 Elizabethtown Committee--Proceedings, 1051 1234
 "A Freeholder of Essex" to the Committee, 1094
 "Y to Z, of New-Jersey," - - - 1096
 Woodbridge Committee--Proceedings, 1102, 1249
 Proceedings of the Council, - 1117
 Assembly Proceedings - 1121
 Shrewsbury Proceedings, - 1165
 Burlington Proceedings, - 1235
 Hanover Proceedings, - - 1240
 Letter from Governour Franklin to Earl of Dartmouth, 1st February, 1775, - 1697

New-York---

Lieutenant Governour Colden to Earl of Dartmouth, on arrival of Tea, &c., 248-51
 General Correspondence with, - - 372
 517, 669, 773, 819, 957, 1030, '92
 South Haven Resolutions, 407
 East Hampton Resolutions, - 420
 Huntington Resolutions, 453
 Orange Town Resolutions, - - 506
 Sir William Johnson's death announced, - 645
 Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour
 Colden, - - 672, 782, 1035, 1101
 Poughkeepsie Resolutions, - 702
 Rye Resolutions, - - 703, 802
 West Chester Resolutions, 726
 Tryon County Resolutions, 740
 Queen's County Resolutions, - 1027
 1035, 1168, '91
 Albany County Justices' Resolutions, - 1063
 Albany Committee to the Publick, - - 1097
 Ulster County Proceedings, 1100, '83, 1201, '30
 Ord, Colonel Thomas, prays authority to locate Lands, - 1101
 Dutchess County Proceedings, - 1164
 Letter to Annapolis--Vote of Assembly on Proceedings of Continental Congress, - 1188
 Hanover Proceedings, - 1191
 Suffolk County Address to the Americans,
 &c., 1211, '57
 General Assembly meets--Lieutenant Gov-ernour's Address--Answers thereto--Pennsylvania Boundary--New-Jersey Resolutions--Petition to the King--Memorial to the House of Lords--Representation and Remonstrance to the House of Commons to be prepared--Roads recommended-- Thanks to Delegates in Continental Congress---to the Merchants and Inhabitants--- Motion to appoint Delegates to next Continental Congress--Speeches thereon--
 Naturalization--Votes on Grievances--
 Letters from London Agents--Salaries fixed--Petition, &c., sent to Edmund Burke, Agent--also to the other Provinces--Rioters in the County of Charlotte. - - 1281-1324
 Mr. Burke presents Remonstrance of House of Assembly to House of Commons, - 1819

New-York City---
 Committee of Correspondence, 293-330
 On Association of Congress, 330
 Handbills in circulation, - - - 782
 Letter from Committee of Mechanics in Boston, - - - 803-4
 Meeting of Mechanics, - 809
 Notice of Boston Mechanics, - 820
 Anonymous Addresses to the People, 821
 886, 978, 1074
 Letter to A. Elliot, Collector, and his Answer respecting Arms and Powder seized, 1070-2
 Letter from Boston Committee, - - 1106 Committee of Mechanics to Delegates in Congress, and Answer, 987

New-York City--

Same under Association of Congress, 992, 1203
 Committee of Inspection, - 967
 Grand Jury Address to Justices, 1227
 Proceedings in case of Ship James, - 1243
 Proceedings in case of Ship Beulah, - 1257

NorthCarolina--

Recommends Subscription for relief of Boston, - 433, 619
 Wilmington Resolutions and Circular Letter, - 618, '19
 Letter with a Vessel loaded with Provisions for Boston, - 670
 Parker Quince and his Crew make no charge for Vessel or Freight carrying the above Provisions, - 670
 Governour Martin and Privy Council discourage Publick Meetings--Governour's Proclamation, &c, - 705-7
 Convention at Newbern, August 24, 1774--Deputies to Continental Congress appointed--their Powers and Instructions, 733-7
 Governour Martin to Earl of Dartmouth, 761
 Association of Ladies, - - - 891
 Halifax County Proceedings, - 1055

North, Lord--

Comments on presenting certain Papers, 32, 222
 Speech on Boston Port Bill, 37, 42, 44-5, 52-7
 Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - - - 65, '8, 72, 80, 91
 Speech on Impartial Administration of Justice there, - - - 112, '17, '18
 Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - 166
 Speech on Quebec Bill, 187, 207
 Rumour of his retiring, - - - 1059, '68
 Samuel Clay Harvey's Address to him, 1204
 Speech on Address to his Majesty, - - 1473
 Views on Supplies for 1775, 1480, '4, '5, 1589
 Views on Petition of London Merchants, 1517
 1529-30
 Views on Petition of Bristol Merchants, 1520
 Views on the divers American Papers laid before the House of Commons, and Address to the King, - - 1541-66, '8
 His Conciliatory Resolution, - 1597-1622
 His Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., with Northern Colonies, - - 1622, '95
 His Views on a call for Papers, - - 1699
 Bill to Restrain Trade, &c, with Southern Colonies, - 1701, '12
 Opposes Mr. Hartlcy's Proposition for Conciliation, - 1791
 On encouraging Fisheries in Great Britain and Ireland, - - - 1805, '7, '8
 On Ways and Means for Supplies of 1775, 1811
 Opposes Remonstrance of General Assembly of New-York, - - 1819
 Opposes Petition from Quebec, - - 1836

Norton, Mr. Speaker, "The Law does not know the word Rebellion," -- - - 1623

Norwich City, Petition from Merchants and others to House of Commons, 1523

Nottingham, Town and Neighbourhood, Petition to House of Commons, 1632, '60, 1701, '43
 Petition of Hosiers, - - - 1567

Nova Scotia, Proclamation of the King in 1763, 173
 Estimates for Civil List, - - - 1709

Oliver, Thomas, appointed Lieutenant Governour of Massachusetts, 8th August, 1774, 731
 Forced by the People to resign as President of Council, - - - 764

Ord, Colonel Thomas, prays for grant to locate Lands in New-York, 1101

Order, priority in Debate, - - - 1570
 On reading a Memorial, - - 1837

Palliser, Sir Hugh, examined in House of Lords on North American Fisheries, 1670

Papers called for--objected to, - - - 1699

*Parliament--*Meets 7th of March, 1774--Proceedings, 5-224

Parliament, Dissolved, and new one called, 30th September 1774, 810

Meet 29th November, 1774--Addresses---King's Speech--Proceedings in House of Lords--divers Speeches--Protest on Address, 1461-'69

Sir Fletcher Norton, Speaker House of Commons attends House of Lords---Address of House--Debates on Supplies---Motion for Land Forces to be increased--Papers relating to Disturbances in North America--Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops from America, - 1461-1504
 Proceedings in House of Lords, February 1, 1775--Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, 1503
 Papers presented to House of Commons, 1513
 1534, '39, '47, 1634, '97, 1708
 Conference on Address to the King, - 1569
 Protest of Minority in House of Lords, - 1585
 Supplies for 1775, - 1595
 Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, and Debates thereon, 1597
 Message from the King, 10th February, 1775, on Land and Sea Forces, - 1621
 Lord North's Motion and Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., of Northern Colonies, - - 1622
 Witnesses examined on said Bill 1638, '70
 Amendments to said Bill reported, - - 1687
 Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., of Southern Colonies, 1701, '16
 Proceedings on Petition of West India Planters, &c., 1721
 Mr. Burke's Resolutions for Conciliation, 22d March, 1775, 1745
 Act to punish Mutiny and Desertion, - 1793
 Fisheries of Great Britain and Ireland encouraged, 1805
 Ways and Means for Supplies of 1775, - 1811
 Mr. Burke presents to House of Commons Remonstrance of the General Assembly of New-York, - - 1819
 Amended on motion of Lord North, - 1822
 Petition from Quebec against late Act, 1823-33
 Memorial of General Assembly of New-York, presented in House of Lords by Duke of Manchester, - - 1837
 Question of Order as to reading it, - 1837-42
 Money Bills presented to the King for his assent, 1841
 Speech from the King, 26th May, 1775, - 1842

Paulet, Mr., Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - - - 126

Pedlars and Petty Chapmen, discouraged, - - 1340

Peltries and Skins, Witnesses examined on Trade, 1652
 Motion to Repeal Duty, - - - 1809

Pennant Mr., Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - 133

Penn Thomas, and others, Petition concerning Quebec Bill, 185

Pennsylvania--

Proceedings on Virginia Boundary, - - 252,
 262-88, 454-85, 604, '10, 790, 856, 956
 1013, '50, 1179, 1271, '76

Letter from Governour of Connecticut, 261

Governour Penn to Earl of Dartmouth, - 368
 514, 661, 773, 815, 952, '56, 1698

Governour Penn refuses to call Assembly, - 391

Lancaster Resolutions, in 1774, - - 415

Philadelphia Resolutions for General Congress, &c., - - - 426

Chester County Resolutions for General Congress, &c., - - 428

Northampton County Resolutions for General Congress, &c., 436

Council Proceedings respecting Indians and Virginia, - 454-'85

Committee of Correspondence with Massachusetts, - - - 485

Council Proceedings on Indian Affairs 545-9, 644, '74

Pennsylvania--

Convention of County Deputies--Proceedings--Resolutions and Instructions to Representatives in General Assembly, July 1774, 555-93

Assembly meets--Message on Indian Affairs --Resolutions of several of the Colonies --Communication from Provincial Committee--Delegates to Continental Congress--Instructions to them--Circular to the respective Assemblies, - 602-10

Anonymous Addresses to the People, - 654 718, '53, 811

Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Penn on Maryland Boundary, and Correspondence with Governour of Maryland - 737

Governour Penn to Earl of Dartmouth informing him of the Meeting of the General Congress, - - - 773

The Earl's Answer, and also on Indian Disturbances - - - - 774

Maryland Boundary--Proceedings in Council, &c., - - - 455, 546, 737 '89, 954

Assembly meets--Indian Affairs--Benjamin Franklin's Correspondence, - 791

Assembly meets--John Dickinson appointed a Delegate in Congress--Indian Affairs, - 869

Council meets--Road from Windgap to Wyoming to be laid out, - 954

Committee for Philadelphia County, - - 1010

Committee for Berks County, 1022, 1144

Assembly meets--Deputies to Congress, - 1023

York County Proceedings, 1048, 1235

Chester County Proceedings, - - 1052

Manufacture of Gunpowder begun, - 1066

Bucks County Committee, - 1144

Convention, January, 1775, approve Proceedings of Continental Congress, - - 1169

Answers of the Governour to Specifik Interrogatories by the Earl of Dartmouth, - 1194

Bedford County encourages Manufactures, - 1226

Bedford County Letter to Provincial Congress, - - - - 1229

Cooueil Proceedings on the case of the Isabella, Schooner, - - - 1241

Council on violent Proceedings at Hanna's Town, by the Virginians, - - - 1271-6

General Assembly meets--Resolves of New-Jersey submitted--no Message from Governour--finally advises Representation of Grievances--Answer to said Message--Letter from Agents in London, - 1275-82

Pennsylvania and New-York Boundary Line, 1286

Percy, Lord, arrives at Salem, July, 1774, - 515

Peterborough, Bishop of, Speech on Address to the King,- - - - 1582

Peters, Rev Samuel, Proceedings of "Sons of Liberty" with him, - - - 711

Peters, Rev. Richard, Letter concerning Indians, and Connecticut Boundary Line, - - - 280

Petitions (See States, Provinces, Towns, Counties)

Pomfret, Earl of Remarks on Address to the King, 1572

Poole, Town and County, Petition in support of the Bill to Restrain Trade, &c, with Northern Colonies, - - - 1637

Post Offices, Constitutional American, proposed to be established by Willam Goddard of Maryland, - - - 500-4

Advised to be taken into the charge of the Colonies, - - - - 1226

Pow'y's, Mr. Thomas, Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, - - - 1618

Pownall, Governour, Speech on Boston Port Bill, 52

Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 74-6

Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1600

Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., - 1660

Pultney, Mr., Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - 126

Putnam, Israel, to Captain Trumbull, - - 783

Letter to him from Boston, - - - 784

Letters and Statements concerning the reported Disturbances at Boston, (Note,) 942

Philadelphia--

Publications at, - 335, '47, '74, '77, '94, 410

Committee appointed--their Letters and Proceedings, - - - - 340-1

956, '65, 1026, '56, 1100, 1231, '43

Mechanicks Meeting, - - - - 405

Recommends Delegates to General Congress to be chosen by each Provincial Convention, - - - - 441

Publication signed "a Freeman" handed about, - - - - 607

"Queries to America," a Publication, - 755

Address to the People of America, and an Answer, - - - - 976-9

Committee discourage killing Mutton, 1010, '50

Queries addressed to the several Committees, 1011

Plan for an American Manufactory, - 1256

Phipps, Captain, Speech on Boston Port Bill, - 45

Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - - - - 116, '17, '22

Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - - - 133

Privilege, Breach of, Council of New-Jersey, 1120, '31

Power of House of Commons to call for Papers, - - - - 1699

Protest, Minority in House of Lords on the Act Better Regulating Government of Massachusetts Bay, 93-95

Minority on Administration of Justice there, 128

Minority on Lord North's Address to the King, 1585

Minority on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., in the Northern Colonies, - - - 1690

Quakers, of Philadelphia, refuse to join in Suspension of Business, 1st June, 1774, - - 365

Address to their Friends, - - - 1093

Their Testimony against present condition of Affairs, - - - 1176, 1270

Letter from Boston to Philadelphia concerning them, - - - -

In England--Petition against Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., with the Northern Colonies, - - - - 1637

Petition the King, - - - - 1852

Quartering Troops in America, 165-70

Quebeck--

Bill for Governing Province - 169, 214, 1823

King's Proclamation of Government in 1763, 172

Boundaries changed, - - - 204, '17

Commission for James Murray as Governour, 175

Witnesses on, examined, - - - 188

Petitions from, - - - 186, '94, 215

Petition against late Act, - - - 1823

Petition for a General Assembly, - - 1844

Petition from Montreal, - - - 1844

Francis Maseres to the Quebeck Committee, - - - 1845

Catholics' Petition for Restoration of their Ancient Laws--Participation in the Civil and Military Employments, and Extension of Territorial Limits, &c., - 1847-50

Quince, Parker, and Crew, from North Carolina, make no charge for Freight of Supplies to Boston, 670

Quincy, Josiah, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., - - 951

Quincy, Josiah, Jun., Letter from George Clymer, 406

Letters from John Dickinson, - 434, 947

Letter from Miles Brewton, 534

Letter to John Dickinson, 725

Letter from James Lovell, 948

Letter from Josiah Quincy, - 951

Letter from Charles Chauncy, - - 958

Letters from Joseph Reed, - 892, 963

Letter from Nathaniel Appleton, - 980

Letter from Thomas Cushing, - - 1080

Radnor, Earl of, Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., 1684-5

- Randolph, Peyton*, chosen President of first Continental Congress, 893
 His Letter, as President, to Gov. Gage-Governour's answer thereto, 909, '39, 1077
 Anonymous Letter to him, as late President, &c., - 939
- Rebels*, divers persons to be treated as such, - 1202
- Rebellion in Massachusetts* declared to be, - 1223-5
 Divers opinions, - 1623
- Reconciliation, Propositions for.* (See Lord Chatham, Lord North, Mr. Burke, and Mr. Hartley.)
- Reed, Joseph*, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., at London, 892, 963
- Rhode-Island--*
 Meeting at Providence, May, 1774, - 333
 Meeting at Westerly, - 336
 Meeting at Newport, - - 344
 Publication at Newport, - 364
 Resolutions of the General Assembly on the Boston Port Bill, and recommending General Congress--Delegates appointed, - 416
 Address to the people of Boston, - - 626
 Providence Town Meeting, and Instructions to their Duties in General Assembly, concerning Boston, - - - 705, '46-7
 Providence contribution to Boston, 989
 Cannon on Fort Island seized, - - 1039, '41
 Providence Committee Proceedings, - 1049
 Newport Committee, to Philadelphia, - 1098
 Committee from Massachusetts, on raising an Army, - - - 1359
- Rice, Mr.*, Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, 133
 Motion and Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., - - 1653-4
- Richmond, Duke of*, Speech on Administration of Justice to Massachusetts Bay, - 128 Speeches on Addresses to the King, 1466
 1576, '9, '81, '3
 Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops from America, - - - 1503
 Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, 1512
 Speech on propounding Questions to Witnesses, &c., - 1663
 Speech on motion to reject Quebec Bill, - 1827
 Views on New-York Memorial, - 1839
- Rigby, Mr.*, Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - - - - 76, 88
 Speech on Supplies for 1775, - 1482, '86
 Opposes call for Papers, 1699
 Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., with the Southern Colonies, - 1713, '15
- Rivington, James*, Letter to him from Philadelphia, 1211
- Robinson, Mr.*, his views of the measures of England, 1369
- Ro* Roads from Windgap to Wyoming, ordered, - 954
- Rochford, Earl of*, Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops from America, - 1502
 Speech on Address to the King, - 1578
 Speech on Petition from Quebec, - 1829
- Buckingham, Marguis of*, Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - 127
 Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops, 1502
 Speech on Address to the King, - - 1571
 Speech on presenting Petition from London Merchants, against Bill Restraining Trade, &c. 1661
 Speech on said Bill, - 1670, '86
- Rodney, Cæsar*, to Thomas Rodney, - 792-3-4
- Rosen, Le Mareschal*, his Proclamation against Londonderry, in Ireland, - - 1672
- Rowe, Mr.*, presents Imports and Exports of Scotland, - 1630
- Ruggles, Timothy*, Plan of Association against contemplated Independency, - - - - 1057
- Rules and Regulations* of the Massachusetts Constitutional Army, - 1350
- Salem.* (See Massachusetts.)
- Sandwich, Earl of*, Speech and Motion on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, . . 1507
- Sandwich, Earl of*, Speech on Address to the King, 1580-1
 Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., 1662, '81
 Letter to him from "An old English Merchant," (Note,) 1681
 Speech on Petition from Quebec, - - 1831
 Views on New-York Memorial, - 1839
- Savannah.* (See Georgia.)
- Savile, Sir George*, Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - 71, 91
 Presents Petition of Colonial Agents, 1524, '32
 Views on Supplies for 1775, - - 1598
 Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade with the Northern Colonies, - - - - 1624
 Speech on Mr., Hartley's Conciliatory Proposition, - - 1792
 Presents Petition from Quebec, - 1833
- Sawbridge, Mr.*, Speech on Boston Port Bill, 39, 52, '7
 Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - - 118, '19, '25
 Speech on Quebec Bill, - - - 185
 Views on Lord North's Address to the King, 1565
 Views on Supplies for 1775, - 1595
 Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, - - - - 1619
 Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., with the Southern Colonies, - 1704, '14
 Supports Mr. Burke's Resolutions, - 1776
- Sayre, Mr.*, and others, Petition to House of Lords, 30, 58
- Scollay, John* to Arthur Lee, - - - - 369
- Scotland*, Imports and Exports to and from American Colonies, - - - 1627-9, '50
 Whale Fisheries, - - - - 1661
 Imports and Exports, - - - - 1669
- Scott, Joseph*, sells Munitions of War to the Governour of Massachusetts, and is obliged to escape, - 806, '10
- Scott, Mr.*, Views on Address to the King, - - 1559
 Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1611
- Sheep*, Exportation thereof prevented by the people of New-York, 963
- Shelburne, Earl of*, Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops from America, 1499
 Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, 1508
 Speech on Address to the King, 1575, '78-9
 Speech on Bill to Restrain Trade, &c., 1683
 Views on Petition from Quebec, - 1831
 Views on New-York Memorial, - - 1840
- Shuldham, Molyneux*, examined in House of Lords on American Fisheries, - 1669
- Skins*, witness examined in Parliament on Trade, 1652
 Duties thereon to cease. - - 1810
- Skykker, Mr.*, Speech on the Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - - - - 122
- Smith, Devereux*, Correspondence on Indian Affairs, 467
- Smith, General*, Views on Address to the King, - 1473
- Smith, Rev. Dr. William*, Address to the People, 18th June, 1774, - - 427
- Smythe, Sir Robert*, Speech on Address to the King, 1564
 Opposes the Quebec Petition, - - 1838
- Society, American Philosophical*, Petition Assembly of Pennsylvania, 1278, '81
- Sons of Liberty*, Farmington, Connecticut, - 336 Proceedings with Rev. Samuel Peters, - 711
- South Carolina--*
 Receives intelligence of Boston Port Bill, - 370
 Publication at Charlestown, 4th June, 1774, 382
 Resolution of General Committee, - 408, 881
 Address to the Province, by "A Carolinian", 430
 Committee of Charlestown, to receive contributions for Boston, 448
 Anonymous Address to the Inhabitants of the Province, 4th July, 1774, - 509
 Letter from Charlestown, on Deputies to Congress, &c., - - - 525
 General Resolutions at Charlestown, - - 525
 Detailed account thereof, - - 531-4
 Lieutenant Governnr Bull, to Earl of Dartmouth, 662, '72, 993, 1050

- South Carolina*--
 Assembly ratify nomination of Deputies to Congress, - - - 671
 Assembly apply to the Governour for Arms and Ammunition to defend against the Indians--he prorogues the House, 672
 Committee of Inquiry chose to see that no Teas are landed, - - 857
 Hon. William H. Drayton's Charge to Grand Jury, - 959
 Presentments and Address under same, 961-2
 Demands execution of a Cherokee Chief for murder 974
 Proclamation of Governour Bull, concerning Indian intercourse, - 975
 Provincial Congress at Charlestown, January, 1775, 1109
 Resolutions of General Committee concerning Georgia, 1163
 Proceedings at Charlestown, on importation of certaiu prohibited articles, 1269
Stafford County, England, Petition to House of Commons, - 1535
Stanley, Lord, Views on Petition of London Merchants, - - 1518
Stanley, Mr. Hans, Speech on Boston Port Bill, 44
 Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - 84
 Speech on Administration of Justice there, 121
 Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1526
 Speech on Address to the King, - - 1556
 Speech on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1619
Stephen, Colonel Adam, to Richard H. Lee, 1209, '44
Stirling, Lord, challenged while a Member of Council of New-Jersey--Proceedings thereon, 1120, '31
St. Asaph, Bishop of, Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 97
St Clair, Arthur Correspondence on Virgina and Pennsylvania Boundaries, and Indian Disturbances, - 262-8, 454-5, 956, 1013, '50, 1179
St. John, Mr., Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 87
Suffolk, Earl of, Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops, - - - 1498
 Views on putting Questions to Witnesses, 1663, '84
Sugar Colonies, Petition from Planters to House of Commons, - - - 1540
 Imports and Exports, &c., 1772-3 1547, 1703
 Petition laid upon the table, - 1588
Supplies for 1775, Debates on - 1475, 1589
 For 1775, reported, - - - 1595
 Ways and Means for, Resolutions of Lord North, - - - 1811
Sutton, Sir Richard, Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - 77
 Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, - - - 1619
 Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., with the Northern Colonies, - 1625
 Views on Bill Restraining Trade, &c, with the Southern Colonies, - 1715
Taxation no Tyranny, - - - 1431
 Answer to the above, 1449
Taxes, in England and America, comparative rate in 1775, 1541
Tea, Message of the King, - - - - 5
 Acts of People in Boston--Tea destroyed, December, 1773, 28-'9
 Message of the King, - - - 39
 Lord North's Comments on presenting certain Papers, - - 32, 222
 Motion by Mr. Fuller to repeal the Duty, 131, '33
 Apology for conduct of America, London Gazetteer, - - - 242
 At New-York--one parcel prevented from being landed, and another destroyed, 22d April, 1774, - - 248
 Non-Consumption recommended by Massachusetts, - 422
Tea, At Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, re-shipped June, 1774, - - 499
 Resolution of Fairfax County, Virginia, - 599
 Proceedings in Charlestown, South Carolina, 663
 857
 Proceedings of a Committee of Charles County, Maryland, - - - - 703 Proceedings of Frederick County, Maryland, - 704
 Proceedings at Norfolk, Virginia, - 727
 Proceedings at Piscataqua, New-Hampshire, Samuel Dyre, of Boston, carried off to England for assisting to burn the Tea at Boston, 855
 Proceedings at Yorktown and Gloucester, Virginia, - - - - 964-5
 Proceedings at Elizabethtown, Maryland, (now Haerstown,) 1000
 Third Article of Association, recommending Non-Consumption of Tea, published at Pbiladelphia and New-York, - 1269
Temple, Earl, Speech on Lord Chatham's Provisional Bill, - 1513
Thompson, William, Letter to Governour Penn on Indian Affairs, - - - 473, '83
Thomson, Charles, chosen Secretary of the Continental Congress, 893
Thurlow, Attorney General, on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 90
 Same on Quebec Bill, - - - 183, 208
 Same on Lord North's Motion for Address to the King, 1543
 Views of Rebellion in Massachusetts, - 1623
Tompkins, Mr., presents to House of Commons value of Exports and Imports from England to North America, for the years 1772-3, - - - - 1533
 Same generally, - 1547, 1629, '30
Townshend, Lord, Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops from America, - - 1502
Townshend, Mr. T., Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, - 85
 Speech on Administration of Justice there, 116, '22
 Speech on Repeal of Tea Duty, - 164
 Speech on Quebec Bill, 180, '87, 205, '09
 Views on Address to the King, - 1474, 1556
 Views on Supply Bill, - 1476, '80, '86, 1596
 Views on Petition of London Merchants, 1517, '27
 Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, 1607, '19
 Views on Bill to Restrain Trade with Northern Colonies, - - - 1624, '54, '9
 Advocates call for Papers, &c., - - 1699
 Speech on Bill Restraining Trade, &c., with Southern Colonies, - - - 1715
 Views on Mr. Hartley's Proposition, - 1792
 Views on encouraging Fisheries of Great Britain and Ireland, - - - - 1806
 Views on Ways and Means for Supplies of 1775, 1815
 Views on Quebec Petition, - - - 1836
Trade, with the Northern Colonies--Lord North's Bill to Restrain, - 1622, '91 with Southern Colonies also, - 1701, '16
Treasury Board, Minute of, to Goveraour Gage, - 246
Troops, Bill for Quartering in America, 165-'70
 Imported from Halifax, - 743
 Imported from Newfoundland, - 878
 Imported 6,000 to be sent out, - 1224
 2,000 additional asked for, - - - 1589
 King's Troops march from Marblehead to Salem, - 1268
Trowbridge, Petition in favour of Parliament, 1703
Tryon, Governour, his Answers to the Lords of Council, - 724
Tuffnell, Mr. supports Mr. Burke's Resolutions, 1776, '92
Turner, Mr. Charles, Views on Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, - 1619
United Colonies--(see Publication at Salem,) - 1053
Van, Mr., Speech on Boston Port Bill, - - 45
 Speech on Administration of Justice there, 118

Van, Mr., Speech on Address to the King, - - 1474
 Remarks on Questions to be asked Witnesses, 1743

Virginia--
 Proceedings on Pennsylvania Boundary, 252
 262, '88, 454, '85, 545-9, 790, 1013, '50, 1179
 1271-6

Letter from a Member of Assembly, May, 1774, 340

Proceedings of House of Burgesses---Dissolved by Governour Dunmore, 350, '52

Proceedings at Norfolk, 370-2, 451, 518, 1217

Fredericksburg Resolutions, - - 373

Lord Dunmore to Earl of Dartmouth, 387, 1061

Prince William Resolutions, - - 388, 1034

Frederick County Resolutions, 392

Dunmore Resolutions, - - - 417

Thomson Mason's Addresses from Williamsburg, - - - 418, '95, 519, '41, 620, '48

New Assembly ordered, - - - 419

Westmoreland County Proceedings and Resolutions, - - - 437, 1203, '22

Spottsylvania County do do - 448

Richmond County do do - 492, 1021

Prince George County do do - 493

James City County do do - 499, 1007

Culpepper County do do - - 522

Assembly prorogued by Lord Dunmore,
 July, 1774, - - - 523

Essex County Proceedings, - - 527, 1026

Fauquier County Proceedings, - 528

Nansemond County Proceedings, - 529

New Kent County Proceedings, - 535

Chesterfield County Proceedings, 537, 1007

Gloucester County Proceedings, - 538, 1051

Caroline County Proceedings, 539, 1031, '47

Henrico County Proceedings---Instructions to Delegates, 550

Middlesex County Proceedings, 551

Dinwiddie County Declarations, 552

Surry County Resolutions, - 593

Supplies collected for Boston, - 593, 787

York County Resolutions, - 596

Fairfax County Proceedings, 597, 1051, 1145

Hanover County--Address to John Syme and Patrick Henry, Jun., &c., 615, 1248

Stafford County Resolutions, and Address to John Alexander and Charles Carter, 617

Elizabeth City County Resolutions, - 634

Alhemarle County Resolutions, - - 637

Accomack County Resolutions and Proceedings, - - - 639, 1059

Princess Ann County Proceedings, - 640, 1026

Buckingham County Resolutions, - - 643

Anonymous Address to the Convention, - 647

Santo to the People of Virginia, - 685, 882

Convention at Williamsburg, 1st August, 1774--Instructions to Deputies to General Congress, - 686-90

Mr. Jefferson's View on the Rights of British America, - - - 690

William Preston's Letters on Indian Depredations, 707, 808

Norfolk Proceedings on Tea imported, 727

Adam Stephen to R. H. Lee, - - 740

Anonymous Letter to the Members of Congress, - 759

Earl of Dartmouth to Lord Dunmore 774

Courts suspended, - - 775

Resolutions of certain Officers under Lord
 Dunmore, - - - 962, 1671

Proceedings at Yorktown and Gloucester, on Teas imported, - 964-5

Proceedings in Westmoreland against David Wardrobe, - - - 970

Williamsburg Merchants, to Peyton Randolph, and others, - - - 972

King's Proclamation, creating Copper Currency for Virginia, - - - 982

Committee of Henrico County, - 985, 1037

Committee of Elizabeth City County, - 991

Virginia--
 Committee of Warwick County, - 994

Lord Dunmore returns from Indian War, 1014-20

Isle of Wight Proceedings, - - - 1026

King and Queen County Proceedings, - 1037

Address of the Council to Lord Dunmore,
 and his Answer, - - - 1043

Northampton Proceedings, 1044, '46

Charles City Proceedings, - 1049, '91

Orange County Proceedings, - - 1056

Williamsburg Committee chosen, - - 1059

Charlotte County Committee and Proceedings, 1138

Militia organizing--Ammunition procuring, 1145

Fincastle Meeting, and Address to the Delegates in Continental Congress, - 1165

Proclamation by Governour Dunmore, for protection of the Indians, - - - 1169

Northumberland County Proceedings against Gambling, - - - 1178

Pittsylvania Proceedings, - - 1182

Lancaster County Proceedings, - 1213

Cumberland County Proceedings, - 1247

Augusta County Proceedings, - 1253

Botetourt County Proceedings, - - 1255

Copy of Act of 16th April, 1764, for preservation of Peace in Virginia, &c, laid before House of Commons, - - - 1632

Vyner, Mr., Views on Mr. Hartley's Proposition for Conciliation, - 1792

Views on Ways and Means for Supplies, - 1815

Wagener, Melchior, withdraws from Pennsylvania Convention, - 1170

Wakefield, and adjacent Towns, Petition House of Commons, - - - 1628

Walker, George, examined as witness on West India Trade in Parliament, 1722

Wallace, Mr., Motion on Bill for Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, - - 120, 124

Walsingham, Captain, Views on Supplies for 1775, 1591

Ward, Mr., Speech on Boston Port Bill, - - 44

Same on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 74

Wardrobe, David, Proceedings against him in Westmoreland County, Virginia, - - - 970

Warren, Sir Peter, Earl of Sandwich quotes him against American courage, and is contradicted in a Letter from "An old English Merchant," - 1681

Warren, Joseph, communicates a Letter of Samuel Adams, and warns them against the intention of exciting prejudices in the minds of Episcopalians, - 802

His Interrogatories to General Gage, and his Answer, - - - 806

Letter to Josiah Quincy, Junior, 990

Letter to Arthur Lee, - - - 1252

Watson, Brook, examined on Fisheries of North America, - - - 1638, '67

Ways and Means for raising Supplies for 1775, - 1811

Wedderburn, Solicitor General--
 Speech on Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, 115, '21

Speech on Motion to Repeal Tea Duty, 163

Speech on Quebec Bill, 209

Speech on Address to the King, 1474, 1565

Speech on Petition of London Merchants, - 1529

Declares Rebellion in America, - 1623

West Indies, Merchants in London, Meetings, 1082, 1147

Imports and Exports to and from England, in 1772, - 1548, 1629, 1702

Planters' Petition considered, and witnesses examined, - - - 1721

Wetmore, Timothy, his opinion of the Rights of Parliament, (Note,) 803

Weymouth, Lord Speech on Lord Chatham's Motion to Recall Troops from America, - - 1504

Whigs and Tories, Letter from a British Officer 1068

Whitehaven, Petition from Merchants to House of Commons, - - - 1630

Willard, Abijah, Member of Council of Massachusetts, his treatment by the people, 731

Wilkes, John, and John Glynn , candidates for Parliament, their sentiments, - - 805-6	Woolbridge, Thomas , from Committee of London American Merchants, declines answering as a witness, - - - 1534
Speech on Lord North's Address to the King, 1549	Worcester, Massachusetts , threatens Resistance by Arms, 742
Answer, as Lord Mayor, m the Earl of Hertford, 1854	Demands resignation of Timothy Paine, - 745
Wilkins, Isaac , Speech against necessity of sending Delegates to second Continental Congress, - 1293	Meeting to form Companies, and choose Officers, - - - 806
Witnesses , on state of Quebeck Province, examined in House of Commons, 188	Address to Gov. Gage, and his Answer, 868
A witness declines answering in House of Commons, - - - 1534	Convention at, 1192
Several examined on Bill to Restrain Trade with the Northern Colonies, 1638, '63, '70	Warlike Stores and Supplies deposited there, 1365-6-7
Several examined on West India Trade, - 1721	Wray, Sir Cecil , seconds Mr. Hartley's Proposition for Conciliation, 1791
Discussion as to Questions to be asked and answered - 1743	Wright, Sir James , to Earl of Dartmouth, from Savannah, - - - 1040
Wolverhampton , Petition from Merchant and others, to House of Commons, 1531	Yonge, Sir George , Speech on Government of Massachusetts Bay, 73

AMERICAN ARCHIVES

CONTENTS.

VOLUME I.

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT ON THE KING'S MESSAGE OF THE 7TH OF MARCH, 1774,				March 14, Motion by Lord North for leave to bring in Boston Port Bill,				39
House of Lords.				Debate--Mr. Grosvenor,				39
1774.						Governour Johnstone,		39
March	The King's Message relating to the Disturbances					Lord North, -	-	39
7,	in America, and requesting Parliament to make					Mr. Dempster,		39 provision for better securing the execution of					Mr. Sawbridge,		39
	the Laws, and the just dependence of the Col-					Mr. Byng, - -		39
	onies upon the Crown and Parliament, -	5				Mr. R. Fuller,		39
	Papers, relating to the Disturbances in America,					Mr. Dowdeswell, -		39 laid before the House by the Earl of Dart-					Mr. Henry Cavendish,		39 mouth--					Captain Phipps, -		39
	From Massachusetts Bay,	5				Lord George Cavendish,		39
	From New-York, - - - -	6				Colonel Barré,		40
	From South Carolina, - - - -	7			Motion agreed to,		-	40
	From New-Hampshire, - - - -	7			Committee to bring in the Bill,		- - -	40
	From the Admiralty,	7			Further consideration of Message and Papers referred to the War Office, - - - -	7			ferred to Committee of the Whole House, on
	From the East India Company,	7			Friday next, the 18th,			40
	From the Treasury, - - - -	9		18,	Lord North presented the Bill,			40
	Address to the King ordered,	9			Read the first time,		-	41
11,	More Papers submitted by the Earl of Dartmouth,	10			Second reading ordered on the 21st, -			41
	Papers relating to the Disturbances in America,				Motion to print the Bill rejected, - - -		-	41 to be considered on the 17th,	10			Consideration of Message and Papers postponed
16,	Consideration postponed to the 24th,	10			to the 23d,		-	41
23,	Consideration further postponed, - - -	10		21,	The Bill read the second time, - - -		-	41
30,	Committee ordered to inquire into the Proceed-				To be considered in Committee of the Whole, on ings of Massachusetts Bay, - - -	10			the 23d,		-	41
	Papers relating to the Disturbances in Massachu-			23,	Order for Committee of the Whole on the Mes-
	setts Bay referred to the Committee,	10			sage and Papers discharged, - - -		-	41
	Lords who formed the Committee, - - -	10			Message and Papers referred to Committee of the
April	Address to the King for all Papers relating to				Whole on the Bill,			41
14,	Disturbances in Massachusetts Bay, received				House in Committee of the Whole on the Bill,			41 from Officers in his Majesty's service there,				Debate--Mr. Fuller, -			41 from July 7, 1766, which have not already				Mr. Herbert, - -		-	41
	been laid before the House,	11			Lord North, - -		-	42
15,	Papers called for in the Address of yesterday,				Mr. Gascaigne,			43 sent by the King's command,	11			Mr. Montague,			43
	Referred to the Committee appointed on the 30th				Mr. Byng, - -		-	44 of March,	12			Mr. Stanley,			44
20,	Report of the Committee,	12-31			Mr. Dempster,			44
					Lord North, - -		-	44
					Mr. Ward, - -		-	44
					Mr. Jenkinsen,			44
7,	The King's Message, -	32			General Conway, -		-	45
	Papers presented by Lord North, - - -	32			Mr. Fuller, - -		-	45
	Lord North's Speech on presenting the Papers, -	222			Mr. Charles James Fox,			45
	Motion for an Address to the King,	32			Captain Phippe,			45
	Debate--Lord Clare,	33			Lord North, - -		-	45
	Mr. Dowdeswell, - - - -	33			Mr. Van, - - -		-	45
	Governour Pownall,	33			Colonel Barré,			46
	Mr. E. Burke, - - - -	33			Bill reported to the House, - - - -		-	46
	Mr. Solicitor General,	34			24,	Third reading of the Bill ordered for to-mor-
	Mr. E. Burke, - - - -	34			row,			46
	Lord George Germain,	34			25,	Petition from William Bollan, Agent for Massa-
	General Conway, - - - -	35			chusetts, offered by Mr. Crosbie, -			46
	Colonel Barré, - - - -	36			House refuse to receive it,			46
	Address ordered, -	36			Notice of the rejection of this Petition, (Note,) -			46
					Petition of several Natives of North America, against the Bill, presented and read, -		-	47
					Bill read the third time, - - - -		-	47
					Motion of Mr. Charles James Fox, to strike out
March	The King's Message, and Papers presented this				a clause of the Bill,		-	48
7,	day to be considered on the 11th, - -	35			Rejected,			48
11,	Papers presented by Lord North,	35			Motion of Mr. Charles Fox to strike out another
	Message and Papers considered, and ordered for				clause of the Bill,		-	48
	further consideration on the 14th, -	35			Rejected,		-	48
14,	Petition from William Bollan, Agent for Massa-				Question on the passage of the Bill, - -		-	49
	chusetts, presented,	35			Debate--Mr. Dowdeswell, -		- -	49
	Gallery of the House cleared, - - - -	36			Mr. Welbore Ellis, -			49
	Message and Papers considered, - - -	37			Mr. Edmund Burke,			50
	Speech of Lord North, -	37

1774.
May	Debate--Mr.	Grey	Cooper,	-	-	-	51
11,		Mr. Anthony	Bacon,	-	-	-	52
		Governour	Pownall,				52
		Lord John	Cavendish,				52
		Mr. T. Townshend,	-	-	-	-	52
		Mr. Sawbridge,	.	-	-	-	52
		Lord North,					52
		Governour	Johnstone,				53
		Mr. Sawbridge,					57
		Lord North,	-				57
	The Bill	passed,					57
	Remarks	on	Governour	Johnstone's	Speech,
	(Note,}						56
			House of Lords,
March	Boston Port	Bill	received from the	Cormaons,	-		57
26,	Read the first	time,	-				58
	Second reading	ordered on the	28th, and the
	Lords	summoned,	-				58
28,	Petition of	Stephen Sayre	and others, Natives of America,	presented by	Lord Wycombe,	-			58
	Papers relating	to the Disturbances	in America,
	read,	-					59
	Bill read the	second time,	.	-	-	-	59
	Motion to	commit the Bill,	after long debate,
	agreed to,	-					59
	Committed to	a Committee of	the Whole House
	for to-morrow,	-					60
29,	Considered in	Committee of	the Whole,				60
	Reported to	the House,	-				60
	Third reading	ordered to	morrow, -	-	-	-	60
30,	Petition of	William Bollan,	Agent of Massachusetts,	presented by	the Earl of Stair,				60
	Mr. Bollan	heard at the	Bar of the House	against the Bill,	-					60
	Bill read the	third time,	-				60
	Passed.	-					60
31,	Royal assent	to the Bill,	-				60
	Petition of	Natives of	North America,	to the King,	against the	Bill,	-	-	-	61
	"An Act to	discontinue	in such manner,	and for such time,	as are therein	mentioned, the	landing and	discharging,	lading or	shipping,	of
	Goods,	Wares,	and Merchandise,	at the	Town, and within	the Harbour	of Boston,	in the	Province of	Massachusetts	Bay,	in	North
	America,"	-					61-66
ON THE BILL FOR BETTER REGULATING THE GOVERNMENT OR MASSACHUSETTS BAY.
			House of Commons.
March	Committee of	the Whole	House ordered	on the 25,	King's	Message of	March 7,	and Papers	presented by	Lord North,	-	-	-	-	65
	Papers	presented	November 28,	and	December	7,
	1768,	January 20,	1769,	and	May 7,	1770,
	relating	to his	Majesty's	Colonies	in	North
	America.	referred	to the	Committee,	-		65
	Massachusetts	Bay	Charter,	granted	by	King
	William	and	Queen	Mary,	presented	to the	House	on the	22d	of	January,	1740,
	referred	to the	Committee,	-			65
28,	House in	Committee	on the	Message	and	Papers,	-					65
	Lord North's	Speech,	-				65
	His	motion	for	leave	to	bring in a	Bill	for	better
	regulating	the	Government	of	Massachusetts
	Bay,	-					66
	Debate--Mr.	Byng,	-				66
		Sir. F. Norton,	(Speaker,) -				67
		Lord North,	-				67
		Mr. Stephen	Fox,				67
		Lord George	Germain,				67
		Lord North,	-				68
		Mr. Pownall,	-				68
	Lord North's	motion	agreed	to,	-	"	68
	Committee	to	prepare	and	bring	in
	the	Bill,	-				68
April	The Bill	presented	by	Lord	North,	-	-
15,	Debate--Lord	North,	-				68
		Mr R. Fuller,	-				69
		Mr. Dempster,	.				69
		Lord Nerds,	-				69
		Mr. Dowdeswell,	-	-	-	"	69
		Governour	Pownal[,				69
	The Bill	read	the	first	time,	-	-	-	70
	Second	reading	ordered	for	the	22d,	-	-	70
	Bill	ordered	to	be	printed,	-	-	-	70

1774.
April	Address to	the King,	for	copies	of	Acts	of	the
19,	General	Court	of	Massachusetts	Bay,	for	summoning,	returning,	and	regulating	the	choice of	Grand	and	Petit	Jurors,	and	copies	of all	other	Acts	of	the	said	General	Court,	for the	regulation	of	Townships	and	Town	Meetings,		70
	Address	to	the	King,	for	Letters	and	other	Papers,	-							70
21,	The	Letters	and	other	Papers	presented	by	Lord
	North,	-							70
22,	Order	of	the	Day,	for	the	second	reading	of the	Bill,	read,	-					71
	Debate--Mr.	Fuller,	-						71
		Sir	George	Savile,	-	-	-	-	71
		Mr.	Welbore	Ellis,					71
		General	Conway,	-	-	-	-	-	72
		Lord	North,						72
		Sir	George	Yonge,	-	-	-	-	73
		Governour	Johnstone,						73
		Mr.	C.	Jenkinson,	-	-	-	-	73
		Mr.	Harris,						74
		Sir	Edward	Astley,	-	-	-	-	74
		Mr.	Ward,						71
		Governour	Pownall,	-	-	-	-	-	74
		Mr.	Rigby,						76
		Governonr	Pownall,	-	-	-	-	-	76
		Mr.	Charles	James	Fox,				77
		Sir	Gilbert	Elliot,	-	-	-	-	77
		Sir	Richard	Sutton,	-	-	-	-	77
	The	Bill	read	the	second	time,	-		77
	To	be	considered	in	Committee	of	the	Whole
	House,	on	the	27th,	-				77
25,	Acts	of	the	Province	of	Massachusetts	Bay,	presented	to	the	House	pursuant	to	the	Address	to the	King,	of	the	19th,	-	-	-	77
27,	House	in	Committee	on	the	Bill,	-	-	79
	Report	of	Committee	to	be	received	to-morrow,	-	79
28,	Petition	of	William	Boltan,	Agent	for	Massachusetts	Bay,	offered	by	Mr.	Dowdeswell,	-		79
	Debate--Mr.		Dowdeswell,	-	.	-	-	-	79
		Sir	George	Savile,	-	-	-	-	80
		Lord	North,						80
	The	House	refuse	to	receive	the	Petition,	-	-
	Entries	in	the	Journals	of	the	House,	of	9th of	November,	1696,	19th	of	March,	1722,	and	22d
	of	March,	1722,	read,	-				81
	Motion	the	Report	of	the	Committee	of	the	Whole
	House	be	received	this	day	four	months,		81
	Rejected,								81
	Report	of	the	Committee	of	the	Whole	House	received,	-							81
	Bill	ordered	to	be	engrossed,	-	-	-	81
29,	Third	reading	of	the	Bill	ordered	for	Monday
	next,	-							81
May	2,	Petition	of	several	Natives	of	America,	presentsd
		by	Sir	George	Savile,	-	-	-	81
		Motion	for	the	third	reading	of	the	Bill,
		Debate--Mr.	Dunning,	-					83
		Sir	William	Meredith,					84
		Mr.	Stanley,						84
		Mr.	T. Townshend,						85
		Colonel	Burré,						85
		Mr.	Stephen	Fox,	.	-	-	-	87
		Marquis	of	Carmarthen,					87
		Mr.	St. John,	-					87
		Mr.	Byng,	-					88
		Mr.	Rigby,						88
		General	Conway,	-	-	-	-	-	89
		Lord	George	Germain,					89
		Mr.	Charles	Fox,	-	-	-	-	90
		Mr.	Attorney	General	Thurlow,				90
		Mr.	Edmund	Burke,					90
		Lord	North,	-					91
		Sir	George	Savile,	-				91
	Bill	read	the	third	time,	and	passed,	-	91
			House of Lords.
May	3,	Bill	for	the	better	regulating	the	Government	of Massachusetts	Bay,	received	from	the	Commons,	"						92
		Read	the	first	time,	-			92
6,		Read	the	second	time,	-			92
9,		Considered	in	Committee	of	the	Whole,		92
10,		Reported,	with	Amendments,	-	-	-	-	92
		Amendments	agreed	to,	-				92
		Third	reading	ordered	for	to-morrow,	.		92
11,		Petition	from	several	Natives	of	America	prosented,							92

XXI	CONTENTS.	XXII
1774.	1774.
May	May
11,	4,	Debate--Mr. Charles Fox,
		Captain Phipps,
		Sir George Savile,
		Mr. Skynner,
		Motion to amend, by Mr. Wallace, withdrawn,
		Standing rule for exclusion of strangers strictly enforced, (Note,) Engrossment of the Bill ordered,
		Motion to prim the Billnegatived,
		Third reading of the Bill ordered for the 6th,
	6,	Order read, for third reading of the Bill,
		Debate--Mr. Dempster,
		Mr. Grey,
		Mr. Paulet,
		Mr. Sawbridge,
		Colonel Barré,
		Bill read the third time,
		Amendment adopted, on motion of Mr. Pultney,
		Debate--Mr. Fuller,
		Mr. H. Cavendish,
		The Bill passed,
		House of Lords.
	May 9,	Bill for Impartial Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay, received from the House of Commons,
		Read the first time,
	13,	Read the second time,
	16,	Considered in Committee of the Whole,
		Third reading ordered for the 18th, and the Lords summoned,
	17,	Papers presented by the Earl of Dartmouth,
	18,	The Bill read the third time,
		Petition from William Bollun, Agent for Massachusetts Bay, presented, Motion, that Mr. Bollan be heard at the Bar, after debate, rejected,
		Motion, that the Bill do pass,
		Debate.---Earl of Buckinghamshire,
		Lord Shelburns,
		Duke of Manchester,
		Marquis of Rockingham,
		Duke of Richmond,
		The Bill passed,
		Protest,
		Notice of the Debates on this Bill, (Note,)
	20,	The King's assent to the Bill,
		"An Act for the Impartial Administration of Justice in the cases of Persons questioned for any acts done by them in the Execution of the Law, or for the Suppression of Riots and Tumults, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England,"
		ON THE MOTION FOR THE REPEAL OF THE DUTY ON TEA.
		House of Commons.
	April	Mr. Fuller's motion for a Committee of the Whole
	19,	to take into eonslderation the Repeal of the Duty of three pence per pound on Tea,
		Debate--Mr. Fuller,
		Mr. Pennant,
		Mr. Rice,
		Captain Phipps,
		Mr. Stephen Fox,
		Mr. Cornwall,
		Mr. Edmund Burke,
		Mr. Wedderburn,
		Mr. E. Burke,
		Mr. Charles Fox.
		Lord Beauchamp,
		General Burgoyne,
		Mr. T. Townshend,
		Lord Clare,
		Mr. Buller,
		Mr. Frederick Montague,
		Colonel Barré,
		Lord North,
		Mr. Dowdeswell,
		Mr. Fuller's motion rejected,
		ON THE BILL FOR QUARTERING TROOPS IN AMERICA,
		House of Commons.
	April	Leave granted, and Committee appointed, to pre-
	29,	pare and bring in a Bill providing suitable Quarters for Troops in America,
	May 2,	The Bill presented by Lord Barrington,
		Read the first time,

XXIII	CONTENTS.	XXIV
1774.	1774,
May 4, Read the second time, -	165	May Debate-Lord North, -
5, Considered in Committee of the Whole, -	166	31, Mr. T. Townshend, -
6, Report of Committee of the Whole received, -	167	Colonel Barré, - - - -
9, Bill read the third time, and passed,	167	Mr. Attorney General Thurlow, -
		Mr. Edmund Burke, -
		Mr. Mackworth's motion rejected, - - - -
		Address to the King for copies of Reports from the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, relating to the Province of Quebec, -
		House in Committee on the Bill, - - - -
		The Committee addressed by Mr. Mansfield, counsel for the Petitioners, against the Bill, - Edward Watts examined before the Committee, -
		Samuel Morin examined, - - - -
		June 1, Copies of Representations of the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, of September 2, 1765, and July 10, 1769, and Reprеsentation of the Board of Trade, of January 9, 1765, presented by Lord North, - - Copies of Memorials from Quebec, presented by Lord North, -
		2, Petition from the Inhabitants of Quebec to the King, presented by Lord North, -
		House in Committee of the Whole on the Bill, - Examination of General Carletoen before the Committee, -
		Examination of Mr. Masares, late Attorney General of Quebec, - Examination of Mr. Hey, Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec, - - - -
		3, Petition of the Common Council of the City of London, against the Bill, presented at the Bar of the House, by the Sheriffs of the City, -
		House in Committee on the Bill, -
		Examination of M. De Lotbiniere, - - Examination of Dr. James Marriott, his Majesty's Advocate General, - - - - Notion by Mr. Baker, that General Murray, late Governour of Canada, do attend the Committee, -
		Debate--Mr. T. Townshend, -
		Lord North, -
		Mr. T. Townshend, -
		Colonel Barré, -
		Captain Phipps, - - - -
		Mr. Charles Fox, - - - -
		Lord North, - - - -
		Mr. Baker's motion rejected, -
		6, House in Committee on the Bill, - -
		Governour Johnstone's objections to the Bill, -
		Mr. E. Burke's motion to amend, fixing the Boundary between Canada and New-York, agreed to, -
		Further Debate on the Boundaries of Quebec, - 7, The Bill further considered in Committee of the Whole House, -
		8, House in Committee on the Bill, -
		Debate--Mr. Burke, -
		Lord North, -
		Mr. T. Townshend, -
		Mr. Edmund Burke, -
		Colonel Barré, - - - -
		New form of oath proposed by Mr. Jenkinson, to be inserted in the Bill, - - - -
		Agreed to by the Committee, - - - - 10, The Bill reported to the House, from the Committee of the Whole, - - - -
		T. Penn, Esq, declined being heard by Counsel on his Petition, presented on the 31st of May, - Amendment to the Bill, in relation to the Southern Boundary of Canada, - - - -
		Mr. Mackworth's motion, to provide for Trials by Jury in Canada, -
		Debate--Lord North, -
		Mr. Serjeant Glynn. - -
		Mr. Attorney General Thurlow, -
		Mr. Dunning, - - - -
		Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn. -
		Mr. Byng, -
		Governour Johnstone, -
		Mr. T. Townshend, -
		Mr. Edmund Burke, -
		Mr. Mackworth's motion rejected. -
		Motion by Mr. T. Townshend, to make temporary that part of the Bill which relates to the Legislative Council. rejected, - - - - Motion by Mr. Dempster, for establishing rules to be observed in making Ordinances, rejected, - 1774.

June 10, Motion by Mr. Charles Fox, to secure to the Religious orders, their rights and properties, rejected, 211

Motion by Mr. Dempster, to give the Canadians claiming it, the benefit of Habeas Corpus and Bail, rejected, - . 211

13, Bill read the third time, - - - - 211

Mr. Cooper's motion that the Bill do pass, 211

Debate--Mr. Charles Fox, - - - - 211

Mr. Cooper, - 211

Mr. Howard, - 211

The Bill passed, - 211

House of Lords.

17, Motion to agree to the Amendments made by the House of Commons, - 211

Debate--Lord Chatham, - - - - 211

Lord Dartmouth, - - - - 212

Lord Lyttelton, - - - - 212

Amendments agreed to, 214

Lords in the minority, - - - - 214

Petition of the City of London to the King, against the Bill, - 215

The King's assent to the Bill, - - - - 216

The King's Speech to both Houses of Parliament, - 216

"An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," - 216

"An Act to prevent the Exportation to Foreign parts of Utensils made use of in the Cotton, Linen, Woollen and Silk Manufactures of this Kingdom," 220

MISCELLANEOUS CORRESPONDENCE.

March 11, Letter from Mr. Bollen, Agent, to the Hon. John Erving, and others, Committee of the Council of Massachusetts. The King's Message of March 7--the publication of his late Petition to the King--prepares a Petition for the House of Commons--General Conway and Sir George Savile decline presenting it--the Lord Mayor consents to present it, 225

15, Letter from Mr. Bollen to the Committee. His Petition presented by Sir Joseph Mawbey. The right of Parliament to Tax the Americas denied by Lord Camden, - - - - 227

17, Letter continued. Lord North's policy in regard to the Colonies.--Interview with Lord Camden, - 228

18, Letter from Arthur Lee, London, to Richard Henry Lee. Order of the House of Commons for leave to bring in the Boston Port Bill. Recommends prudence and firmness to the Colonies Lord North's declaration, that he would not listen to complaints from America, until she was at his feet. Character of Lord North, 228

22, Letter from Mr. Bollen to the Committee. Refused a hearing by the House, on his Petition, The Port Bill read a second time. The Lord Mayor and Sir Joseph Mawbey offer to present another Petition, - - - - 229

23, Letter from Mr. Bollen to the Committee. Has prepared, his second Petition. Sir Jos. Mawbey took it to present to the House. Objections of the Speaker and Clerk. The presentation deferred, - 230

31, Letter from a Gentleman in London to his friend at Annapolis, Md. Encloses the Boston Port Bill. Little opposition to it in the House of Commons. The rise or fall of America now depends on the deliberations of a General Congress from the Colonies. A suspension of Exports and Imports recommended. If Boston acquiesces the whole will be forced to submission, - 230

April 2, Letter from Mr. Bollen to the Committee. After various difficulties his Petition to the House of Lords was presented, and he was called in and heard in support of it. General Gage appointed Governour of Massachusetts Bay, 231

Letter from Mr. Bollen to the Committee. Resumes his account of the proceedings on the Port Bill. His second Petition to the House of Commons presented by Alderman Crosby. Large majority against receiving it. The Bill passed by the House of Commons. Interview with Lord Temple. The Earl of Stair the first who spoke in favour of the Colonies in the House of Lords. Lord Stair refers him to the Duke of Richmond to present his Petition.--The Duke of Richmond refers him to the Earl of Dartmouth. Interview with the Earl of Dartmouth. Petition presented by Lord Stair. Mr. Bollen heard at the Bar of the House, in support of his Petition. The Lords pass the Bill, - 231-235

1774.

April 2, Letter from Dr. Franklin, London, to Thomas Cushing. After his treatment at the Council Board he had ceased to act as Agent. Greater opposition to the Boston Port Bill in the House of Lords than in the House of Commons. Petitions of the Natives of America drawn up by Mr. Lee. Encloses a Letter from Leeds, dated March 20--alarm of the Manufacturers --Emigrations to America, - - - - 235

2, Letter from Arthur Lee, London, to Francis L. Lee. Punishment of Boston first step towards reducing all America to an acknowledgement of the right of Parliament to Tax the Colonies, and to a submission to the exercise of that right. General Gage appointed Governour of Massachusetts to reduce the people to entire obedience. Recommends a General Congress of the Colonies, at Annapolis, and a suspension of Exports and Imports 237

4, Letter from Samuel Adams, to Arthur Lee. Proceedings of the Assembly, in relation to the Judges' salaries. Judge Oliver refuses to renounce the salary from the Crown--Controversy between the Governour and the Assembly. Policy of the British Government, if persisted in, will bring about the entire separation and Independence of the Colonies, - 238

5, Importance of the Commerce of the Colonies to the Trade and Manufactures of Great Britain. Value of Exports from the West India Islands and the Northern Colonies compared. Troops furnished by the Colonies in the last war, " 240

5, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. The wisdom and firmness of the United Continent of America must be summoned to support their liberty. If Boston is not sustained, all the rest will fall the easy victims of Tyranny. The Sheriffs of London headed the Petitions to Parliament; they were the first in proposing, and active in getting them up, 241

7, An Apology for the late conduct of America, 241-245

9, Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Gage. Sends his Commission, as Captain-General and Governour-in-Chief of Massachusetts Bay, with his Instructions: He must enforce due obedience to the Boston Port Bill--if necessary, must use the King's Troops with effect. The Governour to reside in Salem, and the General Court to be held there, until the King shall authorize their return to Boston, His Majesty expects the offenders (in the destruction of the Tea) to be punished, - 245

March 31, Copy of a Minute of the Treasury Board, (enclosed in the foregoing Letter.) Instructions to the Officers of the Customs, on removing the Port from Boston to Salem, - - - - 246

April 27, Letter from London. Advises the Colonies to unite in defence of American Liberty. Power of the Ministry - their hatred of liberty. Lords Chatham, Camden, and Rockingham, are friendly to America, - 248

May 4, Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth, Destruction of Tea at New-York, - - - - 248

April 28, Account of the Proceedings at New-York, on the arrival of Captains Chambers and Lockyer, with the Tea, (enclosed in the preceding Letter,) 249

May 12, Account of all the Proceedings in New-York, in relation to the Tea, (Note.) 251-256

COUNCIL OF PENNSYLVANIA.

March 16, Governour submits a Letter from Lord Dunmore, - 252

3, Letter from Lord Dunmore, Governour of Virginia, to Governour Penn. Claims Pittsburgh,

1774.	as within the County of Augusta to be under the jurisdiction of Virginia--Refuses to revoke the Commissions to Officers he has appointed there---Demands ample reparation for the insult on his Majesty's Government in Virginia, in the imprisonment of Mr. John Connolly, a Magistrate appointed by him,	252	1774.	ernment of Virginia has the power to raise Militia, and there is no such in Pennsylvania, it will be vain to contend with them in the way of force. The Magistrates are, therefore, advised to conduct themselves with caution, and not to proceed with criminal prosecutions against persons acting under the authority of Virginia,	266
March 31,	Answer of, Governour Penn, to the Earl of Dunmore. Review of the respective claims of Pennsylvania and Virginia, in regard to the disputed Boundary. Claims Pittsburgh to be within the Charter limits of Pennsylvania,--justifies the conduct of Mr. St. Clair, in imprisoning Connolly,	255-260	Jan'ry 15,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Ligonier, to Joseph Shippen. Petition for a Court House and Jail, in Westmoreland County,	266
24,	Letter from Jonathan Trumbull, Esquire, Governour of Connecticut. to Governour Penn.--Connecticut Lands West of the River Delaware--requests Governour Penn to prevent settlements under claim of the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania. Has employed persons to take the latitudes of certain places beyond the Delaware,	261	Feb'ry 2,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Ligonier, to Governour Penn. Dr. Connolly arrested by his orders, for requiring the Militia to meet. Riotous conduct of persons under arms. Mr. Connolly has a Military Commission from Lord Dunmore, and his Subalterns are appointed,	266
April 11,	Letter from Governour Penn to Governour Trumbull, written by advice of the Council. Denies the claim of Connecticut to Lands beyond the Delaware. Protests against the sending of persons to take latitudes of places within the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, and denies the authority of the Assembly of Connecticut to do so,	261	25,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Ligonier, to Joseph Shippen, Junior, Disturbances are increasing The People, principally, in favour of Virginia. Intends to remove his office to Pittsburgh,	269
8,	Letter from William Crawford, Westmoreland County, to Mr. Penn. Connolly sworn in a Magistrate of Augusta County, Virginia: he was furnshed with blank Commissions for several gentlemen near Pittsburgh. A number of Militia Officers appointed there by Lord Dunmore. Several musters of Militia have been held. Connolly constantly surrounded with a body of armed men--and obstructs the execution of legal process under the authority of Pennsylvania. Disturbances there---arrest and confinement of Pennsylvania Magistrates--Connolly surrounds the Court House with Troops--places Centinels at the door--has a private interview with the Magistrates. Furtherdisturbances. Persons arrested by Connolly. Mr. Crawford recommends to the Governour to fix a temporary Boundary line,	262	23,	Letter from Joseph Spear to Arthur St. Clair. Virginians have had several musters lately, one at Red Stone, Old Fort. Connolly has just gone to Red Stone,	269
	Dr. Connolly's Address to the Magistrates of Westmoreland County, at his interview with them, referred to in the preceding Letter,	263	April 4,	Letter from Æneas Mackay, Pittsburgh, to Gov. Penn. Since Connolly's return from Virginia, on the 28th of March, Pittsburgh has become a scene of confusion. Connolly arrested on the 24th of January, and in prison a few days, when he prevailed upon the Sheriff to let him out to see his friends; instead of returning to Jail, as he had promised, he assembled a party of armed men, who guarded him from Red Stone to the frontiers of Virginia. Connolly, on the 30th of March, read to the Militia, assembled at Fort Pitt, Letters from Lord Dunmore, approving his conduct, and promising him assistance. The men were assembled in obedience to Lord Dunmore's positive orders, to hear the Letters read. Connolly arrested the Sheriff the next day, by a King's Warrant, and has had, ever since, armed parties in pursuit of the Deputy Sheriff and the Constables; he is now in actual possession of the Fort, with a guard, invested with Civil and Military power to enforce the laws of Virginia--Lord Dunmore has enclosed him Commissions to fill up, at his discretion, for Militia Officers. Indians alarmed at seeing parties of armed men daily,	270
7,	Deposition of Henry Read, relative to the Disturbances made in Westmoreland County by the Virginians,	263	4,	Letter from George Croghan to David Sample: has long been convinced that Fort Pitt, and its dependencies, are without the limits of Pennsylvania,---will no longer submit to the laws of that Province; Virginia having, last Winter, extended the laws of that Government to this part of the country,	271
11,	Governour advised by the Council to take no steps in relation to the Disturbances, until the return of an Express sent to the Earl of Dunmore,	264	7,	Letter from Thomas Smith to Joseph Shippen. Disturbances in Westmoreland County. Connolly's proceedings--Officers appointed by him, under Lord Dunmore's authority,	271
21,	Express sent to Virginia returned without any Answer from the Governour,	264	8,	Representation of the Commissioners and Assessors of Westmoreland County to Gov. Penn,	273
9,	Letter from Æneas Mackay, Pittsburgh, to the Governour. Taken prisoner by Dr. Connolly, and, on refusing to give bail, ordered to be sent to Staunton,	264	13,	Letter from Thomas Smith, Bedford, to Joseph Shippen, Jun. Continued outrages of the Virginians. Three Magistrates of Westmoreland County arrested by Connolly, and now on their way to Augusta Jail,	273
21,	Letter from Devereux Smith, Pittsburgh, one of the Magistrates of Westmoreland County, arrested on a King's Warrant issued by Dr. Connolly. Will go to Jail at Staunton this day,	264
	The Council, after considering the foregomg Letters, advise the Governour to send Commissioners to the Governour of Virginia to confer with that Government on the means of restoring peace and good order, and the establishing of a temporary line of jurisdiction,	265
22,	Letter from Governour Penn to Æneas Mackay, Devereux Smith, and Andrew M'Farlane.--Will apply to Lord Dunmore for their enlargement--and has instructed Colonel Wilson to give bail, to release them from Prison at Staunton,	265	May 5,	Virginia Assembly, convened by the Governour, Speech of Lord Dunmore to General Assembly, Address of the Council to Lord Dunmore, Address of the House of Burgesses to Lord Dunmore,	274
22,	Letter from Governour Penn to William Crawford, and his Associates, of Westmoreland County. Will send Commissioners to expostulate with Lord. Dunmore on the behaviour of the persons he has invested with power to disturb the peace of the country. As the Gov-		12,	Information, by Express, of skirmishes with the Shawanese,	275
			13,	Petition from the Inhabhants on the Waters of the Ohio, to the Governour and Assembly. Prefer the Government of Virginia to that of Pennsylvania. State their grievances, their fears of the neighbouriag Indians, and request the Assembly to extend to them relief,	275

CONTENTS.

XXIX

1775

May	Address of the House of Burgesses to the Govern- our an the foregoing Petition. Disapprove the imprisoning Officers by either Government. Recommend a temporary boundary until the King shall direct a proper line to be fixed upon. Request the Governour to exercise the powers he is invested with to suppress the Indian dis- turbances, - .	276
March	"A Virginian," approving the conduct of Lord Dunmore, (Note,) -	277
26,	Letter from Pittsburgh. No disturbances with the Indians this Winter. More to be dreaded from the Pennsylvanians than the Indians. (Note,) -	277
24,	"Virginius" to Lord Dunmore. An Indian war inevitable. Urges the Governour to make pro- vision for the security of the frontier inhabi- tants and be ready to meet the Indians, (Note,) -	277
April	Connolly will be at Pittsburgh till the middle of June to dispose of lots in a new Town, to be laid out, at the Falls of the Ohio, (Note.) -	278

COUNCIL OF PENNSYLVANIA,

May	7, Mr. Tilghman and Mr. Andrew Allen appointed Commissioners to treat with Virginia, on the Disturbances in Westmoreland County, -	277
7,	Commission to Mr. Tilghman and Mr. Allen, Commissioners to Virginia, -	278
7,	Instructions to the Commissioners, - - -	279
7,	Letter from Governour Penn to Lord Dunmore. Informs him of the appointment of the Commis- sioners, and expresses his hopes that tranquil- lity may be restored between the Governments, -	280
18.	Letter from Doctor Richard Peters to Henry Wil- mot, London. History of the purchase, by Pennsylvania, under the Indian Deed of 1754, of the Lands west of the Delaware, claimed by Connecticut. The Pennsylvania purchase made openly in Council; the Susquehannah purchase, by private individuals, from Connec- ticut, made secretly. The Indians, in Council, refused to sell any land to Connecticut, and re- fused to sell the Wyomink Country to either Pennsylvania or Connecticut. Treaty at Fort Stanwix, in 1768, -	280
April	28, Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Carlisle, to Ben- jamin Chew. Colonel Stephens censured by the Council of Virginia, in 1764, for sending the Militia out of that Government, when he sent relief to Fort Pitt, then besieged by the Indians, -	282
May	5, Letter from Æneas Mackay, Staunton, to Gov- ernour Penn. Interview with Lord Dunmore in relation to the claim of Virginia to Pitts- burgh, and the proceedings of Connolly. Lord Dunmore justified Connolly, who acted by his authority. Gave Mr. Mackay a Letter to the Sheriff of Augusta, directing the discharge of the Pennsylvania Magistrates imprisoned by Connolly, -	282
April	26, Letter from Lord Dunmore, Williamsburg, to Daniel Smith, Sheriff of Augusta, directing the discharge of the Pennsylvania Magistrates, -	283
25,	Lord Dunmore's Proclamation--Directs the Mi- litia of Pittsburgh, and its dependencies, to be embodied to repel any attacks from Pennsylva- nia, or the Indians; and orders all the inhabi- tants to pay quit-rents, and all publick dues, to Officers appointed by Virginia, -	283
30,	Extract of a Journal of the United Brethren's Mission, on Muskingum-Shawanese Chief killed by the Whites, on the Ohio--Indian war expected; Virginians, on the Ohio, threaten to fall on the Shawanese settlements, and destroy their Towns. White people on the Ohio had killed nine Mingoes. At Pittsburgh it is not believed this was done by authority of the Gov- ernour of Virginia. Indian Council at Geke- lemuckepuck: Shawanese and Mingoes left it dissatisfied, and threatened to kill all the White people they met. Messenger from Mr. Crogh- an, at Pittsburgh, to the Delawares, Shawa- nese, and Mingoes, advising them to be quiet. The people there will endeavour to apprehend the Whites who committed the murder. Hopes entertained of a continuance of peace, -	283
May	21, Letter from a Missionary--More Traders arriv- ed, -	284

1774.

May	24, Letter from David Zeisburger, Missionary at Schonbrunn. Movements of the Indians: Pre- paration for war with the Whites, - -	285
27,	Letter from Mr. Zeisburger. Two parties of the Shawanese gone against the settlements. The Shawanese at Woaketameka, only want war. Lower Shawanese peaceable yet, - .	285
24,	Letter from the Cosh, alias John Bull. Three Cherokees have killed a trader. Mingoes kil- led by Virginians under Cresap, at the mouth of Yellow Creek. The day following they killed a Shawanese and a Delaware. Same party killed a Shawanese woman, and a Shaw- anese Chief; soon after fled, and left the settlers victims to the Indians. Indian Council at Woaketameka--Delaware Chief informed the Shawanese and Mingoes that the Delawares would not assist them, - - - -	285
29,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Ligonier, to Gov- ernor Penn. The Shawanese inclined to peace with the Pennsylvanians. The Virginians have struck them and they will have satisfac- tion. Met several Chiefs of the Delawares and the Deputy of the Six Nations, at Pittsburgh; they gave assurances of their desire for peace. Number of Indians killed by Cresap and Great- house, thirteen. Cresap lately at Pittsburgh, with intention to pursue the blow he had struck; but Connolly forbid his attempting any thing against the Indians. Cresap declares what he did before was by Connolly's orders. An Indian war, if not a Virginia plan, is cer- tainly Connolly's plan. Country about Pitts- burgh harassed by the Virginia Militia. Sev- eral at Pittsburgh have associated and raised, and pay a company of one hundred Rangers. inhabitants of Pittsburgh propose to stockade the Town. Delaware Indian killed by John Hinckson, and others, - - - -	286
	Speech of the Shawanese, directed to Alexander McKee, George Croghan, and the Comman- dant at Pittsburgh, Captain John Connolly, -	288
	Speech to the Chiefs of the Delawares and a few of the Six Nations, by Arthur St. Clair, at Pittsburgh, May, 1774, - - - .	288

MISCELLANEOUS CORRESPONDENCE.

May	15, Letter from General Haldimand, New-York, to the Earl of Dartmouth. The accounts receiv- ed, had made known the plan of operation in- tended to bring Boston to a sense of order and decency, so that when General Gage arrives they will know what to expect if they prove refractory. Many believe in New-York that the people of Boston will acknowledge their fault, and pay for the Tea, - - -	289
April	7, Extracts of private Letters from London, printed on the back of the Boston Port Bill, and circu- lated in New-York, on the 14th of May, en- closed to the Earl of Dartmouth, in the prece- ding Letter, - .	289
May	16, A "British American," New-York, proposes to raise by subscription money to pay for the Tea, ready to be tendered to General Gage, on his arrival. Hostile opposition to the Naval and Military Force coming out with General Gage, absurd, (Note,) -	289
NEW-YORK COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE,
May	16, New-York Committee of Correspondence, -	293
17,	Committee nominated at a Publick Meeting at the Exchange, -	293
17,	Meeting called for the 19th to approve of the Committee nominated on the 16th, - -	'294
19,	Express from Boston, with Letters from the Com- mittee of Correspondence there, suggesting the suspension of all Exports to, and Imports from, Great Britain and the West Indies, (Note,) -	293
	Meeting of the Inhabitants at the Coffee House, Address of Mr. Low to the meeting, - -	294
	The nominatlon of the fifty gentlemen for a Com- mittee, on the 16th, confirmed, and Francis Lewis added, -	295
	Address to the People, urging them to sustain Boston, (Note,) -	295
20,	Dialogue on the Boston Port Bill--Conduct of

	CONTENTS.		XXXII
1774.	the Bostonians justified - Proceedings of the Ministry condemned -- Non-Importation Agreement recommended, (Note,) - - -	295
May 23,	Isaac Low chosen Chairman of the Committee; John Alsop Deputy Chairman, - -	295
	Letter from Jonathan Blake, Chairman of the Committee of Mechanics, expressing their concurrence in the appointment of the Committee,	295
23,	Letters from Boston Committee of the 13th, and a Letter from the Philadelphia Committee read, Committee appointed to prepare an Answer to the Boston Letter, and to report this evening, -	295
	Letter to the Boston Committee reported and approved. Difficult to determine what course ought to be pursued. Cannot give a decisive opinion. Congress of Deputies from all the Colonies ought to be convened without delay. The Committee cannot express any opinion on the expedient proposed by the Boston Committee,	297
	Copy of this Letter ordered to be sent to Philadelphia, acknowledging the receipt of a copy of their Letter to Boston, and approving the sentiment contained in it, - - -	298
24,	Letter from Mr. Low, Chairman, to Philadelphia Committee,	298
30,	Rules of proceeding for the Committee adopted, Joseph Allicocke appointed Secretary, -	299
	Committee appointed to write a Circular Letter to Supervisors of Counties, recommending the appointment of persons to correspond with this Committee	299
30,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in London. Many of the principal people of the Colony are sorry for embarking in the cause so far, and are ready to join the friends of the Ministry. The Minister, with a few Ships-of-War, could carry his designs into execution, (Note,) -	299
31,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in London. General Gage hissed at a publick dinner in Boston, for giving Governour Hutchinson as a toast. Respect shown to General Gage on his landing, all hypocrisy. The Presbyterian Junto, or self-constituted Committee of Sons of Libesty of New-York, who have stood ever since the Stamp Act, offered the assistance of this City to Boston, in resisting the Parliament; in consequence of this Letter the gentlemen of property met and formed the new Committee of Fifty. There is little doubt but all will be quiet in the Colonies in a short time; the most bitter pill will be the acknowledgement of the right of Taxation in the Parliament. The presbyterians are to blame for all the violent American Proceedings. The Government at home, can only rely upon the professors of the Church of England. The Ministry have only to put an entire stop to smuggling, and make an example of some of the factious ringleaders in every principal city; then America will give but little trouble, (Note,) - - -	299
31,	Letter received from Charles Thomson, Philadelphia, in behalf of the several Congregations in that city, dated May 29, - - -	300
	Copies of Mr. Thomson's Letter furnished to the Clergymen of New-York, - - -	300
June 1,	Letter from Isaac Low, Chairman, to Charles Thomson, -	300
3,	Letter from the Committee to the Supervisors of the Counties, -	300
	Letter from New-York to a Gemleman in Scotland. The power thrown into the hands of the Mob at the Stamp Act, was not extinguished by the repeal of that Act. It was the leaders of the Mob, who associated to prevent the landing of the Tea here, and for returning it--which they deliberately effected. The Committee of Fifty was elected in opposition to these leaders, with some difficulty. The management of affairs is now in the hands of men opposed to Precipitate measures, and the Ministry will meet with little opposition, unless the Bill for the Administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay should be passed, (Note,) -	302
2,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in England. The pretensions of Great Britain will be treated with resentment and disdain throughout
1774.	the Continent. The strongest determination exists through all America to maintain and defend their rights, (Note,) -	302
June 6,	The Committee order a Letter to be written to the Boston Committee, - - -	302
4,	Anniversary of his Majesty's birth-day. Celebrated by the King's Officers, Few of the people participated in the rejoicing, (Note,) -	303
7,	Letter from the Committee to Boston Committee of Correspondence. In their former Letter did not propose a suspension of Trade. Left that and every other resolution for the discussion of the proposed General Congress--adhering to that measure as most conducive to promote the grand system of politicks we all have in view. Ready to meet at any time and place that may be appointed, giving sufficient time for Deputies as far south as the Carolinas to assemble, -	303
10,	Letter received from the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut, dated June 4, -	304
8,	Copy of a Letter from the Connecticut Committee to the Boston Committee, enclosed in the preceding Letter to New-York. A Congress absolutely necessary--Should meet by the first week in August--New-York a convenient place, but prefer Fairfield or Norwalk, -	304
10,	Committee direct Letters to be written to the Committee at Hartford, and to the Committee of South Carolina, -	305
11,	Letter to the Committee of Connecticut--Approve of the Congress, chosen to speak the sentiments, and to pledge themselves for the conduct of the Colonies they represent, -	305
11,	Letter to Mr. Bernard Looter, of Branford, -	306
24,	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence of the Assembly of New-York, to the Connecticut Committee. A Congress the best means of restoring peace and harmony with Great Britain; but this Committee have no power to take any steps in relation to the subject. If a Congress should meet in or near New-York, will assist with their advice, - - -	306
	Appointment of the Committee by the Assembly of New-York, (Note) -	305
20,	Mr. Allicocke, for particular reasons, resigned, and John Blagge appointed Secretary to the Committee in his place, - - -	307
27,	Letters received from Easthampton, dated June 17; from Philadelphia, dated June 21; and from Boston, dated June 16, - - -	307
	Mr. M'Dougall's motion on the most eligible mode of appointing Deputies to the Congress, debated and postponed to the 29th, -	307
29,	Letters from Tryon County, dated June 22, and from Southampton, dated June 22, received, -	307
	Mr. M'Dungail moved, and was seconded by Mr. Broome, that the Committee proceed immediately to nominate five Deputies for the City and County of New-York, to represent them in a Convention of the Colony, or in the General Congress, and that their names be sent to the Committee of Mechanics for their concurrence; to be proposed to the Inhabitants on Tuesday next, for their approbation, -	307
	Postponed to Monday next, July 4, - -	307
July 4,	Letters from Annapolis, dated June 26, with Resolves; from Shelter Island, dated June 7, with Resolves; from Suffolk County, dated June 25; from the Committee of Mechanics of New-York, dated July 4; also from Dutchess County, dated June 29, received, - -	308
	Mr. Booth's motion, seconded by Mr. De Lancey, for the Previous Question on Mr. M'Dougalls motion, referring the nomination of Delegates to the Committee of Mechanics for their concurrence, -	308
	Yeas and Nays on the question, - - -	308
	Mr. Bache moved, seconded by Mr. De Lancey that the Committee now proceed to nominate five persons as Delegates to meet in General Congress, -	308
	Captain Sears moved, seconded by Mr. P. V. B. Livingston, that Isaac Low, James Duane, Philip Livingston, John Morin Scott, and Alexander M'Dougall, be nominated, -	308
	Yeas and Nays on the Previous Question, on Captain Sear's motion, -	308

1774.
July 4, Mr. De Lancey moved, seconded by Mr. Booth, that the Committee immediately proceed to nominate five persons to be held up to the City and County, proper to serve them as Delegates in a General Congress, - - - - 308
Philip Livingston, John Alsop, Isaac Low, James Dumas, and John Jay, nominated, - - 308
A Publick Meeting ordered to be called at the City Hall, on the 7th, to concur in the nomination, or to choose others in their stead, - 309
5, Address to the Publick. Objections to a Congress--Advises an humble Address from each General Assembly to the King, for permission to send some of their own bodies to England to fix upon a Constitution, (Note,) - 309
Answers to the foregoing Address, (Note,) - 309
?, Letter from Jacob Lansing, dated Albany, June 29, received, - 309
Committee appointed to meet a Committee of the Mechanics to-morrow, to take the vote of the City on the five Delegates nominated by this Committee, and the five nominated by the Committee of Mechanics, - - - - 309
Mr. Thurman's motion, to disavow the Proceedings of the Meeting held in the Fields, yesterday, of which Mr. M'Dougall was Chairman, as evidently calculated to throw an odium on the Committee, and to create jealousies and suspicions of their conduct, - - - 310
Mr. M'Dougall moves for the Previous Question on Mr. Thurman's motion, - - 311
Yeas and Nays on Mr. M'Dougall's motion, 311
Yeas and Nays on Mr. Thurman's motion, 311
Mr. Lewis's motion, for a Committee to prepare Resolutions to be submitted to the People, 312
Committee appointed, - 312
Mr. M'Evers's motion, for the publication of the Proceedings on the motion of Mr. Thurman, 312
Yeas and Nays on this question, - - - 312
h, Resolutions adopted br the Meeting in the Fields referred to by Mr. Thurman. 1. That Boston is suffering in the common cause of the Colonies. 2. An invasion of the rights of one Colony is an attack upon the liberties of all. 3. The shutting up an American Port, to exact a submission to Parliamentary Taxation, is unconstitutional 4. Suspension of Trade with Great Britain till the Boston Act is repealed, will save America. 5. Delegates from New-York to the General Congress instructed to unite in a Non-Importation Agreement. 6. The Meeting will support every measure of the Congress for securing the objects mentioned in these Resolutions. 7. Provincial Convention recommended to choose Deputies to the Congress. 8. That Subscriptions be immediately set on foot for the relief of the Poor of Boston. 9. The City Committee instructed to carry these Resolutions into execution, - 312
8, Address of Francis Lewis and other Members of the Committee to the Inhabitants--their reasons for opposing Mr. Thurman's and Mr. M'Evers's motion. Withdraw from the Committee, - 313
9, Answer of "One of the Committee" to the foregoing Address--Defence of the Committee, - 314
Mr. M'Dougall declines a nomination to the Congress, (Note,) 315
Publications relative to these Preceedings, (Note,) 315
13, Committee, appointed on the 7th instant, report Resolutions, - 315
Ordered to be printed and distributed in handbills for the consideration of the Publick, who are requested to meet at the Coffee-House on the 19th, to express their opinion on them, - 315
The five Gentlemen nominated by the Committee as Delegates to die General Congress, to be proposed, to the Citizens for their approbation, at the same time and place, - 315
19, Letter from Charlestown, South Carolina, dated July 8, with Resolves, received, - - - 315
At the Meeting this day at the Coffee-House, a small portion of the Citizens only attending, the sentiments of the majority not ascertained on the Resolutions, . 315
Committee appointed to take the sense of the Freeholders, Freemen, and Tax Pavers in each Ward, on the Resolutions and the nomination of the Delegates, 315

1774 Resolutions adopted by the Committee: 1. The King of Great Britain is our rightful Sovereign; it is our duty to support his Crown and dignity. 2. All Acts of Parliament for taxing the Colonies, unjust and unconstitutional, particularly the Boston Port Act. 3. Enforcing the Taxation in the Colonies, the true motive and main design of that Act. 4. It is the duty of all the Colonies to assist any one so oppressed. 5. The meeting of the proposed Congress the most prudent measure in this alarming crisis. 6. It is premature for one Colony now to resolve what ought to be done by the Congress, who should be left free to decide on what they think best. 7. Nothing but dire necessity can justify the Colonies in uniting on any measure that may injure our brethren in Great Britain. 8. If a Non-Importation Agreement should be adopted, it ought to be general, and faithfully observed. 9. The Delegates to Congress should be so chosen as to pledge themselves for the good conduct of the People they represent, - - 315
Mr. Jay's motion, to provide for the distresses of the Poor of Boston, . 316
Committee to consider of ths means for their relief, and to report with all convenient speed, - 317
Committee to prepare Answers to the Letters received, - 3 t 7
Committee appointed to request the Committee of Mechanics to appoint persons to join those appointed by this Committee, to take the sense of the Inhabitants on the Resolutions and the Delegates, - . 3 17
July 20, Address of Mr. Alsop, Mr. Low, and Mr. Jay, to the Publick, The sense of the City so uncertain, that they do not consider themselves, or any others, duly chosen as Delegates to the Congress, - - . 317
20, Address of Mr. Moore, Mr. Low, Mr. Remsen, and Mr. Jay, to the Publick. After the rejection of the Resolutions offered by the Committee of Correspondence to the Meeting at the Coffee-House, on the 19th, they were appointed on another Committee to prepare new Resolutions. Their appoimment irregular, and decline serving. They approve, with few exceptions, of the rejected Resolutions, - - 317
23, Letter, dated Boston, July, 1774, received, - 318
Mr. Remsen's motion, that a Poll be opened in each Ward, on the 28th, for the election of five Deputies to the Congress, - - - . 318
Unanimously agreed to, 318
Committee to carry it into effect, 318
Amendment of the third Resolve, - - 318
30, Queries from Ulster County, (Note,) - - 318
26, Note from the Committee, at Mr. Marriner's, to the Delegates nominated, desiring a pledge that they will support a Non-Importation Agreement in the Congress, until the American Grievances are redressed, - - - 319
'27, Reply of Mr. Livingston, Mr. Low, Mr. Alsop, and Mr. Jay. They believe a general Non-Importation Agreement would prove the most efficacious means to procure a redress of Grievances, 319
27, In answer to this Reply, the Committee, at Mr. Marriner's, agree to support the nominated Delegates, - . 319
Letter from Charles Thomson, Philadelphia, dated July 25, with Resolves, received, - 320
28, Publication of Proceedings of yesterday, ordered, to correct a mistake in Mr. Holt's Paper, . 320
The Publication of Mr. Holt, referred to by the Committee, (Note,) 320
Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alsop, and James Duane, unanimously elected Delegates to the Congress, - 320
Committee on the distresses of the Poor in Boston will report at next meeting of the Committee, 320
26, Letter to the Committee of Correspondence at Charlestown, South Carolina. Resolutions of South Carolina much approved of. Nothing but a strict union among all the Colonies can effect a restoration of the just rights of America. Will censor in every constitutional measure for obtaining a redress of Grievances

I774.	Three sets of Resolutions published in New-York, that signed by the Chairman, adopted,	320	1774.	Importation; will discourage all Engrossers; and will decline dealing with all who attempt to defeat their Resolutions,	325
July 28,	Letter to the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia. After various contests on the appointment of Delegates, regular polls have been opened in each Ward in the City, which has given universal satisfaction. Letters sent to the several Counties of the Province requesting their co-operation- Resolves and Instructions of the Provincial Committee of Pennsylvania, much approved, - - -	321	Nov. 7	Committee appointed to inquire what progress has been made in Collections far the Poor of Boston, -	328
28,	Letter to Matthew Tilghman, Chairman of Committee for Maryland. Resolutions of Maryland much approved. The 1st of September proposed by Massachusetts for the meeting of Congress. agreed to by Eastern Colonies, except New-Hampshire, from whence no communication has been received on the present state of affairs,	321		Meeting of the Citizens called to appoint Committees of Inspection, agreeably to the Continental Association, -	329
29,	Letter sent to the Committee or Treasurer of the different Counties in the Province. Suggests the expediency of electing Delegates to Congress in the several Counties speedily; or to express their confidence in the Delegates elected in the City, -	322	14,	Letter to Daniel Dunscomb, Chairman of the Committee of Mechanicks. Requests a Conference with that Committee on the appointment of Committees of Inspection, -	329
Augt. 7,	Letter from Elisabethtown, dated August 5th, received,	322		Contributors for the Poor of Boston, in the several Counties, requested to transmit their Donations as speedily as possible to New-York,	329
	Committee appointed to answer a Letter from Boston, and to wait on the Chairman of the Mechanicks' Committee, to request the Boston Letter to them, -	322	15,	Committtee, after their Conference with the Committee of Mechanicks, consider their body dissolved on the election of a Committee under the Association of Congress, - - -	330
	Committee appointed to procure Collections to relieve the poor of Boston; and to request the assistance of the Committee of Mechanicks in making the subscriptions, - -	322		Election of new Committee of Sixty ordered, on the 22d instant, -	330
	Election of Delegates in Orange and Albany Counties, (Note,) -	322	22,	The new Committee of Sixty elected, -	330
9,	Letter to the Committee of Correspondence, of Boston. Explain the cause of their omission to write, and express their regret that the rectitude of their intentions are doubted. Appeal to their Acts, Letters, and Resolves, to show their attachment to the general cause. Defend the Merchants against the charge of want of patriotism, made against them, in the Letter to the Committee of the Mechanicks. Request to be furnished with copies of the Letters that have given rise to the suspicions, The distresses of the Poor of Boston have engaged the earnest attention of the Committee, -	323	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
9,	Letter to the severat Counties of the Province. Urges them to contribute for the relief of the Poor of Boston. The interest and welfare of a whole Continent requires that provision should be made for all sufferers in the common cause,	323	May 10,	The Port Bill received at Boston, (Note,) -	331
22,	Letter from Suffolk County, dated August 11, received. Colonel William Floyd elected a Delegate for that County, - - -	324	13,	General Gage arrived at Boston, (Note,) -	331
	Business of the ensuing Congress discussed, in presence of the Delegates, (Note,) -	324	18,	Town Meeting in Boston--Advise the stoppage of all Imports from, and all Exports to, Great Britain and the West Indies, till the Port Bill is repealed, - .	331
29,	Letter to Zephaniah Platt, Dutchess County. Delegates chosen in the City approved,	324		This vote ordered to be sent to all the Colonies, Committee appointed to consider what measures are proper for the Town to adopt, in the present emergency, -	331
	Letters received from Kingston, August, 19; New-Windsor, August 26; Bedford, August 9; Mamaroneck, August 7; and White Plains, August 27, approving the Delegates chosen for the City, - .	325	14,	Committee appointed to consult with Salem and Marblehead, ..	331
Sept. 3,	Reported attack on Boston, on the 2d, (Note,) -	325	16,	Paul Revere despatched with Letters to the Southern Colonies, (Note,) - - -	331
5,	Letters from Albany August 27, and Poughkeepsie, August 31, approving the Resolves and Delegates for New-York, - - -	326	17,	Election of Committee of Fifty at New-York, to correspond with the Colonies, on all matters of moment, -	293
19,	Letter from Isaac Low, Philadelphia, received, Committee appointed to write to Richmond, Kings, Queens, and Tryon Counties, requesting them to send Delegates to the Congress now sitting, or to approve of those now there, for the Province of New-York, - - -	326	18,	General Gage landed in Boston. Sworn into office as Governour, and invited to a publick entertainment at Faneuil Hall, (Note,) -	331
29,	Representation from a number of Inhabitants, signed by Joseph Totten, their President, -	326	18,	Meeting at Faneuil Hall, Boston, recommend to the People patience, fortitude, and a firm trust in God, -	331
30,	Committee call a Meeting of the Inhabitants at the City-Hall, this day, to consider Mr. Totton's Representation, - - -	326		Votes passed at thls Meeting, - - -	332
	Conduct of the persons complained of in the Representation, condemned, - - -	327	17,	Letter received in Boston from Philadelphia. Boston need not expect general support from the other Colonies, In Pennsylvania they will find none, -	332
Oct. 5,	Meeting of Importers called to consider advances upon Goods imported, - - -	328	18,	Letter from Samuel Adams, Boston, to Arthur Lee, London, Injustice and barbarity of the Port Bill. The Inhabitants view it with indignation. Have resolved upon a Non-Importation. Calmness, courage, and unanimity prevail. Suspect studied insult in the appointment of General Gage, - - -	332
7,	Importers agree not to put unreasonable advances on Goods, from the apprehension of a Non-		19,	Letter from General Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. Occurrences at Boston, on his arrival. The Committee from Boston to Salem and Marblehead received little encouragement. The Port Bill has staggered the most presumptuous. The Assembly may be more inclined to comply with the King's expectation at Salem, where they will be moved after the first of June, -	333
			17,	Town Meeting at Providence, Rhode-Island- Will unite with the other Colonies in measures for protecting and securing their rights. Recommend a Congress of all the Colonies and Provinces, for establishing the firmest union between them. All the English American Colonies equally interested in the Proceedings of Parliament against Boston. Recommend the stoppage of all Trade with Great Britain, Ireland, Africa, and the West Indies. -	333
			18,	Meeting at Chestertown, Maryland, on the importatlon of Dutiable Tea in the Geddes. No Taxes or Duties can be constitutionally imposed without our consent. The Duty on

1774.	Tea unconstitutional. Whoever imports, buys, or sells it, stigmatized as enemies to America,	334
May 18,	Address to the Freemen of America. Conduct of Great Britain towards America, a system of oppression, Life, liberty, and property, are now but names in America. New-York, Philadelphia, and Charlestown cannot escape the fate of Boston. An union of the Colonies will render harmless British vengeance and tyranny. Virtue, unanimity, and perseverance, are invincible,	335
19,	Publick Meeting at Farmington, Connecticut.-- Liberty Pole erected, and Boston Port Bill burnt by the common hangman,	336
19.	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, at Westerly, to the Committee of Boston. Treatment of Boston by Great Britain worse than that of Carthage by Rome. The attack upon Boston, an attempt upon the whole Continent. The other Colonies will unite with the friends of liberty, in Boston, in support of the common cause,	336
19,	Letter from the Committee of Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, to the Boston Committee. The British Ministry are endeavouring to disunite the Colonies, that they may put down their opposition. A firm union of all the Colonies will prevent the cruel effects of the Port Bill,	337
	Letter to Lord North, attributed to Edmund Burke. The rights of the Crown, and the rights of the Colonies, under various Charters and Grants.	337
20,	Letter from a Member of the Virginia Assembly, Williamsburg, to his Correspondent in London. Resentment in Virginia, on account of the War sent to Boston. It is the universal determination to stop the principal Exports to, and all the Imports from, Great Britain. The Assembly, now in session, will agree on measures to be adopted, before they adjourn,	340
20,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Philadelphia.-- Committee of Correspondence appointed,	340
21,	Letter from the Committee of Philadelphia to the Boston Committee. It is difficult to collect the sense of the People, or to advise what ought to be done, on this crisis. The general sense of this Province, and of all the Colonies, should be obtained. If satisfying the East India Company for the Tea would end the controversy, there would be no hesitation on what ought to be done. A Congress from all the Colonies, preferred by the People of Pennsylvania, to a Non-Importation and Non-Exportation Agreement. Will endeavour to collect the sense of Pennsylvania, and the neighbouring Colonies, on these important points,	341
20,	Questions and Answers, on paying for the Tea, (Note.)	295
23,	Letter from Gouverneur Morris, New-York, to Mr. Penn. Philadelphia. Proceedings in New-York, on the appointment of the Committee. His opinions on the state of parties in New-York. A safe compact for re-union with the parent state, is to leave internal Taxation to the Colonies, and to vest the regulation of Trade in Great Britain. His reasons for this as the only possible mode of re-union,	343
29,	Town Meeting at Newport, Rhode-Island.-- The Boston Port Bill subversive of American Liberty. The same authority may destroy the Trade of every other Colony. Will unite with the other Colonies, in all proper measures, to place the rights of each on a permanent foundation, and particularly in a stoppage of all Trade with Great Britain and the West Indies,	343
	Company at Newport for carrying on Woollen Manufactures in the Colony. Wool enough raised to clothe all the Inhabitants, (Note.)	344
20,	Letter from General Gage to Governour Trumbull. Informs him of his appointment as Governour of Massachusetts, and expresses his readiness to co-operate for the good of his Majesty's service,	344
21,	Letter from the Boston Committee, in reply to one from sundry Gentlemen in New-York. Thanks for their unsolicited offer of assistance. Letters countermanding orders for Goods sent

1774.	by a vessel yesterday for London. The friends of Government, in Boston, procuring signers to an Address to Governour Hutchinson, and are endeavouring to raise money to pay for the Tea,	344
May 23,	Intelligence received at Philadelphia from Pittsburgh. On the 26th of April, two Indian, killed on the Ohio, near Wheeling. Michael Cresap believed to be concerned in the murder. Cresap had previously declared he would kill every Indian he met on the River; and if he could get a sufficient number of men, he would mark a Village on Yellow Creek. Another party of Indians attacked by Cresap. Great-House and Baker cut off a party at Yellow Creek,	345
23,	Letter from the New-York Committee to the Boston Committee. Advise a General Congress of all the Colonies, to be assembled without delay; and some unanimous resolution formed, not only respecting the deplorable circumstances of Boston, but for the security of our common rights,	297
23,	Address of the Episcopal Ministers and Wardens, in Boston, to Governour Hutchinson,	346
	Governour Hutchinson's Answer,	346
24,	Address of the Justices of the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, for the County of Suffolk, Massachusetts, to Governour Gage,	346
	The Governour's Answer,	347
24,	Letter from Philadelphia to the Boston Committee. The cause of Boston the cause of all the Colonies. Must be supported against the whole strength of Great Britain. By sea they will beat us; by land they will not attempt us. We must suspend all Trade with Great Britain and the West Indies, and withhold Flax-seed from Ireland. Stopping our Ports entirely, contemplated. We shall try to convene a Congress as soon as possible,	347
24,	Meeting at Talbot Court House, Maryland, to consider the distresses of Boston. Determined to pursue every constitutional measure to avert the evils threatened by the, Boston Port Bill; to support the common rights of America, and to promote union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies,	347
o4,	Letter from the New-York Committee to the Philadelphia Committee,	298
24,	Letter I, to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies in America, on the present disputes with Great Britain,	348

HOUSE OF BURGESSES OF VIRGINIA.

May 24,	Resolution of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, setting apart the first day of June to be observed, by the Members of the House, as a day of Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer,	350
26,	Assembly of Virginia dissolved by Lord Dunmore,	350
27,	Association agreed to and signed by eighty-nine Members of the late House of Burgesses of Virginia,	350
29,	Members of the late House of Burgesses remaining in Town convened by Peyton Randolph; who, on considering the important Letters received this day, by express, from Boston, Philadelphia, and Annapolis, ordered the other Members near the City to be called together,	351
80,	Twenty-five Members met, and unanimously agreed to postpone the further consideration of the subject to the first of August; when it is expected a Non-Importation Agreement will be entered into, and Resolutions to suspend, at some future day, Exports to Great Britain,	351
June 1,	Divine Service, at Williamsburg, in compliance with the Resolution of the Burgesses, of the 24th of May, (Note.)	351

CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.

May 29,	Letter from Lord Dunmore, Williamsburg, to the Earl of Dartmouth. Resolution of the House of Burgesses to deny and oppose the authority of Parliament offered by Robert Carter Nicholas, Treasurer of the Province. Dissolved the Assembly, with the unanimous
---------	--	--

1774.	consent of the Council. Will not call another till he hears from the Earl of Dartmouth. Many of the dissolved Members state that if the full force of the Resolution had been adverted to, it would have met with strong opposition,	352
May 26,	Meeting at Annapolis, Maryland. The suffering of Boston, the common cause of America. A stoppage of Trade with Great Britain will preserve North America and her Liberties. Gentlemen of the Law in the Province should bring no suit for the recovery of a debt due to an Inhabitant of Great Britain, until the Boston Port Act be repealed. The Inhabitants of Annapolis will, and the Province ought, immediately to break off all Trade with the Colony or Province which shall refuse to adopt similar Resolutions with a majority of the Colonies. Committee appointed to unite with others of the Province, to effect an Association to secure American Liberty,	352
26,	Objections to the Proceedings at the Meeting at Annapolis, on the 24th,	353
27,	Another Meeting, held at Annapolis, confirmed the Resolutions passed on the 24th,	353
30,	Protest of a number of Inhabitants of Annapolis against the Resolution adopted on the 27th, against bringing suits for debts due to Persons residing in Great Britain,	353
	Letter from Daniel Dulany, Jun., Annapolis, to Arthur Lee. Notice of the Proceedings on the 24th. He opposed one of the Resolutions. The Resolutions are not to be obligatory until they are agreed to by a majority of the Colonies, and the several Counties of this Province, Resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives of the English Colony of Connecticut	355
	1. The King of Great Britain recognised as their lawful Sovereign,	355
	2. The Inhabitants of the Colony have all the rights and privileges of Subjects born within the Realm of England,	355
	3. The Assembly of the Colony the only lawful Representatives thereof,	356
	4. It is the right of the Inhabitants of the Colony to be governed only by their own Assembly, in Taxing and Internal Police,	356
	5. Admiralty Courts, with extraordinary powers, destructive of the rights of the People of the Colony,	356
	6. Carrying Persons beyond the Sea, for Trial, unconstitutional, and subversive of the rights of the Colony,	356
	7. A Port can only be shut up by the Legislature of the Colony in which it is situated,	356
	8. Closing the Port of Boston, by Act of Parliament, inconsistent with the rights and liberties of the Colonies in America,	356
	9. Whenever his Majesty's service shall require the aid of this Colony, it will be granted,	356
	10. The well-being and security of the Colony depends on its connection with Great Britain,	356
	11. It is our duty, by all lawful means, to defend and preserve our rights and liberties,	357
25,	Meeting of Assembly of Massachusetts, Counsellors elected,	357
26,	Counsellors rejected by the Governour, Governour's Speech to both Houses. Informs them that after the first of June, in compliance with the King's particular commands, the General Court will be held at Salem,	357
25,	Address presented to Governour Hutchinson, by sundry Gentlemen of Marblehead, Governour Hutchinson's Answer,	358
June 3,	Declaration of Marblehead, relative to the Address from sundry Inhabitants of the Town to Governour Hutchinson; unanimously voted at a legal Town Meeting,	359
	NEW-HAMPSHIRE ASSEMBLY,
May 27,	Assembly of New-Hampshire authorize the enlistment of three Men, to be posted at his Majesty's Fort, William and Mary, under the command of one Officer, Message from Governour Wentworth to the Assembly. He does not think it safe to entrust so important a Fortress to the care and defence of three Men and one Officer,	360

1774.	Committee appointed by the Assembly of New-Hampshire, to correspond with the Committees in the other Colonies,	361
May 28,	The Speaker directed to answer such Letters as he may receive from the other Colonies relative to the Difficulties between Great Britain and the Colonies, and to assure them that this Assembly will join them in all measures for saving the rights of America,	361
	The Governour authorized to enlist five Men for Fort William and Mary,	361
	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
May 28,	Address of Merchants and Traders of the Town of Boston, presented to Governour Hutchinson, Answer of Governour Hutchinson,	362
24,	Protest of the Merchants and Traders of the Town of Boston, unanimously voted, at a full Meeting, against a Paper called an Address to Governour Hutchinson, handed about, and signed, in a private manner,	362
29,	Address presented to Governour Hutchinson, by several Gentlemen of the Law,	363
	Answer of Governour Hutchinson,	363
30,	Letter from Bedford, Pennsylvania. Alarms on the Frontiers on account of the Indians. A party of the Shawanese out, it is supposed to attack some part of Virginia,	364
30,	"Join or Die!" An Appeal to the People to unite in resisting the Parliament, and supporting Boston,	364
30,	Address from the Magistrates of Middlesex County, Massachusetts, to Governoar Hutchinson, Mr. Hutchinson's Answer,	365
30,	A Meeting of a number of Persons of all societies in Philadelphia, determine to suspend all business on the first of June, the day the Boston Port Bill takes effect, (Note.)	365
30,	Committee of the Society of Quakers inform the Publick that no person was authorized to represent them at the Meeting for suspending business on the first of June,	365
June 1,	People of Philadelphia, except the Friends, suspend all business; nine-tenths shut up their houses. The Bells were rang muffled; and Vessels in the Port had their Colours half hoisted, (Note.)	365
6,	Rector of Christ's Church, Philadelphia, acquaints the Publick that the Bells of that Church were not rang, on the 1st, with his knowledge or approbation; he specially directed there should be no observance of that day in any of the Churches under his care, (Note.)	365
May 30,	Queen Anne County, Maryland, Resolutions. The cause of Boston, the common cause of America; all legal means should be adopted to procure the repeal of the Boston Port Bill. All commercial intercourse with Great Britain should be stopped until that Act is repealed, and the right assumed by Parliament, for taxing America, in all cases whatsoever, be given up. Committee of Correspondence and Intercourse appointed,	366
30,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in London, (Note.)	299
31,	Baltimore County, Maryland, Resolutions. The duty of every Colony in America to unite to obtain a repeal of the Boston Port Bill. This County will join with the Province to stop Trade with Great Britain and the West Indies. Provincial Congress recommended; to be held at Annapolis. Maryland should break off all intercourse with any Colony who shall refuse to come into similar Resolutions with a majority of the Colonies. Committee of Correspondence appointed,	366
31,	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth. An Express despatched to Philadelphia, from Boston, with a proposal to stop all Trade with Great Britain. In consequence of this a Meeting was held, where the matter was considered and debated. It was resolved to petition the Governour to convene the General Asssmbty on the occasion. Should so affrontive an application be made, will treat it as it deserves,	367

XLI	CONTENTS.	XLII
1774.		1774.
May 31,	Letter from Governour Franklin, Burlington, to the Earl of Dartmouth. Difficult to foresee what will be the consequences of the Boston Port Act. The Merchants of New-York and Philadelphia, though inclined to co-operate with Boston, unwilling to enter into a General Non-Importation and Non-Exportation Agreement. A Congress has been proposed, but whether it will take place is uncertain, - 368	June 2,
31,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in London, (Note,) 299	Letter received in Philadelphia from a Gentleman in Boston. Closing the Port. Proposition to pay for the Tea. General Gage ordered the removal of the Province Money from Boston to Salem. Treasurer refused to comply, - 380
31,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. Doubtful whether the other Colonies will give Boston any thing but good words. The violent seem to break, and the People to fall off from them. The Assembly hurrying through their business, to avoid meeting at Salem, were suddenly adjourned by him to meet there on the 7th of June. The Officers of the Customs leave Boston to-morrow, and the Admiral has stationed his Ships. No design has yet appeared, of opposing the Act. Many wish for the arrival of the Troops; People will speak openly then, which they now dare not do, - 368	2,
31,	Letter from John Scollay, Boston, to Arthur Lee. Injurious effects that will be felt by the whole Province from the Boston Port Bill. Although it was intended to ruin the Town, yet out of this management of Lord North's, instead of despotism and tyranny over the Colonies, a foundation for peace and harmony with Great Britain will be laid. The Colonies do not wish for Independence, and they are too valuable for the Crown to part with, - 369	2,
31,	Information of the Boston Port Bill received with indignation at Charlestown, S. Carolina, 370	Letter from the Committee of Norfolk, Virginia, to the Balthonre Committse. The late Acts of Parliament viewed as fatal to the liberties of the Colonies, and as a publick robbery of our rights. The policy of attacking a Town or Province singly, will never so delude, as to disunite us from a joint and universal opposition of all British America, - 371
31,	Letter from the Norfolk, Virginia, Committee, to the Committee at Charlestown, South Carolina. The time has come when the closest union is necessary. The Boston Port Bill is an attack upon the liberties of us all. We look to Charlestown as among those to take the lead in the general establishment of the rights of the Colonies. Fear Boston will sink under the weight of their misfortunes. Approve of the expediency of a Congress. If, after all, the India Company must be reimbursed, every freeman will cheerfully join in the general expense, - 370	3,
June 1,	Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden, New-York, to the Earl of Dartmouth. At the time the Boston Port Bill was received in New-York, the men who called themselves the Committee, were, many of them, of the lower rank, and all the warmest zealots of those called the Sons of Liberty. The principal Inhabitants, at a meeting held after the Port Act was published, dissolved this Committee and appointed a new One, of the prudent people of the city. No Resolutions have yet been adopted by this Colony, - 372	Letter from the Committee of Norfolk, Virginia, to the Boston Committee. Are not indifferent spectators of the distresses of Boston, under the cruel exertion of British power. Observed the first of June as a day of fasting and prayer. Consider Boston as suffering in the common cause, and feel bound by the most solons and sacred ties to support them in every measure to regain their rights and privileges, - 371
1,	Letter from Major General Haldimand, New-York, to the Earl of Dartmouth. Since the late vigorous measures of Parliament, the loyal Inhabitants fear not to disapprove the rash proceedings of their Countrymen. This has prevented the passage of Resolutions to stop Trade with Great Britain and the West Indies, - 373	3,
1,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in Scotland, (Note,) 302	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to General Gage. Encloses Acts for the better government of, and the administration of Justice in Massachusetts Bay. The King has nominated thlrty-six persons for the Council of Massachusetts. Mr. Oliver, of Cambridge, appointed Lieutenant Governour. Instructions. Violences must be resisted with firmness. The Acts of Parliament must be obeyed throughout the whole Empire, - 380
1,	Fredericksburg, Virginia, Resolutions. Will concur in every proper measure adopted by the Colonies respecting Boston. Committee of Correspondence appointed, - 373	3,
1,	Letter II, to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies in America. An examination of the Acts relating to America, - 374	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut to the Committee of Correspondence for Boston. The Assembly at their session, which closed this day, came to Resolutions relative to their rights and privileges. Resolves of Colonies will. have more weight than those of the Merchants of separate Towns; and measures recommended by the whole united Colonies will have still greater weight and influence, - 304
1,	An Address to all the English Colonies of North America. Effects and consequences of the Boston Port Bill, - 377	4,
2,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Kent County, Maryland. Committee of Correspondence appointed Delegates to the Provincial Congress at Annapolis, chosen. Collections made for the suffering Poor of Boston, - 379	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut to the New-York Committee, enclosing a copy of the preceding Letter, which they have also sent to Rhode-Island and New-Hampshire, - 304
2,	Letter from a Member of the Assembly of New-Jersey. Meeting of a Committee at New-Brunswick. Will do whatever may be sen-	4,
		The King's birth-day. Not a house illuminated at Charlestown; no demonstrations of joy, (Note,) 382 4,
		Address to the People of Charlsstown, South Carolina, 382
		4,
		Anne Arundel County, Maryland, Resolutions. Duty of all the Colonies to unite for obtaining a repeal of the Boston Port Bill. A stoppage of Trade with Great Britain and the West Indies the most effectual means to obtain a repeal. Provincial Congress recommended: Members for Anne Arnndel County appointed Questions submitted to the consideration of the Committee for Anne Arnndel County, (Note,) 385
		4,
		Letter received at New-York from a Gentleman of Philadelphia. Some of the friends of Boston here are too warm, and wish to push all things into confusion. Our Letter, {of May 21.) moderate, yet warm and firm enough, - 386 4,
		Letter from Joseph Johnson, an Indian of the Mohegan Tribe, to Jonathan Trumbull, Governour of Connecticut, - 386
		6,
		Letter from the Earl of Dunmore, Williamsburg, to the Earl of Dartmouth, Cannot tell to what lengths the People of Virginia will be induced to proceed. Members of the late House of Burgesses, after the arrival of the Boston messenger, called a meeting of the People, and proposed to them to agree to the violent measures adopted at Annapolis, which, that they may be more solemnly entered into, have deferred the execution of it to the first day of August, when all the Members of the late House of Burgesses are required to attend, 387 6,
		Meeting of the Freeholders, Merchants and other Inhabitants of the County of Prince

1774.	William, and Town of Dumfries, in the Colony of Virginia,	388
June 6,	Letter from Phiadelphia to a Gentleman in Boston. Reasons why Boston should not pay for the Tea,	388
6,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Township of Lower Freehold, in the County of Monmouth, in New-Jersey, -	390
6,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Norwich, in the Colony of Connecticut, legally warned and convened,	390
7,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Essex County, New-Jersey, called,	391
7,	Letter from the Committee of New-York to the Committee of Correspondence in Boston,	303
7,	Offer by the Merchants and Traders of Marblehead, of their Stores and Wharves, to their oppressed brethren of Boston, during the operation of the Boston Port Bill, -	391
8,	Petition of sundry Inhabitants of the Province of Pennsylvania to Governour Penn, to call together the Assembly, on occasion of the late Act of Parliament respecting the Town of Boston, -	391
	Answer of the Governour. Does not think it expedient or consistent with his duty, -	391
8,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Frederick, in Virginia, and Gentlemen practising at the Bar, held in Winchester, -	392
8,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth. Took pains to prevail upon the Assembly not to enter into extra Provincial measures yet. Committees of Correspondence were appointed. They were adjourned immediately, and, since then, kept under short adjournments, in hopes to obtain a suspension of their votes. Dissolved the Assembly this day,	393
8,	Message from Governour Wentworth to the Assembly of New-Hampshire. Measures entered into by the House inconsistent with his Majesty's service. His duty to prevent any detriment that might arise from such Proceedings; therefore dissolves the Assembly, -	394
8,	Express at Williamsburg from Pittsburgh. Shawanese have declared war against the Whites,	394
8,	Letter III, to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies in America,	394
	Letter to the Author of the Letters to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies in America, -	395
8,	Address of the Boston Committee sent to the People of every Town in the Province, with the Covenant, -	397
	Form of the Covenant sent to every Town in Massachusetts,	397
8,	Address of Merchants, Traders, and others, of Boston, presented to Governour Gage, at Salem,	398
	Governour Gage's Answer, -	399
8,	Resolutions of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts. Convening the General Assembly at any other, place than Boston, unnecessarily, a great Grievance, -	399
9,	Answer of the House of Representatives to the Speech of Governour Gage, at the opening of the Session,	400
9,	Answer of the Council to the Governour's Speech,	400
13,	Committee of the Council presented the Address to the Governour. The Chairman not permitted to read it through, -	401
13,	Message of Governour Gage to the Council. His reason for refusing to receive the Address. Considers it an insult to the King, and an affront to himself,	401
11,	Address of Merchants and others, Inhabitants of Salem, to Governour Gage,	401
	Answer of the Governour, -	402
11,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Harford County, Maryland, -	402
11,	Meeting of the Freemen in the lower part of Frederick County, Maryland,	403
11,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Essex, New-Jersey, -	403
11,	Letter from the New-York Committee to the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut,	305
11,	Letter from the New-York Committee to Bernard Lintot, The hints he has furnished very pro-

1774.	per for the consideration of a General Congress of Deputies from the different Colonies; what can or will be done, must be submitted to the wisdom of their united Councils, -	306
June 13,	Letter from Norwich, in England, to a Gentleman in New-York. Distresses of Manufacturers in England, in consequence of the measures of Parliament towards America,	404
13,	Intelligence at Williamsburg, Virginia. War with the Indians,	405
13,	Meeting of Mechanicks at Philadelphia, held on Thursday evening, the 9th, -	405
13,	Letter from George Clymer, Philadelphia, to Josiah Quincy, Jun. New-York and Pennsylvania object to the suspension of Trade proposed by Boston. Pennsylvania appears determined on the Congress. General Subscription opened for relief of Boston,	406
13,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Parish of South-Haven, in the County of Suffolk, New-York, -	407
13,	Meeting of the General Committee, Charlestown, South Carolina. General Meeting of the Colony called, to consider of the steps proper to be taken in consequence of the late hostile Act of the British Parliament against Boston,	408
13,	Letter from Charlestown, South Carolina, to a Gentleman of New-York. Merchants now generally in favour of Non-Importation, -	408
14,	Letter from Charlestown, South Carolina, to Philadelphia. Charlestown will join in whatever New-York and Philadelphia may adopt,	408
14,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Charles County, Maryland, -	409
15,	Letter IV, to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies in America, -	410
15,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Borough of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, -	415
15,	Resolutions of the General Assembly of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations. Firm and inviolable union of all the Colonies absolutely necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties. Delegates to the Continental Congress appointed--Instructions to the Delegates, -	416
16,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Dunmore, Virginia, -	417
16,	The British American, No. 4, -	418
17,	Writs for an election of a new Assembly ordered by the Governour and Council of Virginia, -	419
17,	Address to the Gentlemen, Freeholders, and others, in the County of New-Castle, upon Delaware. Enumeration of Grievances. Meeting of the Inhabitants of the County recommended, -	419
17,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of East-Hampton, in the County of Suffolk, New-York, -	420
17,	Resolutions of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts. A Congress highly expedient and necessary, to consult upon the present state of the Colonies, Delegates on the part of the Province appointed. Discontinuance of the use of India Teas, and of the use of all Goods and Manufactures imported from the East Indies and Great Britain, recommended. Encouragement of American Manufactures, recommended, -	421
17,	The General Assembly dissolved by Governour Gage, -	422
17,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the Town of Boston, -	423
	None at the Meeting in favour of paying for the Tea, (Note,)	423
	All the Colonies in motion. Subscriptions for support of Boston Poor, (Note,) -	423
18,	Address of Merchants and Freeholders of Salem, to Governour Gage, -	424
	Answer of the Governour, -	425
18,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Caroline County, Maryland, -	425
18,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Freemen of the City and County of Philadelphia, -	426
	Speech of the Reverend William Smith at the Meeting, -	427
18,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Chester, Pennsylvania, -	428
18,	Letter from Governour Franklin, Burlington, to

1774.	the Earl of Dartmouth. Transmits a copy of the Resolutions adopted at the Meeting in Essex County. Has refused to convene the Assembly in August. The other Counties are expected to follow the example of Essex; but it is doubtful whether they will agree to a general Non-Importation. Their principal aim seems to be a Congress, - - - -	428
June 19,	Letter from Fort Pitt to Philadelphia. Connolly refused protection to three Shawanese who had escorted the Traders in with their Peltry; Sent a party to out them off. Logan returned to the Shawanese Towns with thirteen Scalps, -	428
19,	Letter from Boston to New-York. Attempts to procure an Agreement to pay for the Tea, defeated, -	430
20,	Address to the Inhabitants of the Province of South Carolina, -	430
20,	Letters from southern parts of North Carolina. Inhabitants there, recommend that Collections be set on foot throughout the Continent for relief of the most distressed in Boston, -	433
29,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Frederick County, Maryland, -	433
20,	Letter from John Dickinson, Fairhill, to Josiah Quincy, Jun. The Colonies very unanimous in favour of a Congress, - - - -	434
'20,	"An American." On the means of obtaining relief, -	434
'21,	Letter from Cave Cumberland. Indian War caused by Cresap and Greathouse, - -	435
21,	Meeting of the Justices, Gemlemen of the Bar, and principal Inhabitants of Northampton County, Pennsylvania, - - - -	435
22,	Letter from England to a Gemlematt in New-York. State of affairs in England, - -	436
22,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Westmoreland, in Virginia, -	437
22,	Maryland Convention. Delegates to the Convention. Resolutions.--Duty of every Colony to unite against Boston Port Bill. Should stop Trade with Great Britain if the Act is not repealed. Instructions to Deputies to the Congress. Subscriptions to be opened in the several Counties for distressed Inhabitants of Boston. Deputies to the Congress appointed. Will break off Trade with the Colony, Province or Town, that shall refuse to unite in such measures as may be adopted by the Congress, -	438
22,	Reflections on appointing Delegates to the General Congress. Different modes of appointing examined. The appointment by Provincial Conventions recommended, - -	441
22,	Letter from the General Association of Congregational Ministers in Connecticut, to the Clergymen in Boston, - - - -	442
	Answer to the preceding Letter; prepared but not sent, through the confusion of the times, -	443
22,	Address of the Justices of the County of Worcester, in Massachusetts, to Governour Gage, Answer of the Governour, - - - -	445
23,	Letters from Fort Pitt. White Inhabitants killed by the Indinns, -	445
23,	Extract from the Proceedings of the Town of Winddam, in Connecticut. Addresses to Governuour Hutchinson, an insult to the Town of Boston, -	445
23,	Letter ffrom Richard Henry Lee to Samuel Adams. His Resolutions prepared to be offered the day before the Assembly was dissolved by Lord Dunmore. After the dissolution, proposed to the Members the plan of a Congress, Indian War has compelled the Governour to call a new Assembly. When they meet, will adopt measures for redress of Grievances, -	445
	Letter from Samuel Adams to Richard Henry Lee. Inhabitants of Boston encouraged to persevere by intelligence from every part of the Continent. Lord North has made no preparation for the effects of such an union, -	447
24,	Address to the Publick, from the Committee of Charlestown, South Carolina, appointed to receive and forward Donations for the Poor of Boston, -	448
24,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Spottsylvania County, Virginia, - -	448

1774.	Extracts of Letters received in Philadelphia, from
June 24,	Pittsburgh. Connolly's proceedings against the Pennsylvanians, - - - -	449
24,	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence appointed by the Assembly of New-York, to the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut, -	306 ,
25,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Bergen, in the Province of New-Jersey, -	450
26,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. The General Court dissolved by Proclamation outside of the door. Several Gentlemen, encouraged by the late Resolutions of Government, are endeavouring to procure a compliance with the Boston Port Bill. Neither New-York, Philadelphia, nor Boston will agree to a Non-Importation, though a Congress of some sort may be obtained. The arrival of Troops has given spirits to the friends of Government, -	450
27,	Peace Talk from the Creek Indians sent to Augusta, Georgia. General Meeting of all the Warriors of the Creek Nation called. The Cherokees have engaged to join the Creeks in case of War, -	451
27,	Meeting of the Committee of Correspondence of Norfolk and Portsnmuth, in Virginia, -	451
27,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Morris, in the Province of East New-Jersey, -	452
27,	Letter from Huntington, to a Gentleman in New-York. Enclosing Resolutions unanimously adopted in Town Meeting, - - -	453
21,	General Town Meeting of the Inhabitants of Huntington, in Suffolk County, New-York, -	453
27,	Letter from Captain John Connolly, Pittsburgh, to a Gentleman in Philadelphia. Has sent a detachment to protect the Settlements about Red Stone from the Shawanese, -	454

COUNCIL OF PENNSYLVANIA.

June 27,	Meeting of the Council, at Philadelphia, -	454
17,	Report of James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Commissioners appointed by the Honourable John Penn, Esq., Governour of Pennsylvania, to treat with the Right Honourable the Earl of Dunmore, Governour of Virginia, on sundry publick matters, -	454
May 23,	Letter from James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Williamsburg, to Lord Dunmore, - -	455
24,	Letter from Lord Dnnmore, Williamsburg, to James Tilghman and Andrew Alien, -	456
25,	Letter from James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Williamsburg, to Lord Dunmore, -	457
26,	Letter from Lord Dunmore, Williamsburg, to James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, -	459
27,	Letter from James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Williamsburg, to Lord Dunmore, - -	461
June 28,	Letter from Governour Penn, Philadelphia, to Sir William Johnson. Requests his interposition and influence to induce the Six Nations to become mediators between Peunsylvania and the Shawanese and Delawares, - .	461
28,	Letter from Governour Penn to Lord Dunmore. Danger of a general Indian War, unless Pennsylvania and Virginia prevent further progress of hostilities. Conduct of Doctor Connolly; his Military operations dangerous to the peace of the Colonies in general. Hopes Lord Dunmore does not encourage Connolly in the outrages laid to his charge, - - .	461
28,	Letter from Governour Penn to Arthur St. Clair. Measures should be taken to prevent the removal of the White Inhabitants from the Frontiers, and to induce those who have gone to return. Has convened the Assembly, who will adopt measures to afford effectual relief; in the mean time he will send further supplies of Ammunition, -	462
May 29,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Ligonior, to Governour Penn. Alarm among the People. A company of one hundred. Rangers formed for defence of Frontiers, -	463
June 3,	Letter from John Montgomery, Carlisle, to Governour Penn, People in Westmoreland Coun-

1774.	ty in great confusion in ward of Arms and Ammunition; unless speedily furnished they must leave the Country, - - - -	463	1774.	May	Message received from the Delaware Chiefs at Newcomer's Town, - - - -	478
			21,	21,	Answer to the Message of the Delaware Chiefs,	478
June	Letter from John Montgomery, Carlisle, to William Allen. Distresses of the Country. Delaware Indians well disposed, but Shawanese determined on war. One hundred Men raised to range from Fort Pitt to Ligonier. Other preparations for Defence, - = - -	464	25,	25,	Answer of the Delawares to the Condolence Speeches,	479
3,					Answer of the Shawanese to the Condolence Speeches, -	479
			26,	26,	Speech of Arthur St. Clair to the Six Nations and Delawares, -	480
5,	Indian Intelligence. Traders on the Muskingum safe; the Shawanese had taken great pains in protecting them. Shawanese quiet. A party of Mingoes out; gone against that part of Virginia where their friends were killed, -	464	26,	26,	Speech to the Delawares, on receiving their Answer to the Condolence Speeches, -	480
					Reply of Captain White Eyes, -	481
7,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Laurel Hill, to Gov. ernour Penn. Has hitherto thought there would be no war, now thinks otherwise, -	465	June	1,	Arrival of Moravian Indians, - - -	481
			5,	5,	Messengers from Newcomer, with intelligence, Answer sent by the Messengers, -	482
S,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Ligonier, to Govern our Penn. Encloses Letter from Mr. Croghan, -	465	May	29,	Answer of Lord Danmore, at Williamsburg, to the Speech of the Six Nations and Deinwares, at Pittsburgh, May 9th, - - -	48'2
4,	Letter from George Croghan to Arthur St. Clair. Employing the Rangers, in Pennsylvania, has alarmed Connolly. Measures of Connolly to prevent settlement of disputes, - - -	465	June	9,	Message sent with Lord Dunmore's Speech to the Six Nations and Delawares,	483
10,	Letter from Alexander M'Kee, Agent for Indian Affairs at Fort Plot. Hostilities between Indians and Virginians. Indians have given proof of their pacifick disposition. Reason to fear the war will become general, - -	466	22,	22,	Letter from William Thompson, in Cumberland County, to Governour Penn, - - -	483
12,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, Ligoaier, to Gov- eeamour Penn. Inhabitams of the Frontiers alarmed, and retire to the Forts, or leave the Country. In the Valley they still make a stand. The intention of the Indians will soon be known, -	466	26,	26,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, at Ligonier, to Governour Penn. Connolly has sent in pursuit of the Shawanees who escorted the Traders,	483
			25,	25,	Memorial from the Inhabitants of Pittsburgh, to Governour Penn. Request relief from their sufferings under the arbitrary proceedings of Doctor Connolly, -	483
			25,	25,	Statement of the Grievances of the People of Pittsburgh, occasioned by the tyrannical conduct of Doctor Connolly, - - -	484
					CORREPENDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
12,	Letter from Devereux Smith, Pittsburgh, to Governour Penn, -	467	June	28,	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence of the Assembly of Pennsylvania, to the Committee of Correspondence of Massachusetts Bay. The great cause of American Rights should be left to the Representatives in every Colony. Until this shall be fairly tried and fail, no other mode should be attempted. A Congress, constitutionally chosen, to ascertain our rights, and establish a political union between Great Britain and the Colonies, would effectually secure to Americans their future rights and privileges,	485
10,	Letter from Devereux Smith, Pittsburgh, to Dr. Smith. Extension of the Virginia Settlements the cause of the dissatisfaction of the Indians. Account of the origin and progress of the Indian hostilities. Connolly determined on a war with the Indians. His violent proceedings against the Pennsylvania Magistrates, -	467			Remarks on the preceding Letter, (Note,) -	486
14,	Letter from Aeneas Mackay, Pittsburgh, to Governour Penn	471	27,	27,	Address to the People of Boston, on paying for the Tea, -	487
16,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn. A further account of the proceedings of Connolly, and of the Indian War. Delawares still friendly to Pennsylvania, - - -	471	27,	27,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the Town of Boston, at Faneuil Hall. Correspondence of the Committee ordered to be produced and read. Motion to censure and annihilate the Committee. Gentlemen in favour of the motion patiently heard; at their request the Meeting adjourned until to-morrow morning. The question then taken, and the motion rejected by a vast majority. Conduct of the Committee approved, - - -	489
19,	Letter from William Thompson, Cumberland County, to Governour Penn, - - -	473	29,	29,	Protest against the Proceedings of the Town Meeting in Boston, held on the 27th of June; against the doings of the Committee of Correspondence, and against the Solemn League and Covenant,	490
20,	Letter from Lord Dunmore, at Williamsburg, to Captain John Connolly. Approves his building a Fort at Wheeling, and of marching into the Shawanese Towns. Advises him to make prisoners of as many Women and Children as he can; and not to make peace until the Indians are effectually chastised, - - -	473	29,	29,	Proclamation by Governour Gage for discouraging of certain illegal Combinations. The League and Covenant an unlawful instrument, and the Letter of the Committee accompanying it, scandalous, traitorous, and seditious. All persons cautioned against signing the Covenant, -	491
'22.	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, at Ligonier, to Governour Penn. Two of the principal Traders arrived safe at Pittsburgh, under protection of Shawanese Chiefs. Connoliy ordered out a party to make prisoners of the Shawanese Chiefs. These about Fort Pitt, (now Fort Dunmore,) intent on a war. Has had a meeting with some Six Nations and some Delawares, and made them a present, in the name of the Governour. Logan returned with thirteen Scalps and one Prisoner, and says he will now listen to the Chiefs, -	473			Remarks upon the Proclamation, (Note,) -	492
18,	Proclamation by John Connolly, at Fort Dunmore. Prohibits intercourse with the Indians, Extracts from Mr. M'Kee's Journal of Indian Transactions, -	475-483	29,	29,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Freemen of the County of Richmond, in Virginia, - -	492
May	1,	Message to King Custologa, Captains White Eyes, Pipe, and other Chiefs, - - -	475		Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Prince George's Cotmty, Virginia, -	493
3,	Conference, at Colonel Croghan's, between several Chiefs and Captain Connolly, and others,	475	30,	30,	The British American, No. 5, - - -	495
4,	Arrival of several Delaware Chiefs, - -	476	July	1,	Letter from London, received in Philadelphia. Men in power in England wish for an Indian war, as a means of humbling and reducing the rebellious Colonies. Policy of Great Britain in regard to the Colonies, is to divide and conquer. Nothing but an union of the Colonies to stop Trade will save America, - -	498
5,	A Condolence held with the Six Nations, Delawares, Shawanese, Munsies, Mohegans, and Twightwees, -	476			1, Meeting of the Freeholders of James City County, Virginia, -	499
9,	Speech delivered by several Chiefs, Six Nations and Delawares, to the Governour of Virginia,	477	1,	1,	Tea, at Portsmouth, in New-Hampshire, re-shipped by order of the Town,	499
16,	Message from Custologa, by five principal Men of the Delawares, -	478
17,	Answer to Custologa's Message,	478

	XLIX	CONTENTS.	L
1774.		1774.
		new American Post Office has been executed throughout the New England Governments. Mr. Goddard will leave here for Williamsburg, to lay his plan before the Convention,
July 2,	Mr. Goddard's Proposal for establishing an American Post Office has been warmly patronized in the Eastern Colonies, and preparations have been made for the conveyance of the Mail, -	(Note,) 504
	Plan for the establishing a new American Post Office, -
Feb'y 5,	Letter to Lord North. Dismissing Dr. Franklin from the Post Office one of the most fortunate events for America. The Americans will set up a Post Office of their own, and put an end to the precedent, so often referred to, for Taxing them, (Note,) 500	Aug. 11,	Mr. Goddard's Plan for establishing an American Post Office was agitated at the Convention in Virginia, who considered it worthy the attention of the General Congress, and, as such, particularly recommended it to the Delegates from Virginia, (Note,) 504
28,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in Boston. Our tame submission to the Post Office Establishment has been constantly urged as a precedent for all other unconstitutional Acts. If we oppose it now, with manly firmness, we cannot fail of success. Mr. Goddard's Plan is well calculated to save the cause of Liberty, (Note,) 500
March 17,	Mr. Goddard at Boston. He has received the greatest encouragement from all the Colonies through which he has passed. At a Meeting, in Boston, it was determined to unite with the Southern Colonies in support of this measure for the recovery of American Liberty, (Note,) 500
	Heads of a Subscription Paper, for the establishment of an American Post Office, laid before the Committee of Correspondence at Boston, (Note,) 501
29,	Mr. Goddard at Salem, on the subject of establishing a Post Office independent of the unconstitutional Laws of a British Parliament, (Note,) 501
April 15,	Mr. Goddard at Portsmouth: At a Meeting of the Committee of Merchants, Traders, and other Inhabitants, a Subscription to support the American Post Office, unanimously agreed upon, (Note,) 502
21,	Letter from Philadelphia to a Gentleman at Williamsburg. The Post Office as established is an infringement of American Liberties; but the new one proposed can scarcely succeed under Mr. Goddard. The Merchants of Philadelphia have preferred Mr. Bradford for the private Post set up between that place and Philadelphia, (Note,) 502
21,	Mr. Goddard at Boston, with Letters from Towns to the Eastward, expressing their concurrence in the establishment of a Post Office, on constitutional principles, throughout the Continent. The removal of Dr. Franklin from the Post Office has added fresh spirit to the promoters of this salutary plan, (Note,) - - - 508
May 5,	The Subscription for establishing an American Post Office has been liberally patronized.-- Mr. Goddard will return homeward, rejoicing in the great success which has attended his endeavours to rescue the channel of publick and private intelligence from the horrid fangs of Ministerial despotism, (Note,) - - - 503
19,	The report that the Constitutional Post Rider between Philadelphia and Baltimore, with a large sum of money entrusted to his care, had absconded, is untrue, (Note,) - - - 503
June 2,	Mr. Goddard at New-York, with important despatches for all the Southern Colonies, the plan for establishing a Constitutloual American Post Office having met with the greatest success in all the great Commercial Towns in the Northern Colonies, (Note,) 503
16,	Information of the proceedings in the Colonies for the establishment of an American Post Office received in London. When General Gage arrives in America, he will stop the career of the new Post Riders and their employers, (Note,) 503
July 6,	Letter from Philadelphia to a Gentleman in Williamsburg. Objections to Mr. Goddard. At a Meeting of the Mechanics, they refused to hear read Letters relating to the establishment of the Post Office, as the Americans had enough to do already, (Note,) 503
16,	The Deputy Postmasters General of North America alarmed at the progress making to establish a new Post Office, (Note,) - - - 504
25,	Letter from Baltimore to a Gentleman in Williamsburg. A complete plan of establishing a
		CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
July 3,	Letter from Boston, received in New-York. Distresses of the People there; their patience, resolution, and firmness. The League and Covenant very generally signed, notwithstanding the Governour's Proclamation, - - 505
4,	Letter from Carlisle, received in Philadelphia. Connolly's attack on the Shawanese, who protected the Traders. Letter of thanks from Lord Dunmore to Cresap, who first began the quarrel with the Indians, - - - 505
4,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Orange Town, in the Province of New-York, 506
4,	Opinions in London of the state of affairs in the Colonies. The faction in Boston composed of Smuggling Companies, Mechanics, Merchants indebted in England, and those who are fascinated with the extravagant notion of Independency. Seditious Committees appointed to influence the other Colonies. From Letters and other intelligence, it is evident that no permanent or vigorous measures of resistance can be adopted to support the Boston Rebels, 507
4,	Address to the Inhabitants of the Province of South Carolina, about to assemble on the 6th of July, - 508
4,	Letter from Governour Wentworth, in New-Hampshire, to the Earl of Dartmouth. Twenty-seven chests of Tea landed and stored at the Custom-House. The Consignee agreed with the Committee of Portsmouth to re-ship it. Mob prevented from destroying the Tea. Vessel with the twenty-seven chests sailed for Halifax, June 30, - - - - 512
5,	Letter from a Gentleman in London, to his Correspondent in Philadelphia, - - - 513
5,	Letter from Governour Penn, Philadelphia, to the Earl of Dartmouth. Temper of the People very warm. They consider Boston as suffering in the common cause, - - - 514
5,	Address to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies in America, (Note,) 300
	Reply to the preceding Address, (Note,) - - 399
5,	Letter from Governour Gage, at Salem, to the Earl of Dartmouth. A number attended the late Town Meeting, to make a push to pay for the Tea, and annihilate the Committee of Correspondence, but were out-voiced by a great majority of the lower class. Has done all in his power to spirit up every friend to Government; and there is now an open opposition to the faction. The terrour of Mobs is over, and the Press is becoming free, - - - 514
6,	Address of the Justices of the County of Plymouth, to Governour Gage, - 515
	The Governour's Answer, - - - - 516
6,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth. Went with the Council and the Sheriff and dispersed an illegal Meeting, held for the purpose of appointing Delegates to a General American Congress, - - - 516
6,	Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth: After a continual struggle of many weeks in the New-York Committee, they have carried the nomination of Deputies to the Congress. These transactions are dangerous and illegal, but cannot be prevented. The Province every where, except in the City of New-York, perfectly quiet, - - 517
6,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the City of New-York, convened in the Fields, - 312
6,	Letter from Alexandria, in Virginia, to a Gentleman in Boston. Subscriptions for the relief of the Poor in Boston, 517

1774.
July	Meeting of the Freeholders, Merchants, Traders, and other Inhabitants of the County and Borough of Norfolk, in Virginia, - - -	518
6,	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Penn. Requires him to exert every power the Constitution has placed in his hands to defeat any attempt to insult the authority of Great Britain, - - -	519
6,	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutemnt Governour Colden. Hopes the People of New-York will not, by their rash proceedings, expose themselves to the just resentment of Parliament, - - -	519
7,	The British American, No. 6, - - -	519
7,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Culpepper, in Virginia, - - -	522
8,	Proclamation of Lord Dunmore. Prorogues the Assembly from August 11, to first Thursday in November, - - -	523
8,	Letter from Governour Hutchinson, London, to a Friend in Boston. Urges the payment for the Tea, by the Town of Boston, - - -	524
8,	Resolutions unanimously adopted by the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Hunterdon County, in the Province of New-Jersey, - - -	524
8,	Letter from Charlestown, in South Carolina, received in New-Yoth. Account of the Meeting held in Charlestown, on the 6th, - - -	525
8,	Resolutions unanimously entered into by the Inhabitants of South Carolina, at a General Meeting held at Charlestown, in said Colony, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of July, - - -	525
	British Subjects in America owe the same allegiance to the Crown, and are entitled to the same rights with Subjects born in Great Britain, - - -	525
	No Taxes can be imposed on the People, but by their own consent, - - -	525
	It is a fundamental right of his Majesty's Subjects, that no Man shall suffer, in person or property, without a fair trial, - - -	525
	Sending a person beyond the Sea to be tried is oppressive, illegal, and highly derogatory to British Subjects, - - -	525
	The Statute of Thirty-fifth of Henry Eighth, for Trial of Treasons committed out of the King's Dominions, does not extend to the Colonies, - - -	525
	The Boston Port Act, and the Acts relating to the Government of Massachusetts Bay, are of the most alarming nature to all America, though levelled immediately at the People of Boston, - - -	526
	It is the duty of all the Colonies to assist and support the People of Boston, by all lawful ways in their power, - - -	526
	Delegates to the General Congress appointed, and instructed, - - -	526
	While the oppressive Acts relative to Boston are enforced, will contribute towards their relief, - - -	526
	Will, by all means, endeavour to preserve harmony and union amongst all the Colonies, - - -	526
	Committee of Ninety-Nine appointed, as a General Committee of Correspondence, - - -	526
	Names of the Committee for Charlestown, - - -	526
S,	Address of Francis Lewis, and other Members of the Committee, to the Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York, - - -	313
9,	Reply to the Address, by "One of the Committee," - - -	314
9,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of Essex County, in Virginia, - - -	527
9,	General Meeting of the Freeholders of the County of Fauquier, in Virginia, - - -	528
11,	General Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Nansemond, in Virginia, - - -	529
11,	Letter from Charlestown, in South Carolina, to a Correspondent in Boston. Proceedings on the Resolutions adopted in Charlestown, - - -	531
	Account of the Meeting held in Charlestown, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of July, (Note,) - - -	531
11,	Death of Sir William Johnson, (Note,) - - -	645
12,	Letter from Miles Brewton, Charlestown, South Carolina, to Josiah Quincy, Jun. Massachusetts will not fall for want of friends; if Boston does but persevere, her sisters will work out her salvation without the Musket. A Sloop load of Rice sent to Boston, and will soon send more, - - -	534

1774,
July	Committee of Inspection appointed at Portsmouth, in New-Hampshire, - - -	534
12,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of New-Kent, in Virginia, - - -	535
13,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Meeting of Representatives at Portsmouth, dispersed. At a private meeting a Convention called to meet at Exeter, on the 21st, to appoint Delegates to the Congress, - - -	535
14,	Express at Williamsburg, with intelligence of skirmishes with the Indians. Militia ordered out by the Governour, - - -	536
14,	Meeting of the Freeholders, and others, Inhabitants of Chesterfield County, Virginia, - - -	537
14,	General and full Meeting of the Inhabitants of Gloucester County, Virginia, - - -	538
14,	General Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Caroline County, Virginia, - - -	539
14,	The British American, No. 7, - - -	541
	COUNCIL OF PENNSYLVANIA, - - -
July	14, Meeting of the Council at Philadelphia, - - -	545
June	29, Letters laid before the Board, containing favourable accounts of the disposition of the Indians, Conclusion of Extract from Mr. M'Kee's Journal of Indian Affairs, (see page 483.) Conference with the Indians at Pittsburgh. Address from the Chiefs of the Delawares. Speech of Captain White Eyes, - - -	546
30,	Letter from John Montgomery, at Carlisle, to Governour Penn. Shawanese seem well disposed. Logan returned with thirteen scalps. Says he is now satisfied, and will set still until he hears what the Long Knife will say, - - -	546
July 2,	Letter from Richard Lee, President of the Maryland Council, to Governour Penn, - - -	546
4,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, at Ligonier, to Governour Penn. Large body of Virginians in motion. Colonel Henry Lewis ordered to Kenhawa; Major M'Donald to Wheeling; Cresap, and three others, to raise Ranging Companies, - - -	547
8,	Letter from Æneas Mackay, Joseph Spear, and Devereux Smith, at Pittsburgh, to Joseph Shippen, Junior. Captain White Eyes has returned, with assurances of friendship from the Shawanese, Delawares, Wyandots, and Cherokees. Dr. Connolly continues his authority. The persons of the Magistrates are daily insulted, their property forcibly taken, and their lives threatened. Various instances of his outrages, - - -	547
12,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, at Hanna's Town, to Governour Penn, - - -	548
17,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair, at Liganier, to Governour Penn. Virginians determined to put a stop to the Indian Trade with Virginia. Connolly and two others have an exclusive privilege to carry it on, on the Frontiers of Virginia. The laying out of a new Town proposed, - - -	549
	CORRESPONDENCE1 PROCEEDINGS, ETC. - - -
July	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Province of Georgia called, to be held at the Liberty Pole, at Savannah, on the 27th, - - -	549
14,	Chiefs of the Six Nations on their way to hold a Congress with Sir William Johnson, - - -	550
15,	Meeting of the loyal and patriotick People of the County of Henrico, in Virginia, - - -	550
15,	Meeting of the Freeholders of the County of Middlesex, in Virginia, - - -	551
15,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the County of Dinwiddie, in Virginia, - - -	552
15,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Middlesex, in New-Jersey, - - -	553
15,	Delegates to the General Congress of Commissioners of the English American Colonies, appointed by the Committee of Correspondence of Connecticut, - - -	554
	Three of the Delegates having resigned, others appointed on the 3d August, (Note,) - - -	554
15,	Proclamation by General Gage. Deserters who return by the 10th of August, to be pardoned; on failure of so doing, to expect no mercy, - - -	555

LV	CONTENTS.	LVI
1774.	1774.
July 21,	Collections to be made throughout the Province, for relief of Boston, - - - - 625	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Buckingham, in Virginia, 643
21,	Delegates to the General Continental Congress appointed, and instructed, - - - - 626	28, Proclamation of the Governour of Pennsylvania, for the apprehension of John Hinckson and James Cooper, - 644
21,	Proclamation by Governour Gage, for the encouragement of Piety and Virtue, and for preventing and punishing Vice, Profanity, and Immorality, 625	22, Letter from Guy Johnson to Governour Penn. Death of Sir William Johnson. Has had a Conference with the Six Nations, who will send Deputies to the southward to accommodate matters, - 645
21,	Address to the worthy Inhabitants of the Town of Boston, - 626	Account of the death of Sir William Johnson, on the 11th instant, (Note,) - 645
23,	Letter from London to a Gentleman in Philadelphia. The storm against Doctor Franklin much abated. Opinions in England on the late measures against America. Many persons in favour of the Colonies. Granville Sharp warmly on their side, - - - 628	28, Governour Penn advised by the Council to write to the Earl of Dartmouth, and inform him of all the late proceedings in Pennsylvania, by the Committees and the Assembly, - - 646
23,	Letter from Governour Gage to Governour Trumbull. Encloses him affidavits relating to the treatment of Mr. Green. Expects the accused persons will be apprehended and brought to trial, - 629	28, Letter from Boston, received in New-York.--Firmness of the People there. Encouraged to persevere from all the Colonies, - - - 646
20,	Affidavit of Caleb Scott, - - - - 629	28, Address to the Gentlemen of the General Convention of Virginia. Stoppage of Trade with Great Britain will not procure a redress of Grievances. It is better to throw aside all temporizing methods. Let the Congress demand a ratification of our claims from the King and Parliament. If denied, we shall be prepared for the alternative. With the Sword our forefathers obtained their rights--by the Sword it is our duty to defend them, - - - 647
20,	Affidavit of Francis Green, - - - - 630	28, The British American, No. 9. If Great Britain should attempt to enforce the legislation of Parliament in America, the Americans must draw their Swords in a just cause, and rely on that God who assists the righteous. Thomson Mason avows himself the author of these Letters, Address to the People of Pennsylvania. Reasons why the Tea should not be paid for, - 654
Aug. 5,	Representation of Hezekiah Bimell, Benjamin Lothrop, Timothy Larrabee, and Ebenezer Backus, to Governour Trumbull, of the treatment of Mr. Green, - - - - 631	28, Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, of New-Jersey, to the Committee of Boston, - 657
10,	Letter from Governour Trumbull to Governour Gage. Has inquired into Mr. Green's complaint and finds others put a very different face upon the transaction. Full provision is made by Law for such offences, and Mr. Green may obtain the satisfaction his cause may merit, - 633	28, A Brief Examination of American Grievances: being the heads of a Speech at the General Meeting at Lewestown, on Delaware, - - 658
July 25,	Letter from Governour Sir James Wright to the Earl of Dartmouth. Carolina in great wrath about the Acts of Parliament relative to Massachusetts Bay; and have come to some very indecent Resolutions. There are in Georgia some malecontents and Liberty People, whose conduct he cannot answer for, - 683	28, Letter from the Committee of New-York to the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia, 321
25,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Elizabeth City, and Town of Hampton, in Virginia, - - 634	28, Letter from the New-York Committee to Matthew Tilghman, Chairman for Maryland, - 321
25,	Reflections on the measures proper to be adopted by the Congress; and suggestions for the consideration of the Delegates, - - - 634	29, Letter from the New-York Committee, to the Committee or Treasurer of the different Counties, - - 322
26,	Town Meeting in Boston. Circular Letter to the Towns relative to the Bills for vacating the Charter of Massachusetts, - 637	30, Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Resolutions of the Assembly rather a check, than an encouragement, to the Proceedings of the Convention, - - 661
26,	Meeting of the Freeholders of the County of Albemarle, in Virginia, - - - - 637	30, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. The prevailing opinion in England is, that the Colonies mean nothing--they must be divided by the arts of the Administration. Their opposition should be early and vigorous, - - 661
26,	Letter from the New-York Committee, to the Committee of Correspondence, at Charlestown, South Carolina. - 320	30, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. Fears there will be a want of union among the Colonies. Without this, any expedients they may adopt will avail little, - 661
'27,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, - 638	30, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. A general suspension of Commerce, until our grievances are redressed, is the only safe and sure measure. The Ministry believe that the terror of their measures will make all America silent and submissive, - 662
27,	General Meeting of the Inhabitants of Georgia, held in Savannah, - 638	30, Queries relating to the Resolutions of some Gentlemen, styling themselves a Committee of the City of New-York, (Note,) - - 318
	Account of the Meeting, (Note,) - - - 639	31, Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth. An universal spirit of jealousy is raised against Great Britain. Exemption from Taxation is claimed, but by their own Representatives. This spirit of opposition to Taxation so violent and universal, that it will not be soon or easily appeased, - - 663
	Paper by Josiah Martin, in behalf of the Sugar Colonies, (Note,) - 639	Aug. 1, Convention of the Representatives of the Freeman of the Government of the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, meet at New-Castle, - 663
27,	Meeting of a very respectable body of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Accomack, in Virginia, - 639	List of the Members, - 663
27,	Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Princees Anne, in Virginia, - 640	Resolutions adopted at a General Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of New-Castle, on Delaware, on the 29th of June, 664
27,	Letter received in Philadelphia from London. Resolutions of Philadelphia, Maryland, and Virginia, esteemed very inoffensive, and as the mere ebullitions of a set of angry men. Mr. Hutchinson is much courted by the Administration. Americans, both at Court and in London, daily ridiculed. The Congress must agree not to purchase or use the Manufactures of Great Britain until the Acts are repealed, as the only means of preserving the Liberty of the Country, - - - - 641
27.	Address to the Inhabitants of New-Jersey. Defence of the measures of Parliament, a denial of the authority of Great Britain to impose a Duty on Tea, absurd. Cautions the People against the madness of some men, who are inflaming their minds and hurrying them into an open rupture with the Mother Country; when, involved in the horrors of a Civil War to the ruin of their liberty, they may be compelled to submit by force, - - - - 642

1774.
July 20, Resolutions adopted at a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of Kent County, on Delaware, on the 20th of June, - 664
Resolutions adopted at a General Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Sussex, on Delaware, on the 23d. of July, 665
Letters from the Committees of Correspondence of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, the Dominion of Virginia, the Colonies of Rhode-Island, South Carolina, and Maryland, read, 666
Grievances of the Colonies, under the Acts of Parliament, - 667
Deputies to the Congress appointed, 667
Instructions to the Deputies, - - - 667
Aug. 1, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. Act of Parliament prohibiting the shipping of Utensils used in the manufacture of Cotton, Wool, or Silk, - - - 668
1, Condition of the Town of Boston, - - - 669
2, Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Damneuth. The Deputies from New-York, to the General Congress, moderate men. Though great pains have been taken in the several Colonies to induce the People to enter into Resolves, they have succeeded only in Suffolk County, - 669
2, Letter from Wilmington, in North Corolina, to a Gentleman in Boston. Subscriptions for the relief of Boston. At a meeting of six Counties in Wilmington, it was unanimously resolved to assist Massachusetts by every legal measure, - 670
3, Letter from Wilmington, in North Carolina, to a Gentleman in Boston. Two thousand Pounds subscribed for Boston: very considerable will be contributed at Newbern and Edenton; Subscriptions on foot in every County. The Vessel, with a load of Provisions for Boston, goes freight free, and the Master and Mariners navigate her without receiving one farthing wages, 670
2, South Carolina Assembly meet at eight o'clock in the morning, - 671
Ratify and confirm the Proceedings of the General Meeting of Inhabitants on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of July, - 671
Message from the Assembly to Lieutenant Governour Bull. Request him to distribute among the poor Settlers. Arms and Ammunition to protect them against the Indians, - - 671
Assembly prorogued by the Lieutenant Governour at half past eight o'clock, - - - 672
3, Notice of the Proceedings of the Assembly at the Session held yesterday, - - - 672
3, Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Assembly met privately and punctually at eight yesterday morning. I immediately went to the Council Chamber and prorogued them to September 6, but they had, previously, passed their Resolutions, 672
3, Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour Colden. Encloses an Order in Council disallowing certain Acts, - - 672
Representation of the Board of Trade to the King, of the 12th of May, with reasons for disallowing certain Acts passed by the Assembly of New-York, - 673
Order in Council, of the 6th of July, declaring the Acts void, and of an effect, 673

COUNCIL OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Aug. 4, Letters and Papers submitted to the Council, by the Governour, - 674
New Town to be laid out at Kittaning, for accommodation of Traders and Inhabitants of Pittsburgh, - 674
6, Letter from Governour Penn to Arthur St. Clair, 674
Message from Governour Penn to the Chiefs and Warriors of the Shawanese Indians, - 675
Message from Governour Penn to the Chiefs and Warriors of the Delaware Indians, - 676
July 22, Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn. Friends of Pennsylvania determined to abandon Pittsburgh. Kittaning most suitable place for a new Town, - 677
13, Deposition of William Wilson, a Trader, taken by one of Counolly's parties, - - - 677
19, Letter from John Cononlly to Arthur St. Clair.

1774. Complains of the depredations of the Indians, Will no longer be a dupe to their amicable professions, but will pursue every measure to offend them, - 678
July 22, Letter from Arthur St. Clair to John Connolly. Ample reparation ought to be made to the Indians, and an honest intercourse established with them; this would be a more cheap and easy manner of re-establishing peace than any offensive operations whatever, - - 678
26, Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn. Further account of Indian affairs. No prospect of accommodation between the Shawanese and the Virginians, 679
24, Deposition of David Griffey. Indians near Hanna's Town, - 680
23, Speech of the Delawares to Mr. Croghan, 680
Intelligence from Captain White Eyes, - 681
Address from Mr. Croghan to Captain White Eyes, - 681
Answer of Captain White Eyes to Col. Croghan, 681
25, Letter from Æneas Mackay to Arthur St. Clair, 682
Aug. 8, Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn. Favourable accounts from the Indian Nations about the Lakes. Most of them disposed to continue in friendship with the English, 682
25, Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn, It is impossible to tell what will be the consequence of the Virginia operations. Lord Dunmore must soon see the necessity of a peace. Goods seized by Connolly's orders, and persons confined in the common Guard-Hour, 683
27, Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn. Mr. Butler was not only made a prisoner, but treated with insult and abuse. This has been done by Mr. Campbell, Connolly having gone to meet Lord Dunmore, 685

CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.

Aug. 4, Address to the People of Virginia. Urged to unite their utmost endeavours, by all means in their power, to prevent the ruin they are threatened with, - 685
1, Convention of Delegates from the different Counties in the Colony and Dominion of Virginia, begun at Williamsburg, on the 1st day of August, and continued, by adjournments, to the 6th, - 686-690
After the first day of November, will import no Goods, Wares, or Merchandise, from Great Britain, nor British Manufactures from any other place; nor purchase any that may be imported, - 687
Will neither import any Slave nor purchase any that may be imported after the 1st November 687
No Tea to be imported hereafter; and that which is on hand, not permitted to be used, - 687
No Tobacco to be exported after the 10th of August next, unless American Grievances are sooner redressed; and the Inhabitants of the Colony advised to refrain from the cultivation of it, 687
The breed of Sheep to be improved, and their number increased, to the utmost extent, - 687
Merchants are not to take advantage of the scarcity of Goods, but to sell at the present prices, 688
No Merchant or Trader to be dealt with, after the first of November next, who will not sign this Association, - - - 688
If any person shall, after the 10th of August next, export Tobacco, contrary to this Association, he shall be considered an approver of American Grievances, - - - 688
All alterations of these Resolutions that may be made by the General Congress, with the consent of the Delegates for Virginia, shall be binding upon the Colony, - - - 688
The Inhabitants of the Colony requested to make liberal Contributions for the relief of the distressed in Boston, - 688
Instructions for the Deputies appointed to meet in General Congress on the part of the Colony of Virginia, 689
A Summary View of the Rights of British America, set forth in some Resolutions intended for the inspection of the present Delegates of the People of Virginia, now in Convention, - 690 1774.

Aug.	Proclamation by Governour Sir James Wright, declaring the Meeting of the Inhabitants of Georgia, proposed to be held at Savannah, on the 10th last, under the pretence of consulting together for redress of grievances, or imaginary grievances, unconstitutional; illegal, and punishable by law,	699
9,	Letter from the New-York Committee to the Boston Committee of Correspondence,	323
9,	Letter from the New-York Committee to several Counties of the province,	323
10,	Resolutions entered into at Savannah, in Georgia, at a General Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Province, assembled to consider the state of the Colonies in America, - - - -	700
	His Majesty's Subjects in America owe the same allegiance, and are entitled to the same rights, with their fellow-subjects in Great Britain, -	700
	As protection and allegiance are reciprocal, the Americans have an indisputable right to petition the Throne on every emergency,	700
	The Boston Port Act is unconstitutional,	700
	The Act for abolishing the Charter of Massachusetts Bay, is subversive of American Rights,	700
	The British Parliament has not the right to Tax his Majesty's American Subjects, - -	700
	It is contrary to the Law of the Land to take any person to Great Britain, to be tried for an offence committed in any of the Colonies,	700
	Will concur with the other Colonies in every constitutional measure to obtain a redress of Grievances,	701
	Committee of Correspondence appointed,	701
10,	Letter from London to a Gentleman in Boston. The Ministry; by their emissaries, will try to bring about disunion when the Congress meets. It is not prudent to rely on any support in England; the Colonies must depend on their own unanimity and steadiness. Massachusetts should not enter into any violent measures without concert with other Colonies, particularly Maryland, Virginia, and the Carolinas,	701
10,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Poughkeepsie Precinct, in Dutchess County, New-York. Refuse to comply with the request of the New-York Committee of Correspondence, to elect Delegates, - - -	702
10,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Township of Rye, in West-Chester County, New-York, -	703
10,	Meeting of the Committee of Charles County, Maryland. Tea shipped in the Mary and Jane, Captain George Chapman, now lying in St. Mary's River, to be returned to London, -	703
11,	Meeting of the Committee for Frederick County, in Maryland. Resolutions in relation to the Tea shipped in the Mary and Jane, - -	704
12,	Town Meeting at Providence, in Rhode-Island. Instructions to the Deputies from the Town in the General Assembly, - - - -	705
12,	Council of North Carolina. Address of Governour Martin. Considers it his duty to advise with the Council on the measures to be taken to prevent the assemblies of the People,	705
13,	Proclamation of Governour Martin. Requires all persons, as far as in them ties, to prevent the meeting of certain Deputies, appointed to be held at Newbern, on the 25th, - - -	706
13,	Letter from Colonel William Preston, at Fincastle, in Virginia. Incursions of the Indians. A number of the Inhabitants on the Frontiers killed, -	707
13,	Letter from Governour Sir James Wright to the Earl of Dartmouth. Two meetings of the Liberty Folks have been held in Savannah. He will transmit all the particulars, - -	708
14,	Letter from a Gentleman, in London, to his Correspondent in Williamsburg. Policy of the Ministry to attack one Colany at a time. America has no friends in Great Britain: Nothing but an Association strictly observed and enforced, to stop Exports and Imports, will procure a repeal of the Acts, -	708
14,	John Hancock, Colonel of the Company of Cadets, having been dismissed by Governour Gage, the Company agreed to return their Standard to the Governour and disband themselves, -	709
16,	Letter from Silas Deane to Governour Trumbull,	710

1774.
Aug.	The Rev. Samuel Peters of Hebron, Connecticut. Account of an attack on him by the Sons of Liberty, -	711
18,	Statement of Mr. Peters's affair, by the Bolton Committee, -	712
	Resolves drawer up by Mr. Peters, - - -	713
15,	Mr. Peters's Declaration, - - - -	714
Oct.	Letter from Thaddeus Burr, in Boston, to Governour Trumbull,	714
Nov. 3,	Further account of Mr. Peters, - - -	715
	Letter from the Reverend Samuel Peters, in ton, to his mother, in Hebron, - - -	715
Oct. 1,	Letter from the Reverend Samuel Peters, in Boston, to the Reverend Doctor Auchmuty, at New-York, -	716
Nov.	Saul Aylford and others, to Governour Trumbull, on Mr. Peters's affair, - - - -	716
Dec. 6,	Hezekiah Huntington and others, to Governour Trumbull, on Mr. Peters's affair, - -	717
Aug.	Address to the People of Pennsylvania. The opposition in the Colonies to the measures of Parliament condemned. The principal difficulties have been caused by the influence of the Smuggling interest in the Colonies, - -	718
18,	Letter from a Gentleman, at Red Stone, to Williamsburg. Wagatomica and five other Shawanese Towns on the Muskingum, destroyed in July, by four hundred Virginia Troops, under the command of Major M'Donald, - - -	722
18,	Courts at Great Barrington prevented from proceeding with business, - - - -	724
20,	Letter from Matthew Griswold to Governour Trumbull, Account of an attack on Mr. Ingersoll, of Great Barrington, - -	724
20,	Letter from Josiah Quincy, Jun., to John Dickinson. Defends Massachusetts on the charge of breaking the line of opposition. At the request of many warm friends to the country, he will soon embark for England, in the hope that he may do some good the ensuing Winter, at the Court of Great Britain, - - -	725
20,	Letter from John Dickinson to Arthur Lee. The Colonists now know what is designed against them. All classes are united in sentiment. The People in general look forward to extremes with resolution,	726
20,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Borough Town of West-Chester, in New-York, -	726
22,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Norfolk, Virginia, on information received that nine chests of Tea were imported in the Mary and Jane,	727
22,	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence of Boston, to the Committee for New-Jersey, -	728
23,	Address to the Inhabitants of New-Jersey. This Country was settled for the sole purpose of Trade; and an absolute submission to the Laws of the Mother Country was one of the terms under which our forefathers settled. Under these terms they lived and prospered; and we have grown rich and lived happily. Should the Congress listen to the folly of the times, and think the Colonies were not planted nor protected, for the extension of Commerce, but for a new Empire, then will our Country become a scene of blood and distraction; we can have no recourse but in Arms, -	728
23,	Proclamation of Governour Gage, to prohibit all persons from attending a Town Meeting at Salem, on the 25th, -	729
25,	Town Meeting at Salem. Governour Gage orders the Meeting to be dispersed, and brings Troops to the Town. Members of the Committee of Correspondence arrested, for calling the Meeting without the permission of the Governour,	730
24,	Letter from Governour Sir James Wright to the Earl of Dartmouth. Every thing was done that could be thought of to frustrate the attempt of the Liberty People in Georgia, but could not totally prevent it. If the meetings are suffered, there will be nothing but cabals and combinations in the Province. The Executive power is too weak to rectify such abuses. Prosecutions would only be laughed at. No Grand Jury would find a Bill of Indictment; and persons attempting it would, probably, be insulted and abused,	731

1774.		1774.
Aug.	Abijah Willard, one of the Mandamus Counsel-	May	Letter from Governour Penn to Governour Eden.
25,	lors for Massachusetts, compelled to resign, -	16,	Mr. Harford's Guardians have refused to give
	List of the Mandamus Counsellors appointed by		any instructions on the subject of the Boundsry
	the King (Note,) -		run and marked by the Commissioners; he
24,	Letter from Taunton, in Massachusetts. Daniel		will, therefore, issue a Proclamation himself,
	Leonard, a Mandamus Counsellor, fled to		extending the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, - avoid the friendly cautions of his incensed	21,	Letter from Governour Eden to Governour Penn.
	neighbours, -		The Guardians of the Proprietor of Maryland
25,	Letter from Taunton, in Massachusetts. Two or		having declined signing the Return of the three thousand persons will be assembled to-		Commissioners, can do nothing in relation to it, - morrow to request Colonel Gilbert not to ac-	Sept.	Letter from Governour Penn to Richard Lee.
	cept the office of High Sheriff, under the new	26,	Has made official notification of the lines run
	Act; and to desire Brigadier Ruggles, a Man-		by Mason and Dixon: and the jurisdiction of damus Counsellor, to quit the County imme-		Pennsylvania will be extended to those lines, - diately. It is more dangerous being a Tory	Aug.	Letter from General Brattle, at Cambridge, to here than in Boston, - - - -	26,	General Gage. Military preparations in the 24,	Proceedings of the first Provincial Convention of		Province. Minute Companies. Medford Pow-
	North Carolina, held at Newbern, -		der removed from the Arsenal, - - - -
	List of the Delegates to the Convention, -	27,	Letter from Colonel Adam Stephen to Richard
	Letters from the Committees in the other Colo-		Henry Lee. Ordered to the Ohio, by Lord
	nies, with the Answers, presented by Mr.		Dunmore, which prevents his attending the Hewes, and considered by the Convention, -		General Congress. Procuring a supply of Three Delegates to General Congress to be ap-		Armas and Ammunition of the utmost impor-
	pointed, -		tance.--This should be privately considered
	Allegiance is due to the King of Great Britain,		by the Congress, - as the rightful Sovereign of this Province, -	27,	Resolutions adopted by the Inhabitants of Pala-
	We claim no more than the rights of English-		tine District, Tryon County, New-York, - men, and it is our duty to maintain those	27,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of rights, -		Dartmouth. The whole Province in commo-
	To be taxed without our own consent, is a gross		tion; popular fury never greater than at pre-violation of the Grand Charter of our Liber-		sent. In Worcester they keep no terms, and ties, -		openly threaten resistance, - - - -
	As the British Snbjects in North America cannot	29,	An account of the manner in which the Donations be represented in Parliament, any Act of Par-		for the support of the Poor of Boston has been liament to Tax them is illegal, - - - -		applied, -
	Duties imposed by Act of Parliament for raising	29,	Letter from Boston. The new Counsellors a Revenue, illegal and oppressive, - - -		driven into Boston. The Judges at Great
	The cause in which the Inhabitants of Massa-		Barrington turned off the Bench. The Pro-chusetts now suffer, is the cause of every honest		testers and Addressers to Mr. Hutchinson have American, -		fled to Boston for refuge. The Province will
	The Boston Port Act is a cruel infringement of		soon be declared in open rebellion, and the the rights and privileges of the People of Bos-		King's Standard hoisted, - - - - ton, -	27,	Timothy Paine, a Mandamus Counsellor, com-
	The Act of Parliament for regulating the Police		pelled to resign, - of Massachusetts, is an infringement of the	29,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl
	Charter of that Province, - - - -		of Dartmouth. Delegates to the Congress,
	Trial by Juries of the vicinity, is the only lawful		from New-Hampshire, elected. State of affairs
	Inquest that can pass upon the life of a British		in the Province, -
	Subject, -	30,	Town Meeting at Providence, in Rhode-Island.
	No British or East India Goods permitted to be		Arms for the County to be made fit for use.
	imported after the first of January, 1775. No		Providence ought not to become an asylum for Slaves to be imported after the first of Novem-		persons who have made themselves obnoxious ber next; and no East India Tea to be used		to the people in any other part of America.-
	after the 10th of September next, -		The Town Council requested to remove and
	No Tobacco, Pitch, Tar, Turpentine, or any		eject all such persons, - - - - other article, to be exported to Great Britain,	31,	Town Meeting at Providence, in Rhode-Island.
	after the first of October, 1775, unless Ameri-		Magistrates required to preserve the Peace of can Grievances are redressed before that time, -		the Town, - -
	Venders of Merchandise are not to raise the	30,	County Court, at Springfield, sign an engagement prices of their Goods in consequence of their		not to do any thing whatsoever, under any au-
	Resolves for Non-Importation, - - - -		thority, derived or pretended, by the Act of Par-
	The People of North Carolina will break off all		liament, for the better regulating the Govern-
	Trade with any Colony on the Continent,		mere of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, - which shall refuse to adopt and carry into ex-	30,	On the meeting of the Superiour Court at Bos-caution such general plan as may be agreed		ton, Chief Justice Peter Oliver on the Bench, to in the Continental Congress, - - - -		the Jurors refuse to be sworn, - - - -
	Deputies to the Congress appointed, - - -		Reasons of the Grand Jurors for refusing to be
	The attempts made by the Minister upon the		sworn, -
	Town of Boston, a prelude to a general attack		Reasons of the Petit Jurors for refusing to be upon the rights of the other Colonies, -		sworn, -
	Committees to be appointed in the several Coun-	30,	Meeting of the Committees from every Town and ties, to see that the Resolutions of this Conven-		District, in the County of Middlesex, and Prov-tion are properly observed, - - - -		ince of Massachusetts Bay, - - - -
	Instructions to the Deputies appointed to meet in		Committee appointed to consider the Act for the General Congress on the part of North Caro-		better regulating the Government of the Provlina, -		vince of Massachusetts Bay, -
	Proceedings signed by the Members of the Con-		Report of the Committee, - - - - vention, - - - -		Adopted by the Meeting, -
25,	Express at Williamsburg, from Pittsylvania Coun-		Towns in the County recommended to elect Dele-
	ty. Indian Intelligence. Lord Dunmore, with		gates to a Provincial Congress, to meet at Con-fifteen hundred Men; and Colonel Lewis and		cord, on the second Tuesday in October, -
	Colonel Preston, with twelve hundred, against	30,	Address to the Inhabitants of Pennsylvania.-
	the Indians, - -		Petitions and Remonstrances to the King and
26,	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Governour		Parliament will have no effect. We should Penn. Directs him to desist from extending		not implore, but demand our liberty, - - the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania up to the new	31,	Address to the Delegates appointed to meet in Maryland line, during the maturity of the Heir		the General Congress, - of Lord Baltimore, -		Queries proposed to the People of America, -

1774.
Sept.	Address to the People of America. Considerations on--
1,	1st, A Petition to Parliament, with a firm declaration of the rights of Americans.
	2d, A Suspension of Trade with Great Britain, till the Acts be repealed.
	3d, A suspension of, all our Trade with Great Britain, Ireland, and the West Indies, till the Acts be repealed, -	756
1,	Letter from a Virginian to the Members of Congress at Philadelphia. The Colonies have advanced from one extravagant claim to another. Their most zealous advocates are ashamed to plead a cause which all others condemn, Parliament has a right to Tax the Colonies, and cannot depend upon the uncertain mode of Requisition, -	759
1,	Letter from Governour Martin to the Earl of Dartmouth. The People of North Carolina have followed the rest of the Continent in caballing and forming Resolutions upon the late measures of Government. Does not know what the Committees have done, but whatever measures may have been taken, the combination is assuredly, at least, indecent and inglorious,	761
1,	Powder taken from the Charlestown Magazine, by order of General Gage, - - -	762
2,	Judge Danforth and Judge Lee, Mandamus Counsellors, compelled to resign, - -	763
2,	Colonel Phips, the High Sheriff of the County, gives a pledge not to execute any precept under the new Acts of Parliament for altering the Constitution of Massachusetts Bay, -	763
2,	Lieutenant Governour, Thomas Oliver, compelled to resign his seat as a Mandamus Counsellor,	764
7,	Mr. Oliver's statement of the circumstances under which he resigned, - - - -	764
2,	Letter from St. John's Parish, in Georgia. Account of the Meeting at Savannah, on the 10th of August. Contributions from St. John's Parish for the Sufferers at Boston, - -	766
2,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. State of the Colonies much changed since Mr. Hutchinson left America. Several of the Counsellors have been obliged to seek protection under the Troops in Boston. Some have been maltreated; many have resigned. He intended to send Troops to Worcester, to protect the Superiour Court and the Counsellors, but ascertained that no Court could proceed on business there. In Boston the Judges met, but could get no Juries. The Counsellors were afraid to proceed to Salem; he was, therefore, compelled to assemble them in Boston. Proposes to send to New-York, Philadelphia, and Quebeck, for the Troops there. Civil Government is near its end-- He will avoid any bloody crisis as long as possible,	767
3,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, -	769
3,	Letter from a Member of Parliament to Colonel Charles Lee, - .	769
3,	Letter from a Gentleman, in London, to his Correspondent in New-York. Disputes of the New-York Committee published in all the London papers, and have been disadvantageous to the cause of the Colonies. The Ministry are waiting anxiously to hear the result of the Congress; they still expect the Colonies will beg for mercy, -	771
4,	Letter from London to a Correspondent in Boston. The measures of the Colonies should be calm and temperate, None of their Resolves should coritain reflections on Great Britain--The East India Company should be indemnified by the Bostonians, and submission made for the insult offered to Government, - -	772
5,	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Congress met this morning. The determination to oppose the Boston Acts, and the power of Parliament to Tax America universal throughout the Colonies; there is, however great diversity of opinions as to the proper modes of opposition, - -	773
5.	Report of an attack on Boston, by the Men-of-War and Troops, on the 2d, received in New-York by express, -	325

1774,
Sept.-	Letter from Georgia to a Gentleman in New-York. Those in favour of an immediate, Non-Importation Agreement there, are far in the minority As the Colony is situated, it would be highly ungenerous for Georgia to meddle with the disputes in which the rest of the Colonies are engaged, - - -	773
7,	Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth. The populace are now directed by men of property, and the former demagogues have lost their influence. Men now speak in favour of Government with greater freedom than for years past, -	773
7,	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Penn. The appointment of Deputies, by the different Colonies, to meet in General Congress, has given the King great concern. An humble representation to the King from each Colony would have greater weight thsn one from the Congress, -	774
8,	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to the Earl of Dunmore. Expresses the King's dissatisfaction at the ill treatment of the Indians on the Ohio by the People of Virginia, and of the proceedings of Connolly, under a commission from the Government of Virginia, -	774
8,	The County Courts, in Virginia, will do no business previous to a Session of the General Assembly. At the next General Court there will be no Trials, except in Criminal Cases, -	775
5,	The Selectmen of Boston inform General Gage of the alarm of the People at his preparing to erect a Fortification on the Neck, - -	775
9,	Address of the Selectmen of Boston to General Gage on his fortifying the entrance to the Town, and the abuse and assaulting of the People passing in and out of the Town, by the Guards, -	775
	Answer of the Governour, -	775
6,	Resolutions adopted at a Meeting of the Delegates of every Town and District in the County of Suffolk, in Massachusetts, - -	776
9,	Committee appointed by the Delegates in Suffolk County, to wait on Governour Gage, and inform him of the alarm of the People at the Fortifications making on Boston Neck, -	779
10,	Address of the Committee to Governour Gage,	779
10,	Answer of the Governour to the Committee, -	779
	The Answer of the Governour not satisfactory. Another Address unanimously voted to his Excellency,	780
	The Governour declined receiving the second Address, -	781
9,	Thanks to the Merchants of New-York for refusing to let their Vessels transport Troops and Ammunition to Boston, - -	782
15,	Thanks to Mechanics of New-York, for refusing to make Chests for transportation of Arms, or to contract for building Barracks at Boston,	782
10,	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour Coldon, The Contraband Trade between New-York and Holland deserves his particular attention. The number of Vessels from Holland for that Province is evidence of the extent of that illicit Commerce; which is now particularly alarming, in consequence of the large quantities of Gunpowder shipped there for New-York, - - - -	782
11,	Letter from Israel Putnam to Captain Trumbull. Tea arrived at Salem, - - - -	783
7,	Letter from William Cooper to Israel Putnam, Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence for Brooklyn, in Connecticut, . - -	783
12,	Letter from William Cooper, in Boston; to a Gentleman in New-York Explaining the manner in which the Donations made for the Poor of Boston are applied, - - -	784
	Committee appointed by the Town of Boston to receive the Donations and employ the Poor Sufferers by the Port Bill - -	785
13,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth. Proceedings at Portsmouth, in New-Hampshire on the arrival of thirty chests of Tea there, on the 8th inst. Vessel sailed with the Tea for Halifax, on the 11th Though this Province has far been moderate, yet the Union of the Colonies, in sentiment, is not divided or lost in New-Hampshire,	786

1774, Sept.	Letter from Fredericksburg, in Virginia. Fur- ther Indian Intelligence. Liberal contribu- tions made in Fredericksburg, for relief of the Poor in Boston, -	787
14,	Letter from Joseph Spencer to Governour Trum- bull. Doctor Beebe, a Tory, tarred and feathered by the friends of Liberty, in East Haddam, has applied to him for a surety of the peace against some of those concerned in it.- He has declined, and asks the Governour's ad- vice onthe subject. He believes if one should be granted it would not be executed to advan- tage, -	787
15,	An Army of Observation for the Colonies pro- posed in Connecticut, - - - -	787
15,	Resolutions edopted at a Meeting of Delegates from the Towns in the Counties of Hartford, New-London. and Windham, and a part of the County of Litchfield, in Connecticut, -	788
15,	Proclamation of Governour Penn, establishing the Lines of Jurisdiction between the Pro- vince of Maryland and the Province of Penn- sylvania, and Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex on Delaware, - - - -	789
17,	Proclamation of Lord Dunmore, requiring all his Majesty's Subjects, went of Laurel Hill, to pay entire obedience to the Laws of Virginia, and forbidding the exercise of any authority there, by tire Province of Pennsylvania, -	790
17,	General Carleton arrived at Quebec, - -	791
	Address of the Clergy to Guy Carleton Govern- our of Quebec, -	791
	Address of his Majesty's Subjects, in the City of Quebec, to Governour Carleton, -	792
17,	Letter from Cæsar Rodney to Captain Thomas Rodney. Action of the Congress on the Re- solves of Suffolk County, Massachusetts, -	792
19,	Letter from Samuel Adams to Dr. Chauncy. The Suffolk County Resolves read in Con- gress with great applause. America will sus- tain Boston to the utmost, - - -	793
19,	Letter from Cæsar Rodney to Captain Thomas Rodney. On the late false report of the attack upon the Town of Boston, by the British Ships in the Harbour. fifty thousand Men from Con- necticut and Massachusetts, well armed, were on the march for the relief of the Town, -	793

PENNSYLVANIA ASSEMBLY

Sept.	The Assembly met pursuant to their adjourn-
19,	ment, on the 23d of July, -	794
20,	Letter from Dr. Franklin, dated London, May 7, laid before the House, - - - -	794
21,	Governour has no business to lay before the House, -	794
26,	Message from the Governour. The Indian Dis- turbances not yet at an end. The Governour of Virginia is still prosecuting an Expedition against the Shawanese. The Troops on the Frontiers should be continued in pay, -	794
28,	One hundred Rangers to be kept in pay until the 14th of October, -	794
29,	The Treasurer ordered to pay the Overseers of the Poor of Philadelphia, one hundred Pounds for the support of the French Neutrals, -	795

CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.

Sept.	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dart-
20,	mouth. The Country People are exercising in Arms, in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode-Island, and threaten to attack the Troops in Boston, to which place the friends of Government are daily resorting for protec- tion. The Commissioners of the Customs afraid to remain in Salem, have come to Bos- ton, where the Governour is also obliged to reside, -	795
21,	Resolutions adopted at a Convention of Commit- tees for the County of Worcester, Massachu- setts, held by adjournment on the 29th of Au- gust, and continued, by adjournments, to the 21st of September. -	795
21,	Meeting of Freeholders in Boston. Instructions to Delegates in Provincial Congress, -	798
21,	Convention of the several Towns of the County of Cumberland, in Massachusetts. - -	798
	Sheriff of the County required to attend the Con- vention, -	799

1774. Sept.	He subscribes a Declaration that he has not acted under the late Acts of Parliament; and that he will not, without the general consent of the County, -	799
	Committee appointed to draw up the sentiments of the Convention, - - - - -	799
22,	Report presented by the Committee, and unani- mously accepted, - - - -	799-802
24,	Meeting of the Selectmen and Committee of Cor- respondence of Boston. Consider it inexpe- dient for the Mechanics, or other Inhabitants of the Town, to assist the Troops, by furnish- ing them with Artificers, Labourers, or mate- rials of any kind to build Barracks, -	802
24,	Letter from J. Warren to the Publick, with an Extract of a Letter from Samuel Adams, dated September 9th. Gentlemen of the establish- ed Church of England, among the most reso- lute defenders of the rights of the People of the Continent, -	802
24,	Declaration of Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Town of Rye, in West-Chester County, New- York. They have not been concerned in any Resolutions entered into in regard to the dis- putes with the Mother Country. Disapprove of the hot and furious proceedings, in consequence of the disputes, and declare they will live and die peaceable Subjects of George the Third, -	803
	Apology of Abraham Miller and others, for sign- ing the above Declaration, - -	803
	Apology of Timothy Wetmore, another sub- scriber, (Note,) -	803
	Letter from the Committee of Mechanics of Bos- ton, dated September 8th, to the Committee of Mechanicks of New-York, - - -	803
24,	Resolutions of the Committee of Mechanicks of New-York, on receiving the foregoing Letter, -	804
25,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dart- mouth. The Carpenters in New-York refuse to come to Boston to build the Barracks, but the Boston Artificers have undertaken the work. Nothing but extravagances and milita- ry preparations heard of from Boston to New- York. The support Massachusetts receives from the other Colonies, is beyond conception, The disease is now so universal that there is no knowing where to apply a remedy, -	805
23,	Account of the transactions at a Meeting of the Freeholders of the County of Middlesex, in England, -	805
	Engagement signed by John Wilkes and John Glvnn, at the Middlesex Meeting, - -	806
26,	Inhabitants of Worcester, in Massachusetts, from the age of sixteen to seventy, form themselves into Military Companies, and choose Officers -	806
27,	Application of Doctor Warren to General Gage, for information as to his intentions in erecting Fortifications and purchasing Military Stores, -	806
	Answer of General Gage to Doctor Warren, -	806
27,	Meeting of the Committees of Boston and the neighbouring Towns. Resolve that any person who may supply the Troops at Boston with anything for the annoyance of the Inhabitants shall be deemed an inveterate enemy of the People, -	807
27,	Letter from the Joint Committees of Boston and the neighbouring Towns, to every Town and District in the Province, -	807
28,	Letter from Colonel William Preston, at Fincas- tle, in Virginia. March of Virginia Troops to meet Lord Dunmore at the Great Kenhawa. Attacks of the Indians on the White settle- ments, -	808
28,	Letter from Maryland to a Gentleman in Lon- don, -	809
28,	Handbill published at New-York. Supply of the British Troops, -	809
28,	Proclamation by Governour Gage. In conse- quence of the disordered state of the Province, will not meet the General Court at Salem, on the 5th of October, and discharges all persons elected as Representatives from giving their attendance, -	809
29,	Letter from the Committee of Correspondence of Boston, to the Continental Congress. Account of the attack upon the House of Joseph Scott. upon the discovery of his selling Cannon to General Gage, -	810

1774.
Sept.	Meeting of the Inhabitants of New-York, convened by the Committee, at the request of Joseph Totten,	827
Oct. 1,	Proclamation by the King, for dissolving the Parliament, and calling another,	810
1,	Considerations on the propriety of adopting a general Non-Remittance, as one of the means of obtaining a repeal of the Boston Bills,	811
3,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. The other Colonies have espoused the cause of Massachusetts with great violence, though some are more moderate than others. The Congress is still sitting, but much good is not to be expected from their deliberations. The Boston Artificers have refused to work on the Barracks. A Provincial Congress will soon meet, when it is supposed measures will be taken for the government of the Province,	814
3,	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Congress is sitting, but as they have agreed, to keep their Proceedings secret, he can furnish no account but what is found in the Newspapers,	815
3,	Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. The opinions of the People have become more favourable to the Americans. As the issue of the Congress would probably require vigorous measures, the Parliament has been dissolved, and a new one ordered,	815
3,	Proceedings at a Meeting of the Livery of London, at Guildhall. The Candidates pledged, if elected to Parliament, to endeavour to procure a repeal of the American Acts,	817
5,	Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth. Several of the Counties in the Province refused to unite with the New-York Committee in sending Delegates to the Congress. Almost the whole of the inhabitants of the Counties wish for moderate measures. At a meeting held last week the conduct of the persons who attempted to prevent the Merchants from sending Supplies to Boston, was highly disapproved,	819
5,	Handbill received at New-York from Boston, Memorandums for a Report, on providing permanent Barracks for the Troops at Boston,	820
6,	Address to the Inhabitants of New-York,	821
7,	Meeting of Importers of Goods from Great Britain, in the City of New-York,	328
7,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Stamford, in Connecticut,	827
8,	Letter from London. Reasons why the Americans should persevere, and oppose with vigorous measures the Tyranny of the British Government,	828
8,	Letter from James Lovell to Josiah Quincy, Jun.,	948
	PROVINCIAL CONGRESS OF MASSACHUSETTS
Oct. 5,	Members elected to serve in the General Assembly of Massachusetts, meet at Salem,	829
7,	Their Resolutions on the refusal of the Governour to admit them to the usual oaths,	829
	Provincial Congress formed,	830
	Names of the Delegates from the several Towns, Adjourn to meet at Concord,	834
11,	The Provincial Congress meets at Concord, John Hancock elected President, and Benjamin Lincoln Secretary,	834
12,	Committee appointed to take into consideration the state of the Province,	834
13,	Address to the Governour reported by the Committee, read and accepted, with one dissenting voice only,	835
	Committee to present Address to the Governour,	836
14,	Constables, Collectors of Taxes, Deputy Sheriffs, and Sheriffs, directed not to pay over Money but to retain it in their hands, subject to the order of the Towns, Provincial Congress, or General Assembly,	836
17,	Answer of Governour Gage to the Address of the Provincial Congress,	837
	Referred to the Committee on the state of the Province,	837
	Letters said to be wrote by the Rev. Mr. Peters, referred to the same Commnttee,	837
18,	The Galleries ordered to be cleared, and the doors of the House to be kept shut during the Debates in the Congress,	837

1774.
Oct.	A Reply to be made to the Answer of the Governour,	838
18,
19,	Reply to the Governour reported, read, and re-committed; reported again, considered, and laid on the table,	838
20,	Report from the Committee appointed to inquire into the state and operations of the Army, Committee to consider what is necessary for the defence and safety of the Province,	838
	Report relative to Payment and Collecting of outstanding Rates and Taxes,	838
21,	Resolution relative to the Counsellors and others, who have acted in obedience to the late Act of Parliament, for altering the Government of Massachusetts Bay,	839
	Committee to publish the names of the Mandamus Counsellors and others, who have acted under commissions derived from the Act of Parliament,	839
	Committee to report a Non-Consumption Agreement relative to British and India Goods,	839
	Committee to examine Rivington's Newspaper, Resolution adopted, recommending the total dis-use of India Tea,	840
	Report of Committee, on Defence of the Province, read, and deferred,	840
22,	Consideration of the Report resumed, and re-committed,	840
	Consideration of the propriety of sending Agents to Canada, referred to the next meeting of the Congress,	840
	Day of Publick Thanksgiving throughout the Province recommended,	840
	Report on the Safety and Defense of the Province, amended, and recommitted for further amendment,	841
24,	Committee to consider of the most proper time to provide a stock of Powder, Ordnance, and Ordnance Stores for the Province,	841
	Committee on Non-Consumption Agreement directed to report forthwith,	841
	Debates of the Congress to be kept secret, until leave shall be given to disclose the same,	841
	Committee report that now is the proper time to provide a stock of Powder, Ordnance, and Ordnance Stores,	841
	Committee to determine what Quantity shall be provided, and an Estimate of the expense,	841
	Consideration of Report on the Safety and Defence of the Province resumed, and re-committed for further amendments,	841
25,	Committee on Non-Consumption Agreement ordered to sit forthwith,	842
	Committee to inquire into the state of the Stores in the Commissary General's Office,	842
	Report on the quantity of Powder and Ordnance Stores necessary for the Province,	842
	All matters which shall come under the consideration of the Congress, to be kept secret,	842
	Report on the Safety and Defence of the Province,	842
26,	Report considered and adopted,	843
	Committee to consider what Military Exercise will be best for the People of the Province to adopt,	845
27,	Committee of Safety appointed,	845
	Five Commissaries appointed,	845
	Three General Officers appointed,	845
	Committee, to sit during the recess of the Congress, appointed,	845
	Receiver General to be appointed to-morrow and Members particularly enjoined to attend,	845
	Reply to the Governour's Answer recommittd for amendments,	845
28,	Receiver General appointed,	846
	Report of Committee on the state of the Province, relative to the removal of the Inhabitants of the Town of Boston from thence, read, and recommitted,	846
	Report relative to Collecting and Paying outstanding Taxes, read, and adopted,	846
	Committee to report a Resolve relative to a Non-Consumption Agreement,	847
	Committee to report on an equal Representation of the Province in Congress, at the next meeting,	848
	Constitutional Counsellors invited to attend Congress at the next meeting,	848

1774.
Oct.	The Resolve for a Non-Consumption Agreement,
28,	presented and adopted, - - - -	848
	Report on the Warlike Stores in the Commissa-
28,	ry General's Office, - - - -	848
29,	Report on a System of Military Exercise for the Province, -	848
	Consideration of the state of the Executive Courts of the Province, referred to the next meeting of the Congress, -	849
	Committee of Safety directed to write to the Continental Congress, showing the grounds and reasons of the proceedings of this Congress,	849
	Reply to the Governour's Answer agreed to, unanimously, and a Committee appointed to present it, -	849
	Committee to publish certain parts of the Proceedings of the Congress, passed on the 26th and 28th, -	851
	Two Members added to the Committee of Safety,	853
	Adjourned to the 23d of November,	853
	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
Oct.	9, Letter from Montreal, to a Gentleman in New-York Opinions of the Inhabitants of Canada
	relative to the Quebec Act, - - -	853
	General Meeting of the English Inhabitants of
	Montreal, -	853
10,	Letter from Eliphalet Dyer, Roger Sherman, and Silas Deane, to Governour Trumbull.--
	Proceedings of the Congress, - - -	854
11,	Account of the arrest and imprisonment of Samuel Dyre, of Boston, - - - -	855
12,	Proclamation of Governour Penn. Inhabitants and Magistrates of the country west of Laurel Hill required to pay due obedience to the Laws of Pennsylvania, without the least regard to the Proclamation of Lord Dunmore,	856
12,	General Committee of South Carolina recommend the non-importation of India Tea, and the non-exportation of any Arms or Ammunition whatsoever, -	857
13,	Letter from Sir James Wright to the Earl of Dartmouth. Protests and Dissents of the People in different parts of the Province, show that they are against any Resolutions; and that those attempted by a few in Savannah, are held in contempt, -	867
14.	Address from the County of Worcester, in Massachusetts, to Governour Gage, -	868
	Answer of the Governour, . - - -	869
	CONNECTICUT ASSEMBLY
Oct	Meeting of the General Assembly of the Eng-
13.	lish Colony of Connecticut, -	858
	Towns in the Colony ordered to provide double the quantity of Powder, Balls, and Flints, they were before obliged by Law to provide, -	858
	Cannon at New-London to be mounted, and kept fit for service, with a proper supply of Powder and Balls.	858
	Fifteen thousand Pounds, in Bills of Credit, to be issued, -	858
	Taxes levied on the Polls and rateable Estates in the Colony,	858
	Instructions and Regulations to the Overseers appointed by the Assembly for the Mohegan Indians. -	859
	Memorial of Zebulon Butler and Joseph Sluman,
	Agents for the Town of Westmoreland. -	859
	Memorial of Ebenezer Hazard, of New-York,	861
	PENNSYLVANIA ASSEMBLY.
Oct.	14, New Assembly meets, - - - -	869
	List of Members. -	869
	Edward Biddle chosen Speaker, -	869
	Approved by the Governour, - - -	870
15.	John Dickinson added to the Deputies from Pennsylvania to the General Congress, now sitting,	870
	Entertainment to be provided for the Members of the Congress. on Thursday next. - -	870
17,	Message from the Governour. Recommends keeping the Rangers a longer time in Service,	871
21,	The Rangers to be kept in Pay until the first of
	November, -	871
	Answer to the Governour's Message,	871
91.	Adjourn to the 5th of December,	871

1774.
	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
Oct.	Express from Lord Dunmore arrived at Wil-
14,	liamsburg, with the Speeches at his Conference with the Indians, - - -	871
	Speech of Captain White Eyes, - - -	872
	Answer of Lord Dunmore to the Delawares and
	Six Nation Chiefs, -	872
	Intelligence from Captain Pipe, at a Conference with several Delaware and Mohawk Chiefs, -	874
	Speech of the Mohegans to the Shawanese,	874
	Answer of the Shawanese, - - - -	874
	Reply of the Mohawk and Delaware Chiefs to
	Lord Dunmore, -	875
	Speech of the Big Apple Tree, a Mohawk Chief,	875
	Answer of Lord Dunmore, - - - -	875
	Reply of the Delawares, - - - -	876
16,	Speech of Edmund Burke, on offering himself a Candidate to represent the City of Bristol in Parliament, -	876
16,	Letter from Dr. Samuel Cooper to John Adams,	878
18,	Proclamation of Governour Penn. Officers of the Customs prevented by a Mob from seizing a quantity of foreign Sugar that had not been entered at the Custom House, nor the Duties paid. All Civil Officers required to bring the Offenders to justice, -	878
17,	Letter from Captain Arthur St. Clair to Joseph
	Shippen, Jun.,	879
	Speech from Captain Pipe to the Goveraour, in answer to his Messages sent to the Shawanese and the Delawares,	879
17,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. Additional Troops expected from Quebeck, New-York, and Newfoundland,
	Despairs of any overtures for paying for the Tea, unless recommended by the Continental
	Congress, -	880
19,	Circular Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to the Governours of the Colonies, - -	881
19,	Order of the King, in Council, prohibiting the exportation of Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition from Great Britain,	881
20,	General Committee of South Carolina recommend Merchants and others, as they prize the tranquillity and happiness of America, not to take advantage of the publick distresses by raising the prices of imported Goods,	881
20,	Address to the People of Halifax County, in
	Virginia, -	882
20,	Tea at Annapolis, in Maryland, imported in the Brig Peggy Stewart, from London. Acknowledgement of the Owners of the Tea, that they had committed a most daring insult, and an act of the most pernicious tendency to the Liberties of America; they ask pardon of the People, and voluntarily burn the Vessel with all her Sails and Colours flying, - - -	885
20,	Thanks to the Merchants of New-York, who assisted in providing Barracks for the Troops at Boston, -	886
20,	Address to the Inhabitants of New-York. Reasons for their paying obedience to Great Britain, and the advantages they will derive from submission, -	886
21,	Resolutions of sundry Inhabitants of Frances
	Town, in New-Hampshire, - - -	888
22,	Letter from Silas Deane, at Philadelphia, to Governour Trumbull. The greatest unanimity has prevailed through the whole of the Proceedings of the Congress, - - - -	888
24,	Proclamation of Governour Wright. Grants of Land in Georgia, -	889
24,	Proclamation of Governour Wright. Treaty with the Creek Indians, at Savannah, on the 20th inst. Trade with the Indians renewed,	1137
24,	Letter from Quebeck to a Gentleman in Boston, Instructions to the English Gentlemen of the Committee of Montreal, from the Canadian
	Farmers, -	891
25,	Association signed by the Ladies of Edenton, in
	North Carolina, -	891
26,	Letter from Joseph Reed, at Philadelphia, to Josiah Quincy, Jun., London. Instead of divided counsels and feeble measures in the Colonies, all now is union and firmness. The Members of the Congress part with each other on terms of the utmost friendship,	892

1774.

CONTINENTAL CONGRESS.

Sept. Meeting of the Delegates chosen and appointed 893

5. by the several Colonies and Provinces, in North America, to hold a Congress at Philadelphia, 893

Members present from the several Colonies, 893

Peyton Randolph elected President, - 893

Credentials read and approved, 893

For New-Hampshire, . - - - 893

Massachusetts, - 894

Rhode-Island, - 894

Connecticut, - 895

New-York, - 896

New-Jersey, - 896

Pennsylvania, - 896

Delaware, 897

Maryland, - 897

Virginia, - 897

South Carolina, - - - - 898

6, Richard Henry Lee, from Virginia, attended, - 898

Rules of Order adopted, - - - - 898

Reverend Mr. Duché requested to open the Congress with Prayers, - 899

Thomas Johnson, Jun., from Maryland attended, 899

7, Committee appointed to state the Rights of the Colonies, the instances in which they are violated, and the means most proper to obtain a restoration of them, - 899

Committee appointed to examine and report the several Statutes which affect the Trade and Manufactures of the Colonies, - - - 900

President authorized to adjourn, from day to day, when there is no business, - 900

12, Matthew Tilghman, a Delegate from Maryland, attended, - 900

14, William Hooper and Joseph Hewes, from North Carolina, attended, - 900

Henry Wisner, from Orange County, in New-York, attended, - 901

George Ross, from Pennsylvania, and John Alsop, from New-York, attended, - - - 901

Delegates from Massachusetts presented the Proceedings of the Joint Committees of the Towns in the County of Middlesex, at Concord, on the 30th and 31st of August, - - - 901

17, Richard Caswell, from North Carolina, attended, 901

Resolutions of the County of Suffolk, Massachusetts, on the 6th inst., laid before the Congress, 901

Resolution of the Congress, approving of the Suffolk County Resolutions, - - - 904

Contributions from all the Colonies for supplying the Sufferers in Boston, should be continued, - 904

Report of the Committee appointed to examine the Statutes, brought in and laid on the table, 904

19, Referred to the Committee appointed to state the Rights of the Colonies, - - - - 904

20, Merchants and others in the several Colonies requested not to send to Great Britain any orders for Goods, - . 904

Report of Committee on the Rights of the Colonies, brought in and read, - - - - 904

Copy of the Report made out for each Colony, - 904

24, The Report considered, - - - - 905

Congress will now consider only such Rights as have been infringed since 1763, postponing the consideration of the General Rights of America to a future day, - - - - 905

Committee appointed to state the Rights, brought in a Report of the Infringements and Violations of American Rights, - 905

Consideration of the Report deferred, - 905

Congress, in the meanwhile, to deliberate on the Means to be pursued for a restoration of our Rights, - 905

26, John Herring, from Orange County, New-York, attended, - 905

Consideration of the Means for restoring Rights, resumed, - 905

27, Further considered, - 905

Importation of all Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, whatsoever, from Great Britain, or Ireland, prohibited after first of December next, 905

None exported from Great Britain, or Ireland, after that day, shall be used or purchased in the Colonies, - . 905

28, Resolution offered by Mr. Galloway, declaring the Colonies hold in abhorrence the idea of being considered Independent Communities, 905

1774.

Sept. Mr. Galloway's Plan for a proposed union between Great Britain and the Colonies, - 905

28, Means of restoring the Rights, considered, - 906

29, Further considered, . 906

30, Further considered, - 906

Exportation of all Merchandise whatsoever, from the Colonies to Great Britain, Ireland, and the West Indies, prohibited after the 1st of September, 1775, unless American Grievances are redressed before that time, . - 906

Committee to prepare a Plan to carry into effect the Non-Importation, Non-Consumption, and Non-Exportation resolved on, - 906

Oct. 1, Simon Boerum, from King's County, New-York, attended, 906

Means of restoring the Rights, further considered, 906

Committee to prepare an Address to the King, requesting a Redress of Grievances, - 907

3, Instructions to the Committee on the Address, 907

Matters proper to be contained in the Address considered, - - 907

4, Further considered, - 907

5, Further considered, - 907

Instruction to the Committee on the Address, 907

Address from William Goddard received, - 907

6, Means for restoration of American Rights further considered, - 907

Letter from the Boston Committee of Correspondence laid before Congress, - 907

Letter to be considered to-morrow, - -- 908

Consideration of means for restoration of Rights, resumed, - 908

Instruction to Committee appointed to prepare the form of an Association, 908

7, Letter from Boston Committee considered, - 908

Committee to prepare a Letter to General Gage, 908

8, Letter from Boston further considered, - 908

Opposition of the Inhabitants of Massachusetts to late Acts of Parliament approved by Congress. If the Acts are attempted to be enforced by Arms, all America ought to support them in their opposition, - 908

10, Letter from Boston further considered, - 908

Removal of the People from Boston, so important in its consequences as to require the utmost deliberation. If absolutely necessary, they should be recompensed by all America, - 908

People of Massachusetts advised to submit to a suspension of the administration of justice, where it cannot be procured under the Charter, 909

Any Person who shall act under any authority derived from the Act of Parliament, altering the Government of Massachusetts, to be held in detestation, as a wicked tool of the despotism, which is preparing to destroy the Rights of America, - - 909

11, Letter from the Congress to General Gage, - 909

People of Boston advised to conduct themselves peaceably towards General Gage and the Troops, - 909

Committee to prepare a Memorial to the People of British America; and an Address to the People of Great Britain, - - - - 910

12, Plan for carrying into effect the Non-Importation, Non-Consumption, and Non-Exportation Agreement, reported by the Committee, - 910

Consideration of the Rights and Grievances of the Colonies resumed, - 910

13, Further considered, - 910

14, Further considered, - 910

Resolutions declaring the Rights and Grievances of the Colonies, - 910

Letter from several Gentlemen, in Georgia, read, 912

15, Plan of Association further considered, - - 912

17, John Dickinson, from Pennsylvania, attended, 913

Plan of Association further considered, - 913

18, Plan further considered, amended, and ordered to be transcribed, to be signed by the Members, 913

Address to the People of Great Britain reported, 913

19, The Address considered, amended, and recommended, - 913

Memorial to the Inhabitants of the Colonies reported, - 913

20, The Association read and signed, - 913

Fac simile of the Signatures to the Association, - Opposite 916

Memorial to the Inhabitants of the Colonies further considered, - 916

1774
Oct. 21,	Address to the People of Great Britain, - -	917
	Memorial to the Inhabitants of the Colonies, -	921
	Committee to prepare an Address to the People of Quebec, and Letters to the Colonies of St. John's, Nova-Scotia, Georgia, and East and West Florida, -	928
	Committee to revise the Minutes of Congress, -	928
	Address to the King considered, recommitted, and Mr. Dickinson added to the Committee, -	928
	The seizing a Person, in America, to transport him beyond the Sea, for Trial, declared to be against the Law, and ought to meet with resistance and reprisal, - - -	928
	Peyton Randolph unable to attend the Congress, Henry Middleton chosen President, -	928
	Address from Christopher Tully received, -	928
	Journal ordered to be printed, - - -	928
	A Congress to be held on the 10th of May next, unless redress of Grievances should be sooner obtained, recommended, - - -	928
	Letter from Congress to the Colonies of St. John's, &c., - -	929
24,	Address to the People of Quebec reported, considered, and recommitted, - . . -	929
	Address to the King reported, - - -	929
25,	Address considered, approved, end ordered to be engrossed, - - -	929
	To be sent to the Colony Agents, to be presemad to his Majesty; and the Agents requested to call in the aid of such Noblemen and Gentlemen as are firm friends to American Liberty, -	929
	Committee to prepare a Letter to the Agents, -	929
	Thanks of Congress to the patriotick Advocates of Civil and Religious Liberty who have espoused the cause of America, both in and out of Parliament, -	929
26,	Letter to the Colony Agents, - - -	929
	Address to the Inhabitants of the Province of Quebec, - - -	930
	Address to the King, -	934
	List of the Colony Agents, -	938
	List of the Delegates who attended the Congress, -	938
	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
Oct. 20,	Letter from Governour Gage to Peyton Randolph, in reply to the Letter from the Congress, of the 10th of October, - - -	989
	Letter to Peyton Randolph, late President of the American Continental Congress, from an Inhabitant of Massachusetts, against the Proceedings of the Congress, and defending the conduct of General Gage, - - -	939
27,	Letter to General Gage, from Williamsburg, in Virginia, -	945
27,	Letter from John Dickinson to Arthur Lee. The Colonies have taken such grounds that Great Britain must relax, or involve herself in a Civil War. A determined and unanimous resolution animates the Continent, - -	947
28,	Letter from John Dickinson to Josiah Quincy, Jun. The most peaceable Provinces are now animated; and a Civil War is inevitable, unless there be a quick change of British measures, -	947
29,	Letter from Colonel Charles Lee to the Duke of____. All orders of men, throughout the Colonies, are enthusiastick in the cause of Freedom. The People have Arms, and are expert in their use, - -	949
30,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Provincial Congress, it is reported, had in agitation the embodying of fifteen thousand Men, to be ready, at a moment's warning, and to be supported by the neighbouring Provinces. It is the intention of the Congress to assemble the old Council at the next meeting, to form as complete a Government as possible for the Province, - - -	950
31,	Letter from Josiah Quincy to Josiah Quincy, Jun., -	951
31,	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth, -	952
Nov. 1,	Address of the Grand Jury for the County of Essex, in New-Jersey, to Frederick Smith, Chief Justice of the Province, - - -	967
1,	Letter from a Gentleman, at Bladensburg, Maryland, to his brother, in Glasgow. Virginia is raising a Company of Men in every County Maryland has begun to raise Men in every
1774.	County also. To the Northward they have large Bodies ready for the field. Regulation of prices of importod Goods, - - -	953
Nov. 2,	Circular Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to the Governours of the Colonies. Requires Returns every three months of the state of their respective Councils, -	953
2,	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour Colden. Requires him to be particularly attentive to prevent the importation of Gunpowder: he has every day intelligence of the Americans purchasing large quantities of Arms and Ammunition in the different Ports of Europe, -	953
2,	Council of Pennsylvania authorize the laying out a King's Highway, from the Wind Gap, on the North side of the Blue Mountain, to Wyoming, -	954
	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Governour Penn, dated August 26. Requires him to desist from extending the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania to the line run by the Commissioners of that Province and Maryland, - - -	954
2,	Proclamation of Governour Penn, requiring Magistrates and others to desist from exercising jurisdiction beyond those places where it has been heretofore exercised, until his Majesty's pleasure shall be known in the premises, -	955
3,	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth. Explanation of his motives for issuing the Proclamation for extending the jurisdiction, -	955
2,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn. Report of the Battle between the Indians and Colonel Lewis, -	956
2,	Address of the Committee to the Freeholders and Electors of the City and County of Philadelphia. Recommend the election of a new Committee, under the Association of the Congress, -	956
2,	Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Congress broke up last week. Their measures do not meet with applause in New-York; on the contrary, the City is rather dissatisfied. The Merchants dislike the Non-Importation, and the Farmers will not bear the Non-Exportation. A great majority in the Province disapprove of the dangerous measures of the New England Governments, -	957
2,	Letter from an Officer at Boston, to his friend in Edinburgh. The Faction at Boston is very low. All ranks of People are heartily tired of disorder; and as soon as the determination of Great Britain to despise their Resolves and Petitions, is known, all will be quiet, - -	957
3,	Letter from Doctor Chauncy to Josiah Quincy, Jun., London. The Colonies are united in their resolution to defend their Liberties. All wish for a restoration of harmony, and dread a bloody conflict; yet this they will universally go into, rather than submit to the tyrannical measures imposed on them, - -	958
4,	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth, -	958
5,	Charge of William Henry Drayton, one of the Judges of the General Sessions of the Peace, for the Districts of Camden and Cheraws, in South Carolina, on his Circuit, the fifth and fifteenth days of November, to the several Grand Juries, -	959
	Presentments of the Grand Jury for the District of Camden, - -	961
	Presentments of the Grand Jury for the Cheraws District, -	962
	Address of the Petit Jury of Cheraws District, to Judge Drayton, -	962
5,	Resolutions adopted at a Meeting of the Officers under the command of Lord Dunmore, convened at Fort Gower, - - -	962
6,	Sheep not permitted to be sent from New-York to the West Indies, -	963
6,	Letter from Joseph Reed to Josiah Quincy, Jun. The Quakers have directed their members not to serve on the Committee for carrying into effect the Association of Congress; yet, in Philadelphia, there is no fear that any discontented spirit dares oppose the measures necessary for the publick safety. There is more fear for

1774.	New-York, where there has been a strange delinquency the whole Summer,	-	-	963
Nov. 7,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of York, in Virginia, and proceedings of the County Committee, on the arrival of Tea,	-	-	964
7,	Meeting of the Committee and other Inhabitants of Gloucester, in Virginia, on the arrival of Tea,	-	-	965
7,	Concession of John Prentiss to the York and Gloucester Committees, for importing Tea,	-	-	965
7.	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the City of Philadelphia, to make arrangements for electing a Committee,	-	-	965
7,	New-York Committee recommend the election of a Committee of Inspection, for the purposes expressed in the Association of Congress,	-	-	967
7,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Boston,	-	-	968
7,	Letter from New-York to a Correspondent in London,	-	-	969
7,	Meeting at Marblehead, in Massachusetts. Appointed a Committee to execute the Association; and fixed a day for choosing Militia officers,	-	-	970
8,	Meeting of the Committee for Westmoreland County, in Virginia. Resolutions relative to David Wardrobe,	-	-	970
	Letter from David Wardrobe to Archibald Provan, of Glasgow, dated June 30,	-	-	971
8,	Proclamation of Governour Eden,	-	-	972
9,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Anne Arundel County, and the City of Annapolis, Committee of Observation and Committee of Correspondence appointed,	-	-	972
10,	Address of the Merchants, Traders. and others, of Williamsburg, to Peyton Randolph and the other Delegates.	-	-	973
	Answer to the Address,	-	-	973
10,	Proclamation of Governour Gage, against the Resolves of the Provincial Congress,	-	-	973
11,	Treaty of Peace, Friendship, and Commerce, concluded on the 20th of October, between Georgia and the Creek Indians,	-	-	974
11,	Concession of Nicholas Austin, to the Committee of Correspondence of Rochester, in New-Hampshire,	-	-	974
12,	Proclamation of Lieutenant Governour Bull. Trade opened with the Creek and Cherokee Indians. Revokes all Indian Trade Licenses, and requires new ones to be taken out,	-	-	975
12,	Committee of Observation for Baltimore County, in Maryland, appointed,	-	-	975
14,	Political Observations, without order, addressed to the People of America,	-	-	976
	Reply to the foregoing,	-	-	977
	Another Reply,	-	-	978
14,	Letter from the New-York Committee to Daniel Dunscomb, Chairman of the Committee of Mechanics,	-	-	329
5,	New-York Committee having agreed to dissolve, appoint a day for the election of a new Committee,	-	-	330
15,	Leter from a Gentleman at Amsterdam, to a friend in Philadelphia. A Vessel there loading with Ammunition and Arms, stopped by a Cutter sent from Dover,	-	-	979
15.	Letter from Nathaniel Appleton to Josiah Quincy, Jun. It is the universal voice of the People, that they will sacredly observe the recommendations of the Grand Congress,	-	-	980
15,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Proceedings of the Continental Congress astonish and terrify all considerate men. Though many of their Resolves neither can nor will be observed, it is to be feared they will be generally received. Barracks have been provided for the Troops: and by various means. Provisions for six months have been obtained,	-	-	981
15,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth. Violent proceedings in some parts of New-Hampshire No hopes of a legal establishment of the powers of Government in the Province, until they are effectually restored in Massachusetts,	-	-	981
16.	Proclamation by the King. Copper Coins for Virginia,	-	-	982
16,	Meeting of Inhabitants of Calvert County, Maryland. Committees of Observation and Correspondence appointed.	-	-	982

1774.	Resolutions of the County Congress of the County
Nov. 16,	of York, in Massachusetts,	983
17,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Henrico County Virginia. Committee of Observation appointed,	985
18,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Charles County, Maryland. Committees of Observation and Correspondence, and Delegates to the Convention appointed,	985
18,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Frederick County, Maryland. Committees of Observation and Correspondence, and Delegates to the Convention appointed,	986
18,	Address of the Committee of Mechanics, of New-York, to the Delegates who represented the City in the General Congress,	987
	Answer of the Delegates,	987
19,	Address to the People of New-Jersey. Condemns the Resolutions of the Congress. There are no instances of Laws so severe, or any regulations so inimical to Liberty, as their Resolves,	987
21.	Town Meeting at Providence, in Rhode-Island. One hundred and twenty-five Pounds voted for the distressed Inhabitants of Boston,	989
21	Litter from Dr. Joseph Warren, to Josiah Quincy, Jun. It is the united voice of America, to preserve their Freedom, or lose their lives in defence of it, The Resolutions of the Congress are not the effect of inconsiderate rashness, but the sound result of sober inquiry and deliberation. If the Acts of Parliament are not repealed the wisest step for both Countries is to separate, and not spend their blood and treasure in destroying each other,	990
21,	Maryland Convention,	991
	Several Counties not being represented the Convention adjourned to the 8th of December,	991
22,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Elizabeth City County, Virginia. Committee of Observation appointed,	991
22,	Letter from an Officer in the Army at Boston. As to the Colonists taking Arms to resist the Force of England, it is mere bullying. Any two Regiments here ought to be decimated, if they did not beat in the field the whole Force of the Massachusetts Province,	991
22,	Committee of Sixty Persons elected in New-York, for the purposes mentioned in the Association of Congress,	992
	Address of the Magistrates of Frederick County, Maryland, to the Deputies from the Province to the late Continental Congress,	992
	Address of the Grand Jury of Frederick County, Maryland to their Deputies in the Congress,	993
23,	Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth,	993
23,	Committee of Observation, for Warwick County, Virginia.	994
MASSACHUSETTS PROVINCIAL CONGRESS.
Nov. 23,	The Provincial Congress meets, agreeably to their adjournment, on the 29th of October,	993
	Walter Spooner, one of his Majesty's Constitutional Council, desired to attend the Congress.	993
	John Adams and Robert Treat Paine, of the Continental Congress, desired to attend,	993
24,	Members of the Continental Congress required to report their Proceedings,	993
	Dr. Appleton appointed Chaplain,	993
	Proceedings of the Continental Congress reported, read, and committed,	993
	Petition from Officers of the Minute Men, in the Northwest part of Worcester County, read and committed,	994
	Committee to prepare a Plan for the Defence and Safety of the Government, required to set forth-with,	994
	Committee to publish a list of the Mandamus Counsellors, and others now in the Town of Boston, forthwith to prepare a Report,	994
25,	Committee to ascertain the number of Constitutional Counsellors now in Town,	994
26,	Committee to devise means of keeping up a Correspondence with Montreal and Quebec,	995
	Committee to prepare Form of an Order with respect to the Treasurer's Bond,	995
28,	Committee to take into consideration the state of

LXXVII	CONTENTS.	LXXVIII
1774.	the Manufactures, and how they may be improved in the Province, - - -	995
Nov. 29,	Committee to make an estimate of the loss and damage of every, kind, occasioned by the Acts of Parliament since the operation of the Port Bill, - - -	995
	Committee to state the amount of the Sums which have been extorted from us since 1763, under certain Acts of the British Parliament, -	995
30,	Members to attend the Continental Congress on the 10th of May next, to be appointed to-morrow -	996
	Letters from Doctor Franklin to Mr. Cushing, read and referred to the Provincial Committee of Correspondence, -	996
Dec. 1,	Report of Committee on Proceedings of Continental Congress, read, considered, and recommended, -	996
	Thanks of the Congress to the other Colonies, for their Donations to the Town of Boston, -	996
	Committee to call upon the Secretary for a list of the Mandamus Counsellors, - -	997
2,	Report of Committee on the state of the Province, -	997
	Members to represent the Province in Continental Congress, chosen, -	997
3,	Report of Committee on the state of the Province, considered, -	997
5,	Committee to prepare an Address to the Clergy, desiring them to exhort the People to sustain the Congress, -	997
	Report on the Proceedings of the Continental Congress adopted, -	997
6,	Committee to correspond, with the Inhabitants of Canada appointed, -	999
	Brief to be circulated through the Province, to promote Donations for the Sufferers in Boston and Charlestown, -	999
	Address to the Clergy, - - -	1000
	Mandamus Counsellors who have published a renunciation of their Commissions, -	1000
7,	Committee to prepare a true state of the number of Inhabitants, and of the Exports and Imports of the Colony, -	1001
8,	Resolutions recommending the encouragement of Manufactures in the Province, - - -	1001
	Two General Officers chosen, - - -	1002
9,	Committee on an Address from the Baptists to the Congress, - -	1003
	Report of Committee relative to Publick Moneys in the hands of Constables and others, adopted, -	1003
	Committee on a Plan of Military Exercise proposed by Captain Pickering, - -	1004
	Report of Committee on Address from the Baptists, adopted, -	1004
	Committee on Letter from the Town of Hardwick, - -	1004
10,	Report on Letter from Hardwick, - - -	1004
	Address to the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the Towns and Districts of Massachusetts Bay, -	1005
	Report of Committee on the state of the Province relative to assuming Civil Government, considered and laid on the table, - - -	1006
	Returns of the Officers and Men, of the Minute Men, and the Militia to be made, - -	1006
	Report of Committee on the state of the Province, -	1007
	Expense of transmitting the Address to the Canadians to be paid by this Government, - -	1008
	The Congress dissolved, - - -	1008
	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
Nov. 25,	Meeting of a great number of the Freeholders of Chesterfield County, Virginia. County Committee appointed, -	1007
25,	Meeting of Freeholders of James City County, Virginia. Committee of Observation appointed, -	1008
26,	Committee for the upper part of Frederick County, Maryland. Punishment of John Parks, -	1009
28,	Address of Committee of Correspondence to the Freeholders of the County of Essex, in the Province of New-Jersey, - - -	1009
30,	Address of the Committee of Philadelphia to the Publick, -	1010
	Committee of Observation for Philadelphia County, -	1010
1774.
Nov. 30,	Queries addressed to the Committees of Observation, on the Pamphlet, "A Friendly Address to all Reasonable Americans," - - -	1011
	Meeting of Freeholders of Prince George's County, Maryland. Committees of Observation and Correspondence, and Delegates to the Convention appointed, -	1012
Dec. 1,	Meeting of Freeholders of Elizabethtown, Essex County, New Jersey. Committees of Observation and Correspondence appointed, -	1012
2,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to the Earl of Dartmouth. The measures recommended by the Continental Congress received, implicitly, by the People, as matters of obedience. Exportation of Sheep prevented, by order of the Committee, -	1013
4,	Letter from Arthur St. Clair to Governour Penn. Attempt of Mr. Connotly to enforce the jurisdiction of Virginia, at Pittsburgh. Mr. Scott, a Pennsylvania Magistrate, arrested by Conolly, on the 12th of November, and brought before Lord Dunmore, at Fort Burd, -	1013
4,	Lord Dunmore arrived at Williamsburg, from his expedition against the Indians, having brought them to terms, and made a Treaty with them, -	1014
	Letter from Red Stone. Causes of the Indian War traced from the Treaty made by Colonel Bouquet, with the Shawanese, in 1764, to the attack of Captain Michael Cresap upon a party of Indians, in April, 1774, -	1015
	Letter from the Camp, on Point Pleasant, at the mouth of the Great Kenhawa, dated October 17th. Account of the Battle at that place, on the 10th, -	1016
	Letter from Staunton, in Virginia, of November 4th. A further account of the same Battle, -	1017
	List of killed and wounded Virginians in the Battle at Point Pleasant, on the 10th of October, -	1018
	Message from (Note,) an Indian Warrior, to Lord Dunmore, -	1020
	Speech of Logan, a Shawanese Chief, to Lord Dunmore, (Note,) -	1020
5,	Address of the City of Williamsburg to Lord Dunmore, - - -	1019
	Answer to the Address, - - -	1019
	Address of the President and Professors of William and Mary College to Lord Dunmore, -	1019
	Address of the Borough of Norfolk to Lord Dunmore, - - -	1019
	Answer to the Address, - - -	1020
5,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Richmond County, Virginia. Committee of Inspection appointed, -	1021
5,	Committee of New-Castle County, Delaware. Approve the Continental Association. Recommend to the Inhabitants, from sixteen to fifty years of age, to form themselves into Military Companies, -	1022
5,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Reading, in Berks County, Pennsylvania. Committee of Observation appointed, -	1023
	ASSEMBLY OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Dec. 5,	The Assembly meets, -	1023
8,	Report from the Members deputed, in behalf of this Province, to attend the General Congress, -	1023
9,	Resolutions of the Congress considered -	1023
10,	Further considered, and unanimously approved, -	1023
15,	Deputies to the Congress, to meet on the 10th of May next, appointed, - - -	1023
	Committee to prepare Instructions to the Deputies appointed, -	1024
20,	Message from the Governour, Recommends repair of Barracks in the Northern Liberties, -	1024
23,	Answer to the Governour's Message. The House does not think expedient to repair the Barracks, -	1024
24,	Instructions to the Deputies considered, and the further consideration postponed to the next Session, -	1024
	Adjourned to the 20th of February next, -	1025
	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
Dec. 6,	Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. First information of the Resolves of the Congress of the States of America, -	1025

1774.
Dec.	Meeting of the Freeholders of Essex Cunnty, Vir-
6,	ginia. Committee of Observation appointed,	1026
	Committee of Isle of Wight County, Virginia,	1026
0,	Meeting of Freeholders of Princess Anne County, Virginia. Committee of Observation ap-	1026
	pointed,	-
6,	Regulations, for the sale of Goods imported after the first day of December, adopted by the Philadelphia Committee, - - - -	1026
6.	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth. Philadelphia and several of the Counties have appointed Committees to enforce the Association, - - - -	1027
6,	Meeting of Freeholders and other Inhabitants of Jamaica, in Queen's County, New-York. Approve the Resolutions of the Congress. Committee of Correspondence and Observation appointed, - - - -	1027
7.	Meeting of Freeholders of Newark, in Essex
	County, New-Jersey. Committee of Observation appointed, - - - -	1028
	Address of the Committee to the Delegates for
	New-Jersey, in the Continental Congress, -	1029
	Queries of the Committee relative to Rivington's
	Newspaper, - - - -	1029
7.	Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth. Proceedings in New-York on the Resolutions of Congress. Dispute between the smugglers and fair traders will probably defeat the Association. Men opposed to the Congress on the Committee; they at present support the measures of the Congress, to prevent dangerous men from taking the lead, - - - -	1030
8.	Meeting of the Freeholders of Caroline County, Virginia. Committee of Observation appointed, - - - -	1030
8.	Meeting of the Deputies appointed by the several Counties of the Province of Maryland, at the City of Annapolis, by adjournment, on the 8th of December, and continued till the 12th, -	1031
	Proceedings of the Continental Congress unanimously approved, - - - -	1031
	Woollen, Linen, and Cotton Manufactures recommended, - - - -	1031
	Advances on the prime cost of Goods regulated,	1031
	Suits not to be brought in any case for any Person who violates the Continental Association,	1032
	None but Members of Committees to meddle with, or determine, any question under the Association, - - - -	1032
	Will support, to the utmost of their power, any Colony where an attempt shall be made to carry into execution, by force, the assumed power of Parliament to tax the Colonies, -	1032 Inhabitants of the Province, from sixteen to fifty years of age, to form themselves into Military
	Companies, - - - -	1032
	Ten thousand Pounds to be raised by the Counties for the purchase of Arms and Ammunition. - - - -	1032
	Committee of Correspondence for the Province empowered to call a Meeting of the Convention on the 24th of April next, - - - -	1033 Contributions for the Suffering Poor of Boston to be continued, - - - -	1033
	Committee of Correspondence appointed. -	1033
	Delegates to the next Continemal Congress appointed, - - - -	1033
	Colonies and Provinces generally requested to enter into such Resolutions as have been adopted by this Province. for mutual defenee and protection, - - - -	1033
9,	Letter from Savannah, to a Gentleman of Philadelphia. Meeting at Savannah, on the 8th.
	Georgia will unite with the other Colonies
	Large Dunations made for Sufferers in Boston,	1033
9,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Prince William County, Virginia. Committee of Observation elected. Resolutions adopted on the 21st to enforce the Continental Association, . -	1034
10,	Circular from the Earl of Dartmouth to the Governours of the several Colonies. The Resolution of Parliament to sustain the King in carrying into execution the Laws of the last Session, will put an end to the expectations of the Colonies of receiving support in their unwarrantable pretensions, - - - -	1034

1774.
Dec.	Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieuten-
10,	ant Governour Colden. Does not think the assistance of the King's Troops to quell the disturbances at Bennington, under the New-Hampshire Grants, ought to be called for until every other effort has been found insufficient; and hopes these disputes may be settled without the risk of bloodshed, - - - -	1035
10,	Meeting of Freeholders of Newtown, in Queen's County, New-York. Committee of Observation appointed, - - - -	1035
10,	Letter from London, to a Gentleman in New-York. Advantages to the Colonies from an union with England. Parliament cannot make the first advances towards reconciliation, - - - -	1035
10,	Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. The American writers, by their pretensions to Independence, and their claims to exemption from Taxation, have ruined the cause, - - - -	1036
12,	Meeting of the Freeholders of King and Queen
	County, Virginia. Committee of Observation appointed, - - - -	1037
12,	Meeting of Henrico County, Virginia, Committee. The Resolutions of Congress to be considered by the Committee as the sole rule of their contract, respecting their present engagements. Committee of Correspondence appointed, - - - -	1037
12,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Den-bury, in Connecticut. Resolutions to support the Congress. Committee of Observation appointed. The Inhabitants requested to contribute liberally, Money or Provisions for Boston
	Sufferers, - - - -	1038
12,	Letter from Boston to a Gentleman in New-York.
	It was moved on the 10th instant, in the Provincial Congress, that Arms be immediately taken up against the King's Troops; a Member stated such a move was infamous, as the Members knew that neither Connecticut, nor any of the Southern Colonies, meant to oppose his Majesty's Arms. At Plymouth they are now beating up for Volunteers to attack
	the Troops, - - - -	1039
12,	Letter from Captain Wallace to Vice Admiral
	Graves, dated on board his Majesty's Ship
	Rose, at Newport, Rhode- Island. The King's Cannon upon Fort-Island carried off by the Inhabitants, - - - -	1039
13,	Letter from Sir James Wright to the Earl of Dartmouth. Attempt to raise a flame again in Georgia, since the return of the Carolina Delegates from the Congress, whose Resolutions and Proceedings have sanctioned Rebellion,	1040
13,	Letter from Arthur Lee to Richard Henry Lee,	1040
14,	Letter from Newport, in Rhode-Island, to a Gentleman in New-York. The People there have declared themselves openly against Government. The Publick Authorities have dismantled the King's Fort, and moved the Cannon and Stores to Providence, - - - -	1041
14,	Letter from Governour Wentworth to Governour
	Gage. This day about four hundred Men proceeded to his Majesty's Castle, William and Mary, and carried off by violence one hundred barrels of Powder, belonging to the King; tomorrow, it is expected, they will carry off the Cannon and Arms. The persons who took the lead in this enormity are well known, -	1041
14,	Letter from Captain Cochran, Commander of Fort William and Mary, to Governour Wentworth. Informs him of the storming of the Fort, and the seizure and removal of the Powder, - - - -	1042
16.	Letter from Governour Wentworth to Governour
	Gage Last night many Cannon, and about sixty Muskets, were taken from the Fort.
	Portsmouth is full of armed Men, who appear determined to dismantle the Fort entirely, -	1042
16,	Letters from Portsmouth, in New-Hampshire, to a Gentleman in New-York. Further accounts of the seizure of the Powder and Cannon at Fort William and Mary, - - - -	1043
	Address of the Council of Virginia to Govern-
	our Dunmore, - - - -	1043
	The Governour's Answer, - - - -	1044

1774. The Meeting determined to be illegal, and adjourned without transacting any business, - 1076

Dec. 30, Letter from Joseph Trumbull to Governour Trumbull A supply of Ammunition should be procured, at the Colony's expense, as early as possible, - 1077

30, Meeting of Freeholders and other Inhabitants of Boston Report on the Letter from General Gage to Peyton Randolph, President of the Congress, adopted, and to be forwarded to Mr. Randolph. Thanks to the Colonies, for their liberal Donations. Delegates to the Provincial Congress appointed, - 1077

80, Letter from Thomas Cushing to Josiah Quincy, Junior, - 1080

31, Letter from a Mercantile House at Yorkshire, in England, to a Gentleman in New-York. The Resolves of the Congress will have no effect in England. Parliament cannot take notice of them. Manufactures in England in a flourishing condition, and Trade scarcely ever so good before, - 1080

31, Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth. A general disposition every where to adhere to the Resolutions of the Congress. In Philadelphia the Committees have undertaken to regulate the disposition of all British Goods imported since the first of December, - 1081

31, Inhabitants of Maryland forming Military Companies, - - - - 1081

1775,

Jan. 2, Meeting of the Freeholders of Richmond County, Virginia. Delegates to the Colony Congress appointed. Instructions to the Delegates, 1021

2, Meeting of Inhabitants of Charles County, Maryland. Delegates to the Convention, and Committees for general Subscription in each County, appointed. Members added to the Committee of Observation, - 1081

3, Meeting of the West India Merchants, in London. Letter from the planters. General Meeting of Merchants and Planters called, - 1082

3, Letter from London to a Merchant in New-York. Proceedings of the Congress has alarmed Lord North, - - - - 1083

8, Meeting of the Freeholders of Middlesex County, New-Jersey. Committees of Observation, for the several Districts of the County, appointed, - - - - 1083

16, Meeting of the General Committee of Observation for Middlesex County, New-Jersey. Proceedings of the Congress approved. Committee of Correspondence appointed. Ministerial writers endeavouring to effect a disunion of the Colonies, condemned, - - - - 1083

4, Circular Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to the Governours of the several Colonies, directing them to use their utmost endeavours to prevent the appointment of Deputies to the Congress in May next, - - - - 1085

4, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. The Manufacturing Counties begin to suffer, - - - - 1085

4, Letter from London to a Gentleman in Virginia. Meetings of Merchants and Planters. The West India Planters fear ruin, if the American Acts are not repealed, - - - - 1085

4, Meeting of the Merchants and others concerned in the American Commerce, at the King's Arms Tavern, London, - - - - 1086

Speech intended to have been spoken at the Meeting of the North American Merchants, at the King's Arms Tavern, - - - - 1087

6, Letter from London. Account of the Meeting of the American Merchants, at the King's Arms Tavern, - - - - 1087

9, Letter from Leeds to the Printer of the London Evening Post, contradicting the representations in a Letter from Leeds, referred to by Mr. Barclay, at the Meeting, on the 4th, - - 1088

10, Letter from David Barclay, enclosing the Letter from Leeds, referred to by him at the Meeting, on the 4th, - - - - 1089

21, Letter from Samuel Elam, at Leeds, avowing himself the writer of the Letter to Mr. Barclay, and sustaining the representations there made, of the effects of the American Association on British Manufactures, - 1089

1775. Letter from Manchester to a Merchant in London, enclosing a copy of a Letter from a Merchant in New-York, countermanding orders for Goods, - 1091

Jan. 4, Meeting of Committee for Charles City County, Virginia. Direct the sale of Goods recently imported, - 1091

4, Letter from Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Earl of Dartmouth. If he finds there is not a majority of the Assembly, which meets on the 11th in favour of prudent measures, will prorogue them. There is still a majority of the respectable people in the City, who promote peace and discountenance violence, - 1092

4, Town Meeting at Barnstable, in Massachusetts. Refuse to purchase Arms or Ammunition, encourage Minute Men, or send Delegates to the Provincial Congress, - 1092

5, An Epistle from the Meeting of Sufferings of the Quakers, held in Philadelphia, for Pennsylvania and New-Jersey, - - - - 1093

5, Address from a Freeholder of Essex, in New-Jersey, to the Committee of Essex County, condemning the Resolutions of Congress, - 1094

5, Reply to the Address to the People of New-Jersey, dated November 19th, - - - - 1096

Address of the Committee of Correspondence of Albany, in New-York, to the Publick, - 1097

5, Letter from the Albany to the New-York Delegates in the Continental Congress, - 1098

5, Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, at Newport, in Rhode-Island, to the Philadelphia Committee. The Association strictly adhered to by the Merchants of the Colony, - 1098

6, Letters at Charlestown, from West Florida, with information of the state of Indian affairs there, 1099

6, Meeting of Freeholders of several Towns in Ulster County, New-York. Approve the Association, and all the other measures, of the late Congress, - 1100

6, Letter from the Boston Committee of Donations, to the Philadelphia Committee, - - - - 1100

7, Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour Colden. The affairs of the Colonies have come to a crisis, and will be taken up by Parliament immediately after the holidays, - 1101

Memorial of Colonel Thomas Ord, for a location of five thousand acres of Land in New-York, for his services, enclosed in the foregoing Letter, - 1101

7, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. The Resolves of Congress have pushed matters to an extremity, and render a complete decision of the dispute inevitable. The question now is, Whether America shall be independent of, or subordinate to, the Parliament, 1101

7, Meeting of the Inhabitants of Woodbridge, in Middlesex County, New-Jersey. Committee of Observation appointed. Determination to carry into effect the Association, - - - - 1102

9, Letter from a Merchant in London to a friend in Virginia. There is no disposition in the Cabinet to give America any redress. The Colonies should preserve their union, and provide themselves with Manufactures, Arms, and Ammunition, for it is more than probable they will have occasion for them, - - - - 1104

9, Meeting of the Inhabitants of Epsom, in New-Hampshire. Pedlars to be tarred and feathered, and forfeit their Goods, - - - - 1105

0, Meeting of the Inhabitants of Exeter, in New-Hampshire. Unanimously adopt the Association, appoint Committee of Observation, and Delegates to the Convention, to meet on the 25th, - - - - 1105

9, Meeting of the Freeholders of Morris County, New-Jersey. Unanimously agree to abide by the Association. Order the election of Committees of Observation by each Township of the County, and elect a new Committee of Correspondence. Rivington declared an enemy to the Country, and his Newspaper to be discountenanced for the future, - 1106

9, Letter from Samuel Adams to the Committee appointed in New-York to receive and transmit Donations for the relief of the sufferers in Boston, - 1105

1775.
Jan.11, Meeting of Merchants, Traders, and others, concerned in the American Commerce, at the King's Arms Tavern, London. Petitions to Parliament adopted, and ordered to be presented, - 1107
A circumstantial account of the Proceedings of the North American Merchants, held at the King's Arms Tavern, Cornhill, London, - 1107

PROVINCIAL CONGRESS OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Jan.11, List of the Members of the Congress, - 1109
Charles Pinckney chosen President, - - 1110
American Bill of Rights, as declared by the Continental Congress, approved, - - 1110
Reasons assigned for not stating all the Grievances, (Note,) - 1111
The Association approved, - - - 1111
Debates on agreeing to the Association, (Note,) 1111
Thanks to the Continental Congress, for their wise and spirited exertions in behalf of American Liberty, - 1112
No action for any Debt to be commenced, except in certain cases, without the consent of the Committee of the District where the defendant resides, until it shall be otherwise ordered by the Provincial Congress, - - - 1113
Committees for the several Districts and Parishes, for carrying into execution the Association, and for determining upon applications relative to law processes, - - 1113
Regulations in relation to Rice, if the exportation shall be continued after the 10th of September next, - - 1114
Committees for exchanging Riceo for other commodities, - 1116
The raising of Cotton, Hemp, Flour, Wool, Barley, and Hops, recommended, - 1116
Publick Storekeepers to be appointed to receive and sell Wool, and the Linen, Woollen, and Cotton Manufactures of the Colony. - - 1116
The present Provincial Congress to continue until the next General Meeting of the Inhabitants, - - 1116
The Parochial and District Committees requested to use their utmost endeavours to obtain liberal Donations for the relief of the suffering People of Boston, - 1116
Deputies to the American Congress, to meet on the 10th of May next, appointed, - - 1116
Address to Lieutenant Governour Bull, complaining of the long and still continued disuse of General Assemblies, - 1117
Answer of the Lieutenant Governour, - - 1118
Inhabitants of the Colony recommended to be diligently attentive in learning the use of Arms, - 1118
Friday, the 17th of February, set apart as a day of Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer, and Ministers of the Gospel throughout the Colony requested to deliver suitable Discourses on the occasion, - - 1118

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF NEW-JERSEY

Jan.11, Meeting of the Council, - - - 1117
13, The Governour delivered a Speech to both Houses, - - 1117
18, Committee to prepare an Address in answer to the Governour's Speech, - - - 1117
24, Address reported, amended, and agreed to, - 1118
26, Address presented to the Governour, - 1119
Governour's Answer, - 1119
Feb.10, Proceedings on the case of a Challenge from James Murdock to Lord Stirling, - 1120
13, Adjourned to March 14th, - - - 1121

Jan.11, The Assembly meets, - - 1121
List of the Representatives, - - - 1121
13, Speech of the Governour to the Council and Assembly, - - 1121
16, Governour's Speech read and committed to Committee of the Whole House, - 1123
17, House in Committee on the Governour's Speech, - 1123
20, Speech further considered in Committee, - 1123
21, Further considered, - - 1123
23, Further considered, - - 1123
Committee to prepare an Address in answer to the Speech, - - 1124

1775. Committee to bring in a Bill for the Support of Government, - - 1124
Jan. 24, Proceedings of the Continental Congress, communicated to the House by the Delegates, - 1124
Proceedings of the Congress unanimously approved, - - - 1124
Delegates to the Congress to meet m May next, appointed, - - 1124
The Delegates instructed to Disagree to any Proposition in the Congress to give some Colonies more Votes in the determination of Questions to bind the whole, than to others, - - 1124
25, Governour's Speech farther considered in Committee, - - 1124
Committee to prepare a Petition to the King, praying a redress of Grievances, - - 1125
27, Bill for Support of Government, read, and second reading ordered, - - 1125
30, Address to the Governour read, and second reading ordered, - - 1125
31, Message fromthe Governour, witha Letter from Colonel Robertson, requesting to be allowed for Sheets furnished the King's Troops, - 1125
Address to the Governour read a second time, considered in Committee of the Whole, amended, and agreed to, - - 1125
Feb. 3, Petition from a number of Inhabitants of Nottingham, in Burlington County, praying some measures may be taken to settle the Disputes between Great Britain and the Colonies, - 1126
Address of the House presented to the Governour, - - - 1126
Answer of the Governour, - - - 1127
6, Proceedings on the Bill for the Support of Government, - - 1127
7, Governour's Message, received on the 31st of January, considered. Refuse to allow Colonel Robertson's charge of three hundred and fifty-four Pounds, seven Shillings and six Pence, for Sheets furnished the King's Troops in this Colony, - - 1129
8, Petition from the Inhabitants of Nottingham referred to the Committee appointed to prepare an Address to the King, - - - 1130
10, Proceedings in regard to James Murdock, for Challenging a Member of the House, - 1131
11, Petition to the King reported and considered in Committee, - 1131
13, Further considered in Committee, agreed to, and ordered to be signed by the Speaker, - - 1132
Speaker permitted to enter his Dissent to the Petition, on the Journals of the House, - - 1134
Adjourned to March 14th, then to meet at Burlington, - - 1134

CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.

Jan. 11, Letter from Connecticut to a Gentleman at Newport, in Rhode-Island. The whole Militia of the Colony ordered to train, and a quantity of Powder and Lead to be provided. The time is near when we must gird on our Swords ; the united Forces of America will be able to withstand all the Troops England can spare, 1134
12, Resolutions adopted by the Committee of Darien, in Georgia, - - 1135
Association of the Freeman, Freeholders, and Inhabitants of the Province of Georgia, - 1136
13, Meeting of the Freeholders of Charlotte County, Virginia. Committee of Observation appointed. Proceedings of the Committee, - - - 1138
13, Letter from Hartford, in Connecticut, to a Gentleman at New-York. The Governour and Council met on the 4th, and have ordered Powder and Lead to be purchased at the publick expense; and the Militia is mustered every week. Nothing but a spirit of Independence would suffer matters to be carried to such extremities, - - 1139
15, Letter from Bristol, in England, to a Gentleman in New-York, - - 1139
16, Meeting of the Inhabitants of Aame Arundel County, Maryland. Committee of Observation appointed. The Committee authorized to elect Delegates for the County to the Provincial Congress, and to nominate a Committee of Correspondence. Every person in the County who shall refuse to contribute for the

1775,	purchase of Arms and Ammunition, shall be considered.an enemy to America,	-	-	1140
	Objections to the Proceedings of this Meetingt (Note,)	-	-	1141
Jan. 16,	Meeting of Freeholders and other Inhabitants of Prince George's County, Maryland, Mem- bers added to the Committee of Inspection, and to the Committee of Correspondence. Dele- gates to the Provincial Congress appointed,	-	-	1142
16,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Baltimore County, Maryland. Proceedings of the late Provin- cial Convention, approved,	-	-	1142
	Delegates to the next Provincial Congress ap- pointed,	-	-	1143
	Members added to the Committee of Observation,	-	-	1143
	Name of every person refusing to subscribe for the purchase of Arms and Ammunition to be returned to the Committee,	-	-	1143
	Forming the Inhabitants into Military Companies, and resisting with force, illegal attempts upon their Property, not repugnant to the Oaths of Allegiance,	-	-	1143
	Subscriptions to be opened throughout the County to supply the necessities of the Sufferers at Boston,	-	-	1143
	Committee to purchase Powder and Lead,	-	-	1143
16,	Meeting of the Committee of Bucks County, Pennsylvania, Approve the Proceedings of the Congress. Agree to support the Associa- tion. Recommend raising Money for sup- port of Poor Inhabitants of Boston; and ap- point Committee of Correspondence,	-	-	1144
10,	Committee of Berks County, in Pennsylvania. Recommend the Inhabitants of the County not to sell Sheep to Butchers, preserving the Wool, being of the greatest consequence,	-	-	1144
17,	Meeting of the Supporters of the Bill of Rights, in London. Members of the Society who have seats in Parliament, requested to exert themselves in bringing to justice the advisers of the measures for establishing Arbitrary Government in the Colonies,	-	-	1145
17,	Meeting of the Committee for Fairfax County, Virginia. Ammunition should he immediately provided; and the Inhabitants of the County requested to form themselves into Military Companies,	-	-	1145
	Association proposed for the Inhabitants of Fair- fax County,	-	-	1145
17,	Meeting of the Committee of Observation for Bal- timore County, Maryland. Charges against the Rev. William Edmisten,	-	-	1146
18,	Meeting of the West India Merchants and Plan- ters, in London, assembled to deliberate on the measures necessary to be pursued on this very important crisis,	-	-	1147
	GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF GEORGIA,
Jan.18,	Meeting of the Assembly,	-	-	1152
	Speech of Governour Wright to both Houses,	-	-	1152
	Message from the Upper House to the Commons,	-	-	1153
20,	Address of the Upper House of Assembly to the Governour,	-	-	1154
	Answer of the Governour,	-	-	1155
	Address of the Commons House of Assembly to the Governour,	-	-	1155
	Governour's Answer,	-	-	1156
	Resolutios Declaratory of the Rights of the Colonies,	-	-	1156
	Association entered into by the Provincial Con- gress of Georgia, assembled in Savannah, on the 18th of January, and subscribed by forty- five Deputies, on the 23d, when they chose Noble Wimberly Jones, Archibald Bullock, and John Houston, Delegates to represent that Colony in the Continental Congress to be held in May next,	-	-	1158
	Letter from Georgia, dated February 18th, to a Gentleman in New-York. Proceedings of the Assembly, and of the Continental Congress, Committee for St. John's Parish, Georgia, at Charlestown, on the 23d of February, to wait on the General Committee there,	-	-	1161
	Letter from Lyman Hall, Chairman of a Meet- ing held in St. John's Parish, Georgia, dated February 9, to the Committee of Correspond- ence of Charlestown, in South Carolina,	-	-	1161
1775.
Jan.20.	Message from the Committee of St. John's Pa- rish, to the Committee of the several Parishes of Georgia, in Congress, on the 18th of Janua- ry,	-	-	1162
	Another Message to the Committees of the seve- ral Parishes in Congress met, or, the 20th,	-	-	1162
	Answer of the Parishes met in Congress to the St. John's Committee,	-	-	1162
	Resolutions of the St. John's Committee,	-	-	1152
	Resolution of the General Committee at Charles- town, South Carolina, of February 8th. Will have no Trade, Commerce, Dealings, or In- tercourse, with the Colony of Georgia,	-	-	1163
	Chairman of the General Committee at Charles- town directed, on the 24th of February, to write to the Committee of the Parish of St. John, in reply to their Letter of the 9th inst., that they cannot trade with them; and refer them to the Continental Congress,	-	-	1163
	CORRESPONDENCE, PROCEEDINGS, ETC.
Jan.18,	Meeting of the several Township Committees of Hunterdon County, New-Jersey. Approve the Association of the Continental Congress, and appoint a Committee of Correspondence,	-	-	1163
18,	Association signed by a number of the Inhabit- ants of Dutchess County, New-York. No legal authority in America, but what is derived from the King. They will defend themselves whenever attacked on any pretence not war- ranted by the Laws of the Land: They will on all occasions exercise all their rights under the Laws of the Land, notwithstanding the Asso- ciation of the Continental Congress; and will enforce obedience to the authority of the King, whenever called upon to do so,	-	-	1164
18,	Letter from Montreal. Parties in Canada,	-	-	1164
18,	Letter from Shrewsbury, New-Jersey, to a Gen- tleman in New-York. At a meeting of Free- holders, on the 17th, it was determined that the appointment of a Committee was not only use- less, but would disturb the peace and quiet of the Township,	-	-	1165
20,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Fincastle Coun- ty, Virginia. The Association of the Conti- nental Congress approved and subscribed, and a Committee of Observation appointed,	-	-	1165
£0,	Address of the People of Fincastle County, Vir- ginia, to the Delegates from that Colony, who attended the Continental Congress,	-	-	1165
19,	Address from the Committee of Correspondence of Jamaica, in Queen's County, to the Dele- gates who represented New-York in the late Continental Congress,	-	-	1166
	Answer of the Delegates,	-	-	1167
21,	Letter from Massachusetts Bay to a Gentleman in London. The Colonies will submit to no terms without a restoration of their rights; England cannot dragoon them out of their Li- berties. The Congress have drawn a constitu- tional line: they have claimed exclusive juris- diction over all internal concerns, and have left Great Britain the sovereignty of the Ocean,	-	-	1167
21,	Meeting of the Committee of Charles County, Maryland. No further restraints to be laid up- on the bringing of suits at law, than is done by the last Provincial Convention,	-	-	1168
23,	Proclamation of Governour Dunmore. Peace with the Shawanese, who have agreed not to hunt on this side the Ohio, nor to molest pas- sengers on that River,	-	-	1169
23,	Proceedings of the Convention for the Province of Pennsylvania, held at Philadelphia, Janua- ry 23d, and continued by adjournments, until the 28th,	-	-	1169
	List of the Members,	-	-	1169
	The City Committee and each County Commit- tee to have one vote in determining every ques- tion,	-	-	1170
	Proceedings of the Continental Congress ap- prowld,	-	-	1170
	Members of the Assembly to be instructed to procure a Law prohibiting the importation of Slaves into the Province,	-	-	1170
	In case the Trade of Philadelphia shall be sus- pended, in the present struggle, assistance to be given to the Inhabitants of the City,	-	-	1170

1775.		1775.
Jan.23.	In case of opposition to any of the Committees, in carrying the Continental Association, into effect, to be assisted by other Committees, - 1170	Jan.25,	nia, and authorizes the seizure of all persons who may attempt to enforce the collection, 1179
	If the British Government shall determine to effect a submission to the late Acts of Parliament by force, it is the indispensable duty of the People to resist, and at every hazard, to defend the Rights and Liberties of America, - - 1171		William Crawford, President of the Court, in Westmoreland County, superseded by the Governour and Council of Pennsylvania, for joining with the Government of Virginia, in opposing the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, in that County, - 1180
	After the first of March next, no Sheep under four years old, to be killed, - - 1171	25,	Letter from Philadelphia to a Gentleman in New-York. The Addresses to Governour Col-den has had a great effect in Pennsylvania: the New-York Assembly is revered there by all sensible men, for their undaunted resolution in first making a stand against lawless usurpers of Power, and violators of Liberty. The Assembly of Pennsylvania will, it is hoped, rescind their approbation of the Proceedings of Congress, - - 1180
	Setting up of Woollen Manufactures, in as many different branches as possible, recommended, 1171		Convention of Deputies appointed by the several Towns in the Province of New-Hampshire, held at Exeter, - - 1180
	Raising and manufacturing of Madder, Woad, and other Dye Stuffs, necessary in Woollen Manufactures, recommended, - - 1171	25,	Approve the Proceedings of Congress, - 1180
	Extended cultivation of Flax and Hemp, recommended, - - 1171		Appoint Delegates to represent the Province in the Continental Congress, to be held in May next, - - 1181
	Making Salt, Saltpetre, and Gunpowder, recommended, - - 1171		Committee to call a Provincial Convention of Deputies when they shall think it expedient, 1181
	Manufacturing of Copper, Tin, and Iron, and making Steel, Paper, Glass, and Wool Combs, recommended, - 1171		Committee of Correspondence appointed, - 1181
	Printing Types made at Germantown, recommended to be used by the Printers, in preference to imported Types, - - - 1172		Address to the Inhabitants of the Province, - 1181
	Cultivation of Barley for Malt Liquors recommended, to render less necessary the consumption of Foreign Liquors, - - - 1172	26,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Pittsylvania County, Virginia. Committee for enforcing and putting in execution tile Continental Association, appointed. - - 1182
	American Manufactures to be used in preference to all others, - - 1172	26,	Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Precinct of Shawangunk, in Ulster County, New-York. Approve of the Continental Association. The Pamphlet, "Free Thoughts on the Resolves of the Congress," burnt, . 1183
	Societies to be established, and Premiums awarded, for the encouragement of Manufactures, - 1172	26,	Address to the People of America. The leaders in the Colonies aim at Independence. The consequences of their obtaining an Independent Republick considered, - - - 1183
	Any Manufacturer or Vender of Goods, who shall sell at extravagant prices, to be advertised as an enemy to his Country, - 1172	26,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in Annapolis. A motion made in the Assembly of New-York, this day, for examining the Proceedings of the Congress, was thrown out, - 1188
	Committee of Philadelphia appointed a Standing Committee of Correspondence, - - - 1172		Remarks on the vote in the Assembly of New-York, against taking into consideration the Proceedings of the Continental Congress, - 1188
20,	Letter from Samuel Adams, Chairman of the Committee to receive Donations for the Sufferers in Boston, - - 1172	27,	Letter from Baltimore to a Gentleman in New-York. From the late conduct of the Council and Assembly of New-York, the happiest consequences to the country are anticipated.-- Some persons in Baltimore have had the imbecility to approve of the frantick proceedings of certain Men, who lately styled themselves Delegates to a Provincial Congress, - - 1190
24,	Letter from Connecticut to a Gentleman in New-York. People are preparing for the worst; a Park of forty pieces of Cannon may be formed in the Spring, and our Army will be pretty expert in most of the manœuvres, - 1173	27,	Letter from New-York to a Gentleman in Boston. Notwithstanding the late vote of the Assembly, there is no cause to fear New-York will depart from the Association. The Assembly has existed since 1769; and many of the Members, having long since forfeited the esteem of their constituents, are looking for favours from the Crown for themselves and families, - - 1191
24,	Meeting of the Inhabitants of Frederick County, Maryland. Association and Resolves of the Congress, and Proceedings of Convention approved. Committees of Observation and of Correspondence appointed. Committees throughout the County appointed to receive contributions for purchase of Arms and Ammunition, and the Committee of Correspondence authorized to contract for any quantity of Powder and Lead, - - 1178	27,	Meeting of the Freeholders of the Precinct of Hanover, in Ulster County, New-York. The Association unanimously approved. The Pamphlet, "Free Thoughts on the Resolves of the Congress publicly burnt, - - 1191
24,	The Testimony of the Quakers, given forth by a Meeting of the Representatives of said People, in Pennsylvania and New-Jersey, held at Philadelphia, - - 1176	27,	Declaration of Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Township of Jamaica, in Queen's County, New-York. Never gave any consent to choose a Committee, or pass any Resolves, Utterly disapprove of all unlawful meetings and tyrannical proceedings. Will continue faithful Subjects to the King; and acknowledge no Representatives but the Assembly of the Province, - 1191
24,	Letter from Connecticut to a Gentleman of New-York. Preparations of the Governour and Council to supply the Colony with Ammunition and Arms, - - 1177		Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. The Towns in Massachusetts have become more divided, notwithstanding the endeavours to keep up their enthusiasm. A detachment sent for the protection of Marshfield and Scituate, upon their application. This is the first instance the assistance of Government has been requested, - - 1698
24,	Letter from Marshfield to a Gentleman in Boston. Troops sent by General Gage to Marshfield, to preserve the peace, at the request of the Loyalists of that place, - - - 1177
26,	Letter from Boston to a Gentleman of New-York. A number of the principal Inhabitants of Marshfield having signed General Ruggles's Association against the Liberty Plan, the Faction at Plymouth threatened to make them recant, or drive them off their Farms: General Gage sent Troops to protect them, and there has yet been no appearance of the Plymouth Rebels, - - 1178
25,	Meeting of the Committee of Northumberland County, Virginia. Persons published in the Gazette for Gambling, in violation of the American Continental Association, - 1179
Jan. 25,	Meeting of the Council of Pennsylvania, - 1179
	Affidavit of Samuel Whitesill, Keeper of the Jail of Westmoreland County. Jail attacked, and Prisoners released by Major Connolly, on the 24th of December, - - 1179 Proclamation of John Connolly, dated Fort Dunmore, December 30. Forbids the payment of Taxes to Collectors appointed by Pennsylva-

1775.		1775,
Jan. 27,	Votes and Resolves passed at a Convention of Committees for the County of Worcester, in Massachusetts, -	Feb. 2,	Declaration of sundry Inhabitants of Ridgebury, in the Town of Ridgefield, that, at the Meeting on the 30th of January, they did not vote with the majority against adopting the Association of the Continental Congress, -
28,	Letter from a Merchant in Annapolis, to a Gentleman in Philadelphia. They have defeated an insolent plan of levying Money upon his Majesty's faithful Subjects in Anne Arundel County, to raise a fund for the express purpose of purchasing Arms and Ammunition, to join the treasonable purpose projected by Adams and the Eastern Republicans. to carry on a formal Rebellion in the Colonies, -		1210
	1192	4,	Letter from London, to a Gentleman in Philadelphia. Does not know how soon communication with the Colonies may be cut off by hostilities. The Americans have many enemies in England -
30,	Answer of the Governour of his Majesty's Province of Pennsylvania, in America, to the several heads of Inquiry, relative to the present state and condition of the said Province, transmitted by the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, in his Letter of July 5, 1773, -	4,	Letter from Philadelphia, to James Rivington, New-York. May assure his readers that Mr. Dickinson has declared, that "he was really alarmed at the proceedings of the Committee." He formerly took the lead; at the late Provincial Congress he did not speak at all. In spite of the arts of the fiery Republicans, Associations are concerting to counteract the authority of unconstitutional Congresses and Committees of all sorts, -
	1194		1211
30,	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth, -	4,	Address to the Americans. It is the duty and the interest of the People to offer terms of reconciliation to the Parent State. The Congress have adopted such irritating measures, as disqualify them for offering terms of accommodation, -
	1698		1211
30,	Meeting of Freeholders in the Precinct of Wallkill, Ulster County, New-York. Approve of the Association of the General Congress.-- "Free Thoughts on the Resolves of the Congress," burnt, -	6,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Lancaster County, Virginia. Committee to carry into effect the American Association, elected. Delegates to the Convention appointed and instructed, -
	1201		1213
30,	Letter from London to a Gentleman of New-York Commission sent to General Gage, to try and execute certain persons in the Colonies, -	6,	Letter received in New-York, from London.-- Nothing can be more false than the representations of hostile intentions against America, formed by the present Administration. The Americans should make the first advances towards a reconciliation. A Petition from the Assemblies will be attended with success, if their claims are accurately limited and defined, -
	1202		1214
30,	Town Meeting of the Inhabitants of Ridgefield in Connecticut. Refuse to adopt or conform to the Association of the Continental Congress; and protest against the Congress and their measures, as unconstitutional, and as countenancing licentiousness. Acknowledge the King as the rightful Sovereign, and the King and Parliament as the rightful Government of the whole British Empire, -	6,	Letter from Philadelphia, to a Gentleman in New-York. A faithful adherence to the Association in New-York, will go far to remove the infamy which will fall upon that Province, whose detection may tend to defeat the virtuous struggles in which we are engaged, -
	1202		1215
30,	New-York Committee appoint Sub-Committee, to observe the conduct of all Vessels that arrive after the first day of February -	6,	Meeting of the Freemen and Inhabitants of Newtown, in Connecticut. Refuse to adopt or conform to the Association, and protest against the Continental Congress, and their measures, as unconstitutional, and tending to licentiousness, -
	1203		1215
30,	Letter from New-York, to a Gentleman in Boston. There is now no chance of the Assembly's aiding or abetting the Congress. The friends of Government are open-mouthed against the Proceedings of the Congress; and no one dares, among gentlemen, to support them, -	6,	Town Meeting at Danbury, in Connecticut.-- Refuse to appoint Delegates to meet the County Congress, to be held at Fairfield, on the 14th instant, and rescind the vote appointing a Committee of Inspection, -
	1203		1216
31,	Meeting of the Freeholders of Westmoreland County, Virginia. Delegates to the Convention elected. Instructions to the Delegates.-- Committee of Observation appointed, -	6,	Handbill distributed through Boston. Let us seize our seducers, make peace with the Mother Country, and save ourselves, -
	1203		1216
Feb.	Letter to Lord North. Proposes settling the differences with the Colonies, without subjugating the Americans on the one hand, or impairing the supreme authority of the Parliament on the other, -	8,	Letter from Boston, to a Gentleman in Philadelphia. The Tories are perpetually holding up to view the terriffick consequences of Treason and Rebellion; but they bellow to the winds. So generally are the principles of Liberty disseminated among the People, that nothing but Arms can suppress it, -
	1204		1215
Feb.	Letter from Thomas Cushing to Arthur Lee.- The People are not dlsmayed at the King's Speech; and if an attempt is made to carry the Acts of Parliament into execution, by a Military Force, the People of America will make the last appeal. They are determined Life and Liberty shall go together, -	7,	Proceedings of the Committee of Observation for the Borough of Norfolk, in Virginia, on a complaint against Dr. Gordon, -
	1208		1217
Feb.	Letter from Annapolis, to a Gentleman in New-York. Thousands in Maryland would return to their duty and allegiance, but for the cunning of their leaders, which has rendered retreat so difficult. Every man in private must think the Congressmen, and their sattelites the Committee-Men, the truest, though absurdest, tyrants, that any country ever had cause to complain of, -	7,	Address presented to General Gage, from Six Towns in Plymouth County, Massachusetts, -
	1208		1218
Feb. 1,	Letter from Colonel Adam Stephen to Richard Henry Lee, -	6,	Meeting of the Merchants, Traders, and others, in London, concerned in the American Commerce. Report of the Committee appointed to present the second Petition to the House of Commons, -
	1209		1219
1,	Letter from Boston, to a Gentleman in Philadelphia. The report that the Quakers in Boston opened their Shops, on the day of Publick Thanksgiving, is without foundation, and propagated for the most vile and malevolent purposes, -	7,	Meeting of the Merchants, Traders, and others, in London, concerned in American Commerce. Report of the Committee appointed to present the Petition to the House of Lords, -
	1210		1220
1,	Letter from Governour Franklin to the Earl of Dartmouth. Had hopes that the Assembly would not approve the Proceedings of the General Congress; but, by the artful management of those who espoused the measure, it was carried through the morning it was proposed, -	8t	Address of the Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers, of Birmingham, concerned in the Trade to America, to Mr. Edmund Burke, -
	1697		1221
		8,	Meeting of the Committee for Westmoreland County, Virginia. Pedlars required to produce proof to the Committee that their Goods were imported before the 1st of February, -
			1222
		8,	Letter from Doctor John Connolly to Colonel George Washington. Wishes to have information how he is to proceed with the Mingoe Prisoners, -
			1222

1775.
Feb. 9, Meeting of the Committee of Correspondence of Brentwood, in New-Hampshire. Will abide by the advice of the Continental Congress.
Pedlars not permitted to sell, and persons who trade with them, or entertain them, to be treated as enemies to the Country; - - - 1222 10, Committee of Portsmouth, New-Hampshlre, for carrying the Association of the Continental Congress into execution, discountenance Gaming, - 1223
10, Letter from London to a Gentleman in Virginia.
Parliament have declared Massachusetts in rebellion. Americans must now look firmly forward. Submission and Chains, or, Resistance and Liberty, is the alternative, - - 1223
10, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. Determination of the King, and preparations in England, to make the Colonies submit, - 1224
10, Letter from London to a Gentleman in New-York. All hopes of conciliation between England and her Colonies, are entirely at an end. The King and Parliament have pronounced their destruction. Fleets and Armies are preparing with the utmost diligence for that purpose, - 1225
10, Information received at Williamsburg, from the Indian Frontiers, and from Pittsburgh, - 1226
10, Premiums offered by the Committee of Bedford, in Pennsylvania, for the encouragement of Industry and Manufactures, - - - 1226
10, Address of the Grand Jury to his Majesty's Justices, assembled at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, for the City and County of
New-York, - 1227
10, Letter from Connecticut to Mr. Rivington. A Presbyterian Minister, near North-Haven, has declared he had practised the Military Exercise, with the intention of going to Boston against the King's Troops, - 1227
10, Letter from Massachusetts to a Gentleman in London, - 1227
11, Letter from the Committee of Correspondence for Bedford County, Pennsylvania, to Joseph Read.
Approve of the Resolves of the Convention, and bound by them, - 1229
11, The Royal Standard erected on a mast seventy-five feet high, at Shawangunk, in Ulster County, New-York, by a respectable number of his Majesty's loyal Subjects 1230
11, Letter from Kent County, in Delaware, published in the Pennsylvania Ledger, - - - 1230
Letter from the Committee for Kent County. Delaware, February 15, to the Committees of Correspondence for Philadelphia, in relation to the Letter published in the Ledger, of the 11th instant, - 1231
Letter from Philadelphia to Mr. Rivington, February 16. Tyranny of the Committee--they are aiming at a general Revolution, and promote every measure to overthrow the Constitution, - 1231
Letter from Philadelphia to a Gentleman in New-York, February 20. Proceedings in regard to the Letter, said to be from Kent County, in Delaware, - 1233
13, Thanks of the Common Council of London to Lord Chatham, for offering his Plan for conciliating the differences between Great Britain and the Colonies, - 1233
Answer of Lord Chatham to the Common Council of London, - 1233
13, Letter from London. Nothing will move the King and his Ministers, but absolute submission or a successful resistance. The Ministry affect to believe there will be no resistance, and assure themselves of the defection of New-York, - 1234
13, Committee of Elizabethtown, in New-Jersey, direct the suspension of all Trade and Intercourse whatsoever, with Staten Island, in New-York, - 1234
14, Meeting of the Committee of York County, Pennsylvania. Recommend the collection and preservation of Gunpowder; encourage Military Associations; direct the transmission of Contributions to Boston; and appoint Delegates to the next Convention, - - - 1235

1775.
Feb. 14, Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the City and County of Burlington, in New-Jersey. Association of the General American Congress, read and approved, and Committee of Observation appointed, - - - 1235 14, Two Inhabitants of Ridgefield not permitted to remain for the night in Wethersfield, but sent back to Ridgefield, under an escort, - - 1236 14, Resolutions adopted at a Meeting of the Delegates from the several Towns in the County of Fairfield, in Connecticut, 1236 Association of the Liberty Men of Ridgebury, in Fairfield County, Connecticut, - - - 1239
14, Letter from Samuel Adams to Arthur Lee, - t239
15, Meeting of the Committee of Observation for the Township of Hanover, Morris County, New-Jersey. Will enforce and comply with every Article of the Association of the General Continental Congress; will have no dealings with James Rivington, and will discountenance any Post-Rider, or Carrier, who shall bring his Pamphlets or Paper into the County, - 1240
16, The Governour of Pennsylvania presents to the Council the complaint of Mr. Waterhonse, Inspecter of his Majesty's Customs, that the Magistrates and Sheriff of Chester County had refused their aid in preventing the rescue of a Vessel seized on the Delaware, with contraband Goods, - . 1241
Letter from Francis Welch, a Tide-Waiter, dated February 8th, communicating a statement of the facts in the case complained of by Mr.
Waterhouse, - 1241
The Council are of opinion the Magistrates and Sheriff could not legally afford the assistance that was required of them, - - 1242
16, Letter from the Committee of Correspondence of Philadelphia, to the Committee of Correspondence of New-York. The frequent publications in New-York, of dissensions in Philadelphia, are false representations. The Committee have not met with the least impediment in carrying into execution the Association. The Inhabitants of Pennsylvania continue immoveably firm to the cause of Liberty, and will, with inviolable faith, observe the conduct prescribed by the Continental Congress, - - 1243
16, A Ship at New-York, from Glasgow, with a cargo of Dry Goods, which did not arrive within the time prescribed in the Association, not permitted to land her cargo, - - 1243
17, Letter from Adam Stephen to Richard Henry
Lee, 1244
17, Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth. The King's Speech has cast a damp upon the Faction; but they still entertain hopes that the Resolves of Congress will work in their favour. The loyalty in the New-York Assembly has had a very good effect, and it is said they are changing their sentiments at Philadelphia, - 1244
17, Meeting of the Freeholders of the Town of Plymouth, in New-Hampshire. Instructions to John Fenton, Representative of the Town in the Assembly, - 1245
17, Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, - 1708
18, Meeting of the Committee of Cumberland County, Virginia. Premium for the manufacture of Gunpowder, - . 1247
Address of the Committee of Cumberland County, to the Delegates who represented Virginia in the late Continental Congress, - - 1247
19, Letter from Boston, to a Gentleman in New-York. The Provincial Congress, distracted and divided in opinion, separated without doing any thing more than is in their published Resolves; the principal object of their meeting was to cajole the men of property, but no impression could be made on them. Their dupes drop from them very fast, and it is expected the few Demagogues will soon be left alone, - 1248
20, Meeting of the Freeholders of Hanover County, Virginia. Delegates to the Convention chosen, and instructed to consent to the imposition of any Tax the Convention may judge proper lot defraying the expense of any measure necessarily adopted for seeming American Liberty, 1248

1775.	NEW-YORK ASSEMBLY
Jan.10,	Meeting of the Assembly, - - - .	1281
13,	Speech of Lieutenant Governour Colden to the Council and Assembly. Advises them to petition the King for redress of Grievances, -	1283
	Committee appointed to prepare an Address, in answer to the Speech, - - - -	1283
	Consideration of the Speech referred to a Committee of the Whole House, - - - -	1283
	Committee appointed to correspond with Edmund Burke, Agent of this Colony at the Court of Great Britain, laid before the House several Letters received from him, -	1283
17,	The Speaker, from the Committee of Correspondence, laid before the House several Letters and other Papers, - .	1284
18,	Address of the Council, in answer to the Lieutenant Governour's Speech, -	1284
	Answer to the Council, - - - -	1285
20,	Address of the Assembly, in answer to the Lieutenant Governour's Speech, -	1285
	Answer of the Lieutenant Governour, -	1286
26,	Message from the Lieutenant Governour. Boundary of New-York and Pennsylvania, -	1286
	Motion by Colonel Ten Broeck, that the House take into consideration the Proceedings of the Continental Congress, - - - -	1286
	Colonel Philip's motion for the Previous Question. -	1287
27,	Message from the Lientenant Governour, -	1287
26,	The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Speaker of the Assembly of New-Jersey, enclosing sundry Resolutions passed by that House, -	1287
31,	On the motion of Colonel Livingston, the House agreed to take into consideration the state of the Colony; to enter such Resolutions as they may agree to on their Journals, and to prepare a Petition to the King, - - - -	1288
	On a motion of Mr. De Lancey, the House agreed to send with the Petition to his Majesty, a Memorial to the House of Lords, and a Representation and Remonstrance to the Commons, -	1288
	Committee appointed to prepare a state of the Grievances of the Colony, - - - -	1288
Feb. 2,	House in Committee on the Lieutenant Governour's Speech. - -	1288
7,	Message from the Lieutenant Governour, -	1288
	Speech further considered in Committee, -	1289
16,	Colonel Schuyler's motion that certain Letters be published: Rejected, - - - -	1289
17,	Colonel Woodhull's motion for a Vote of Thanks to the Delegates from New-York in the late Continental Congress; Rejected. - -	1289
21,	Colonel P. Livingstons motion for a Vote of Thanks to the Merchants and Inhabitants for their firm adherence to the Association of the Grand Continental Congress; Rejected. .	1290
23,	Report from the Committee to prepare a state of the Grievances, referred to a Coramittee of the Whole House, -	1290
	Mr. Thomas's motion for taking into consideration the necessity of appointing Delegates to meet the General Congress on the 10th of May next: Rejected, - - - -	1290
	Speech of Mr. Brush, of Cumberland County, on this question, - -	1290
	Speech of Mr. Wilkins, of Westchester County, -	1293
March 1,	The House in Committee on the state of Grievances of the Colony, - - - -	1297
2,	State of Grievances further considered in Committee, -	1297
3,	Proceedings and Votes on the Report on the Grievances of the Colony, - - - -	1297
7,	Committee appointed to prepare a set of Resolutions agreeable to Colonel P. Livingston's motion of January 31, -	1302
8,	Report of the Committee; Resolutions agreed to, -	1302
9,	Committees appointed to prepare a Petition to the King, a Memorial to the Lords, and a Representation and Remonstrance to the Commons, -	1303
11,	Letter from Edinund Burke, laid, before the House by the Committee, -	1304
13,	Letter from William Bollan, Benjamin Franklin, and Arthur Lee, dated December 24, laid before the House by the Speaker, - -	1304
	Message from the Lieutenant Governour, -	1304

1775.
March 15,	Resolutions of the Committee of the Whole, providing for the support of the Government in the Colony for the year, - - - -	1304
16,	Petition, Memorial, and Remonstrance, reported, -	1307
23,	Message from the Lieutenant Governour. Disturbances in Cumberland County, -	1308
24,	Proceedings and Votes on the Petition to the King, -	1309
	Votes on the Memorial to the House of Lords, -	1312
	Proceedings on the Representation and Remonstrance to the House of Commons, -	1312
25,	The humble Petition of the General Assembly of the Colony of New-York, to the King, -	1313
	The Memorial of his Majesty's faithful Subjects the Representatives of the Colony of New-York, in General Assembly convened, to the House of Lords, -	1316
	The Representation and Remonstrance of the General Assembly of the Colony of New-York to the House of Commons, - -	1318
	The Petition, Memorial, and Remonstrance, directed to be forwarded with all convenient speed to Edmund Burke, -	1321
28,	Message from the Lieutenant Governour, -	1321
	Proceedings and Votes in regard to the Cumberland Riots, - -	1321
31,	The Speaker directed to transmit to the Speakers of the several Houses of Assembly, on the Continent, copies of the List of Grievances, and the Resolutions thereof, in consequence; and the Petition, Memorial, and Remonstrance, -	1322
31,	Proceedings and Votes in relation to Riots in Albany and Charlotte Counties, - -	1823
	Reward for the apprehension of Ethan Allen, Seth Warner, and others, - - - -	1323
Apr. 1,	Committee of Correspondence appointed, -	1324
3,	Adjourned to May 3, -	1324

	PROVINCIAL CONGRESS OF MASSACHUSETTS
Feb. 1,	List of the Members, -	1323
	John Hancock chosen President, - - - -	1328
	Committee to take into consideration the state and circumstances of the Province, - - - -	1328
2,	The Reverend Dr. Appleton appointed Chaplain, -	1328
	Monitors appointed, - - - -	1328
3,	Committee appointed to consider the Resolutions of several Committees respecting the working of the Inhabitants of Boston for the Troops, -	1328
4,	Debates and Resolutions of the Congress to be kept secret, -	1329
	Committee to publish in a Pamphlet some of the doings of the late Congress, -	1329
	Committee to prepare an Address to the Inhabitants of the Province, - - - -	1329
6,	Delegates to the Congress in May next, to continue to the 31st day of December, and no longer. -	1329
	Troop of Horse raised by John Sawyer and others, of Rowley, -	1329
	The Secretary empowered to adjourn the Congress in the absence of the President, - -	1329
7,	Inhabitants recommended not to supply the Troops with any thing that may enable them to annoy the People; all who do so to be deemed inveterate enemies to America, -	1330
	Address to the Inhabitants reported, considered, and recommitted, -	1330
8,	Again reported, considered, and recommended to prepare a Resolution recommending the saving of Linen Rags - -	1330
9,	Committee of Safety appointed, with power to muster as many of the Militia of the Province as they shall deem proper, completely armed and accoutred, to oppose any attempt that may be made to carry into execution the late Acts of Parliament, -	1332
	General Officers appointed to act under the authority of the Committee of Safety, - -	1332
	A number of Letters: said to be from England, read and referred to the Committee on the state of the Province. -	1332
	Address to the Inhabitants of the Province, again reported, amended, and agreed to, -	1332
	Address from the Committee of Correspondence of Scituate, in relation to a number of British Troops now stationed in Marshfield, read and referred. -	1334

1775.
Feb. 9, Committee to bring in a Resolve empowering the Committee of Safety to take possession of the Warlike Stores of the Province, - 1334
Committee to bring in a Resolve directing how the Ordnance in the Province shall be used, 1334
Committee to make a return of the Officers and number of the Militia, and Minute Men, to report, as soon as possible, - 1334
Committee to prepare for publication the Names of the Mandamus Counsellors who have refused to resign, . 1334
Inhabitants of the Province requested to preserve all their Linen and Cotton Rags, to aid an Establishment for making Paper, - 1334
10, Committee to observe the motion of the Troops said to be on their road to Cambridge, - 1334
Committee to sit in the recess of the Congress, with power to regulate the Constitutional Army which may be raised in the Province, - 1335
Committee to revise the Commission of the Committee of Safety, . 1335
The Secretary directed to publish the Names of the Mandamus Counsellors now in Boston, 1335
Petition from the Delegates of the several Towns in the Counties of Hampshire and Berkshire, 1336
11, Committee of Safety authorized to appoint a Commissary to deliver Warlike Stores to the Constitutional Army when they take the field, - 1337
Committee of Safety requested to possess themselves of all Bayonets and other implements of war, purchased at the expense of the Province, and not now in their possession, - - 1337
Committee appointed to report a Resolve, expressing the determination of the People, coolly and resolutely, to support their Rights and Privileges at all hazards, - - - 1337
13, Committee appointed to inquire into the state of the Militia, - 1337
Committee to inquire what is necessary to encourage the making of Saltpetre, - 1337
14, Report of the Commrttee on the state of the Militia, - 1338
15, Committee of Correspondence of Boston directed to open aud establish an intimate correspondence and connection with the Inhabitants of Quebec, - 1339
Resolutions for the encouragement of the manufacture of Saltpetre in the Province, - 1339
Committee to bring in a Resolve holding up to the People the imminent danger they are in from the present disposition of the British Ministry, - 1339
Inhabitants of the Province requested not to trade with Pedlars, - . 1340
John Whitcomb elected a General Officer, - 1340
Militia and Minute Men earnestly requested to spare neither time, pains, nor expense, in perfecting themselves, forthwith, in Military Discipline, - 1340
Conduct of the Committees of Correspondence of Plymouth, and other Towns, approved, - 1341
Conference with a Committee from Connecticut, 1341
16, Committee appointed to correspond with the neighbouring Governments, - - - 1342
Dav of Fasting and Prayer throughout the Province appointed, - 1342
Injunction of Secrecy on the Members removed, 1343
Adjourned to March 22d, to meet at Concord, - 1343
March Met conformable W adjournment, and the Rev. 22, Mr. Emerson appointed Chaplain, - - 1343
Debates and Resolutions to be kept an entire secret. - 1344
Committee to receive the Returns of the Officers of the Militia, - 1344
24, Any relaxation in putting the Colony in a complete state of Defence will be attended with the utmost danger to the Liberties of the Colony, and of all America, - 1344
27, Rules and Regulafions for a Constitutional Army reported. - 1345
28, Considered and recommitted, - - - 1345
29, Consideration resumed; recommitted for additions, - 1345
30, Report from Committee on the state of the Province relative to what movement of the Troops should make it fit to call the Militia together to act on the defensive, - - - 1345

1775.
March On notice for assembling the Forces of the Colony, the Members of this Congress to repair without delay to the place to which they shall be adjourned, - 1345
30, Committees to sit immediately, that the Congress may adjourn to-morrow, - - - 1345
31, Mandamus Counsellors who have refused to publish a renunciation of their Commissions, - 1346
Report of Committee appointed to receive Returns from the several Colonies, recommitted, - 1346
Constables and Collectors required to pay Publick Moneys immediately to the Receiver General, - 1346
April Committee appointed to prepare Rules for the Provincial Army, report. Report passed, and afterwards recommitted, - - - 1347
I, Address to the Stockbridge Indians who have enlisted as Minute Men, - - - 1347
The Towns and Districts requested to choose Delegates to a Provincial Congress, to meet on the last Wednesday of May, if Precepts are not issued by General Gage, calling a General Assembly to meet on that day, - 1348
3, Committee on the state of the Province to collect the late intelligence from Great Britain, relative to sending reinforcements to General Gage, and report to the Congress what is best to be done, - 1348
Immediate attendance of all absent Members required, - 1345
4, Letter to the Reverend Mr. Kirkland, with an Address to the Mohawks, 1349
5, Rules and Regulations for the Massachusetts Army, - 1350
Committee on the application of the Committee from Boston, and others, report that the Papers lie for further consideration at some future day, - 1356
6, Letter to the Committee of Inspection of the County of Bristol, advising them to keep the Militia, and especially the Minute Men, in the best posture of defence; but that they act on the defensive only, until the further direction of the Provincial Congress, - - - 1356
Application from Billerica, and from the Committee of Boston, again committed, - - 1357
7, Conference with Governour Hopkins, on the present state of Publick Affairs, - 1357
Letter to the Selectmen of Billerica. Approve their conduct in relation to the assault on Thomas Ditson, - 1357
Letter to the Committee of Correspondence for Boston and other Towns. Request that the Militia and Minute Men act only on the defensive, until the further order of the Provincial Congress, - 1357
8, Committee on the state of the Province report relative to raising and establishing an Army; and that Committees repair to Connecticut, Rhode-Island, and New-Hampshire, to desire their co-operation, - 1358
Committee to draught a Letter to each of the Colonies, - 1358
Committee to consider what number of Men should, be raised by the four New-England Governments, for their general defence, - 1358
10, Letter to the Colonies of Connecticut, Rhode-Island, and New-Hampshire, - - 1359
11, Instructions to the Delegates appointed to repair to the neighbouring Governments, - - 1359
Committee to take into consideration the particular state of the Town of Boston, appointed, after a long debate on the propriety of advising the Inhabitants to be moved from thence, - - 1360
12, County Committees appointed to report a true state of their respective Towns and Districts, with respect to their having observed the Resolutions of the Continental and Provincial Congresses, - 1361
Report of the Committee on the state of the Province, relative to exercising the Minute Men in Battalions, and paying them for the time they spend in that service; after long debate, rejected, - 1361
18, Committee of Safety directed to form six Companies of Artillery, to be in readiness to enter the service of the Colony when the Army shall be raised, 1362

1775.
April	Report from the Committee to consider the propriety of removing the Inhabitants from Boston; after long debate, recommitted, -	1362
14,	Committee of Donations of Boston recommended to afford to any poor persons desirous of removing from Boston, such assistance as may enable them to do it.	1362
	Committee of Safety directed to apply to a suitable number of persons to be in readiness to enter the service of the Colony as Field Officers, when an Army shall be raised, -	1363
15,	Day of Humiliation, Fasting, and Prayer, appointed, -	1368
	The Members, on their return to their respective Towns, ordered to use their influence to promote the Military Discipline, -	1364
	Adjourn to Wednesday, the 10th of May next, to meet at Concord, -	1364 COMMITTEE OF SAFETY OF MASSACHUSETTS.
1774.
Nov.2,	Committee of Supplies requested, to procure and deposite Provisions at Worcester and Concord, -	1365
8,	Committee of Supplies requested to procure all the Arms and Ammunition they can, in the neighbouring Provinces on the Continent, -	1365
15,	Committee to get seven large pieces of Cannon out of Boston, to some place in the country, in such manner as they may think most prudent,	1365
Dec. 20,	Committee of Supplies to procure certain Military Stores, -	1366
	Committee to examine the Commissary's Store in Boston, and report what Surgeons' Stores, and Stores of other kinds, are there, -	1366
1775,
Jan. 5,	Deacon Cheever authorized to receive Cannon and Mortars, -	1366
	All the Cannon, Mortars, Cannon Ball, and Shells, to be deposited in Worcester and Concord, in the same proportion as the Provisions, -	1366
Feb. 3,	Committee of Supplies directed to report to the Provincial Congress their transactions since their appointment, -	1367
13,	Committee of Supplies desired to purchase all the Powder they can, - - -	1367
	Committee to receive from Colonel Robinson four brass Field-Pieces, and four brass Mortars, which, in case of a rupture with the Troops, shall be for the use of the Artillery Companies of Boston and Dorchester, -	1367
21,	Committee of Supplies directed to procure ten tons of Brimstone, and all kinds of Warlike Stores, sufficient for an Army of fifteen thousand Men to take the field, - - -	1367
	The Powder now at Concord, to be removed to Leicester, -	1868
22,	Committee of Supplies directed to procure one hundred Bell Tents for Arms, one thousand Field Tents for Soldiers, ten tons of Lead Balls, and to have thirty rounds of Cartridges for fifteen thousand Men, made, -	1368
	On arrival of more Troops, the Province Arms, at Cambridge, to be removed to Worcester, 1368
	On intelligence of the arrival of more Troops, the Provincial Congress to be assembled immediately, -	1368
28,	Committee to direct the Commanding Officers of the Militia and the Minute Men, throughout the Province, to assemble one fourth part of the Militia forthwith, -	1368
24,	Hospital Stores to be procured and sent to Concord, -	1369
March 7,	Receiver General to pay to Doctor Warren and Doctor Church, five hundred Pounds, for the purchase of such articles for the Provincial Chests of Medicine, as cannot be got on credit,	1370
14,	Watch to be constantly kept at the places where the Provincial Magazines are stored, -	1370
	Watch to be kept at Charlestown, Cambridge, and Roxbury, and Couriers to be forwarded to the Towns where the Magazines are placed, when sallies are made from the Army by night,	1370
23,	Ton of Musket Bullets now arrived at Concord, to be lodged with Colonel Barrett, -	1370
April 1,	The Stores at Concord and elsewhere, not to be removed without written orders from the Committee of Safety, -	1370

1775.
	Considerations on the Measures carrying on with respect to the British Colonies in North America, -	1369
	Address of the People of Great Britain to the Inhabitants of America, - - -	1413
	Taxation no Tyranny. An Answer to the Resolutions and Address of the American Congress, -	1431
	An Answer to a Pamphlet, entitled "Taxation no Tyranny;" addressed to the Author, and to persons in power, -	1449
	PROCEEDINGS OF PARLIAMENT ON THE ADDRESS OF THANKS TO THE KING.
	House of Lords.
1774.
Nov. 29,	Meeting of the Fourteenth Parliament, -	1461
	State of Parties in England in relation to America, (Note,) -	1461
	House of Commons required to attend immediately	1461
	Lord Chancellor's Speech to both Houses. Commons directed to choose a Speaker, -	1462
30,	Sir Fletcher Norton presented to the King as Speaker, by the House of Commons, -	1464
	Informed by the Lord Chancellor, that the King approves the choice made by the Commons, -	1464
	Address of the Speaker, claiming the Privileges of the Commons, -	1464
	Reply of the Lord Chancellor, in the name of the King. Allows them all their Privileges, -	1465
	King's Speech to both Houses. Informs them that a most daring spirit of resistance and disobedience to the law, still prevails in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, - - -	1465
	Address of Thanks to the King, moved by the Earl of Hillsborough, - - -	1466
	Amendment offered by the Duke of Richmond, Opposed by Lord Lyttelton, - - -	1466
	Supported by Lord Camden, - - -	1467
	Amendment rejected, - - -	1467
	Protest on rejection of the amendment, -	1467
	Earl of Hillsborough's motion agreed to, -	1468
	Committee to prepare the Address, -	1468
	Address reported and agreed to, -	1468
Dec. 1,	Address presented to the King, at his Palace, at St. James's, -	1469
	The King's Answer, -	1469
6,	Address and Answer ordered to be published, -	1469
	House of Commons.
Nov.29,	House formed, - -	1469
	Sir Fletcher Norton chosen Speaker, -	1470
Dec. 5,	The King's Speech, reported to the House, by the Speaker, -	1471
	Address of Thanks to the King, moved by Lord Beauchamp, -	1471
	Amendment offered by Lord John Cavendish, -	1472
	Debate--Lord North, -	1473
	Mr. F. Montague, - - -	1473
	Governour Johnstone, -	1473
	Mr. Charles J. Fox, -	1473
	Mr. Hartley, - - -	1473
	Colonel Barré, - - -	1473
	Sir George Macartney, -	1473
	Lord Carmarthen, - - -	1473
	Sir William Mayne, -	1473
	General Smith, - - -	1473
	Mr. T. Townshend -	1474
	Mr. Edmund Burke, -	1474
	Mr. Van, -	1474
	Mr. Wedderburn, - - -	1474
	Amendment rejected -	1474
	Lord Beauchamp's motion agreed to, -	1474
	Committee to draw up the Address, -	1474
6,	Address reported and agreed to, - -	1474
7,	Presented to the King, - - -	1476
	King's Answer to the Address, - - -	1476
	ON SUPPLIES FOR THE YEAR 1775.
	House of Commons.
Dec. 7,	The King's Speech considered, -	1475
8,	House in Committee on the motion to grant a Supply to his Majesty, - - -	1475
9,	Committee of the Whole report that a Supply be granted, -	1476
12,	House in Committee to consider of the Supply granted to his Majesty, - - -	1476

1774.

Dec. 12, Mr. Buller's motion that 16,000 Men be employed for the Sea Service, for the year 1775, - 1476

Debate---Mr. T. Townshead, - 1476

Mr. Buller, - 1476

Mr. Luttrell, - 1477

Colonel Barré, - - - - 1477

Mr. Hartley, . - - - - 1477

Mr. Buller. - 1477

Mr. Luttrell, - 1477

Mr. Buller's motion agreed to, - - - - 1477

13, Resolutions reported from the Committee of the Whole, for yhe employment and pay of 16,000
Seamen, and agreed to by the House, - 1477

Debate--Lord John Cavendish, - 1478

Lord Beauchamp, - - - - 1478

Mr. Cornwall, - - - - 1478

Mr. Burke, . 1478

Sir William Mayne, - 1479

Mr. Hartley, - - - - 1479

Lord Beauchamp, - - - - 1479

Lord John Cavendish, - 1479

Lord Beauchamp, - - - - 1479

Captain Luttrell, - - - - 1479

Mr. Rose Fuller, - - - - 1479

16, House in Committee to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty, - - - - 1479

Lord Barrington's motion, that 17,547 Men, Commission and Non-Commission Officers included, be employed for the year 1775, - 1479

Debate--Mr. Rose Fuller, - - - - 1479

Lord Barrington, - - - - 1479

Mr. Fuller, - 1479

Lord North, - 1479

Mr. T. Townshend, - 1479

Lord North, - 1479

Governour Johnstone, - 1479

Mr. Fox, - 1482

Lord Clare, - 1482

Mr. Rigby, - 1482

Mr. Cruger, - 1482

Sir William Mayne, - 1484

Lord North, - 1484

Mr Hartley, - - - - 1484

Lord Barrington's motion agreed to, - - 1484

17, Resolutions reported from the Committee of the Whole read, and agreed to, - - - - 1484

19, Resolution for providing Ways and Means for raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole, - 1485

Debate----Lord North, - 1485

Mr. Hartley, - - - - 1485

Mr. Rose Fuller, - - - - 1486

Mr. T. Townshend, - - - - 1486

Mr. Rigby, - 1486

Mr. Edmund Burke, - - - - 1486

Sir William Meredith, - 1487

Mr. Burke, - 1488

Mr. Cornwall, - - - - 1488

Resolution providing Ways and Means, agreed to, 1488

Irresolution of the Cabinet, (Note,) - 1488

22, Parliament adjourned to the 19th day of January
next, - 1488

ON LORD CHATHAM'S MOTION TO RECALL THE TROOPS FROM BOSTON,

1775. House of Lords.

Jan. Papers relating to the Disturbances in North
20. America. presented by the Earl of Dartmouth, by his Majesty's command, - 1489

Lord Chatham's motion to recall the Troops
from Boston, - . 1498

Debate--Lord Chatham, - - - - 1493

Earl of Suffolk, - - - - 1498

Earl of Shelburne. - 1499

Lord Lyttelton, - - - - 1500

Lord Camden, - - - - 1501

Lord Chatham, - - - - 1501

Lord Townshend, - - - - 1502

Earl of Rochford, - - - - 1502

Earl Gower, - - - - 1502

Marquis of Rockingham, - 1502

Duke of Richmond, - 1503

Earl of Rochford, - 15o3

Lord Weymouth, - - - - 1504

Lord Chatham's motion rejected, - 1504

List of the Minority, - - - - 1504

Energy of the Cabinet, (Note,) - 1499 1775.

ON THE BILL FOR SETTLING THE TROUBLES IN AMERICA.

House of Commons.

Feb. 1, Provisional Act for settling the Troubles in America, and for asserting the Supreme Legislative authority and superintending power of Great Britain over the Colonies, presented by Lord
Chatham, . 1503

Lord Chatham's Speech on presenting the Bill, 1503

Earl of Dartmonth's Reply, - - - - 1504

Bill read the first time, . - - - - 1504

Objections to the Bill in America, (Note,) - 1505

Motion by the Earl of Sandwich "That the Bill be rejected," 1507

Debate--Lord Lyttelton, - - - - 1507

Earl of Shelburne, - 1508

Duke of Grafton, - - - - 1508

Earl Gower, - . - - - 1509

Lord Chatham, - - - - 1509

Earl Gower, - - - - 1510

Lord Camden, - - - - 1510

Earl of Chatham, - - - - 1510

Earl Gower, - - - - 1511

Earl of Hillsborough, - 1511

Duke of Richmond, - 1512

Duke of Manchester, . 1513

Earl Temple, - - - - 1513

Question on the motion of the Earl of Sandwich taken, and the Bill rejected, - 1514

List of the Minority, - 1514

ON THE PETITIONS RELATING TO AMERICA.

House of Commons,

Jan. Papers relating to the Disturbances in North
19, America, presented by Lord North, - 1513

Lord North's Explanations relative to the Papers, 1513

Papers referred to a Committee of the Whole House, - 1513

23, Petition from the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, presented, - 1513

Mr. Alderman Hayley's motion, that the Petition be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Papers from North America had been referred, - - - - 1515

Sir William Meredith's motion to amend, so as to refer to a separate Committee, - 1515

Debate--Mr. Burke, - 1516

Sir Gilbert Elliot, - - - - 1516

Mr. T. Townshend, - 1517

Lord Clare, - 1517

Mr. Fox, - 1517

Lord John Cavendish, - 1517

Lord North, - 1517

Sir George Macartney, - 1517

Captain Luttrell, - . - - 1517

Lord Stanley, - - - - 1518

Motion to amend agreed to, 1518

The Petition referred to a Committee of the Whole House, - 1519

Petition of the Master, Wardens, and Commonalty of the Society of Merchants and Venturers of the City of Bristol, presented by Mr. Burke, 1519

Motion to refer it to the Committee of the Whole House, to whom has been referred the Papers from America, - 1520

Debate--Lord North, . 1520

Mr. Burke, . 1520

Lord North, - 1520

Governour Johnstone, - - - - 1520

Motion amended, and the Petition referred to the Committee of the Whole House, to whom the Petition of the Merchants of London is referred, 1521

Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers of the City of Bristol, presented by
Mr. Cruger, - 1521

24, Petition of the Merchants and Traders of the City of Glasgow, presented, - - - - 1522

Statements of the Value of Exports from Great Britain to the Colonies, from 1772 to 1774, ordered to be laid before the House, - - 1522

25, Petition of the Merchants, Manufacturers, and Traders, and other Inhabitants of the City of Norwich, presented, - - - - 1523

Petition of the Merchants and Manufacturers residing in the Town and Neighbourhood of Dudley, in the County of Worcester, presented, - 1523

CV	CONTENTS.	CVI
1775	1775.
Jan. 25, Petition from the Inhabitants of the Town and Neighbourhood of Birmingham, -	Feb. 2, Petition of the Planters of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies, residing in Great Britain, and of the Merchants of London, trading to the said Colonies, presented, -	1524
Sir George Sable offers to present a Petition from Dr. Franklin, Mr. Lee, and Mr. Bollan, requesting to be heard before the House, on the Petition from the Congress to the King, 1524		1540
20, Statements of the Value of Exports and Imports to and from North America, and the West Indies, from the year 1762, ordered to be laid before the House. -	ON A JOINT ADDRESS OF THE TWO HOUSES TO THE KING
Second Petition from the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, presented by Alderman Hayley. - - - -	House of Commons.
Motion, by Mr. Hayley, for discharging the Order of Monday last, for referring the Petition of the Merchants, and others, of London, to a Committee of the Whole House, -	Feb. 2, House in Committee, on the American Papers, Motion of Lord North, for an Address to the King, declaring the Province of Massachusetts Bay in actual rebellion, - - - -	1541
Debate-- Mr. Hayley, - - - -	Mr. Dunning, " - - - -	1542
Mr. Hotham, - - - -	Mr. Attorney General Thurlow, -	1542
Mr. Hans Stanley, -	Colonel Grant, - - - -	1543
Mr. Hayley, 1527	Amendment proposed by Mr. Fox, -	1543
Mr. T. Townshend, -	Debate-- Mr. Grenville, - - - -	1544
Mr. Lewis, -	Mr. Cruger, -	1544
Mr. Jenkinson, - - - -	Captain Luttrell, - - - -	1544
Mr. Edmund Burke, -	Mr. Cosmo Gordon, -	1547
Mr. Fox, -	Mr. Burke, -	1547
Colonel Barré - - - -	Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn, -	1547
Mr. Wedderburn, - - - -	Amendment offered by Mr. Fox, rejected, -	1547
Lord North, -	Lord North's motion for an Address, adopted, -	1547
Lord George Germain, -	3, Statements of the Imports and Exports of the Sugar Colonies, ordered to be laid before the House, -	1547
Mr. Fox, -	Accounts of Imports and Exports presented, -	1548
Lord North, -	6, Report from Committee of the Whole, on the American Papers. Address to the King, -	1548
Mr. Hayley's motion rejected, . -	Motion, by Lord John Cavendish, that the Report be recommitted, -	1549
Petition referred to same Committee with the others, -	Debate--Lord John Cavendish, -	1549
Petition of the Merchants and Manufacturers of the Town of Manchester, presented, -	Lord Lumley, -	1549
Petition from the Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers of Wolverhampton, in the County of Stafford, presented, -	Mr. Wilkes, (the Lord-Mayor,) -	1549
Petition of the Merchants and Tradesmen of the Port of Liverpool, presented, - - -	Captain Harvey, - - - -	1552
Petition of William Bollan, Benjamin Franklin, and Arthur Lee, requesting they may be heard at the Bar of the House, on the Petition from America, offered by Sir George Savile, -	Sir William Mayne, -	1554
Motion for receiving the Petition rejected, -	Mr. T. Townshend, -	1556
Notice of the Debate on this Question, (Note) 1532	Mr. Joliffe, -	1556
House in Committee. on the American Papers, 1533	Mr. Hans Stanley, -	1556
27, Statements of Exports from England to the Colonies in North America, in 1773, presented, -	Lord Irnham, - - - -	1556
Petition of sundry Merchants, Factors, and Manufacturers, of Birmingham, in the County of Warwick, presented, - - - -	Mr. William Adam, -	1559
House in Committee, on the Petition from the Merchants, and others, of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America, -	Mr. Scott -	1559
Reasons of the Merchants, for declining to be heard at the Bar of the House, -	Governour Johnstone, -	1559
House in Committee, on the American Papers, 1534	Sir Robert Smythe -	1564
31, Papers presented by Lord North, - - - -	Mr. Burke, -	1564
Statements of Imports and Exports of British Plantation Tobacco, ordered to be laid before the House, -	Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn, -	1565
Petition of the Manufacturers of Felt Hats, and Dealers therein; as also, of the Shoemakers, in the Town of New-Castle, in the County of Stafford, presented, -	Colonel Barré, - - - -	1565
Petition of the Manufacturers and Traders in Earthen Ware, residing in Burslem, Tunstall, Colridge, Shelton, Hanly, Stoke-Lane, Delf-Lane-End, and places adjacent, in the County of Stafford. presented, - - - -	Lord North, -	1565
Mr. Burke's motion for an inquiry into the manner in which the Petition from Birmingham, presented on the 25th, was procured, -	Mr. Mackworth, - - - -	1565
Debate on the motion, -	Mr. Sawbridge, - - - -	1565
Mr Burke's motion rejected, - - - -	Motion to recommit the Report rejected -	1565
House in Committee, on the American Papers, 1537	Amendment proposed and rejected, -	1565
Feb. 1, Petition of the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, and Assistants. of the Borough of Leeds, in the County of York, presented, - - - -	Resolution reported by Corumittee of the Whole agreed to, -	1566
Petition of the Merchants of Leeds, trading to the North American Colonies, or having property there, presented, -	Committee to draw up an Address, -	1566
Papers presented by Lord North, - - - -	Address reported and agreed to, - - - -	1566
House in Committee, on the American Papers, 1539	To be communicated to the Lords, at a Conference, -	1566
	Conference with the Lords requested, - -	1566
	House in Committee, on the American Papers, 1566
	7, The Address presented to the Lords in Conference, -	1567
	8, Managers of the two Houses in Conference on the Address. The Lords agree to make it a Joint Address, -	1507
	The King has appointed to-morrow to receive the Address, - -	1567
	Petition of the Manufacturing Hosiers, of the Town and County of Nottingham, presented, 1567
	Lord North's motion to postpone the further consideration of the American Papers to the 10th, 1568
	Debate-- Mr. Fox, -	1568
	Lord North, -	1568
	Consideration of Petitions postponed to the 15th, and of American papers to the 10th, -	1568
	10, The King's Answer to the Joint Address of the two Houses, presented yesterday -	1569
	House of Lords.
	Feb. 2, Papers relating to the Disturbances in America, considered, -	1569
	3, Further considered, -	1569
	7, Message from the Commons. desiring a Conference with this House, upon the state of his Majesty's Colonies in America, -	1569
	Managers of the Conference appointed, -	1569
	The two Houses in Conference, -	1570

1775.
Feb. 7, Address delivered at the Conference, reported by the Lord President, - 1570
Motion, by the Earl of Dartmouth, to agree to the Address, - . 1571
Marquis of Rockingham's motion for the Previous Question, - . 1571
Debate--Marquis of Rockingham, - 1571
 Earl of Pomfret, - - - - 1572
 Earl of Denbigh, - - - - 1572
 Earl Gower, - - - - 1572
 Lord Mansfield, - - - - 1572
 Lord Camden, - - - - 1573
 Duke of Grafton, - - - - 1574
 Lord Mansfield, - - - - 1575
 Lord Lyttenham, - - - - 1576
 Duke of Richmond, - - - - 1576
 Lord Mansfield, - - - - 1577
 Lord Lyttenham, - - - - 1578
 Earl of Rochford, - - - - 1578
 Earl of Shelburne, - - - - 1578
 Lord Mansfield, - - - - 1579
 Earl of Shelburne, - - - - 1579
 Duke of Richmond, - - - - 1579
 Earl of Sandwich, - - - - 1580
 Duke of Richmond, - - - - 1581
 Earl of Sandwich, - - - - 1581
 Bishop of Peterborough, - - - - 1582
 Duke of Richmond, - - - - 1583
 Duke of Manchester, - - - - 1584
 Lord Lyttelton. - - - - 1584
 Lord Mansfield, - - - - 1584
 Lord Camden, - - - - 1584
 Earl of Dartmouth, - - - - 1584
Notice of the Debate, (Note,) - - 1584
Previous Question put, and resolved in the Affirmative, - 1585
List of the Minority, (Note,) - 1585
Protest, - 1585
The Main Question, on agreeing to the Address put, and resolved in the Affirmative, - 1586
Protest, - 1586
Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, concerned in the American Commerce, read, and laid on the table, - - - - 1587
Petition of the Planters of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies, residing in Great Britain, and of the Merchants of London, trading to the said Colonies read, and laid on the table, - - 1588
Statements of Imports and Exports, ordered to be laid before the House, - - - - 1589
8, The Lords informed the King will receive the Joint Address of the two Houses to-morrow, at his Palace of St. James, - - - - 1590
10, The King's Answer to the Address presented yesterday, - - - - 1590

ON ADDITIONAL SUPPLIES FOR THE YEAR 1775,
House of Commons.
*Feb.*10, Message from the King, requesting additional Forces by Sea and Land, - - - - 1621
13, House in Committee, to consider further of the Supply granted to his Majesty, - - 1589
 Mr. Buller's motion, that an additional number, of 2,000 Men, be allowed for the Sea Service, for the year 1775, - 1589
Debate--Lord North, - 1589
 Governour Johnstone, - 1590
 Lord North, - 1591
 Lord John Cavendish, - 1591
 Mr. Cornwall, - - - - 1591
 Mr Charles Fox, - 1591
 Captain Walsingham, - 1591
 Mr. Temple Luttrell, - 1592
 Mr. Sawbridge, - - - - 1595
 Mr. Buller's motion agreed to, - 1595
14, House in Committee, - 1595
 Lord Barrington's motion, to augment the Land Forces with 4,383 Men, Officers and Non-Commission Officers included, - 1596
After Debate, agreed to, 1596

ON LORD NORTH'S RESOLUTION FOR RECONCILIATION.
House of Commons.
Feb. 20, House in Committee, on American Papers, - 1597
 Lord North's Conciliatory Resolution, - 1598
Remarks on the introduction of this Resolution, (Note,) 1598

1775.
Feb. 20, Debate-Lord North, - 1597
 Governour Pownall, - - - - 1600
 Mr. Charles Fox, - - - - 1605
 Mr. Jenkinson, - - - - 1606
 Mr. Welbore Ellis, - - - - 1606
 Mr. Adam, - - - - 1606
 Mr. Cornwall, - - - - 1607
 Mr. Ackland, - - - - 1607
 Mr. Dundas, - - - - 1607
 Sir Gilbert Elliot, - - - - 1607
 Colonel Barré, - - - - 1607
 Lord North, - 1608
 Mr. Edmund Burke, - 1608
 Mr. Dunning, - - - - 1610
Question taken, and resolved in the Affirmative, 1610
To be reported to the House on Friday morning next, 1610
Authentick Speech of Lord North, on introducing the Resolution, (Note,) - - 1599
Circumstantial account of the Debates in the American Committee, on Lord North's motion, (Note) 1600
Lord North's explanation of his Resolution, (Note,) 1602
24, Report of Committee of the Whole deferred to Monday next, - 1610
27, Resolution of the Committee of the Whole reported to the House, - - - - 1611
Lord North's motion to agree to the Resolution, 1611
Debate-- Mr. Scott, - 1611
 Mr. Ackland, - - - - 1611
 Mr. Temple Luttrell, - - - - 1613
 Sir P. J. Clerke, - - - - 1617
 Mr. Hartley, - - - - 1617
 Mr. Thomas Powys, - - - - 1618
 Lord North, - 1619
 Mr. T. Townshend, - 1619
 Sir Richard Sutton, - 1619
 Mr. Charles Turner, - 1619
 Mr Hans Stanley, - 1619
 Mr. Alderman Sawbridge, - 1619
 General Burgoyne, - 1619
 Governour Johnstone, - - - - 1622
Question taken, and Resolution agreed to, - 1622

ON THE BILL FOR RESTRAINING THE TRADE OF THE NORTHERN COLONIES.
House of Commons.
Feb. 10, House in Committee, on American Papers, - 1622
 Lord North's motion, for leave to bring in a Bill to Restrain the Trade of the Northern Colonies, - 1622
Debate-- Lord North, - 1622
 Mr. Dunning, - - - - 1623
 Mr. Attorney General Thurlow, - 1623
 Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn, - 1623
 Mr. Speaker Norton, - 1623
 Governoar Johnstone, - 1623
 Mr. T. Townshend, - 1624
 Sir George Savile, - 1624
 Sir W. Meredith, - - - - 1624
 Lord John Cavendish, - 1625
 Lord Beauchamp, - - - - 1625
 Mr. Burke, - 1625
Lord North's motion agreed to. - 1626
Report of Committee of the Whole, - 1626
Leave granted, and Committee appointed, to bring in a Bill to Restrain the Trade and Commerce of Massachusetts, New-Hampshire, Connecticut, and Rhode-Island, and to prohibit such Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the Banks of Newfoundland, or other places, therein to be mentioned, . . . - 1626
Statements of Duties and Excise on Imports and Exports of West India Produce, and of the Tonnage of all Vessels employed in the Trade between Great Britain and the Colonies, ordered to be laid before the House, - 1626
13, Accounts of Exports presented, - . 1626
15, Consideration of the Petition of Merchants, and others, of London, concerned in the Commerce of America, postponed to the 8th of March, 1627
Statements of Exports and Imports, ordered to be laid before the House, - - - - 1627 Petition of the principal Manufacturers of the Borough of Bridgeport, in the County of Dorset, on behalf of themselves, and thousands of

CIX	CONTENTS.	CX
1775.	others, Inhabitants of the said Borough, and places adjacent, presented, - - -	1627
Feb.15,	Letter from Lord Dunmore, dated December 24, 1774, presented by Lord North, - -	1628
	Petition of the Merchants and Master Manufacturers of Woollen Goods, of the Towns of Wakefield, Halifax, Bradford, Huddersfield, and Country adjacent, interested in the Trade to America, presented, - - -	1628
	Accounts of Imports and Exports of Sugar presented, -	1629
17,	Address to the King, that he will direct to be laid before the House, an Act of Assembly of Virginia, passed in the year 1684, -	1629
	Bill to Restrain the Trade, and prohibit the Fisheries of the Northern Colonies, presented by Lord North, - .	1629
	Second reading ordered for Thursday, -	1629
	American Papers to be considered in Committee of the Whole, on Monday, the 20th, -	1629
20,	Accounts of Imports and Exports presented, -	1630
22,	Petition of the Merchants of Whitehaven, in the County of Cumberland, - - -	1630
	Petition of the Merchants, Linen Drapers, and principal Inhabitants of the Town and Neighbourhood of Belfast, in the Kingdom of Ireland, presented, -	1631
	Petition of the Aldermen, Sheriff, principal Manufacturers, and Inhabitants of the Town and County of Nottingham, presented, -	1631
	"Act for the better preservation of the Peace of Virginia, and preventing Unlawful and Treasonable Associations," passed by the Assembly of Virginia, on the 16th of April, 1684, presented, (Note,) -	1632
	Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, interested in the American Commerce, presented, - -	1633
	Second reading of the Bill postponed until to-morrow, -	1634
24,	Letter from General Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated January 18, presented by Lord North, -	1634
	Other Papers from America presented, -	1634
	Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council convened, presented at the Bar of the House, by the Sheriffs of the City, - -	1635
	Bill read, second time, and committed to Committee of the Whole, - - -	1636
	Petition of Merchants, of London, referred to same Committee, and may be heard by themselves, their Counsel, or Agents, against the Bill, -	1636
	City Petition referred to the same Committee, -	1637
28,	Peition of the People called Quakers presented, -	1637
	Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and principal Inhabitants of the Town aod County of Poole, presented, - - -	1638
	House in Committee, on the Bill, - - -	1638
	David Barclay, as Agent for the Committee of the North American Merchants, called in, to examine Witnesses in support of their Petition, -	1638
	Examination of Brook Watson, -	1638
	Examination of Stephen Higginson, -	1645
	Examination of John Lane, - - -	1648
	Examination of Seth Jenkins, - - -	1650
March 1,	Account of the Imports of Tobacco into Scotland, from 1760 to 1775, presented, -	1651
	Account of Imports and Exports presented, -	1651
	House in Committee on the Bill, -	1651
6,	Bill reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole, -	1651
	Examination of Benjamin Lister, in support of the Petition from Poole, - - -	1651
	Motion made for the engrossment of the Bill, -	1653
	Debate-- Lord Howe, -	1653
	Mr. Charles Fox, - - -	1653
	Mr. Jenkinson, -	1653
	Mr. T. Townshend, -	1654
	Mr. Henry Dundas, -	1654
	Lord John Cavendish, -	1654
	Mr. Rice, -	1654
	Mr. Edmund Burke, -	1654
	Lord Advocate of Scotland, - -	1656
	Question taken, and resolved, in the Affirmative, -	1657
	Third. reading ordered for Wednesday next, -	1657
	1775.
Mar. 8,	Bill read the third time, -	1657
	Amendment offered by Mr. Hartley, to permit the Colonies to import Fuel and Provisions brought coastwise from any part of America, -	1657
	Debate---Mr. Hartley, - - -	1657
	Lord North, -	1658
	Mr. Burke, -	1659
	Lord Clare, .	1659
	Mr. T. Townshend, -	1659
	Mr. Charles Fox, - - -	1659
	Governour Pownall, -	1660
	Mr. Henry Dundas, - - -	1660
	Question on the Amendment taken, and rejected. -	1660
	Bill Passed, - -	1660
	House of Lords.
March 9,	Bill to Restrain the Trade of the Northern Colonies, received from the Commons, - -	1661
10,	Second reading of the Bill ordered for Wednesday the 15th, and the Lords summoned, -	1661
15,	Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, - -	1661
	Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, interested in the American Commerce, -	1661
	Bill read the second time, - - -	1663
	House refuse to permit Mr. Barclay to put Questions to the witnesses, - - -	1663
	Seth Jenkins examined, -	1663
	Brook Watson examined, - - -	1667
	Benjamin Lyster examined, - - -	1668
	George Davis examined, - - -	1669
	Molyneux Shuhlham examined, -	1669
	Sir Hugh Palliser examined, - - -	1670
16,	Motion by the Earl of Dartmouth, to commit the Bill, -	1670
	Debate-- Marquis of Rockingham, -	1670
	Earl of Carlisle, - - -	1673
	Duke of Manchester, -	1673
	Earl of Denbigh, . - -	1674
	Duke of Manchester, -	1674
	Earl of Denbigh, - - -	1674
	Viscount Dudley, - - -	1675
	Lord Camden, - - -	1675
	Earl of Sandwich, (see Note,) -	1681
	Earl of Shelburne, -	1683
	Earl of Suffolk, - - -	1684
	Earl of Radnor, - - -	1684
	Earl of Suffolk, - - -	1684
	Earl of Radnor, - - -	1684
	Duke of Grafton, - - -	1685
	Marquis of Rockingtmm, -	1686
	Lord Camden, - - -	1686
	Question taken; Bill committed to a Committee of the Whole House, - - -	1687
20,	Bill reported, amended, and ordered for a thisd reading to-morrow, -	1687
21,	Bill read a third time, -	1688
	Amendment offered by the Earl of Buckinghamshire,, -	1688
	Debate-- Duke of Manchester, -	1688
	Lord Chancellor, - - -	1688
	Duke of Manchester, -	1688
	Earl of Effingham, -	1689
	Earl of Dartmouth, -	1689
	Amendment rejected, -	1689
	Bill passed, - -	1689
	List of the Minority, -	1689
	Protest, -	1689
	"An Act to Restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantation, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies; and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the Banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations," -	1691
	ON THE BILL TO RESTRAIN THE TRADE OF THE SOUTHERN COLONIES.
	House of Commons.
Mar. 3,	American Papers presented by Lord North, -	1697
	Letter from Governour Franklin to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated February 1, -	1697

1775.
Mar. 3	Letter from Governour Penn to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated January 30, - - - -	1698
	Petition of the Merchants, Linen Drapers, and principal Inhabitants, of the City of Waterford, in the Kingdom of Ireland, presented, -	1698
8,	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated January 27, presented by Lord North. -	1698
	Mr. Hartley's motion for an Address to the King, requesting him to direct a copy of a Letter from the Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant Governour Colden, dated December 10th, may be laid before the House, - - - -	1699
	Debate---Mr. Hartley, - - - -	1699
	Mr. Rigby, -	1699
	Mr. T. Townshend, -	1699
	Lord North, -	1699
	Mr. Fox, -	1699
	Mr. Hartley's motion rejected, -	1699
	House in Committee on the American Papers, -	1700
9,	Accounts of Exports and Imports presented. -	1700
	Petition of Gentlemen, Merchants, and Traders, in the Woollen Manufactory at or near Huddersfield, in the West Riding of the County of York, presented, -	1700
	Petition of the Manufacturing Hosiers of the Town and County of Nottingham, presented, -	1700
	Permission granted to the Petitioners to be heard before the Committee if they think fit, -	1701
	House in Committee on the American Papers, -	1701
	Motion by Lord North, for leave to bring in a Bill to Restrain the Trade of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, -	1701
	Debate-- Lord John Cavendish, -	1701
	Sir William Mayne, -	1701
	Mr. Hartley, - - - -	1702
	Lord North, -	1702
	Question taken; motion agreed to by the Committee, -	1702
	Reported to the House, - - - -	1702
	Leave granted, and Committee appointed to bring in the Bill, -	1702
13,	Bill presented by Mr. Cooper, and read first time, -	1702
	Second reading ordered for Thursday, -	1702
15,	Accounts of Duties, Drawbacks, and Imposts, presented, -	1702
	Petition of the Clothiers and other principal Inhabitants of Trowbridge, in the County of Wilts, presented, -	1703
16,	Second reading of the Bill postponed until to-morrow, -	1703
17.	Bill read second time, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House, -	1704
20,	House in Committee go through with the Bill, -	1704
	Report of the Committee of the Whole to be received on the 23d, -	1704
23,	Report postponed to the 27th. -	1704
27,	Report further postponed to the 29th, -	1704
29,	Report to be received to-morrow. -	1704
80,	Bill reported from the Committee of the Whole, -	1704
	Debate-- Mr. John Luttrell - - - -	1705
	Mr. Temple Luttrell, -	1706
	Lord North, -	1708
	Amendment relating to Delaware, proposed by Lord North, and agreed to - - - -	1708
	Bill ordered to be read a third time on the 3d of April, -	1708
	Papers presented by Lord North. -	1708
	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated February 17, -	1708
	Letter from Governour Gage to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated February 20. -	1709
Apr. 3,	Third reading of the Bill postponed, -	1709
	Estimate of the charge of maintaining and supporting the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Colony of Nova-Scotia, for the year 1775, -	1710
	Estimate of the Civil Establishment of his Majesty's Colony of Georgia, and the Incidental Expenses attending the same, from the 24th of June, 1774, to the 24th of June 1775, -	1710
	Estimate of the Civil Establishment of East Florida, and other Incidental Expenses attending the same, from June 24, 1774, to June 24, 1775, -	1711
	Estimate of the Expenses attending General Surveys of his Majesty's Dominions in North America, for the Year 1775. -	1712

1775.
Apr. 5,	Bill read the third time, - - - -	1712
	Motion made that the Bill do Pass, -	1712
	Debate-- Mr. Hartley, -	1712
	Lord North, - - - -	1712
	Sir William Mayne, -	1712
	Mr. Rigby, -	1713
	Marquis of Granby, -	1713
	Lord North, -	1714
	Mr. Alderman Sawbridge, -	1714
	Mr. Alderman Bull, -	1714
	Sir John Duntze, - - - -	1715
	General Conway, - - - -	1715
	Mr. Rigby, -	1715
	Mr. T. Townshend, -	1715
	Question taken; the Bill passed, -	1716
	House of Lords.
Apr. 6,	Bill to Restrain the Trade of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and South Carolina, received from the Commons, -	1716
	Read the first time, -	1716
7,	Bill read the second time, - - - -	1716
10,	House in Committee, go through with the Bill, -	1716
	Third reading ordered for the 12th, -	1716
12,	Bill read the third time and passed, -	1716
	Lords dissenting, -	1716
	"An Act to Restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Colonies of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and South Carolina, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West Indies, under certain conditions and limitations," - - - -	1716
	ON THE PETITION OF THE WEST INDIA PLANTERS.
	House of Commons.
Mar.8,	House to go into Committee on the Petitions, on the 15th, -	1721
15,	Witnesses directed to attend the Committee of the Whole, -	1721
	House in Cetmnitteeonthe Petitions, -	1721
16,	House in Committee, -	1721
	Mr. Glover appeared as Agent of the West India Planters, and Manager of the Evidence in support of their Petition, which was presented on the 2d of February, - - - -	1721
	Mr Glover's Address to the Committee, -	1721
	George Walker examined, - - - -	1722
	John Ellis examined, -	1731
	Evidence summed up by Mr. Glover, -	1733
	Petition and Memorial of the Assembly of Jamaica, to the King in Council, dated December 28, 1774, presented by Lord North, -	1743
20,	House again in Committee on the Petitions, -	1743
	Witnesses examined on the Petitions from Nottingham, -	1743
	Debate on the objection made by Mr. Van, to a question put to one of the witnesses, by Mr. Burke, -	1743
	Remarks of Mr. Bailey on the conduct of Lord North, in relation to the Petitioners, -	1744
	Petitions to be further considered on the 27th, -	1744
27,	Consideration postponed for one week, when the subject dropped, -	1746
	ON MR. BURKE'S RESOLUTIONS FOR CONCILIATION
	House of Commons.
March 22.	Mr. Burke's Resolutions for Conciliation with America, -	1745
	Debate-- Mr. Burke, -	1745
	Mr. Jenkinson, -	1776
	Lord Frederick Campbell, -	1777
	Question taken, and the Resolutions rejected, -	1778
	ON MR. HARTLEY'S PROPOSITIONS FOR CONCILIATION
	House of Commons
March 27,	Mr. Hartley's Propositions for Conciliation with the Colonies, -	1781
	Debate-- Mr. Hartley, - - - -	1781
	Sir Cecil Wray, - - - -	1791
	Lord North, -	1791
	Sir Cecil Wray, - - - -	1792
	Mr. T. Townshend, -	1792
	Lord William Campbell, -	1792
	Mr. Lyttelton, - - - -	1792
	Sir George Savile, -	1792
	Mr. Vyner, -	1792
	Mr. Tuffnell, - - - -	1792
	Mr. Hartley's Propositions rejected, -	1793

1775	ON THE AMERICAN MUTINY BILL
	House of Commons
March 24,	Leave granted to bring in a Bill to render more effectual in his Majesty's Dominions in America, the Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion,			1793
27,	The Bill presented by Lord Barrington,			1793
28,	Bill read the second time,	-	-	1793
30,	Considered in Committee of the Whole,			1793
31,	Ordered to be engrossed,	-	-	1794
Apr. 5,	Read the third time and passed,			1794
	House of Lords.
Apr. 6,	Bill to render more effectual in his Majesty's Dominions in America, the Act for the punishment of Mutiny and Desertion, received from the Commons,	-		1794
7,	Bill read the second time,	-	-	1794
10,	House in Committee on the Bill,			1794
11,	Read the third time and passed,	-	-	1795
	"An Act to amend, and render more effectual in his Majesty's Dominions in America, an Act, passed in the present Session of Parliament, entitled, 'An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters,' and for extending the provisions of the said Act to his Majesty's Marine Forces in America,"			1795
ON THE BRITISH FISHERY BILL.
	House of Commons.
April 11,	Motion of Lord North to consider of the Encouragement proper to be given to the Fisheries of Great Britain and Ireland,	-	-	1805
	Debate-- Lord North,			1805
	Mr. Burke,			1806
	Mr. Thomas Townshend,			1806
	Mr. Connolly,	-	-	1807
	Mr. Burke,	-		1807
	Lord North,	-		1807
	Motion agreed to,			1807
27,	House in Committee on Lord North's motion,			1807
	Lord North's Explanations,	-	-	1807
28,	Resolutions reported by Committee of the Whole, for the Encouragement of the Fisheries carried on from Great Britain and Ireland, agreed to,			1809
	Committee to prepare the Bill,			1811
May 4,	Bill presented by Mr. Jenkinson,			1811
9,	Read the second time,	-	-	1811
11,	Considered in Committee,	-	-	1811
17,	Read the third time and passed,			1812
	House of Lords.
May 18,	Bill for the Encouragement of British Fisheries received from the Commons,			1812
19,	Read the second time,			1812
22,	Considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed,			1812
ON PROVIDING, WAYS AND MEANS FOR 1775.
	House of Commons.
May 3,	House in Committee to consider further of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply granted to his Majesty,			1811
	Resolutions offered by Lord North,	-		1815
	Debate-- Lord North,	-		1818
	Mr. Hartley,	-	-	1815
	Mr. Vyner,	-		1815
	Mr. T. Townshend,			1815
	Lord North,	-	-	1815
	Governour Johnstone,	-	-	1816
4,	Resolutions reported from the Committee of the Whole,	-		1816
	Agreed to by the House,	-	-	1818
ON THE REMONSTRANCE OF THE NEW-YORK ASSEMBLY,
	House of Commons.
May 15,	Representation and Remonstrance of the Assembly of New-York, offered by Mr. Burke,			1819
	Mr. Burke's motion, that the Representation and Remonstrance be brought up,	-	-	1819
	Motion by Lord North to amend by inserting, in Mr. Burke's motion, after the word Remonstrance, the words "in which the said Assem-

1775.	bly claim to themselves rights derogatory to, and inconsistent with, the Legislative authority of Parliament,"	-	-	1819
Debate--	Mr. Burke,	-	-	1819
	Lord North,	-	-	1819
	Mr. Cruger,	-	-	1820
	Mr. Cornwall,	-	-	1821
	Mr. Jenkinson,	-	-	1821
	Mr. Aubrey,	-	-	1821
	Mr. Fox,	-	-	1822
	Governour Johnstone,	-	-	1822
	Lord North's motion to amend agreed, to,	-	-	1822
	Mr. Burke's motion, as amended, rejected,	-	-	1822
ON THE PETITIONS FROM QUEBECK.
House of Lords.
May 17,	Petition of his Majesty's loyal and dutiful Subjects, settled in the Province of Quebec, presented by Lord Camden,	-	-	-
		-	-	1823
Debate---	Earl Gower,	-	-	1823
	Lord Camden,	-	-	1823
Bill offered by	Lord Camden, to Repeal the Quebec Act,	-	-	1826
Motion by the	Earl of Dartmouth, that the Bill be now rejected,	-	-	1826
Debate---	Earl of Dartmouth,	-	-	1826
	Duke of Richmond,	-	-	1827
	Lord Lyttelton,	-	-	1827
	Duke of Manchester,	-	-	1829
	Earl of Rochford,	-	-	1829
	Earl of Bristol,	-	-	1829
	Lord Lyttelton,	-	-	1830
	Earl of Sandwich,	-	-	1831
	Earl of Bristol,	-	-	1831
	Earl of Sandwich,	-	-	1831
	Archbishop of Canterbury,	-	-	1831
	Earl of Shelburne,	-	-	1831
	Lord Mansfield,	-	-	1834
	Lord Camden,	-	-	1834
Question taken, and the	Bill rejected,	-	-	1834
List of the	Minority,	-	-	1834
House of Commons.
May 18,	Petition and Memorial of his Majesty's ancient Subjects, Seigneurs, Freeholders, Merchants, Traders, and others, settled in his Majesty's Province of Quebec, presented,	-	-	1833
Sir George Savile's	motion for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal the Quebec Act,	-	-	1836
Debate---	Sir George Savile,	-	-	1835
	Mr. T. Townshend,	-	-	1836
	Mr. De Grey,	-	-	1836
	Mr. Howard,	-	-	1836
	Lord North,	-	-	1836
	Mr. Fox,	-	-	1837
	Sir Robert Smythe,	-	-	1837
	Colonel Barré,	-	-	1838
	Sir W. Meredith,	-	-	1838
	Colonel Barré,	-	-	1838
Question token, and	Sir George Savile's motion rejected,	-	-	1838
ON THE MEMORIAL OF THE NEW-YORK ASSEMBLY.
House of Lords.
May 18,	Memorial of his Majesty's faithful Subjects and Representatives of the Colony of New-York, in General Assembly convened, presented,	-	-	1837
Motion by the	Duke of Manchester, that the Memorial might be read by the Clerk,	-	-	1837
Debate--	Earl of Dartmouth,	-	-	1837
	Duke of Manchester,	-	-	1838
	Earl of Buckinghamshire	-	-	1838
	Earl of Denbigh,	-	-	1839
	Earl Gower,	-	-	1839
	Duke of Manchester,	-	-	1839
	Earl of Hillsborough,	-	-	1839
	Duke of Richmond,	-	-	1839
	Earl of Sandwich,	-	-	1839
Motion by the	Earl of Sandwich, to amend the Duke of Manchester's motion, by inserting alter the word Memorial, the words, - "the contents thereof, not having been opened,"	-	-	1839
Debate---	Duke of Richmond,	-	-	1839
	Earl Gower,	-	-	1839
	Lord Camden,	-	-	1839
	Earl of Effingham,	-	-	1840

1775.	Amendment proposed by the Earl of Sandwich, rejected,	- -	1842
	Question taken on the Duke of Manchester's motion, and the House refused to permit the Memorial to be read,		- 1842
May 26,	Speaker's Speech to the King,		- 1841
	King's Speech to both Houses,	- -	- 1842
	Parliament prorogued to the 27th day of July next,	-	- 1844
1774.	PETITIONS TO THE KING.
Jan.10,	The most humble Petition of his Majesty's ancient and loyal Subjects, Freeholders, Merchants, and Planters, in the Province of Quebec, in North America to the King.	-	- 1843
15,	Memorial of the Freeholders, Merchants, Planters, and others, his Majesty's ancient and loyal Subjects, now in the Province of Quebec, to the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State,	-	1844
March 19,	Letter from Francis Maseres to the Committee of the Petitioners for an Assembly in the Province of Quebec. Has presented the Petition and Memorial. Ministers believe the Province is not yet ripe for an Assembly, and prefer for the present a Legislative Council, nominated by the King. Advises them to declare that the British Parliament has supreme authority over the Province, both of

1774.	Legislation and Taxation, and that such authority shall continue alter the Establishment of an Assembly,	-	- 1845
Feb.	Petition of divers Roman Catholick Inhabitants of the Province of Quebec, signed and transmitted to the Earl of Dartmouth, his Majesty's Secretary of State for America,	-	- 1846
	Memorial in support of the requests made by his Majesty's most obedient and most faithful new Subjects in Canada,		- 1848
Nov. 12,	Petition of his Majesty's most loyal and dutiful, his ancient Subjects, settled in the Province of Quebec,	-	- 1849 1775.
March 23,	Humble Address and Petition of the Merchants, Traders, and others, of the City of London, concerned in the Commerce of North America.		1850
	Address and Petition of the People called Quakers, to George the Third, King of Great Britain, and the Dominions thereunto belonging,	-	- 1852
April 10,	Humble Addresss, Remonstrance, and Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Livery, of the City of London, in Common-Hall, assembled,		1853
	The King's Answer, delivered to the Lord Mayor, by the Earl of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain,	-	- 1854
11,	Letter from the Lord Chamberlain, to the Lord Mayor of London,		- 1854
May 2,	Mr. Wilkes's, the Lord Mayor's Answer, to the Letter from Lord Hertford, the Lord Chamberlain,		- 1854

List of the Delegates appointed by the several Counties of the Province of MARYLAND, to the Convention which met at ANNAPOLIS, by Adjournment, on the Eighth day of DECEMBER, 1774, and continued till the Twelfth day of the same month. (See page 1031.)

For St. Mary's County.---	John Allen Thomas, Jeremiah Jordan, Richard Barnes, John De Butts.
For Charles County.---	John Dent, Daniel Jenifer, Thomas Stone.
For Calvert County.--	John Weems, Alexander Somerville, Richard Parran, Edward Reynolds, Benjamin Mackall, 4th.
For Prince George's County.---	Willlam Bowie, Robert Tyler, Edward Sprigg, John Rodgers, David Crauford, Joshua Beall, Osborn Sprigg, Walter Bowie.
For Frederick County.---	Charles Beatty, Jacob Funk, Henry Griffith, Thomas Price, Richard Brooke, Joseph Chapline, Upton Sheredine, Thomas Sprigg Wootten.
For Anne Arundel County, and City of Annapolis.---	John Hall, Thomas Johnson, Samuel Chase, William Pace, Matthias Hammond, Charles Carroll, Barrister, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Brice T. B, Worthington, Thomas Dorsey, John Weems.
For Baltimore County.---	John Moale, Thomas Cockey

Deye,	Walter	Tulley,	Benjamin	Nicholson,	William
Buchanan,	John	Boyd,	Samuel	Worthington,	Charles Ridgely.
For	Harford	County.---	Thomas	Bond,	John Love,
	Carville	Hall,	John	Paca,	Aquila Paca,
	Aquila	Hall,	Amos	Garret,	Richard Dallam.
For	Cecil	County.---	John	Veazy,	Joseph Gilpin.
For	Kent	County.---	Thomas	Ringgold,	Joseph Earle.
For	Queen	Anne	County.---	James	Hollyday,
	Thomas	Wright,	Turburt	Wright,
For	Caroline	County.---	Henry	Dickenson,	Benedict Brice,
	William	Mellefon,	Joshua	Clarke.
For	Dorchester	County.---	John	Dickenson,	Thomas En-
	nalls,	Matthew	Brown,	Josiah	Richardson,
	Campbell.			Zachariah
For	Somerset	County.---	Peter	Waters,	George Dashiell,
	Samuel	Wilson,	Josiah	Polk,	Henry Waggaman,
	Winder,	Luther	Martin.		John
For	Worcester	County.---	Peter	Chaille,	William Purnell,
	Samuel	Handy,	Smith	Bishop,	Nehemiah Holland.

PETER FORCE
c. 1860